THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
LIBRARY
296.05
BN
v.8-9

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2014

https://archive.org/details/nationaljewishmo8919bnai

296.05
B N
v.8-9

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS
BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY

Vol. VIII. SEPTEMBER, 1915 No. 1

Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

SEP 27 1915

Minutes of the Meeting of the Executive Committee I. O. B. B. Held in Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 3 & 4, 1915

A meeting of the Executive Committee was held at Atlantic City, N. J., on the above date.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Bro. Adolf Kraus, at ten o'clock a. m. On roll call the following were found present:

Adolf Kraus, Lucius L. Solomons, Archibald A. Marx, Jacob Furth, Charles Hartman, Jacob Singer, Dr. Edward N. Calisch, Philip Stein, and the Secretary.

Brother Simon Wolf was excused on account of illness.

There were also present Bros. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, of Chicago; Samuel Grabfelder of Philadelphia, President of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver; Dr. William S. Friedman, of Denver; Dr. B. S. Pollack, of Secaucus, N. J., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3; M. S. Meyerhoff, of Philadelphia, Treasurer of District Grand Lodge No. 3; Israel Cowen, of Chicago, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 6.

The minutes of the preceding meeting were read and adopted.

Matters referred by the Constitution Grand Lodge to the Executive Committee for its action were then taken up.

Reports of atrocities committed against Jews in Russia were next considered. It was resolved that a committee, with Brother Dr. Emil G. Hirsch (who was in attendance) as chairman, be appointed to prepare a protest against the inhuman treatment of Jews in Russia.

Dr. Hirsch submitted the following declaration which was unanimously adopted and ordered to be given the widest publicity possible:

(See declaration in form of an editorial in this issue.)

With reference to the publicity of the address by Bro. Jacob Billikopf of Kansas City, delivered at the Convention of the Order on the subject of "Social Service Work", it was moved by Bro. Jacob Furth that action thereon be deferred until the Social Service Bureau shall have been fully organized. Motion carried.

Communication of Dr. J. Faitlovitch addressed to the Convention of the Order in relation to the "Pro Falasha Movement" was next considered. On motion of Bro. Philip Stein, the subject matter was referred to the President of the Order for conference with the authorities of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, and with full power to act.

Referring to the establishment of a Social Service Bureau, as ordered by the Convention, it was moved by Bro. Lucius L. Solomons that the Advisory Committee of the Order be authorized to take the necessary steps to organize the Bureau and to expend such sums for the furtherance of its work as it will deem necessary. Motion carried.

In this connection applications for the position as Manager of the Bureau were read and ordered referred to the Advisory Committee.

The question of publishing advertisements in the B'nai B'rith News was postponed for consideration at the next meeting of the Executive Committee.

With reference to the creation of a new Grand Lodge in the Balkan States, it was resolved that no action be taken for the present.

In the matter of awarding the B'nai B'rith Gold Medal it was moved by Bro. Philip Stein that no award be made this year. Motion prevailed.

The committee was informed by Bro. Archibald A. Marx of the great misfortune which befell Bro. Joseph Hirsh, former member of the Executive Committee. It was resolved that the Secretary telegraph to Bro. Hirsh the sympathy of the Executive Committee in his bereavement.

Afternoon Session.

At 2 o'clock p. m. the meeting reconvened with all those reported present at the morning session in attendance. Bro. Harry Cutler, of Providence, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, was also present.

With reference to the compilation, rearranging and renumbering the provisions of the Organic Law in accordance with the changes and amendments adopted at the last convention of the Order, it was ordered that the organic law as compiled by the Secretary be referred to Bros. Adolf Kraus and Philip Stein for final action.

The President appointed Brothers Jacob Furth and Philip Stein as the Advisory Committee of the Order.

Bros. Samuel Grabfelder and Rev. Dr. William S. Friedman then addressed the committee on the work of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver. They emphasized the needs of the institution and appealed for a generous appropriation towards the maintenance of the Institution.

The President, with the approval of the Executive Committee, appointed the following as members of the Immigration Commission: Harry Cutler, District No. 1; Frederick Ach, District No. 2; Louis Edward Levy, District No. 3; Milton Meyer, District No. 4; Benjamin Margolius, District No. 5, Dr. Haim I. Davis, District No. 6; Dr. Henry Cohen, District No. 7.

Brother Harry Cutler was appointed Chairman of the Commission. The Advisory Committee of the Order was authorized to make a preliminary appropriation of not exceeding $1,000.00 for the use of the Commission.

The establishment of Boards of Inquiry in foreign ports for the purpose of examination and certification of all aliens at the ports of embarkation was ordered referred to the Commission on Immigration for investigation as to its practicability and report to the Executive Committee at its next meeting.

It was moved that the Commission on Immigration, through its Chairman, submit an annual report at the close of the fiscal year to the President of the Order. Motion prevailed.

The Secretary was instructed to furnish the members of the Commission on Immigration with copies of the resolution adopted by the Convention of the Order with reference to the appointment of the Commission and its functions.

The question of appropriating amounts to charitable institutions now supported by the Order was then taken up for action.

Communications from Bro. Charles J. Haase, President of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and Bro. Martin A. Marks, President of the Educational League for the Higher Education of Orphans at Cleveland, were presented, urging the needs of their respective institutions and requesting a liberal appropriation towards their maintenance. After a full discussion it was decided to appropriate for the ensuing year:

To the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives in Denver, Col.	$8,000.00
To the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital in Hot Springs, Ark.	4,500.00
To the Educational League for the Higher Education of Orphans	500.00

to be paid in quarterly installments.

With reference to the yearly observance of B'nai B'rith Day by the Lodges throughout the country, it was resolved that the Secretary call the attention of the General Committees of the various American Districts to the recommendation of the Constitution Grand Lodge.

As to the establishment by the Executive Committee of a Lyceum Bureau to prepare a list of speakers and a list of

(Continued on page 5)

Breach Between Jewish Organizations Avoided

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH
Office of
Executive Committee
1228 Tribune Bldg., Chicago

Aug. 10, 1915.

To the Jewish Congress Organization Committee, and to the American Jewish Committee:

Dear Sirs:

At its recent meeting in Atlantic City, the Executive Committee of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith considered the communication of the American Jewish Committee which embodied resolutions calling for a conference of delegates from national Jewish societies and organizations to consider the Jewish question as it affects our brethren in belligerent lands; it considered also a communication of the Jewish Congress Organization Committee advising us that the representatives of the national Jewish organizations composing it are pledged to the calling of a Jewish congress on a broad democratic basis for the purpose of obtaining equal rights and justice for Jews in all lands. Each of said organizations requested us to send delegates to the proposed gatherings.

As the Order of B'nai B'rith has taken upon itself the mission of uniting Israelites in the work of promoting their highest interests and those of humanity, both communications were sympathetically received. We noticed, however, with deep regret, that at this time when united and wise action is most necessary, there seems to be a tendency toward dissension. Our Executive Committee is of the opinion that a large gathering of one hundred and fifty or more, whether it is styled a Conference or a Congress, is inadvisable and likely to do much more harm than good. Our Committee is further of the opinion that at the proposed meeting only one subject should be considered, and that is what measures can be taken to secure for our people in certain countries the same measure of liberty and equality as is enjoyed by the other inhabitants of those countries. We feel also that the most earnest endeavor should be made to prevent the Jews of this land, who desire to aid such cause, from working at cross-purposes.

If our persecuted brethren are to obtain relief through the Jews of this country, such relief must come through efforts which are conceived and directed in a diplomatic way. Diplomacy as a rule does not work through the medium of town meetings. We therefore suggest for consideration the following:

It is safe to assume that those who were instrumental in the creation of the Jewish Congress Organization Committee have absolute faith in Mr. Brandeis. It can also be safely assumed that the American Jewish Committee has absolute faith in Mr. Marshall. It may be assumed further that each of the national organizations of Jews has confidence in its president, and that if the presidents of such organizations as have heretofore taken an active interest in Jewish affairs were to meet and agree upon some plan of action, it would be satisfactory to the Jewish masses whose desire it is that a sane concerted effort, having some prospect of success, be made. We therefore suggest that a meeting be held consisting of the presidents of as many Jewish organizations as the two gentlemen named may agree upon, each to select an equal number. In addition to such selections, we suggest that our organization be represented by its presiding officer. We recommend, not from any motive to have any one in particular omitted, but for the good of the cause, that the invitations to such a conference be limited to a reasonable number. We believe that if this plan is adopted, good results will be made possible and that such a meeting will be deemed sufficiently democratic and representative and will avoid dissension at a time when calm deliberation is most necessary. If this or some similar plan is adopted, our organization will be pleased to co-operate.

You will oblige by replying to this communication as soon as you can conveniently do so.

Very truly yours,
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of
the I. O. B. B.
By Adolf Kraus,
President.

Attest:
A. B. Seelenfreund,
Secretary.

EXECUTIVE BUREAU OF THE JEWISH CONGRESS ORGANIZATION COMMITTEE.

New York, Aug. 18, 1915.

Mr. Adolf Kraus, Grand Master, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, Tribune Building, Chicago.

Dear Sir:

We are in receipt of yours of August 10th, addressed to the American Jewish Committee and the Jewish Congress Organization Committee. We have no doubt that you have in the meantime taken notice of the fact that the correspondence between Dr. Cyrus Adler and Louis D. Brandeis relative to the calling of a Jewish Congress has been given wide publicity. We assume, therefore, that you are acquainted with the status of the negotiations which, we regret to say, have thus far not been as successful as we had hoped.

Mr. Brandeis' letters make it clear that we, on our part, have been very desirous that the American Jewish Committee should agree to the holding of a preliminary conference representing the national Jewish organizations at which the basis of a form of organization for a Congress should be formulated.

Mr. Brandeis' renewed request to be heard by the American Jewish Committee, even after Dr. Adler had published his side of the correspondence, must make it clear to you that we have done our utmost, and are still sincerely desirous of preventing the confusion which must result if Jewish organizations are to work at cross purposes at this time.

If you can still bring about such a gathering at which the presidents or delegations of national organizations can meet to define and plan the scope of the Congress, we shall be more than pleased to send our representative.

It must be borne in mind, however, that the national organizations represented on our Committee stand for a Congress as against a conference which shall deliberate upon the affairs of the Jewish people. A Congress implies responsibility on the part of the delegates. The problems that now confront the Jewish people are so important that achievement would be impossible unless the deliberations have the fullest support of a democracy willing to assume the burdens that must follow the carrying out of the decisions of the Congress.

Further, we are in favor of a Congress open and public, for in our opinion, only in that way can we really ascertain the extent of the willingness of the Jewish people to assume responsibility. The Congress must be public because we have every reason to believe that secrecy at this time can engender only mistrust, misunderstanding and dangerous suspicions, both as to what the Jews seek to accomplish, and the means that they intend to employ for the accomplishment of their aims.

Assuring you that we shall look forward with great interest and concern to any effort you can make that will bring about a better understanding, both as to the needs of this gathering and the methods of its organization, we are,

Cordially yours,
G. BUBLICK,
Chairman
M. GIRSDANSKY,
General Secretary.

6

PROVISIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE FOR GENERAL ZIONIST AFFAIRS.

New York, August 25, 1915.

Mr. Adolf Kraus, President Independent Order B'nai B'rith, 1228 Tribune Building, Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Mr. Kraus:

I acknowledged, under date of August 20th, your recent letters, adding that I would reply as soon as I could confer with my associates, with whom, however, a conference was to be obtained with difficulty, owing to the interruptions of the vacation season. We have just met and discussed your proposal, and I hasten to report the result.

First: My associates agree with me that we should accept your invitation to be represented at the conference which you propose to call, understanding that what you propose is strictly a conference, and that no one attending is to bind, in advance, the organization which he represents, to any specific policy which may be submitted, or appear to be the prevailing opinion at the conference; in other words, that the meeting is strictly a conference in which we exchange views and endeavor to reach a concensus of opinion as to what it is wisest to do, leaving further action to be determined later.

Second: It would obviously be desirable that such conference should be held at as early a date as possible, consistent with adequate attendance of representatives of such other organizations as should be invited to attend. I suppose it would not be possible for you to arrange for such a conference until after the Jewish Holidays.

Third: We were glad to find, in your proposal, substantial agreement with that portion of my proposition made to Dr. Cyrus Adler on July 12th, and subsequently referred to in my letter of July 28th: that concerted action on the part of the Jews of this country can be effected only through an understanding reached upon consultation of representatives of those national organizations which actually represent the Jews. Your action, at this time, should bring about a better understanding among all concerned by thus adopting American democratic methods of proceeding in the conduct of Jewish affairs, and I trust you will succeed in securing the assent also of the American Jewish Committee to so reasonable a proposal. If you succeed, you and your organization will have rendered a great service to the Jewish cause.

Will you kindly keep me duly advised of the results of your negotiations?

Most cordially yours,
LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Office of
Executive Committee
1228 Tribune Bldg., Chicago
Aug. 26, 1915.

To the Jewish Congress Organization Committee, 1 Madison Ave., Cor. 23d St., New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I note with satisfaction your statement that you are "still sincerely desirous of preventing the confusion which must result if Jewish Organizations are to work at cross purposes at this time." For the purpose of this communication, I disregard your statement "it must be borne in mind, however, that the national organizations represented on our Committee stand for a congress as against a conference, which shall deliberate upon the affairs of the Jewish people".

That your organization is committed to a congress and the American Jewish Committee to a conference is well understood, but that should not prevent us from making an effort to co-operate in some manner, if possible; and to make an honest effort to agree upon some united action, for even if we should fail to agree, we would at least be in a position to act advisedly and not assume grave responsibilities blindly. Believing that all of the American Jewish Organizations are desirous of aiding our coreligionists to obtain equal rights with the other inhabitants of those lands in which such rights are denied them, the Executive Committee of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith is ready, if the plan previously submitted by us is not satisfactory, to call a meeting for consultation, to be held in the City of New York and would be pleased to have your organization and two or three others join in such call, to which meeting one representative from each of the following organizations would be invited:

The Independent Order B'rith Abraham.
The Independent Order B'rith Sholom.
Federation of American Zionists.
Federation of Russian Polish
[illegible]
Federation of Roumanian Jews.
The Union of Orthodox Hebrew Congregations.
The Society of Orthodox Rabbis.
Independent Order B'nai B'rith.
Central Conference of American Rabbis.
Union of American Hebrew Congregations.
American Jewish Committee.
Council of Jewish Women.
Eastern Council of Reform Rabbis.
Jewish Chautauqua Society.
National Conference of Jewish Charities.

You will note that the first seven are members of your organization. Of these seven, you are to have the privilege of striking out any one or more and substituting others; the American Jewish Committee to have the same right regarding the last seven on the list. Our desire is to have the conference as nearly evenly balanced as possible. At the conference the question as to what is the best method to be adopted to secure to Jews in all lands rights equal to those of the ruling creed, is to be discussed without necessarily taking such action as to bind any organization.

We shall be pleased to consider any other suggestion which either you or the American Jewish Committee may care to make. A copy of this communication will be sent to that Committee.

A prompt reply will oblige,

Yours very truly,
Adolf Kraus,
President.

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE.

New York, August 29, 1915.

Dear Mr. Kraus:

I have submitted to the Executive Committee your letter of August 10, on behalf of the Executive Committee of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith, in which you suggest that in lieu of the conference proposed by this Committee, there be held a meeting consisting of the presidents of as many Jewish organizations as may be agreed upon by Mr. Marshall and Mr. Brandeis (each to select an equal number), besides the President of your own organization.

In reply, I am authorized to say that such a plan would be entirely agreeable to the American Jewish Committee if acceptable to the Zionist organization. I may point out, however, that ever since September, 1914, when a conference between a committee of the American Jewish Committee and representatives of the Zionist organization took place, the plan for a large and, so-called; democratic congress has been put forward and constantly urged. A conference, limited to one hundred and fifty persons, representatives of all the national Jewish organizations, was proposed by the American Jewish Committee because it was hoped that it might meet the views of organizations like your own as well as of the Zionists and similar bodies, and thus render united action possible in the present grave condition of affairs.

The conference that we have called, limited as it is to the discussion of the Jewish question as it affects our brethren in belligerent lands, not interfering with the autonomy or proper pursuits of any existing Jewish organization in the United States, and yet large enough to render possible the representation of Jews of all shades of opinion and of every state in the Union, seemed to our Committee, after careful consideration by both its Executive and its whole membership, to be a reasonable solution.

I would say, however, that I so fully recognize your strong desire to bring about mutual co-operation at this time—the purpose for which, indeed, the American Jewish Committee was founded—that although our preparations have gone very far and we have sent out invitations to forty organizations, some of which have already designated their delegates and others of which have indicated their expectation of doing so, I am nevertheless prepared to agree to your suggestion and to submit your proposal to the members of the American Jewish Committee, when you shall have secured the adherence of the Zionist organization, or any other committee which is making propaganda for the congress and which is qualified to represent the views of its constituency.

Let me say that the proposed conference for which invitations have been sent out by the American Jewish Committee differs from your suggestion in size only, and I earnestly express the hope that we may count upon the sincere and hearty co-operation of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith.

Faithfully yours,
CYRUS ADLER.
Chairman Executive Committee.

Adolf Kraus, Esq., President
Independent Order B'nai B'rith.
Tribune Building, Chicago, Ill

The Socializing Effect of the Ghetto

By Rabbi Julius Rappaport

One need not be a dreamer or a sentimentalist, but in spite of self-certain seasons will evoke in us sentiments and emotions which we cannot repress. There are times which make us turn involuntarily to the dim distant past. There are seasons which are surcharged with tenderest recollections, times that awaken in us a reflective mood, that arouse a reminiscent vein.

It was the great Sabbath—hag-Gadol—as the one immediately preceding the Passover is called. The day before I was in Court, summoned to verify a Hebrew document, a "Warning," issued by a local rabbi against the use of the Matzoth, baked by a certain well-known firm, as ritually unfit for consumption by pious Jews. The owners of the bakery took out an injunction against the rabbi, prohibiting the publication of the said "Warning." The judge listened drowsily to the eloquent attorneys, while in my ears still sound the pleading of the opposing lawyers, contending that two, equally well-known rabbis issued a "declaration" that said Matzoth are kosher. Controversies of this kind are not a rariety in the ghetto. It happens quite frequently that one rabbi issues a "hechsher," while an opponent issues a warning denouncing the "kosher-Brief." If it is not Matzoth it is concerning meat, sausage, wine, etc., etc.

In my meditations over the incident, I permitted myself to be carried away from the land of fact into regions of fancy, from the realms of the present into the land of the past. I recalled the intense joy we children used to have over the fact that on this Sabbath we were not required to repeat any more "Bor'chi Naphshi" (Psalms 104 and 120 to 134, inclusive), as we were obliged to during the Sabbath afternons of the winter months. True, as a sort of substitute, we had to repeat half of Passover Haggadah. But for this we received as compensation a pocket full of nuts and the remnant of the Purim cakes, which were consumed on this day.

Recalling in my mind the first lines of "Abadim Hayyinoo"—we have been bondmen of Pharoah, but the Lord has redeemed us, etc., etc.—I said to myself: what a profound faith, what a noble trust, what an unquenchable optimism was that which inspired our fathers throughout all the centuries of oppression and ostracism. Dark, though, and gloomy as was their lot, leaving almost no room for hope, they did not despair, nor did they get despondent. Aye, they were firmly convinced that light will arise out of the darkness and enlargement is bound to come. "Now we are slaves, next year we shall be free. Now we are still here, next year we shall be in the land of Israel: This hope was the light that shone with undiminished luster through the dark ages of mediaevalism and maintained our fathers in their march through the ages.

Say what you please, happiness, real, genuine happiness, a happiness that knows no despair, is to be found not in the mansions on the boulevard, but in the modest dwellings of the ghetto streets.

With this conviction firmly set in my heart, I arose and set out to take a stroll down the ghetto. Having lived in the neighborhood for nearly a quarter of a century, the radical change in the appearance of the vicinity impressed me deeply. The district formerly was inhabited by gentiles, but now almost exclusively by Jews and has assumed an entirely different aspect. A residential district was changed as if by magic into a busy mart. The front part of the buildings has everywhere been changed, with entrances from the street, opening into fruit or delicatessen store, butcher shop, dry goods store or merchandise of any and all descriptions. Where stillness reigned before there now is life, activity, hustle and bustle. Many of the business houses have no front entrance. A mere parlor serves as a barber shop, restaurant, grocery store or warehouse of some sort. Still others displaying their goods on a push cart, on a little stand, or often carrying the entire "store" on the arms or in a basket. In connection with the butcher shops or fish stores there is invariably associated another "department," always outside, in front of the store, namely, the "chrein" (horse-radish) grinding. An old man or an old woman leases such stand in front of the store. Before her is piled up a stock of horse-radish, which she grinds and packs into a piece of paper ready to and indispensable for serving with gefillte fish. One often wonders what kind of a living they can eke out from their little and scanty stores. But it seems they do. These merchants on the street manage quite often to save up enough and in a few years open a big department store on Milwaukee Avenue or on State Street, or graduate into wholesale merchants on South Water Street or Market Street. Such is Jewish thrift, economy, and business acumen, that in a few years it is able to turn a barren wilderness into a thriving, prosperous neighborhood. Such is the socializing effect of the ghetto.

Today is Sabbath and the most of the men and womenfolk are at leisure. They stand outside in front of their homes, on the sidewalk, enjoying a friendly chat with their next-door neighbor or one from across the street. The men talk about the ravages of the war, local politics, business. The women, the older ones in the regulation "Sheitel," the younger ones wheeling in one hand a go-cart, in which an infant is sleeping, another baby in her arm, and a third one tugging on her skirts. The houses in this vicinity are mostly having front and rear flats, the space being built in from curb to the alley. The only breathing place these poor folk can find is on the street. The sidewalk is their clubhouse. Here the good women of the neighborhood hold their coffee-klatsch without coffee. The older children play in various groups and crowds in the middle of the street. Surely no one will charge these women shirking their duties of motherhood. There is no race-suicide noticeable here.

Picturesque and humorous are the signs displayed in the windows, advertising the sale and merchandise, bargains and other announcements. Here are a few ads picked up at random: "Hebrew Teacher and Umbrella Fixer"; "Soothsayer and Bookbinder"; the "Schochet, Mohel and M'sadder Kiddushin" (marriage performer) go always hand in hand. While, however, every business thrives and succeeds here, there is one kind of business which does not thrive and that is the saloon. The saloon that did a thriving business as long as the neighborhood was inhabited by gentiles had to close its doors for lack of customers when the gentiles had been replaced by Jews. Not that the Jews are tee-totalers—far from it. His religion permits not alone but makes use of wine at certain occasions obligatory, as Kiddush, Habhadalah, Seder night, wedding b'rith and other ceremonies. But just because winous drink is consecrated by religious use, it is not likely to be abused by the Jew. Certainly the number of drunkards among the Jews are few and far between. This is another instance of the socializing effect of the ghetto.

A curious phase of this side of Jewish custom is in the fact that wines and liquors in this neighborhood are mostly sold in book stores. Side by side with prayerbooks, bibles, tzitzis, tephilim, mezuzoth and other ritual paraphernalia are sold wines—"Weinen," they call it here—coniac and other liquors. In company with spiritual things, spirits are sold. Considering, however, that wine to be fit for Jewish ritual purposes must be prepared in accordance with certain rules of Kashruth, the connection of the two is not altogether strange. Another phase of the socializing effect of the ghetto.

But if the saloon has been turned into a kosher butcher shop other stores have been put to far nobler purposes. Many of the churches of the neighborhood have been converted into synagogs, as the gentile parishioners have moved away. But so were many rag shops turned into synagogs. One of strange and most remarkable sights of the neighborhood is a long, narrow building doing service as a synagog which formerly used to be a bowling alley. Where formerly the sign was displayed inviting people to a bowling game, there now is a sign announcing the time of service and—for this week—"Sell your chometz through the Rev. ———." Such is the socializing effect of the ghetto.

As to the religious influence these synagogs have upon the younger generation, born or raised in an American environment, is another question. I am afraid that the gang spirit is fast developing among the growing youth. Certainly the services in the "Shool" does not appeal to them. While the elders are praying, the youth is playing marbles, matching pennies, or throwing dice. One of the principals of a neighboring school once told me: "I realize why Jewish parents want their children to be excused on Jewish holidays. But why don't they take them along to their churches? As it is, these children play on the street, in front of the school, and disturb those inside the school." Something ought to be done, something must be done, and speedily, for these boys and girls before it is too late, something to direct their superfluous energy into right channels and thus make the socializing effect of the ghetto a continuous blessing.

Civilization and War

Address Delivered Before
Ezekiel Lodge No. 90
I. O. B. B., Newark

By RABBI JULIUS SILBERFELD

Our present age is often inclined to boast of its advancement and civilization. Comparisons are drawn between the high standard of humanity of today, and the barbaric and brutal conceptions of olden times, to the great disadvantage of the latter. In olden times, it is said, human life was absolutely a negligible quantity, might was right, and the stronger could slay the weaker with impunity and go unpunished. Today we have laws that protect life and property. Severe punishment is meted out to violators of the recognized rules that govern the relations between man and man. And in thousands of other ways, the claim is made, present society is far superior to the ages gone by.

Far be it from me to deny the wonderful achievements which humanity has attained during centuries and centuries of stress and struggle. It would be absurd to contradict the self-evident fact that we occupy today a very high rung in the ladder of culture and civilization. But the trouble is that this ladder stands on a very shaky foundation. Under normal conditions the ladder is safe; but when the least gust of wind shakes that flimsy foundation, the ladder tumbles down, carrying everything with it and converting into a heap of ruins the whole magnificent structure we call civilization. Our civilization is as stable and firm as the image, which the Babylonian king saw in a vision of the night, whose whole body was composed of fine metals, but whose feet were partly of clay, so that the slightest vibration could upset the colossal figure and throw it prostrate on the ground. How can we indulge in undue boastfulness over our unsurpassed culture, when we are still ready to plunge into the throes of war, which, over night, make of our progress a mockery and throws us from the heights of civilization into the abyss of barbarism and brutality? Have we a right to call ourselves truly civilized, when we still believe in the arbitrament of the sword? Suppose one side or the other wins in this unparalleled struggle: would that prove that this side or that side is right? Is it not going back to the remotest stages of antiquity to leave it to brute force to settle controversies?

Think of the contrast presented to us of the twentieth century in the life of a man like Abraham, who lived about 3,500 years ago, and who may be called the patron saint of our Order. He had a dispute with his nephew, Lot; and did he resort to violence to settle the question at issue? No. He exclaimed the immortal words, which ought to be the guiding principle of humanity of today:

"Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee . . . for we are brethren" (Genesis, xiii, 8). It takes two to start a quarrel; and if the two would look upon each other as brothers, would they be ready at a moment's notice to slay each other? Furthermore, Abraham proposed a peaceful solution of the problem. He said:

"If thou wilt turn to the left, I will turn to the right; and if thou wilt turn to the right, I will turn to the left." (Ibid. 9). Imagine such a proposition made by one who lived three thousand five hundred years ago. And in the face of this indisputable record, how can we speak in sneering terms of the low standard of morality that prevailed in the days of antiquity?

Let us contrast another trait in Abraham's character with the conditions prevailing in our so-called civilized age, and judge for ourselves which deserves the preference. The decree had gone forth that the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah should be destroyed, because of their extreme wickedness and sinfulness.

Then Abraham stepped forward and pleaded for the wretched inhabitants of those cities in the following lofty words:

"Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked?"

"Far be it from Thee: Shall the Judge of all the earth not do justice?" (Ibid. xviii, 24, 25). To our credit be it said that under normal conditions our present generation takes heed of this exalted plea of Abraham. We do not let the innocent suffer with the guilty. Frequently a prisoner at the bar receives leniency at the hands of the judge, who is supposed to represent the stern, implacable law, out of consideration for the innocent members of his family, who would be exposed to undeserved hardship and privation, were the sentence imposed upon the culprit too severe. But of what avail are such human sentiment when we allow war to crush them out of our hearts? The most awful aspect of war is the suffering inflicted upon non-combatants—the innocent bystanders—whose homes are burned, whose fields are ravaged, whose property is wantonly destroyed, without prospect of ever being compensated for their loss. Can you imagine anything more cruel and heartless than this? If the reputed utterance of General Sherman, that "War is hell" be true, he ought to rise from his grave and apologize to hell for putting it in the same category with war; because war, as carried on in this twentieth century of Christian civilization, is a thousand fold worse than hell. Cruel and heartless as it may sound, Sir Francis Montefiore was perfectly justified from a military and patriotic standpoint in saying, that for an English Jew to extend aid to Austrian and German Jewish non-combatants would be tantamount to treason against his own country. What a terrible indictment this is of our sham-civilization when such unspeakable cruelty is the only course open to patriots.

Under normal conditions, human life is well nigh priceless in civilized lands. For the murder of one worthless gambler in New York four human beings have already paid the death penalty, and a fifth one will probably share the same fate. The sanctity of life is considered holy and inviolable, and the whole machinery of the law is instantly put into operation to hunt down and punish anyone who arrogates to himself the right to take from man that, which only God alone has a right to take. Hospitals are constantly built, science and medicine are tireless in their researches, trying to reduce mortality and eliminate sickness as a menace to life. And in the face of all this scrupulous anxiety to preserve life, is it not unbelievable that the scourge of war can so pervert our nature as make us tolerate the wanton slaying of hundreds of thousands? Today we make superhuman efforts and bring the greatest sacrifices to save a single life; tomorrow we look with equanimity upon the brutal slaughter of countless men in the full bloom and vigor of manhood. The moment war breaks out, our civilization disappears as if by magic, mercy and humanity give place to carnage and devastation; and if at times a tender instinct manifests itself we crush it quickly as something weak and unworthy.

As an illustration of the brutalizing influence of war, listen to the following incident: The commander of the famous German submarine U-9, on his return from his daring exploit in sending to the bottom three British warships, told of the sensations he felt after having torpedied two warships, and watching from the periscope of the submarine he saw the sailors struggling for their lives in the icy waters and a third British cruiser approaching, with the intention of saving as many as possible. His first instinct was not to interfere with its errand of mercy, when a lieutenant approached him and said: "Remember, there are three navies fighting against us." Instantly his humane impulse was silenced by the harsh voice of military duty, and a torpedo shot forth, sending the third British cruiser to the bottom and causing the frightful death of 1,500 sailors. Had this commander allowed his feeling of mercy to prevail, he would have been liable to courtmartial and might have been shot as a traitor. Such is the stern law of war, whose only concern is to inflict as much death and destruction as possible upon the enemy. The law of life is absolutely ignored, so that horror and consternation seize us when we read the daily reports of the sanguinary battles being fought upon the fertile soil of Europe. In olden times a Synhedrin—the highest judicial tribunal of the Jewish commonwealth, which had the misfortune to inflict the death penalty upon an offender, received the appellation "a death-dealing tribunal," and could no longer perform its functions. Such was the value placed upon the life of even a criminal. Today, after thousands of years of civilizing efforts, we think nothing of sending hundreds of thousuands of innocent human beings to their death to gratify the whim and caprice of kings and statesmen. And yet, we assume a superior air and claim to be far more advanced than were our ancestors.

Among the movements, credited to modern civilization, none deserves greater support than the policy of conservation of natural resources. Germany, in this respect, has been loked upon as a model by every civilized country. Its forestry service has recently been copied by the United States government. In America, we have until lately been suffering from an overabundance of natural resources, which has made us reckless and wasteful, so that it has been found necessary to imitate the German plan and inaugurate a policy of conservation. In Germany the forests are absolutely under government control. Every tree is numbered, and cannot be cut down unless another one is immediately planted. This is as it should be. But think what war means, when the German military authorities founud themselves compelled, at the first Russian invasian in East Prussia, to cut down whole forests in their own land, in order to build barricades and impede the progress of the enemy. The wise policy of conservation was discarded by the exigencies of military necessity. It will take centuries to restore those forests, and the damage may perhaps prove irreparable. Do you need a greater proof of the ravages which war inflicts upon the works of civilization?

One of the most serious problems, which the French government had of recent years to face, was the increase of the death rate over the birth rate. This problem assumed such alarming proportions in France that it threatened, in the course of a few generations, the extinction of the whole French nation. This danger threatened France in times of peace, and as a civilized nation, trembling for its future it sought ways and means to solve this problem and thus perpetuate its national existence. Now imagine how much the danger of French extinction will be increased through this wretched war. Does it require statistics to show the terrible effect of war's holocaust upon the future of the French people? Think of the hundreds of thousands of young men, the fathers of the future generation, being mowed down by sword and cannon, and you can easily compute the awful consequences of such carnage upon the preservation of the French nation. Does it not look as if, what has been hitherto but a fear looming in the distant future, will now become a dreadful reality?

I could go on indefinitely to show what havoc war plays with our most cherished ideals of civilization. Let these illustrations suffice, however, to humble our pride and make us cease indulging in self-exaltation and self-aggrandizement. Let us stop speaking with contempt and disdain of the civilization of antiquity, and rather accustom ourselves to adopt some of the principles that used to be practiced by men like Abraham. In spite of the fact that he lived in the twilight of history, he gave utterance to a maxim, which is the corner stone of arbitration:

"Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee . . . for we are brothers." With men looking upon one another as brothers, war will become an impossibility, strife and bloodshed will no longer make the face of civilization blush with shame, and permanent and everlasting peace will descend upon the habitations of mankind.

ANNUAL MEETING OF EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE.

The annual meeting of the Educational League for the Higher Education of Orphans was held on Sunday evening, July 11, 1915, at Cleveland. The officers and members of the Board of Governors were the guests of the local representatives of the League at a dinner at the Excelsior Club. There were present representatives from various cities throughout the country.

After dinner the President, Mr. Martin A. Marks, delivered the annual message, which was the keynote of the meeting.

The report of the auditor, showing the League's financial status, as well as the report of the secretary, showed that during the past year the League has assisted sixteen beneficiaries to pursue their course of study in the various colleges and universities throughout the country.

The representatives of various cities gave assurance that the League's work will be brought before their respective communities, both through the B'nai B'rith lodges and the Sabbath schools.

The report of the Nomination Committee was unanimously accepted, and the result of the election of officers for the ensuing year was as follows:

Martin A. Marks, President; Emil Nathan, Vice-President; Dr. S. Wolfenstein, Treasurer; Eugene E. Wolf, Secretary.

The Nominating Committee further suggested that the Executive Board be empowered to select names for the Board of Governors from time to time as their needs may arise. The suggestion was favorably acted upon. The purpose of the League is to aid deserving young men and women of extraordinary talent and genius in the pursuit of higher education.

JEW MEMBER OF NEW ZEALAND CABINET.

Mr. Arthur N. Myers has been appointed "Minister of Munition and Customs." He is not new to Cabinet rank, having been "Minister of Defense" some years ago.

B'nai B'rith Aid for Galveston

The efficiency, seriousness, and sincerity of the B'nai B'rith were again illustrated, when, forty-eight hours after the Galveston storm, Mr. Archibald A. Marx, vice-president of the Order, was already on the scene, proffering aid on behalf of the fraternity. And it was not merely sympathy and promises that Mr. Marx was prepared to offer to the victims of the storm, but real, material assistance. The executive committee had at once placed 3,000 dollars at Mr. Marx' disposal, and the Grand Lodge of District No. 7 authorized him, as treasurer, to spend 1,000 dollars of its funds. The conditions, as Mr. Marx found them, demanded, however, more assistance than 4,000 dollars could furnish. The business section of the city was under six feet of water. There was not a building on the island of Galveston that had not been more or less injured. And it is the intention of the B'nai B'rith not only to alleviate immediate distress, but, in the real Jewish spirit, to rehabilitate those who have sustained a loss of either business property or household effects. To do this, however, approximately 10,000 dollars will be required. The District Grand Lodge has, therefore, undertaken to raise the additional 6,000 dollars and the following appeal was wired by Mr. Nat Strauss, the secretary, last Saturday night to all the lodges of No. 7:

"Our co-religionists in Galveston are in distress. President Cohn urges that you collect funds immediately and send them to Archibald A. Marx, treasurer. This call is extremely urgent, please give it immediate attention.

"NAT STRAUSS, Sec."

When the needed money shall have been collected, it will be applied by a committee appointed at Galveston to all Jews who need aid, regardless of the fact whether or not they are members of the Order. The committee is the same which had the relief work in hand in 1900 and consists of the following: Charles Frankel, chairman; Rabbi Henry Cohen, Joseph Bonart and Robert I. Cohn.

Meanwhile, the Joint Committee of the New Orleans B'nai B'rith Lodges held a meeting and decided to send out the following appeal to the members of the Order in New Orleans:

AN APPEAL FOR THE STORM SUFFERERS OF THE JEWISH COMMUNITY OF GALVESTON.

Dear Sir and Brother:

The Jewish Community of Galveston has been visited by a great calamity, and the call for fraternal assistance comes to us again insistently—the call which the true Ben B'rith never disregards.

We may be thankful to a kind Providence that the recent devastating storm did not take a staggering toll of human life, yet this fortunate fact must not blind us to the real economic and commercial losses which brethren have sustained. The catastrophe will force many to become permanent dependents, if we, the Children of the Covenant do not with characteristic promptitude rise to the emergency and rehabilitate the broken lives and fortunes of our stricken co-religionists.

The facts upon which we base our earnest appeal are gathered at first hand. Brother Archibald A. Marx, vice-president of the Constitution Grand Lodge, has been on the ground. He has conferred with local leaders in Galveston, and brings home this message with its call for assistance. Ten thousand dollars must be forthcoming to meet the immediate need and already the Executive Committee has placed $3,000 in the hands of Brother Marx. The Grand Lodge of District No. 7 has added another $1,000. Six thousand dollars must be raised by the Lodges or individual brethren of District No. 7. New Orleans must share nobly in this duty. From our Lodges and brethren should come the example of efficient, prompt and generous aid. Will you help us meet this moral obligation; to live true to the ideals phrased in our noble motto, "Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony"? We feel sure you will and thus meet an unfortunate situation with measures that are not only for immediate relief, but will be permanently remedial and preventive of future misery and pauperism.

We urge you in the name of the highest ideals of our Order to respond to this appeal and respond at once, with a check made payable and sent to Archibald A. Marx, Treasurer, 213 Baronne St.

ISRAEL'S MISSION IS PEACE

Address Delivered at Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B.

By RABBI MAURICE LEFKOVITS, Ph. D.

The message which I would fain leave imbedded in your conscience is one of potent pertinency at the present moment. We are assembled here in annual convention as B'nai B'rith, as Sons of the Covenant. That Covenant is primarily a B'rith Shalom, a Covenant of Peace. It imposes upon us, as our foremost obligation, the love of peace and the pursuance of peace. Symbolized by the third and sixth lights of the seven-branched Menorah, the distinctive emblem of our Order, the lesson is strongly impressed upon us that the highest and finest resultant of all enlightenment, justive, benevolence, and brotherly love, is the twin blessing of peace and harmony.

In this, our Order is in perfect accord with the truest of Jewish teachings, both biblical and rabbinic. Innumerable are the passages in Holy Scriptures enjoining the assiduous cultivation of peace and exalting the incomparable blessing of its possession. "Execute the judgments of truth and peace in your gates," solemnly proclaims the prophet. Zachariah, whilst the Psalmist feelingly voices his pertinent sentiments in the words: "Behold how good and pleasing is it for brethren to dwell together in unity." Isaiah cheers the harassed nation with the promise: "The Lord will give strength unto His people, the Lord will bless His People with peace"; whilst its climax is in the fervent wish—"Vejosem lecho shalom," "May God give you Peace."

In Rabbinic literature, too, peace is glorified as the most precious boon that man may possess. "No vessel but peace can hold blessing," asserts one Rabbi. Another exclaims, "The whole Torah exists only for the sake of peace"; while still another ventures to say that "The very name of God is Peace." So thoroughly enraptured are the Talmudic sages with the Talismanic virtues of peace that they deem themselves justified in utering as startling a statement as this: "If the Israelites were to practice idolatry, and peace prevailed among them at the same time, God would say: 'I cannot exercise authority against them in anger, because peace is among them.'"

The aspiration for peace is indeed lodged in the Jewish soul. Thus the salutation of Jew to Jew is, "Shalom Alechem"—"Peace be with you." The closing words of one of his most sacred prayers, repeated at a time when, burdened by the loss of his nearest and dearest, he praises God for his dispensations, are, "May God who maketh peace in the heavenly heights grant peace unto us and until all men." Again, among the blessings to which the Jew looks forward in the Messianic times, that of peace stands forth most prominently, as so eloquently voiced by his prophets: "And he shall judge between the nations and shall reprove many peoples; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every one under his vine and under his fig trees, and none shall make them afraid, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

This inspired vision has been the lodestar of Judaism. To bring about the Messianic age of Universal Peace has ever been the chief aspiration of Israel. It was and is his conscious endeavor. Proudly he proclaimed and proclaims today that Israel's Mission is Peace, conceiving of himself as the divine messenger of Peace unto the peoples of the earth. And in no circle of Jewry has his vision been kept present with greater clarity than in that of B'nai B'rithdom. As said before, our Order has made Peace both its primary and ultimate object. It owes its very origin to the need then keenly felt, of establishing peace and harmony between the various divergent elements of Jewry which but illy consorted one with the other in those days now happily gone by. And no sooner did the Order see the promise of success along this narrower line, when its aspirations become co-extensive with the limits of humanity. To promote the interests not only of Israel but those of humanity as well became the object of its noble endeavors. And it has lately come to regard the cultivation of Peace as the most effective means of attaining its lofty object.

We are probably conscious of this particular aspect of our B'nai B'rith teaching more keenly and more vividly this year than ever before. For if ever the sons of men were sorely in need of the teachings of the Sons of the Covenant, they are now. Despite three thousand years and more of Israel's inspired vision of Universal Peace, peace, alas! is not now the portion of humanity. War, cruel, crafty, relentless war, holds supreme sway. With every sea on the globe lashed into fury by booming cannon and hissing torpedo; with more than half of its land surface trembling with the shock of the greatest upheaval the world has ever known; with well-nigh two-thirds of the world's population, embracing all of its highest civilization, arrayed in deadly enmity against one another, and engaged in the gory business of slaughtering each the other; with all the inventive genius, mechanical skill, and scientific efficiency, the cumulative achievement of centuries of toils and tears, enlisted in the sole service of maiming and murdering mankind's bravest and strongest, of making helpless widows by the thousands, and crying orphans by the millions; with the harnessing by an ingenious generation of every known power in the heavens above, on the earth beneath, and in the waters under the earth, for the sole purpose of saturating the unfeeling earth with warm human blood, and coloring the white lilies with the glowing crimson of God's children; with the whole atmosphere reverberating with groans of agony and cries of despair, until the very gates of heaven shake with the impact of wave upon wave of human woe—with all this a heart-breaking, soul-rending reality, the reign of peace seems to be farther off today than ever before. Disorder, fierce and wild, holds sway. The Temple of Civilization is demolished; its altars are torn down; and its columns broken and shattered. Defiled is the Ark of the Covenant, clipped are the wings of the cherubim, and extinguished the lights of the seven-branched Menorah. Darkness, deep, black darkness, broods over the face of the earth.

Yet not for long shall darkness prevail. The Sons of the Covenant know naught of perpetual darkness. For them there is ever burning the Ner Tamid, the Perpetual Light. Amidst the severest stress and storm that single light burns on, filling the heart with the cheering assurance that ultimately light must prevail over darkness; that sooner or later the seven-fold shining light of the Menorah will again be kindled, and the light of peace shine once more over a happy and contented humanity.

To bring this about is, as Jews and B'nai B'rith, our solemn obligation; it should also be our cherished privilege. Of olden times a Rabbi said: "In a place where there is no man, strive thou to be a man." In this, our age, when the clamor of cannon and the shriek of shrapnel drown into silence every other voice; when the press is painfully timid, or vehemently partisan; when zealous peace societies seem to have lost their power of utterance; when even church and pulpit have become distressingly inarticulate—it is the duty, and should be the privilege, of Jews and Judaism, to speak out in clear and ringing tones. Jews and Judaism must call out in no uncertain terms: "STOP THIS WAR!" Let there be an end to this fierce, world-wide slaughter! It is a crime against the eternal law of God. It is a crime against humanity. It is a crime against all decency and morality. It is supreme folly and unmitigated stupidity. It is all gross error and pernicious superstition. Let reason prevail! Let intelligence hold sway! Let the seven-fold light of the Menorah illumine the souls of men and peace be once more the blessed portion of humanity.

You will say that we Jews, being a mere handful, are altogether powerless as over and against the colossal stupidity of the great mass of mankind. Not at all; not at all. In the faith dear and near to us all, there is a doctrine so-called of the "Saving Remnant." It means that no matter how dark the outlook, how discouraging and distressing things may seem, there is no reason for despair, for under God's providence there is always a select band, a chosen few, who will prove the "saving remnant," and bring about the needed relief and redemption.

It is my earnest conviction that we Jews are destined to be the "saving remnant" of humanity in the present age. Few in numbers we may be, yet within our household is to be found some of the elite of mankind, some of its finest intelligence, some of its t[illegible] conscience. Let the millions of [illegible] the world over, many of them [illegible] of light and leading, men of pure [illegible]ts and clean hands, let them breathe, feel, think and speak, PEACE, PEACE, PEACE, and perchance there will be peace; peace to those who are near and to those who are afar off. For after all, as Jews, we firmly believe that at its core humanity is sane and sound. It must and will respond to the appeal that comes to it in purity and sincerity. Let the twelve millions of the Sons of Israel fill the spheres with wireless messages of peace, and they will find responsive chords in the great throbbing heart of humanity. And when the heart-strings of humanity shall have become attuned to the song of Peace, then, and then only, will the prophet's inspired vision of UNIVERSAL PEACE cease to be a vision and become a living reality.

It is a grievous mistake to shift vicariously the blame of the present war on the uneasily resting heads of Kings and Emperors and Czars. Every people that is in the war today is there because it willed it. If it had willed to be out of it, it would have found another way. Only a few weeks ago we witnessed the headlong plunge of another nation into this all-absorbing whirlpool, not because its government wanted war, but despite governmental opposition, solely because of the irresistible pressure of popular demand. It is the tremendous selfish interests, the terrific passions, the unreasoning racial and national hatreds, that brought about the fury of this war. Men will make a fetish of race and nationality; they still hold those of different race and nationality than their own to be inferior beings, less human, a sort of semi-barbarians. As our great and good President Wilson expressed it: "War will never have any ending until men cease to hate one another, get the feeling of reality in the brotherhood of mankind, which is the only bond that can make us think justly of one another and act righteously before God himself." Truer words were never spoken. Men must become impregnated with the truth of the prophet's query: "Have we not all one Father and hath not one God created us all?" Men must appropriate the B'nai B'rith teaching and practice of human brotherhood—the teaching that accident of birth or of geographical habitat is as naught compared with the primary fact that all men are children of God; that they are brothers by divine relationship, and that, therefore, no circumstance, merely external and incidental, should ever sever them. When men shall have become indoctrinated and inoculated with these Jewish teachings and practices, pre-eminently B'nai B'rith teachings and practices, then and then only will humanity experience the blessing of peace, which according to the Talmud is the vessel holding all other blessings.

But a still higher doctrine must we Jews teach and preach these days, and in very particular those of us who are privileged to call ourselves B'nai B'rith, Sons of the Covenant. We must direct the minds of men to the lofty lessons conveyed by the distinctive emblem of our Order, the seven-branched Menorah. According to Midrasch, the seven-branches symbolize the seven continents, and the lights the spirit of God illuminating those continents. Furthermore, the Menorah had to be wrought out of one solid piece, symbolizing the absolute unity, the indivisible entity of mankind. Only when mankind conceives of itself as being an absolute unit, an indivisible entity, can it claim to be illumined by the spirit of God. In other words, the Menorah conveys the lesson that it was God, the one and the same God and Father, who created all the peoples and nations and races inhabiting the seven continents, that all of them constitute one brotherhood, one absolute unit, one indivisable entity, and that only when feeling and acting as such an entity do they bear evidence of God-consciousness. Hence, an individual nation, people or race can live by and for itself as little as the individual person can. As the individual person can live in and so far only as he knows himself to be a subordinate unit of the greater unit of society, state or nation, so can the individual nation only live, live in the God-consciousness, if and so far only as it knows itself to be a subordinate unit of the greater unit of humanity. Moreover, as individuals we never are, never definite, never static; we are always being, becoming, in constant flux and change. Here today, we are gone tomorrow. Humanity alone endures. It alone has eternal existence. Even nations are but of passing moment. The most powerful of them has but a brief span—and then the higher plan eliminates it. Egypt, Syria, Babylonia, Rome, Greece, Spain—they all had their brief day—and when their contribution to humanity was made, they subserved its further good by elimination and disappearance. Humanity is the one stable thing. It alone is permanent, enduring, everlasting. It follows, therefore, that just as individuals must subordinate their interests to those of the nation, so must nations subordinate their interests to those of humanity; just as the nation has the right to demand of the individual to sacrifice himself, his money, his time, his energy, his very life, fore the greater good of the nation, so has humanity the right to demand of the individual nation to subserve the higher weal of mankind even at the cost of national self-abnegation. In other words, the national conscience must be placed on as keen a moral basis as is that upon which rests the individual conscience; what the individual in relation to the state is in duty bound to do or not to do, that the nation in its relation to humanity should consider its duty to do or not to do.

This, forsooth, may seem to many a new doctrine, a revolutionary doctrine, if you please, but it is nothing of the sort. It is good old conservative B'nai B'rith doctrine. Our seven-branched Menorah blazes it forth with crystaline clarity, and our very organization proclaims it broadcast. The B'nai B'rith, with its international association, comprising within its bond of union the weightiest manhood of the Jewry of all lands and nations—the B'nai B'rith stands first and foremost for the higher concern of collective humanity as over and against the narrow, selfish interest of state and nation. Therefore, we of the B'nai B'rith, above all and first of all, must teach this old-new doctrine of national self-abnegation, yea, national self-sacrifice, if and when the greater good of humanity demands it. Only when nations will learn this doctrine and make it part and parcel of the international conscience, even as it is now of the individual conscience only then will Peace be sovereign o earth.

And we, the B'nai B'rith of this country, enjoying the blessed protection of the Flag of the Free, are in a particularly fortunate position to preach and teach this doctrine. For already our government, to a large extent, is actually and successfully practicing and demonstrating this doctrine. The annals of history record no more inspiring and inspiriting example of national unselfishness than that evinced by our government in its treatment of Cuba. Cuba had fallen to us by virtue of our own strength and the power of our own arms, and we could have dealt with her howsoever we pleased. Well, we pleased to expend unstinted treasure of money and mind to tutor and train her for national sel government; and when we thought o task completed, we gave Cuba her fre dom—with our heartfelt blessing. C only reward we sought and found in t consciousness of having subserved th sacred cause of humanity. Again, fo many years past our sister republic to the south of us has been giving us severe provocation—provocation which at times seemed almost beyond honorable endurance—provocation which every other government would long ere this have felt constrained to meet with severe reprisals. I am proud and happy in the consciousness that our government was big enough to overlook affronts and wise enough to ignore slights, in its unselfish endeavor to uphold above all the welfare of collective humanity.

And again this self-same high endeavor seems to actuate our government, I am happy to say, also in its attitude towards the nations engaged in the great European struggle. These are days that search not men's soulds only, but the souls of nations as well. The soul of the American Nation has been weighed in the balance and not found wanting. As a nation we have malice toward none and charity for all. I am aware that there are those who call this policy "weak and unwise." With every fibre of my being I affirm that this policy is strong with self-restraint and wise with prophetic foresight. Our nation will be called upon to play a great role when this war will approach its end. It can only play that role and it can only exert influence in behalf of freedom and of right, if it comes with skirts absolutely clean, with a record of the most scrupulous neutrality. Only if untained by selfish considerations, only if calm and clear headed and steadfast of soul, unmoved alike by jaunty jingoism and the clamor of the confused, will the exhausted nations of Europe come to America, saying with the Jewish prophet of old: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace."

(Continued on Page 13.)

Minutes of the Meeting of the Executive Committee

(Continued from Page 1.)

subjects suitable for discussion as would prove helpful to the lodges of the Order, it was moved by Bro. Dr. Edward N. Calisch, that the subject matter be referred to a subcommittee to prepare and submit report to the Executive Committee at its next meeting. Motion prevailed and Bro. Dr. Edward N. Calisch was appointed as such committee.

In the matter of arranging for the annual observance in commemoration of Roger Williams, it was resolved that no action be taken for the present in the premises.

As to the establishment of a new Grand Lodge in the Dominion of Canada it was resolved that no action be taken at this time.

Regarding the preparation of and publication of a history of the Order, it was moved by Bro. Jacob Singer that the President of the Order be authorized to make arrangements with Professor Bro. Dr. Gotthard Deutsch, of Cincinnati, with a view of completing the history of the Order, and that a preliminary appropriation of $500.00 be made for that purpose. Motion prevailed.

It was moved by Bro. Charles Hartman that a Committee be appointed to receive such official records and data left by late Bro. Julius Bien, which have not been turned over to his successor in office. Motion prevailed, and Bros. Jacob Singer, Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman and Samuel Fleischman were appointed as such Committee.

As to the preparation of propaganda literature for distribution among lodges and non-members, it was moved by Bro. Philip Stein that the Advisory Committee be authorized to take such action in the premises as it may deem proper. Carried.

As to the creation of lodges among Jewish students in American colleges and universities, it was resolved that the Secretary call the attention of the General Committees of the various District Grand Lodges of America to the recommendation of the Constitution Grand Lodge in regard thereto.

The question of utilizing moving pictures as a valuable method of propaganda, it was moved by Bro. Jacob Singer that the subject matter be referred to the Advisory Committee of the Order with full power to act. Motion carried.

Brothers Lucius L. Solomons and Jacob Singer were appointed a committee to prepare and submit a plan of action in the matter of carrying out the instructions of the Constitution Grand Lodge regarding urging the United States Government to incorporate in all treaties hereafter negotiated with other nations a provision acknowledging and guaranteeing full recognition of the rights of all American citizens regardless of race or creed.

Regarding the manner of conveying expressions of appreciation to the officers of the Constitution Grand Lodge, the State and Municipal authorities, and to such others as have contributed to the success and enjoyment of the Convention, it was moved that the matter be referred to the President of the Order and the Secretary of the Executive Committee for such action as they will deem proper. Motion carried.

The following communications were presented:

From the Institution of Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes, of New York City, under date of May 5, appealing for contribution to the support of the Institution. Resolved, that the Secretary communicate to the officials of the Institution regrets of the Executive Committee that it is not in position to comply with the request.

From District Grand Lodge No. 2, under date of June 10, 1915, enclosing copy of a communication in the matter of the establishment of a B'nai B'rith Peace Monument in the City of Cleveland, as presented at the Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and by it ordered referred to the Executive Committee of the Order for such disposition as it may deem advisable. It was resolved that action thereon be deferred.

From District Grand Lodge No. 2, under date of July 20, 1915, submitting a copy of report of the Committee on "National and International Questions" which was ordered by the Grand Lodge to be referred to the Executive Committee for such action as it may deem proper. The communication was ordered referred to the President of the Order with power to act.

From Homestead Lodge No. 586, of Homestead, Pa., under date of June 17, 1915, calling the attention of the Executive Committee to the situation of the Jewish people in Galicia and Russian Poland, and urging the necessity of raising funds for their support. The Secretary was instructed to inform Homestead Lodge that the subject matter referred to is receiving the earnest attention of the Executive Committee.

From District Grand Lodge No. 2, under date of July 27, 1915, requesting that a liberal allowance be made to the District to aid it in its propaganda efforts.

From Bro. Harry K. Wolff, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, under date of July 9, 1915, requesting that an increased allowance be made to the District for propaganda purposes.

From District Grand Lodge No. 5, under dates of April 14, 1915, and July 28, 1915, calling attention to the successful efforts made toward the institution of a lodge in the city of Baltimore and to the increased propaganda efforts throughout the District, and requesting an increased appropriation for propaganda purposes.

Action on the foregoing requests for propaganda allotments was made a special order of business for the evening session.

From Danmark Lodge No. 712 of Copenhagen, submitting annual report of the activities of the lodge for the years 1914-1915.

A recess was then taken until eight o'clock in the evening.

Evening Session.

At the appointed hour the Executive Committee reconvened in executive session, none but the members of the Executive Committee being present.

The question whether to elect an additional member on the Executive Committee, in accordance with authority granted by the last Convention of the Order, was taken up for consideration.

After a discussion participated in by all the members of the Committee it was unanimously resolved that it is the sense of the Executive Committee that due to the fact that none of the European members of the Executive Committee had an opportunity to express their views on the question of advisability of increasing the membership of the Committee, no action be taken in the premises at this meeting.

Thereupon the executive session was ordered closed and the meeting was thrown open to the public.

The matter of allotting funds to the various Districts for purposes of propaganda was taken up for action.

It was unanimously resolved that any balances due to the District Grand Lodges from previous allotments made by the Executive Committee be paid.

It was further resolved that expenses incurred by District Grand Lodge No. 5 in the organization and institution of Menorah Lodge at Baltimore be paid by the Executive Committee.

Various suggestions as to the manner and mode of apportioning propaganda funds were discussed. It was finally resolved that each District Grand Lodge receive in the form of propaganda allotment the sum of $1.50 for each member representing a net increase in its membership as shown by the District in its annual report, provided that the full per capita tax for such member has been paid to the Executive Committee.

It was further resolved that expenses incurred in propaganda efforts in the Dominion of Canada be paid by the Executive Committee.

The consideration of communications was then resumed.

From the Editor of a publication printed in Paris, France, appealing for aid to continue the publication and enlarge its influence and importance. Communication was ordered filed.

From Bro. Sig. Livingston, Bloomington, Ill., under date of July 11, 1915, enclosing circular issued by the officials of the United States Interior Department concerning the Uintah Valley lands, and suggesting the advisability of settling Jews in this valley. The communication was referred to the Commission on Immigration.

From Dr. Martin Bloch, of Zuerich, Switzerland, under date of June 15, 1915, concerning action taken by Augustin Keller Lodge of Zuerich, with reference to its activity to bring to the notice of the Peace Conference, whenever it should be called, the condition of the Jews in certain lands with a view to ameliorating the same, and asking for the co-operation of the Executive Committee. Communication was ordered referred to the President of the Order for such action as he may deem proper.

From District Grand Lodge No. 1, under date of April 27, 1915, inquiring whether the "Daughters of the B'nai B'rith" are entitled to receive copies of the B'nai B'rith News. The subject matter was referred to the President of the Order and the Secretary of the Executive Committee with full authority in the premises.

From Bro. Victor Abraham, under date of May 21, 1915, advising that he examined the Constitution of District Grand Lodge No. 11, and calling attention to certain parts therein. Communication as well as the Constitution of District Grand Lodge No. 11 were ordered referred to the Advisory Committee with power to act.

From Salonique Lodge of Salonique, Greece, under dates of March 23 and May 2, 1915, with reference to the condition of the Jews in that city and requesting financial assistance to render required relief. Communication was ordered referred to the President of the Order with full authority to act.

From District Grand Lodge No. 6, under date of July 10, 1915, enclosing copy of the report of the Committee on Social Service, as presented to the District Grand Lodge at its recent convention and by it ordered referred to the Executive Committee for its perusal and information. Communication was ordered referred to the Bureau of Social Service.

The President submitted correspondence had with the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America with reference to the use of the indorsement of the Order to the Society in connection with an appeal to the lodges of the Order for financial contribution. Action of the President and the stand taken by him in the matter were approved by the Executive Committee.

The President informed the Executive Committee that he received a telegram from the Jewish Congress Organization Committee requesting the privilege of addressing the Executive Committee to present arguments in favor of the Jewish Congress movement, and that he answered that a hearing would be granted on Wednesday morning. It was ordered this be the first order of business at the Wednesday morning session.

The Committee then took a recess until the following morning at ten o'clock.

Wednesday, Aug. 4, 1915—Morning Session.

At the appointed hour the Executive Committee reconvened with all those reported present at the previous meeting in attendance. In addition the following officers and members of the General Committees of District Grand Lodges Nos. 1 and 3 were present:

President Herman Asher, First Vice-President Abraham K. Cohen, Treasurer Sol Sulzberger, Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan, Members of the General Committee: Morris P. Davidson, Edwin J. Goodheart, Henry Lasker, Charles H. Shapiro, Joseph Levenson, Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, Charles M. Stern, Harry Cutler and Samuel Fleischman, all of District Grand Lodge No. 1.

President Abraham Weil, Treasurer M. S. Meyerhoff and members of the General Committee, Dr. B. S. Pollack and Frederick Jay, all of District Grand Lodge No. 3.

Mr. Louis Lipsky, representing the Jewish Congress Organization Committee, was presented to the Committee. He addressed the members giving a brief recital of the movement of bringing about a Jewish Congress and appealed for the co-operation of the Order through its Executive Committee. He was followed by Bro. Harry Cutler, who explained to the Committee the action taken by the American Jewish Committee in the matter of organizing a Conference.

Bro. Abraham Weil called the attention of the Executive Committee to the disaster that befell the City of Erie, Pa., and suggested that a message be sent to the community of Erie through Bro. Isador Sobel. The Secretary was directed to forward the following telegram:

"Mr. Isador Sobel, Erie, Pa.

"The Executive Committee of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith have heard with deep distress of the great calamity in loss of life and property that has overtaken your fair city of Erie, and desire you to express their profound sympathy to your City Government and Citizens, and their confidence that the spirit and courage of your community will rise superior to this disaster."

The President thereupon announced that he had extended invitations to the members of the General Committees of District Grand Lodges Nos. 1 and 3 to participate in a conference with the Executive Committee for the purpose of discussing propaganda measures in the Districts.

Bros. Asher, Sulzberger, Cohen, Silverman, Fleischman and Stern, on behalf of District No. 1, and Bros. Weil, Jay and Meyerhoff, on behalf of District No. 3, addressed the meeting.

Responses were made by the President of the Order and Bro. Solomons.

Bro. Jacob Singer, on behalf of a few brothers and friends of the Executive Committee, extended an invitation to the Executive Committeee and visiting officers of the various District Grand Lodges to participate in a dinner to be tendered in the evening at the Hotel Rudolf. The invitation was accepted and it was resolved that the propaganda discussion be continued at the dinner.

The President submitted correspondence with the Jewish Congress Organization Committee with reference to securing the co-operation of the Order in the calling of a Jewish Congress on a broad democratic basis, for the purpose of obtaining equal rights and justice for the Jews of all lands.

In this connection communication from the American Jewish Committee was also presented, enclosing text of resolutions adopted at its special meeting held on June 20, 1915, with a view to convening a Conference of representatives of National Jewish Organizations to consider the Jewish question as its affects our co-religionists in belligerent lands, and requesting that the Order elect or appoint seven delegates to the Conference to be held in Washington on October 24, 1915.

After a discussion participated in by all the members of the Executive Committee it was moved by Bro. Jacob Singer that communications from the American-Jewish Committee and the Jewish Congress Organization Committee be referred to the President of the Order with a view of making an effort to secure a union of forces between the two conflicting calls, and that in the event of bringing about such a union, the participation of the Order in the consideration of the Jewish question be assured. Motion prevailed.

In the evening after adjournment, members of District No. 3 arranged a dinner for the Executive Committee and members of the General Committees of Districts Nos. 1 and 3.

Bro. Jacob Singer acted as Toastmaster. Addresses were delivered by Bros. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, Dr. Edward N. Calisch, Jacob Furth, Philip Stein, Joseph H. Ullman, Charles M. Stern, M. S. Meyerhoff and J. W. Salus.

The closing remarks were made by the President of the Order.

There being no further business before the Committee, the meeting adjourned sine die.

A. B. SEELENFREUND,
Secretary.

THE TRAGEDY OF ISRAEL.

What is more remarkable than the history of the Hebrew people? Their race existence begins in a dim and distant past in which myth, tradition and supposed miracle play their part. Their accredited history is too well known to be recited here. Their lot in some respects has been the most deplorable of any people that ever lived. Persecution, injustice, prejudice have followed or preceded them wherever they have gone. Without a country they can call their own, they are wanderers on the face of the earth. They are shedding their blood today in the rival camps of Europe, the victims of circumstances and environment.

Are there any duties and responsibilities that pertain alike to Jew and Gentile? Most certainly there are such duties and responsibilities. The first great duty is that which pertains to a common humanity, the realization that God is no respecter of persons or people.—Rev. C. C. Clark (Universalist), Baltimore, Md.

THE JEW COMING INTO HIS OWN.

At last, after centuries of persecution, slander and abuse, the Jew is coming into his own. Masterful son of a mighty race, descended from the generation of ages past that gave to the world Moses, the law-giver, and Jesus, the Messiah, the Hebrew finally receives the crown of recognition and honor which he has so long and patiently earned. Memories of racial animosities, accumulated and aggravated through many centuries, are passing away. Recollection of ancient bigotry and medieval black magic amid whose curling smoke, rising from the flames of religious fanaticism, kindled 'round thousands of blazing stakes of martyrdom and torture, are becoming revolting memories of a barbarous past. He who, without lands, houses or nationality, has suffered the buffetings of men who labeled themselves Christian to hide the brands of their cruelty, is at last being accorded his just place in the councils of powerful peoples.

The world is beginning to discover its debt to the Jew. America is finding out how much it owes to him, the member of a maligned and maltreated race. And Gentiles everywhere, exemplifying the spirit of the Nazarene who taught charity rather than condemnation, are extending the hand of friendship to the wandering children of far-off Palestine.—Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union.

THE KEHILLAH, XVII

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

My desire when I began this series of articles was to present history from the personal point of view. Our great mistake was, and still is, to a considerable extent, that we write history from dead documents. and official sources. Even if we did so in questions of large political import, such as the present controversies between England, Germany and the United States, we would err because the tone of diplomatic correspondence is certainly quite different from what a privileged character might hear used in the various cabinet meetings. In events that are confined to narrower circles, this is far more the case. Tombstone inscriptions and entries in memor books are written with a pose. as I shall be able to demonstrate in at least one concrete instance.

We have nowhere a continuous history of a congregation. Nikolsburg is no exception. Tombstones of rabbis and of prominent congregational leaders are extant, in a very few instances way back to the beginning of the seventeenth century. One historic tombstone, rather crude in form, gives the name of a martyr. It bears no date and no history of the occurrence, through which the man lost his life. Of the oldest rabbis whose names are preserved in the romantic "Gut Ort" we know very little beyond their name and occasionally, when they are descendants of prominent authors, something of the family connections. We read, for instance, the name of one Abraham, son of Perez, and grandson of Mordecai Jaffe. He died in 1657. This is all that we know about the man. Yet he might have given us a wealth of information on the history of his time. His grandfather, Mordecai Jaffe, was a native of Prague, where he was born about 1530, and he died as rabbi of Posen in 1612. This grandson, in all probability knew the grandfather quite well, and could have told us a great deal about the very interesting man, who might have changed the whole conception of Judaism, had he succeeded with his plan. When Mordecai was in the prime of manhood, an epoch-making work appeared, the Schulchan Aruk, written by Joseph Caro in Safed, Palestine. It was not a very original work, but it was epoch-making. Indeed it seems the nature of epoch-making books that they are not original, but clear, comprehensive compilations of the age The literature on rabbinical law had grown to such an extent that it was difficult, if not impossible, to master it. Joseph Caro epitomized the most popular books of that class, and gave us a concise digest, which filled the need of the time. As always is the case under such conditions, the contemporary rabbis did not like it. Moses Isserls, living in Cracow at the same time, wrote copious notes on the book, very likely on the margin of the copy that he had received, and edited them together with the text. His disciple, Mordecai Jaffe thought he would alter the whole system and gave it to us in a series of books, called "Lebush" (the Garment). The title is highly interesting, because it shows the peculiar system of naming books, prevalent among rabbis. His name was Mordecai, and the book of Esther speaks of Mordecai's "Garment." A rabbinical text again speaks in a mystic fashion of God as a "king robed in ten garments." So Mordecai Jaffe intended writing a book in ten volumes, every one named as a garment of a different color. The work did not succeed. The Schulchan Aruk became more and more popular, while the "Lebusch" is merely known to specialists. It certainly would be interesting, if the grandson had told us something of the life of the grandfather, of his travels from Prague to Poland, of his positions as rabbi of Posen, and finally of the whole mode of life, of salary, of housing conditions, of family relations and the like. Such informations are irrevocably lost.

One man in the rabbinate of Nikolsburg, while not known very well in literature, gives us an interesting insight into the development of Jewish families. His name was Gabriel Eskeles, and he died in Nikolsburg, February 4th, 1718. In Hebrew he signed his name as Gabriel, son of Judah Loeb, of Cracow. To be from Cracow was in those days a title of nobility. In our days he would have preferred to state that his great grandfather came from Worms and was a brother of the famous "tall Rabbi Loeb," who died as rabbi of Prague in 1609. In the beginning of the eighteenth century [illegible] was rabbi of Metz. This again [illegible] of the change of times. No [illegible] Metz today would change his place for Nikolsburg. Two hundred years ago Metz was a remote outpost of the Jewish community, and Nikolsburg was in the center of Jewish life. There was also a personal reason for the desire of Eskeles to change his residence. He had a son, Berush, who married a daughter of the most prominent Jewish financier of those days, Samson Wertheimer in Vienna. This again, is a type of the condition of that age.

Samson Wertheimer, whose name indicates the origin of the family in Wertheim, at present in the grandduchy of Baden, was a native of Worms, where he was born in 1664. He had joined his uncle, Samuel Oppenheimer, who was established in Vienna since 1685, and entered the latter's business. This again is an interesting piece of history. Samuel Oppenheim, also a native of Worms, was an army contractor and banker on a very large scale, doing business with Austria, whose political complications in the seventeenth century required large means. The Jews had been expelled from Vienna in 1670 "for all times," but fifteen years later the "all times" had come to a close. Vienna was besieged by the Turks in 1683, and escaped capture only through the timely intervention of the King of Poland. If the fruits of this happy turn in the events were to be secured, the war had to be prosecuted into Turkey, and the emperor, himself a weakling, was fortunate enough to find in Prince Eugene of Savoy a great strategist. Even great strategists need money for the prosecution of war. The treasury of Austria, however, was in a very hopeless condition. Ammunition, uniforms, and provisions had to be bought on credit. and here the financial genius of Samuel Oppenheim came very handy. As his business required his constant presence in Vienna, the Emperor permitted him to reside there, and even to buy a house. The law was against it, but there was always a way out of it. The imperial court is even today not subject to municipal regulations, and Oppenheim was a member of the imperial household, though he lived outside of the "Burg." As he could not be expected to be separated from his family, and as he needed for his business and for his religious life, other Jews, they were included in his privilege. Naturally he was a man of great influence in Jewish affairs, and it was easy for him to have his nephew, David, elected Rabbi of Nikolsburg in 1690. David, who in addition to the inherited fortune, had the benefit of another fortune, which his wife, Genendel, the daughter of the Hanover court Jew, Leffmann Cohen, brought to him, and he could indulge in the luxury of collecting a large Hebrew library, perhaps the most valuable collection ever in private possession. It now forms part of the Bodleiana in Oxford. In 1904 David Oppenheim was elected rabbi of Prague, and the position in Nikolsburg was again filled through the influence of the family, by Gabriel Eskeles.

Samuel Oppenheim died in 1703, and the house became at once insolvent. Claims against the government were hard to collect, but Oppenheim could meet the constantly increasing demands of the imperial treasury by his personal credit. This factor ceased with his death. Meantime Samson Wertheimer had established himself firmly in Vienna, and became the financial power behind the throne. One of his daughters, as stated before. married Berush, the son of Gabriel Eskeles. There were two titles to nobility amongst the Jews. One was the undying claim of wealth, and the other was rabbinical scholarship or connection with an illustrious rabbinical family. The latter supplied what in modern American life is supplied by titled nobility, when one of its impoverished scions, gilds his escutcheon with the millions of an American packer, railroad or mining magnate. A legend has it that Samson Werheimer's daughter had only one eye, so that in her case the Biblical law of "eye for eye" was fulfilled. "Eye" in Hebrew is "Ayin," which stands for seventy, and Samson Wertheimer gave his daughter a dower of 70,000 florins. The groom was to enter his father-in law's business, but for a while he should continue his rabbinical studies, and even acquire the title of rabbi. Similar conditions may still exist in Poland. Pauline Wengeroff in her interesting "Memoirs of a Grandmother" tells us the story how her father examined a prospective husband of his daughters in Talmud. Another interesting specimen of a history that has passed. This father, Yudel Epstein, was a wealthy contractor. The sons-in-law, in spite of their Talmudic education, drifted away from the ancient ideal, and the only son, Dr. Ephraim M. Epstein, died in Chicago two years ago, as a Christian, and a poor man besides.

We return to Berush, or as he was later called, Bernard Eskeles. He was for a short time rabbi of Mayence, and when he returned to enter the banking firm of his father-in-law, his father wished to be near him, and it was very easy for Samson Wertheimer to procure fo rhis "Mechutten" the position of rabbi of Nikolsburg, and Landrabbiner of Moravia. When the father died, in 1718, the son succeeded him after considerable difficulties. The history of these troubles will give us an insight into congregational life. It has never been written. Eskeles remained in Vienna, but was a non-resident Landrabbiner of Moravia. Such a position was what a man of this type in our day would be a United States senatorship. In spite of his secular position, he was quite serious in the conception of his pastoral duties. At one time the government under the bigoted Empress Maria Theresa, conceived the plan to compel all Jews to wear beards. It may not be entirely superfluous to state that the law which prohibits "to mar the corner of the beard" is interpreted by the rabbis as a prohibition directed against the using of a razor, while clipping the beard, or removing it by means of a salve is permitted. In western Europe the latter was even in my boyhood time quite general. The "Aurum" was a staple commodity in the Jewish groceries. It is a yellow powder, scientifically called "auri pigmentum" (orpiment), which is a kind of arsenic. A pinch of it was put into a lime solution, which by the admixture, turned blue. It had to be warm, but not too hot, or else it would burn the skin very painfully. If again, it was not warm enough, it would not remove the hair. When it had the right temperature, it was smeared on the face, and had to be kept there for a certain time. People at this juncture of the procedure looked like mandrils. After a while it was scratched off with a blunt knife, and the hair went with it. There were also Jewish barbers in the ghetto. The sight of a number of customers on Friday afternoon, sitting around in the primitive shop, with the blue salve on their faces, and a supply of it heated in a pan on the stove, was rather amusing, though somewhat marred by the terrible odor. As an interesting specimen of the era of transition, I might quote a decision of Ezekiel Landau, chief rabbi of Prague (1755-1793) on the question whether the beard may be removed on the semi-holidays "Hol Hamoed." Rabbi Landau decides in the affirmative His chief reason is that the use of the razor is alarmingly growing amongst the Jews, and if shaving by means of the orpiment would not be permitted, the Jews, not desiring to let their beard grow for a week, would become still more accustomed to patronize the non-Jewish barber shop. This decision created a great stir in the rabbinical world, and strong protests were issued against this heresy from Amsterdam to Trieste. But already fifty years previous the use of the razor seems to have become an ineradicable evil. The Landrabbiner Bernard Eskeles is in a predicament. The reason why the government demanded that the Jews should wear beards is not stated, but in all likelihood it was advised in an age, when all men had smooth faces, to single out the Jews as such. The probability of such an explanation is strengthened by the fact that at the same time complaints are heard against Jews who mingle with Christians socially, and dance at Christian balls. Rabbi Eskeles must, however, have understood this object of the German government, and therefore reports adversely. "It has been," so he says, "a general custom amongst the Jews for married men to grow beards while single men are smooth shaven." With a somewhat bold logic, which hardly is sincere, he claims that this practice is a safeguard against bigamy, inasmuch as Jews coming to strange cities will be known at once as married men. While, therefore, he advises against the plan of the government, he uses the opportunity to ask that the government assist him in stopping the abuse that young men shave with a razor, instead of a "Scherl." What success he had, is not known. It is quite certain, however, that now after a hundred and fifty years, the orpiment has disappeared from the staple products of the groceries in the old Kehillah.

Samson Wertheimer died in 1728. His own fortune went the way of all other Jewish fortunes, though a branch of his progeny is still represented amongst the financial aristocracy in the von Wertheimstein family, a member of which married the second son of the late Lord Rothschild. Bernhard Ezkeles continued as Landrabbiner until his death, March 2, 1753. Having lost his first wife, he married again in advanced years, and of this second marriage a posthumous son was born, who according to traditional custom, was given the name of his father. He entered the banking business and established with his brother-in-law, Nathan Adam Arnstein, the firm of Arnstein & Eskeles, which, especially during the Vienna Congress in 1815, was commercially and socially among the leading houses of Vienna. Eskeles, and his partner, married two sisters, the daughters of the Berlin manufacturer, Daniel Itzig. From Judaism both families became totally estranged. Bernhard, Freiherr von Eskeles, died August 7, 1839, at the age of eighty-six, a nominal Jew. His only son originally Daniel Bernhard von Eskeles, afterwards, Denis von Eskeles, continued at the head of the firm, but in 1859, when Austria went into war with Italy, and France joined Austria's enemies, he speculated on the wrong side, and became bankrupt. He died January 14, 1876, as a poor man. His wife was a Baroness Brentano, and of his daughters, one married a Baron Raule, and the other, Baron Ludwig von Gablenz, who was general in the Austrian army, and distinguished himself both in 1859 in Italy and in 1864 in Holstein. He committed suicide January 28, 1874, and the obituary notices say that financial embarrassment and troubles in the family caused him to take his own life. His widow was in 1895 placed under guardianship on account of her extravagance. This is the last fact that I was able to ascertain about the descendants of Gabriel, son of Judah Loeb of Cracow, the descendants of a family, prominent in rabbinical literature, way back in the sixteenth century, and of Samson Wertheimer, the scholarly, pious banker, the Rothschild of the eighteenth century.

I. O. B. B. EVOLUTION.

Evolution finds a shining exemplar in the endeavors of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

Organized originally as a self-help association, with sick benefits and personal interest as its paramount purposes, it grew gradually to larger altruistic stature.

By the special action just taken at the quinquennial session of the Constitution Grand Lodge of the order in San Francisco, this evolution to larger life has flowered into the adoption of a resolution to form a "Social Service Bureau" under the supervision of the executive committee.

The scope of the work of this Social Service Bureau is to include, among other duties, encouragement of the "Big Brother" and "Big Sister" movement, arranging for adequate ministration to Jews confined in penal and corrective institutions, visiting such eleemosynary institutions as homes for the blind, deaf and dumb and insane, and the compilation of such statistical data as will enable us to devise ways and means for fully realizing Jewish social ideals, keeping in touch with juvenile courts, establishing bureaus for the dissemination of information among the masses concerning prevalent dangers, procuring employment, giving advice and counsel to those released from penal and corrective institutions, and in co-operation with the existing agencies assist in the distribution of immigrants and their Americanization.

Some of the old-time members in whom still reigns the ancient idea that the B'nai B'rith is a body existing solely for the welfare of its individual members, the establishment of this "Social Service Bureau" will come as another "folly" of the "younger members."

To those who see the tendency of the hour and the signs of the times, this creditable action of the convention appears to be its chief good piece of work—and the one of greatest potentialities for usefulness to Jewish life and honor to the Order.

One of the next steps which we hope to see may be the abolition of the unnecessary veil of "secrecy" that still is recognized, though more in the breach than the observance.

The B'nai B'rith, by its policy of broader development, is wise in its own generation. Institutions, whether they be commercial, religious, congregational, fraternal, national or educational, that stand rooted and fixed without changes that meet the growing needs and views of modern life, will meet the fate of everything that does not grow—disintegration and decay.

As Gibbon says: "All that is human must retrograde if it do not advance."

Modern life demands development, new ideas, progress and improvement. Declination to advance spells death and dissolution. Progress in ideas is the difference that marks the distinction between life and death, especially in institutions.—"The Modern View."

B'nai B'rith of London and "Alien Enemies"

A Committee of London Lodge of the B'nai B'rith has been formed in order to assist those who are applying for exemption from internment or repatriation. Headquarters have been provided for this purpose at 450 Mansion House Chambers, where the committee has its representative on duty daily between the hours of four and seven o'clock, p. m.

Before the London Lodge inaugurated this movement it communicated with the Board of Deputies asking if the Board is taking up this question, in which event the lodge offered its co-operation.

The Board in its reply expressed thanks for the offer of co-operation, which, however, it seemed unnecessary.

The following letter from the B'nai B'rith Lodge to the London "Jewish Chronicle," explains the attitude of the lodge:

To the Editor—

Sir,—The claim made by the Board of Deputies appears to be that as the Government's internment policy is directed against enemy aliens, it could have no specifically Jewish aspect and ought not therefore to be taken up by them as a Board. It is unnecessary to point out to your readers how illogical and unreasonable such a claim is. Practically every case of intervention by the Board since it came into existence could be shown on equally reasonable grounds to have been unwarranted. And as for the future it will be difficult again to find reasonable grounds for representation to Government departments on behalf of Jews. By this single claim the Board has stultified the whole of its past and nullified its future.

I write this to point out that it is not only in regard to enemy aliens that the Board has failed in its plain duty. There is in particular the case of British Jews who are interned as civilian prisoners in enemy-countries, as to whom—so far as I know—the Board has done absolutely nothing. As soon as the matter came before me, as President of the B'nai B'rith, I communicated with the Foreign Office, and they promptly offered to help in transmitting money, through the U. S. Ambassador in Berlin, for the benefit of Jewish prisoners at Ruhleben. I accordingly sent £50 for this purpose on behalf of the B'nai B'rith, and requested that I might be informed if further sums were needed. The reply I reecived was as follows:

The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs presents his compliments to Mr. Rosenbaum and, with reference to his letter of the 16th instant, transmitting a cheque for fifty pounds to be used for the benefit of interned British Jews at Ruhleben, is directed by Secretary Sir E. Grey to state that the United States Ambassador is being requested to expend the equivalent of this amount in the manner desired by the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. His Excellency is also being asked whether, in his opinion, further sums are likely to be needed for the same object.

Foreign Office,
March 19th, 1915.

I have, up to date, received no further communication from the Foreign Office on this matter.

Very truly yours,
S. Rosenbaum.

We quote from the editorial of the "Jewish World" commenting on the action of the Board of Deputies, as follows:

The Board and the Aliens.

"We profoundly regret both the debate and the decision arrived by the Board of Deputies on Sunday in regard to the internment of alien enemies. We would at once add that in our view blame ought not to be placed on the bulk of the members of the Board except in their permitting themselves to engage in a discussion and come to a determination on a matter so important and so difficult with the poor equipment that was provided them. They met to consider a report of their Laws and Parliamentary Committee, and instead of the report, with its recommendations, being put into print and circulated among the members of the Board some days before the meeting, it was read to the meeting by the Secretary, and the Board was asked to approve it right away. We understand that the Committee which made the report met only a little while before the Board, and hence there was not time to circulate the report. Be this as it may, such a proceeding would not be tolerated by any other public body charged with public interests, and it is a matter for no wonder, as will be manifest from a perusal of a record of the proceedings, that the Board went lamentably awry. Even the hon. officers appear to have been wofully ignorant of the subject under debate. How else are we to account, for instance, for the observations of Mr. H. S. Q. Henriques in moving the adoption of the report? That gentleman spoke about creating an agitation concerning the public policy which had been announced in regard to the internment question. We see no suggestion of anything of the sort in the proposals to the Board by the B'nai B'rith, nor was any revealed from any other quarter as having been made. He spoke about challenging the Government's policy, and putting forward "a general claim for Jews as Jews." Where was there such a demand? Assuredly not in the subjects upon which the B'nai B'rith sought the co-operation of the Board. He spoke of the dangerous position that might ensue in certain circumstances where the Board had given a guarantee for some alien enemy. His idea that the Board was ever expected to stand as surety is as fallacious as the notion that seems to have seized Mr. D. L. Alexander that someone was anxious for the Board "to interfere with the present administration," whatever that exactly may mean.

The Proposals.

The suggestion of the B'nai B'rith which came up for the consideration of the Board fall under two main heads—assistance and guidance for Jews liable to internment or deportation, and provision, largely of a religious character, for those Jews whom the authorities determine to intern. We see nothing in these suggestions that remotely bears the interpretation placed upon them. They do not in the least impugn the policy of internment—wisely so we think, although we have no hesitation in saying that in our views the internment, in plain language the punishment by imprisonment of persons against whom all that is alleged is that they happen to have been born in a country with which this country is at war and do not happen to be naturalized, has no moral justification. But the law of the land on the subject being what it is and the law having been passed in obedience to declared military necessity, no loyal subject would think for an instant of doing aught save to help the authorities in carrying out the law.

Helping the Government.

This in effect is what the B'nai B'rith proposed under the first head of their suggestions. The Government has set up machinery for exempting alien enemies from liabiblity to internment in special cases, and the Board was asked to help the Government to discover those special cases in behalf of Jewish alien enemies who are unable to do so on their own. The Government seeks to obtain sureties for good behavior from alien enemies so that they may not be interned (or so that they may be released from internment), and the Board was asked to help the Government by assisting Jews to place in proper form the necessary documents from such sureties, and generally advising those who may be unable—possibly because they are interned—to do so for themselves. Far from there being any indication of a desire to hamper or interfere with the Government's policy of internment, we see in these proposals a desire to support the Government in Jewish Cases. Nor can it possibly be argued that the provision of kosher food for interned Jews or their segregation in special camps so as to facilitate the distribution of such food, as well as arrangements for Jewish services, is other than proffering help to the Government. For the Government has provided kosher food in some instances and encourages religious services for all denominations. Indeed the Board is undertaking work in that direction. There remains only of the B'nai B'rith propositions the protection of the dependents of interned or repatriated persons. That is surely no suggestion for interfering with the policy of the Government, and again we ask: what was there in the proposals before the Board to warrant the speech made by Mr. Henriques or the attitude adopted by most of those who took part in the debate?"

TO COMBAT ANTI-SEMITISM.

The Italian Government has published a decree for the purpose of assuring the execution of the terms of a bequest by the late Signor Emilio Treves. He left the sum of 10,000 lire (£400) to be awarded as a prize for a publication designed to combat race and religious hatred, especially anti-Semitism, and to spread profound sentiments of fraternity and love among mankind. The work must be written in Italian, and in simple and popular form accessible to everybody. The competition is international, and the MSS. must be sent to the Minister of Education in Rome before the 1st of February, 1916.

A Page from the History of Sufferings of the Russian Jews

By Professor G. Simonsen, Copenhagen

That the great war would bring upon the Jews of Russia as upon all the subjects of this large empire, heavy sufferings, was quite natural. As soon as the war broke out the Russian Jews displayed the highest degree of self-sacrifice and such loyalty in words and deeds that perhaps in many places it was surprising. Beside the 300,000 Jewish soldiers who had been enlisted there came a great many volunteers, and the number of Jews serving or having served at the front is estimated at about 400,000. But to the misfortune of the Jews the war was just carried on in places where a great part of the inhabitants of the towns were Jews, and the movements of the fighting armies brought many mischiefs upon the civil Jewish population. By this time we have got so many descriptions of what has happened during the invasions of the various armies in Belgium, Serbia, Galicia and East Prussia, that everybody may imagine how it was in Poland, when they were fighting there. But to these sufferings came, as Georg Brandes already mentioned in this paper, that the Polish Jews completely unjustly were accused of treason and of having made themselves useful as spies. On this subject a big "black book" could be written. But I shall only in a few words—and not from unreliable newspaper reports, but from the informations of completely reliable men—tell what has happened to a large extend during the last half of last month.

After all the preceding expulsions from various Polish districts a head blow against the Jews came in the last weeks of May. The Russian military authorities ordered without the slightest cause that about 200,000 Jews were to be driven away from their places. The governments of Kurland, the government of Kovno, with its dense population of Jews, and partly the government of Suvalki were—to use the technical term —"evacuated of Jews."

The respite which was granted the Jews to get away varied between 8 hours (as in Szawle), and 30 hours (in Kovno). In the government of Kovno alone 160,000 persons were overtaken by the dreadful fate which is doubly hard because it is here the question of a population which at the same time has placed mighty hosts of men in their best vigor to serve in the field.

Eye witnesses tell, shuddering, how these regulations were carried through. It was as in the middle ages to see how the Jewish population of a whole lot of towns was driven away in the course of a few hours so that not one single Jewish soul was allowed to stay. Both old people and children were turned out, women awaiting their delivery and mothers still in their childbeds. Mortal illness, madness, nothing saved them, cripples and blind ones, all were hit by the same law. Among the families there were many whose men fought at the front; also the soldiers who had got furlough to recover from their wounds and were now staying in their homes were turned out, nay, even soldiers who were still treated in the lasarettoes because of their wounds. Together with all the others the Jewish military surgeons, and the Jewish staff of the hospitals were turned out and Jewish hospitals and old age asylums were closed. Towns as Kovno, Ponewesch and Wilkomir, whose population was chiefly Jewish, were extinct from one day to the other. Broken hearted at the scorn, the Jews themselves often destroyed their through generations acquired furniture, among which valuable glasses and other valuable things. In the time from the 19th of May the expelled Jews rushed off as in a migration. They were not allowed to stay in the neighboring governments, but wandered to the Eastlier parts of the Jewish territory to the governments of Tshernigow, Poltava, Jakaterinoslaw and Taurien. Although it was impossible that this emigration of several hundred thousand people could be carried through according to the program no count was taken and no time given. Twenty-six "extra" trains were placed at the disposal of part of the population, and on the 18th and 19th of May they carried 40,000 persons in the course of 30 hours. But how these "extra" trains looked! Each of them consisted of 40-70 luggage vans, presenting a picture of the most dreadful misery. On the heaped-up feather-beds and furniture of every kind, human beings half mad with fear and rage, were sitting or standing pressed together worse than cattle. Men and women, children and old people, the sound and the sick, susceptible of infection, the hitherto wealthy people and tramps, all were carried off to far away places in an indescribable mass, a dreadful living freight. Now and then the trains were allowed to stop, but not at the very stations, but at least half a mile from them. It was, therefore, immensely difficult to the various committees which had hastily been formed on the sad way of the poor fugitives, to procure the most important necessaries of life for these swarms. In many places they only succeeded by using the not unknown way of bribing the staff. The tragedy of these transports in their entirety was still increased by the thrilling individual cases: by the suddenness with which they had been driven out, the various members of the families had been separated; wives had to seek their husbands, mothers their children. And all lamented the homes they had lost and the misery awaiting them. Every train arriving brought new grief.

For a great many of the turned out people there was no room in the trains. Many thousands drove off in cars for which enormous prices were charged (to 80 and 100 rubles), other thousands could not get any cars or could not afford the high prices and were obliged to hurry away from their old homes on foot. In the days from the 19th of May a very sad picture was to be seen; on all the roads leading from West, North and Southwest to Vilna endless trains of high-towering and crowded cars dragged along; the people in them hardly knew where to go to. Soon the driving and walking populated the villages in which they were allowed to make halt for a time. In this way the number of the Jews in the small hamlets—Schosli, Jewje, Shirwonty, etc.—suddenly increased from 800-1,000 to 5-6,000 souls. The fugitives did not only fill the houses, the cellars and the synagogues (in the synagogue of Schosli 800 persons were stowed together), but the Jewish inhabitants of the hamlets kindly spared the fugitives any bit of room. But even that was not sufficient and great crowds were obliged to camp in the woods.

When the evacuation of the mentioned territories began, representatives of commerce and trade stormed to the minister of finance and commerce and asked him at least to guard the possessions of the fugitives. Deputations consisting of the president of the Jewish congregation in Petrograd, of Mr. Friedmann the Duma representative, and local Jewish personalities asked Mr. Goremykin, the Premier, and Mr. Maklakow, the minister of home affairs, to save the innocent from the dreadful sufferings.

Not till the 22nd of May, when the mischief had happened and all were away the order of expulsion was called back and only on disgracing conditions. Prince Tumanow, the military governor, who from Dvinsk governed the mentioned governments, declared to the Jewish deputation that the Jews were not allowed to return unless they should tender a number of hostages from among the rabbis and other esteemed and wealthy Jews. Besides Prince Tumanow told them to bring home to the Jews "that if the slightest treason were discovered among the Jews these hostages should be hanged immediately." Offended at this answer, the deputation was obliged to return to the masses who had already thought that they might breathe again, only to tell them about the new shame which thus has overcome them. The proposal was discussed and they agreed unanimously in refusing it as staining the honor of the Jews. And these 200,000 Jews, driven away from their homes, remain given up to the misery of banishment.

For the time the Jews of Vilna seem to have been spared, it is said on demand of the governor of the town, who took upon himself a very strong guarantee of the perfect loyalty of his subjects. But during the very last days another dreadful emigration began. During the fighting in the Western part of Poland, as already mentioned, a lot of Jews, besides those who flew on account of the war, had been expelled and had come to Warsava. The Jewish population of this town tried, of course, to mitigate the lot of the homeless, although it was very difficult. But now the military authorities have ordered that the part of the population of Warsava which has immigrated since the 1st of July, 1914, is to be sent away at once to the more eastly governments. Although this order does not more especially mention the Jews it must, as things are getting on, hit them very severely, as they are forming the greater part of those arrived in Warsava during that time. And all the other Russian Jews must feel themselves as outlawed, as in spite of all their patriotic deeds, in spite of the numerous sacrifices they have brought—the parole has been given that the Jews are traitors. How is this dreadful tragedy to be ended?

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

Published Monthly (except July and August)
under the auspices of the
INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Editorial Office
1228 TRIBUNE BUILDING, CHICAGO.
All matter intended for publication should be addressed to the editor.

Subscriptions received through lodges only.
Subscriptions, one dollar per annum.

No responsibility is assumed for articles published over the signatures of the writers thereof.

JEWISH CALENDAR

5676-1915

New Year's Eve	Wednesday, Sept. 8
Yom Kippur	Saturday, Sept. 18
Succoth (1st Day)	Thursday, Sept. 23
Succoth (Last Day)	Wednesday, Sept. 29
Shemini Atzereth	Thursday, Sept. 30
Simchas-Torah	Friday, Oct. 1
Rosh-Chodesh Cheshvan	Saturday, Oct. 9
Rosh-Chodesh Kislev	Monday, Nov. 8
Chanukah (Feast of Dedication)	Thursday, Dec. 2
Rosh-Chodesh Tebeth	Wednesday, Dec. 8
Fast of Tebeth	Friday, Dec. 17

5676-1916

Rosh-Chodesch Shehbat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Rosh-Chodesch Adar	Saturday, Feb. 5
Second Adar	Monday, March 6
Purim (Feast of Esther)	Sunday, March 19
Rosh-Chodesch Nissan	Tuesday, April 4
Passover (Pesach)	Tuesday, April 18
Passover (Seventh Day)	Sunday, April 24
Rosh-Chodesch Iyar	Thursday, May 4
Lag-B'Omer	Sunday, May 21
Rosh-Chodesch Sivan	Friday, June 2
Shabuoth (Confirmation Day)	Wednesday, June 7
Rosh-Chodesch Shebat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Fast of Tammuz	Tuesday, July 18
Rosh-Chodesch Ab	Monday, July 31
Fast of Ab	Tuesday, Aug. 8
Rosh-Chodesch Ellul	Wednesday, Aug. 30

5677-1916

Printed by Excelsior Printing Co., Chicago.

A Protest

"The story of our times is being written in blood. The heavens are filled with the cries of the wounded the agony of the dying. The sighs of the widowed and the orphaned swell this chorus of woe and suffering. Of it the Order of B'nai B'rith must take cognizance with a heavy heart. It is not for the fraternity to express judgment on the participants and victims in this world tragedy. It is for it to sympathize and weep with all whose eyes are shedding tears.

Many of its band have gone to the battlefield. Their country called them. And as Jews they have known their duty and are doing it with loyal and brave hearts. Under banners waving over opposing lines and trenches the sons of Israel are vying with compatriots of other religious affiliations to offer on the altar of their country life limb and labor tears treasure and talent. Theirs is the one consecration that of stirring patriotism. They are steadied by the belief that their country's cause is just. That belief it is not of the Order to challenge or to weaken.

Its prayers go out to all who are carrying the heavy burden of these days in the war racked lands across the ocean. Its prayers are winged to Him who orders the fates of individual and nation that in His mercy He shall soon bid the troubled waters subside and let the sun of Peace shine once more on the whole family of his children of whatever tongue or whatever division of the earth.

Alas once more has Israel to experience what so often was laid on it that it is called to carry a double weight of the burdens imposed on others. In every army now battling for the decision written in the script of iron and fire are its own no less brave than the bravest of their comrades. This loyalty of the Jew should have given pause to the traducer's and the persecutor's poisoned dialect. Alas it has not. While in many countries prejudice has ceased its groundless imputations and in others where its voice was never loud the dire stress of the hour has not given it a new hearing—alas in Russia the Committee has had reason to say to the old [illegible] of hell wherewith to torture [illegible] devices have been added [illegible] stands have been made [illegible] forced to give up what pre[illegible] their humble homes could afford them and that not at the bidding of an invader but under cruel orders of the very commanders of the battalions and army corps in the ranks of which their husbands sons and fathers are facing their Tzar's armed enemies. Under the trumped up charge to which there is no basis that Jews are spies and traitors old men have been hanged while married women and innocent girls have been given over without protection to the fiendish lust of Cossacks. From the services in their synagogues men and matrons have been dragged to their doom learned Rabbis have been tortured to death their very lifeless bodies exposed to unspeakable indignities. This pitiless injustice recalling the worst of the Pogrom era which one had the right to expect had been terminated when Russia was admitted into the alliance with France and England, nations not given to persecuting of Jews, calls for reproval and protest. It cannot be passed over in silence on the plea that its denunciation by us is in violation of American neutrality. America and certainly the American who construes his religious philosophy out of the elements of Prophetic insistence on Justice and Duty on Righteousness and Equity as the sacramental words of his and all Faith has the right to call out to the fiendish abettors and authors of such shameless persecution that they are bringing the good repute of their allies to shame by their hellish indulgence in cruelty intolerable victims of which are the wives fathers mothers children of soldiers who are braving their breasts to the shot and shell of hostile armies.

Russia unless she desists will make of Patriotism a mockery as alas she has often enough made of justice and humanity. Whatever shall be the final decree of the battlefield such outrages as have been instigated against the loyal Jewish population of Poland and the Russian Pale have dimmed for all time what glory may attach to Russian soldiers' valor. In the Jew humanity has been crucified and tortured. The Executive Committee records this protest grieving that even now when woe and suffering might teach men the ungodliness of heated passion and blind bigotry some in authority in Russia's councils and armies do not hesitate to permit and to encourage measures and practices which would have been found beneath the standard of civilization of savage tribes."

THE MURDER IN GEORGIA.

Judge Lynch has triumphed. The prisoner whom the state of Georgia was bound to protect, his wound inflicted by a fellow-prisoner not yet healed, was dragged out of his cell, spirited away in manacles over three counties and in the twilight hours done to death. It was not a mob, we are told, but a small number of "respectable" citizens that did the ghastly work. An ex-Judge down there comes forward with the specious plea that the men that hanged Frank knew themselves as executioners of the sentence pronounced by the courts and that not they, but Governor Slaton, was the guilty person. Be it said to the honor of our country that the deed has been viewed outside of Georgia as a lawless act. Whether or not the murderers will be called to account, matters only to the state in which the crime was perpetrated. It is up to Georgia to clear itself and to wipe out the evil from its midst. We on the outside can only stand aghast at the perversion of all sense of right and lawfulness engendered by passion fomented by calumnies and hatred.

The South and North once before engaged in a bloody conflict over a question of morals. The South and North still disagree on a vital matter of law and order. We in the North are not insensible to chivalry. An outrage upon a woman's honor will make us bend our efforts that the guilty be brought to book and meet condign punishment. But we will let the law take its course. We shall not take the law into our own hands. We have our courts of law and our constituted authorities. The Governor of Georgia acted within his rights when he commuted the prisoner's sentence. He was the final authority and it behooved the law-abiding citizens to abide in his verdict. His was a lawful course; the stigma of law-breaking rests upon the mob.

Be it understood, we have all along expressed our opinion that so long as a reasonable doubt existed in the minds of the constituted authorities with the Governor as the apex of the system as to the guilt of the prisoner, he was entitled to the benefit of the doubt. This is common Anglo-Saxon practice and on that ground we made our stand. All honor to the courageous Governor who in obedience to his own conscience upheld the principle of reasonable doubt. And when he ruled that the evidence left doubt in his mind, that ruling was conclusive, final, irrevocable. It was the law of the state. Frank was, therefore, unlawfully done to death. He was murdered. The stain of murder will rest on the state until the guilty persons are punished. There is no other course open for Governor Harris. Upon him rests the responsibility of vindicating the fair name of Georgia. It was his business to protect the prisoners. It was his business to uphold the law. It is still his business to ferret out the guilty. We shall stand aside and await his action. He shall not have cause to remonstrate with outside interference. We shall watch perhaps his efforts thwarted by conniving and condoning juries. So much the worse for a state of this great Union where lawlessness may go unpunished. It is very well to talk of state rights. The state is an integral part of the Union. We share its blame in a measure. We cannot altogether idly stand by. Interfere indeed we must not. But we are free to pronounce judgment upon an act of lawlessness which nothing can extenuate.

Frank is dead. He was convicted by a jury under the influence of passion and admist the shouts of a frenzied mob without. He was convicted upon the testimony of a degraded negro. Had the accused been one of their own, the chivalrous Southerners would have been reluctant to convict him on such testimony. But Frank was not of their own. Hence the conviction, though the presiding Judge could not make up his mind as to whether the accused was guilty or not. If he was not guilty, his hanging by the process of Lynch Law was a dastardly act of mob rule. If he was guilty, his guilt was not proved in the judgment of the highest authority in the state with whom alone the final verdict rested. Hence as matters stand, in one way or another Frank's death was against the process of law and therefore a plain act of violence, it was murder.

In common with the all law-abiding citizens we hope that this blot upon American civilization will be wiped out. We understand provocation as well as anybody else. Nevertheless we must defend regularly constituted authorities against mob rule. We must stand sentinel over the due processes of law against lawlessness. Society ordains that the guilty be punished, put behind prison bars or deprived of life. But it is the function of the courts and the government machinery. Whoso takes a life in defiance of authority plainly and simply commits murder. And he who shields a murderer has likewise committed murder.

PEACEFUL SOLUTION.

Our members will be pleased to learn that the Jewish Congress Organization Committee and the American Jewish Committee have accepted our Executive Committee's plan for a consultation, which acceptance at once makes for peace and efficiency and probably for a sane concerted effort to secure the political enfranchisement of our co-religionists in all those lands where equal rights are still denied them. At present our country enjoys the privileged status of a neutral. We pray and hope that America shall not be entangled in this bloody war. We have the hotheads who clamor for the plunge into the conflict; there are others within our border who for one reason or another would embarrass our government in its efforts none too easy and in every sense delicate. The diplomacy of a nation, however, is not carried on by either jingoes or craven pacifists. We must not lose our head as a nation. We Jews have concerns of our own above those which fall to us in conjunction with all our fellow-citizens. We at least are perfectly clear as to what we want done. We know that the war must sooner or later come to a conclusion. The part nobly played by our brethren in the belligerent countries entitles their just cause to a hearing when the representatives of the nations shall be convened to adjust their differences and to trace the borders of the great and small powers. We shall have to in some manner lay Israel's cause before the congress of the nations. We on this side—for the present at least—have a great advantage. We are, thanks to the neutrality of the nation, free from rancor that divides European Jewry. We are therefore in a position to lay out the work in advance, to map out a workable plan, to prepare against the day when our appeal must go forth to those in power and authority. But we must not for a moment forget that the consummation of the efforts for which we may make preparation must be left to those immediately concerned, to those who are on the spot and best know the avenues of aproach, who are also able better to gauge that which is possible of realization and to differentiate it from all chimeras and Utopias. Diplomats will lend an attentive ear to the one and will resolutely refuse to entertain mere notions which partake of the nature of dreams.

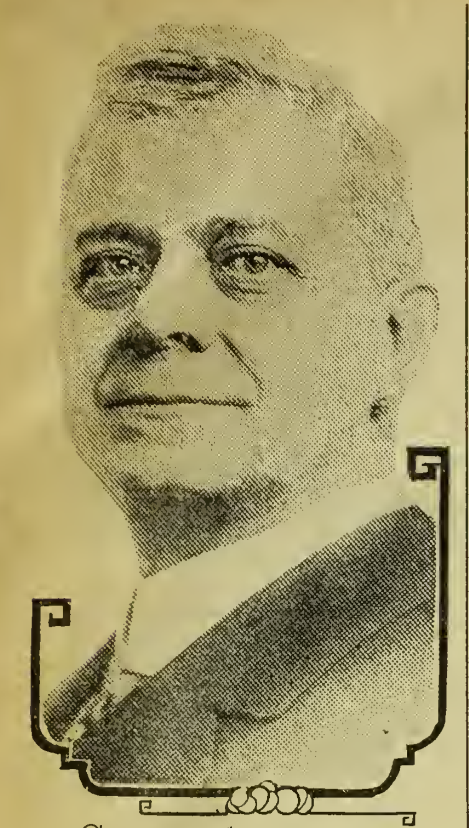
We have a perfect right each to cherish a pet theory. But we have no right to unduly emphasize our individual wishes when that upon which we all can unite must needs be given procedure. Recognizing, therefore, the importance of the hour, we counsel concerted action along sane lines—that is, along lines of the attainable. It is absolutely imperative that we relegate to the background the things that divide us. The ventilation of the manifold problems that beset Jewry should be eliminated. Let such problems be dealt with by the bodies specifically called into existence for such purposes or unitedly at some later date. Whatever is of a tangible character will by that very fact impress itself on all of us. We can see for the present but one weighty business. For that we need cool heads, deliberate words, wise counsels. We need also a measure of information as to what is going on. That may be obtained by a friendly consultation as now agreed upon.

A united stand by all American Jews is now made possible, and we hope and pray that the result of the consultation will redound to the lasting benefit of our persecuted brethren as well as American Jewry.

The inhabitants of that portion of Russian Poland now under control of the German government are to be congratulated. They will, under the changed condition, be the beneficiaries of an administration of justice without respect to race or creed, which they never experienced under Russian rule.

DOCTOR T. B. SACHS IS HONORED.

Dr. Theodore B. Sachs, President of the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute, at the head of the Board of Municipal Tuberculosis Sanitarium, and a member of Oriental-Hillel Lodge, No. 72, of Chicago, was elected President of the National Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, at the recent session of the National Convention.



SAMUEL ALSCHULER

Hon. Samuel Alschuler, Past President of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 and repeatedly delegate to District Grand Lodge No. 6, has been appointed by President Wilson Judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the States of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Brother Alschuler has been a law partner of President Adolf Kraus for twelve years last past. He was at one time the Democratic nominee for Governor of the State of Illinois and at another time the nominee of the same party for United States Senator.

DR. PAUL EHRLICH.

Dr. Paul Ehrlich, discoverer of salvarsan and the antitoxin for dyphtheria, died suddenly on Aug. 20, at Bad Hamburg, Germany.

Dr. Ehrlich was also noted as an expert in the treatment of cancer. Half the Nobel prize for medicine was awarded to him in 1908. At the International Medical Congress in 1913, held in London, Dr. Ehrlich was acclaimed "the greatest exponent of modern pathology" in the civilized world.

Although Dr. Ehrlich is no more among the living, yet his name and fame will endure forever.

SOLOMON LEVITAN HONORED.

Mr. Sol. Levitan, of Madison, Wis., the Sergeant-at-Arms of District Grand Lodge No. 6, was elected President of the Commercial National Bank of his home town. Mr. Levitan has well merited the distinction conferred upon him. He has been, and still is, one of the leading citizens, not only of his own community, but of the state as well. The B'nai B'rith News congratulates Brother Levitan, and wishes him to grow "Mechayil el Chayil."

A BEN B'RITH HONORED.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Commercial National Bank of Shreveport, La,. Mr. Ernest R. Bernstein, of that city, first vice-president of the District Grand Lodge No. 7, was elected first vice-president of the institution. The selection of Mr. Bernstein is a subject for felicitations.

A UNIQUE WEDDING CELBRATION.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin A. Marks, of Cleveland, in honor of the wedding of their daughter, Ethel, to Mr. Herbert Richard Dreyfus, which was held on July 27, 1915, tendered a feast to fifteen hundred orphan children, who are inmates of the various orphanages of Cleveland. Twelve charitable institutions were selected to participate in this novel celebration.

THE RUSSIAN MINISTRY AND THE PALE.

The Press of Petrograd reports that as a result of prominent pro-Jewish petitions the Ministry of the Interior has changed its attitude towards the Jewish question, and has recognized the desirability of granting to Jews permission to come into contact with commercial centers outside the Pale. The Ministry favors allowing Jews to reside in towns outside of the Pale, but to keep all villages closed to them.

A Call to America

The Union of German Jews is sending out the following call of Field Chaplain Dr. Levi for the purpose of spreading it abroad among the neutrals:

Here fire flashes and poison flows over an area of thousands of miles. There is war in the Old World. We must and will fight and defend ourselves because we want to live as our God has destined us to live. We sacrifice our means in the fight for our life.

On the other side of the great water only is peace, shalom! Almost America alone does not hear the thunder of the cannons and the crash of the bombs. There the shattering stone and iron do not rattle, there sounds a finer productive golden rain—golden peace!

But into that golden peace on the other side I would like to call out so that it might sound loudly in every ear and cause every heart to tremble: "America! America! Most unfortunate of all lands!"

America? Most unfortunate of all lands? America is the freest of all lands! Ability and striving have no limits there! And every one of our relatives who ever was on the other side and came over here told us things to which we listened with intense interest and throbbing hearts. Who ever could not catch and overtake fortune here in the Old World, on the other side achieved it. America? Most unfortunate of all countries?

"America! America! Most unfortunate of all lands!" I have seen them in Poland, the little and the big cities, from which for years and decades many hundreds of thousands have gone to the other side to you, America, to which they turned pressed down by heavy burdens in order to stand erect and to be human beings on the other side.

I have seen them, the little half-ruined huts where those who are on the other side have, because of their misery, never played as children, from which they went away to have houses and palaces on the other side.

I have seen them, the fathers with the black round skull-cap and the white waving beard, the patriarchs; the mothers with their sad look, a child on their left, a child on their right and an unborn one beneath their heart—son and brother are citizens of America.

I have seen them, the Bothe-Hamidrash where old and young sit around the table with folio volumes before them and plunge with torn soul into a better dream land.

"America! America! Most unfortunate of all lands!" Out of these little and big cities you have gained many thousands of your most faithful and most industrious citizens and when their letters or cards come into the huts of the old home the hands of the father and the mother trembled for joy and the little ones crowded full of inquisitiveness around the leaf of paper bringing the glad message. Sunshine and light were in the narrow street. For your dollar which you sent so willingly and so often, for your greeting the Sabbath lights shone all through the narrow room and the eyes of the old folks looked up to you in gratitude, the hearts used to throb greetings to you and their thoughts were devoted to you, the hands were lifted in blessing for you, the lips of your dear ones here, of the father and the mother, of the brother and the sister uttered a prayer for you!

"America! America! Most unfortunate of all lands!" You have peace, you are not fighting for your life, now you are not sending the dollar, not the letter and not the card to all the sadly beautiful places of your childhood from Libau to Lemberg, iron bullets you are sending through the empire of the Czar; the eyes which looked up to you in gratitude are now staring in the frenzy of fear when thy greetings thunder and spread ruination, the Sabbath lights are extinguished, fire and death turn the room into a heap of rubbish, the hearts which did beat for you are breaking. the hands which were folded and raised in prayer for you are shattered, the mother who bore you is mutilated and slain, the lips which prayed for you have become dumb. You are giving iron for gold, death for life. Children are murdering their parents!

America! America! I am calling you!

PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

President Harry K. Wolff, of District Grand Lodge No. 4, announced that he had arranged for a prize essay contest, in which all students of the University of California probably will be invited to compete.

The essays are to be written upon any Jewish subject and the conditions governing the contest will be determined by a committee to be named later.

Grand President Wolff has offered prizes of $25, $15 and $10 to the three best essayists. The contest will be announced through the Berkeley B'nai B'rith lodge.

SOCIAL SERVICE BUREAU OF THE I. O. B. B.

Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, of Pittsburgh, has been offered and accepted the position of Director of Social Service Bureau of the Order. He will resign his present position as Rabbi of "Tree of Life" Congregation, to take effect after the holidays, and will move to Chicago, his future headquarters, the latter part of October.

In reporting the above facts, the "American Israelite," in speaking of Dr. Coffee, states in part:

"Dr. Coffee is particularly well equipped for the office. He brings to his work not only that intelligence which is the result of careful Jewish training, but the large experience of a man in public life who has for years been studying the social problems of the cities. As the head of the Pittsburgh commission for the study of immorality of that city and its causes, Dr. Coffee made a name for himself that is more than local. The B'nai B'rith has chosen well in Dr. Coffee."

We quote in part from an editorial of the "Jewish Criterion" of Pittsburgh:

"The B'nai B'rith has made an unusually wise selection and we believe this opinion will be echoed by all public workers who have had occasion to come in contact with Dr. Coffee."

This new department of the B'nai B'rith promises to be one of the most important features that has been inaugurated since the inception of the Order, and under the inspiring direction of Dr. Coffee great results should be achieved that will add lustre to the organization.

We, in common with thousands of other friends, wish him Godspeed in his new field, and while he is to be congratulated upon being selected for such important work, the B'nai B'rith is to be equally congratulated in securing the services of one so unusually qualified to be its director—Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee."

Other papers comment as follows:

Dr. Coffee, for nine years Rabbi of the Tree of Life Synagogue of Pittsburgh, has been selected to take charge of the Social Service Department, which the Independent Order B'nai B'rith is to organize with headquarters in Chicago.

Dr. Coffee's rabbinical work has been distinguished by its intense Jewishness, earnestness, zeal and indefatigable persistency. In his new work he has a greater field for labor and we have no doubt whatsoever that he will acquit himself in this to the best of his ability—and this guarantees absolute success. What the American Rabbinate has lost the Independent Order B'nai B'rith and American Jewry in general has gained. We sincerely congratulate the Order upon securing so efficient an executive. May God prosper the Order through the activity of this learned and enthusiastic Rabbi, and may this young leader of Israel have arichuth yomim for the benefit of his people.—Jewish Tribune.

An item of great interest in the constructive forces in American Israel has developed this week. The announcement is made that at a meeting of the executive committee of the B'nai B'rith held in Atlantic City $25,000 was appropriated for the establishment of a social service bureau in connection with the Big Brothers' and Big Sisters' movement. The bureau will be located in Chicago and work will commence October 15th.

What makes the announcement doubly interesting to California Jewry is the fact that an Oakland boy, Rev. Rudolph I. Coffee, for many years rabbi of a Pittsburgh congregation, has been chosen by the B'nai B'rith to take charge of the bureau.

Few men in the American rabbinate have given more earnest application to the study of social service and its multifarious problems than Rabbi Coffee and he has come to be regarded as an expert in that science.

The Independent Order B'nai B'rith deserves great credit for this noble enterprise which under the leadership of Dr. Coffee cannot fail but to accomplish untold good.—Emanu-El.

As the present is an age of social service, we are certain that Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee is to be warmly commended for this acceptance of the responsible post of director of social service with the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. Our news columns contained the details of this interesting incident; here it remains only for us to indicate our conception of what the scope of this new undertaking is likely to be. For Rabbi Coffee it presents a magnificent opportunity. For the order it is a departure pregnant with significance. For one thing, it implies that the order is making the endeavor to answer the needs of the day in Jewish work and Jewish affairs. The B'nai B'rith as a medium for social service is as yet a bit of an untried quantity, but judging from Rabbi Coffee's record, we feel sure that under his direction it will become a power to be reckoned with. At all events, the B'nai B'rith has a substantial and widely-scattered membership and this body of men can and of right ought to do much for the social betterment, the social improvement of their fellow-Jews under intelligent guidance.—Hebrew Standard.

EXERCISES AT B'NAI B'RITH ORPHANAGE AND HOME FOR FRIENDLESS CHILDREN AT ERIE, PA.

On Sunday, August 29, 1915, on the first anniversary of the dedication of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage at Erie, Pa., about 1,500 members of the Order from Erie, Pittsburgh, and surrounding towns visited the institution. More than 750, comprising the Pittsburgh delegation, made the trip by special train.

At noon a basket lunch was served following which a program of addresses and exercises, commemorative of the occasion, was carried out. Mr. Isador Sobel, of Erie, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, and President of the Board of Governors, had charge of the meeting and introduced the speakers. Mr. Abe Weil of Philadelphia, President of the District Grand Lodge, was the speaker of the day. He urged moral and financial support for the Orphanage and emphasized the good work done by the people of Erie in looking after the welfare of the institution and training its children to become real American citizens. Other speakers were Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, Second Vice President of the Grand Lodge, Rabbi Max Currick, of Erie, who urged a strong adherence to the principles of Judaism. This he impressed upon the minds of the children. "Take these children," he said "and bring them up to be good, peace-loving American citizens; deliver them, if you can, from the suffering and the horrors being endured by the Jews in Europe today. No people on the face of the earth are suffering as much as the Jews are today. Thousands of Jewish children are being made orphans daily, but God will hear the cries of the children and will stimulate their hearts. His help will not fail if we keep the principles of Judaism foremost in our hearts."

Mr. Louis Sulzbacher, Secretary of the District Grand Lodge, in his remarks complimented the children on their fine appearance and manners.

Among others of the prominent members of the Order present were Adolph Edlis, of Pittsburgh; L. D. Stein, of Wheeling, W. Va., and Morris Shaffner, of Erie.

The visitors were shown through the Orphanage with the children acting as guides. An informal dance and the singing of "America" by the children closed the exercises.

LOYALTY OF ROUMANIAN JEWS.

The Union of Native Jews of Roumania has once more approached the King through a memorial which was presented to His Majesty in person by the President of the Union, Dr. Adolphe Stern, President of District Grand Lodge No. 9, I. O. B. B. While emphasizing their grievances, the memorialists renew their profession of loyalty, and declare that in the event of the country joining in the present war the Jews would once more do their duty to the fatherland. They ask, however, that they should be recognized as Roumanians and be accorded the privileges and rights of native citizens.

Those who win success by practice haven't time to do much preaching.

LEO FRANK.

At last ye got him: there he swings
Above the howling people-kings.
At last ye got him: he outstood
In innocence and hardihood
The servile court, the madman's knife,
The wreck of name and home and wife,
Still trusting God would see him through

. . .

At last ye got him in the night,
Sick, wounded, worn, and strangely
white,
Your burgher, Leo Frank, the Jew.

Ye hanged him on the gallows-tree.
He'll hang for all the years to be:
Ye nor your children shall have power
To take him down a single hour;
Nor wind, nor rain, nor bird of prey,
Shall eat that awful Form away,
Nor God once veil It from your view . . .
For 'ts no human head and limb—
Ye hanged God's Justice, hanging him,
Your burgher, Leo Frank, the Jew.

—William Ellery Leonard.

The Social Message of the Hebrew Prophets

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

We live in an era of social unrest. The strife and stress of clashing interests and of conflicting opinions is upon us. Within capital and labor stand in serried ranks, each seeking to dominate the other; and without the mighty engines of war belch forth death and destruction that the rich stores of ore and the vast outlets for trade may pass to the victor. Economic conditions, we are told, determine the course of political events. Our legislative activity is summed up in the trend towards curbing the greed of corporate industrialism. The socialist theorists dream the Utopia of the socialized state; they see the vision of the day when the capitalistic regime will fall by its own weight, the theory of the unrestrained accumulation of wealth in the fewest hands reducing itself as it were ad absurdum.

But whether we go to the length of these theorizing visionaries or no, there is no gainsaying that the social conscience of all of us has been aroused. Each and every one of us is perplexed by the variety of social evils which follow in the wake of heightened industrialism; the desertion of the farm for the city, the enslavement of women and children, the squalor of the slums, the indecent housing of the poorer classes, the rampant character of drunkenness and incompetence, the unspeakable evil of white slavery. There is a sentiment abroad that this many-headed hydra cannot be combated by individual effort, by preaching to the individual conscience. We feel that relief can only come by an appeal to the nation's corporate conscience. And so the Church is turning away from its time-honored conception of the individual's salvation which is in her keeping. She bethinks herself that in the older dispensation the center of gravity is the nation, and not the individual. The Hebrew prophets are had recourse to for advice, and the ancient pages are conned that from them may come guidance to a distraught generation of today.

At the outset it may be well to say a word of caution. In the first place, the conditions of modern life are not to be sought for in the simpler economic circumstances of far-off Israel. Of industry in our sense of the word there was not the least trace. For in sooth no one will think of dignifying by that name that which in those days was no more than a part of the regular housework in a family, when flour was home-ground and garments home-spun. In the house of the rich man the work of spinning and weaving was done by slaves, in the hovels of the poor by the wives and daughters. There were few craftsmen, such as smiths, potters, and in the cities bakers and fullers. But all on the simplest scale of individual effort; there was no thought of joining forces through co-operation. The people occupied themselves mainly with agriculture and cattle-breeding. There were cities but even the largest were small when compared with Nineveh and Babylon, not to say with our present-day metropolises. Some of them were walled for safety from the constant invasion. Samaria and Jerusalem had mansions of note. But withal the rural character of even the largest cities was pronounced at a time when property was chiefly landed estate. Still there were traders, but it is significant that the petty merchant was not the Hebrew, but the Canaanite, and Kenaani designates merchant. In course of time, there must have come up a class of merchants from the Israelites and Hosea upbraids Israel with having exchanged his native character for the spirit of the Canaanite shopkeeper. There were the traders in grain and presumably in other commodities. Bazaars had been erected in the ninth century for the Syrian merchants in Samaria and for the Israelitish in Damascus. Riches were accumulated and the grandees of Samaria and Jerusalem indulged the whims of their luxury-loving wives and daughters. But of capitalism in the modern meaning of the word there was no thought.

In the second place the prophet was no teacher of economics. It was not his function to discover new theories or to call into life novel organizations. Nor is he to be likened to the modern demagogue haranguing the people from the lecture platform or through the medium of the press, a parallel as [illegible] as it [illegible] though given expression to [illegible] the lightheartedness. Rather [illegible] the significance of the prophet [illegible] penetrating vision which [illegible] the popular watchwords of [illegible] of fashion and of partisanship and of phrase-mongering envisages the things as they are; that which is nought as nought, the core as the core, the good as the good, and the vile as the vile. When to the ordinary eye of mankind there is revealed in human affairs the chaos of mundane factors, the prophetic vision detects and lays bare the invisible supra-mundane order of things which is eternal and immutable and which alone is real, while all else is inherently untrue and unstable. And, lastly, the prophet's significance rests upon his incorruptible veracity which undismayed by fear or favor endows him with courage to point to the festering sore in the social structure. We must not expect from those ancient seers' theories of society or specific economic doctrines which are beyond their ken and do not fall within their province. But we shall find in their utterances the appeal to conscience and in their persons upholders of the right wherever and whensoever it is throttled by might. They know not how to flatter potentates and ministers of state. Sins in the highest places are mercilessly exposed. The adulterous king who sent the unsuspecting husband into death through a treacherous royal command is confronted with the crushing rebuke: Thou art the man; when another king descends to take possession of the vineyard of the patrician he had had judicially murdered, the troubler of Israel is at hand with the cutting query: Hast thou murdered, and wilt thou also take possession? Above all, the prophet stands forth as the exponent of morality in the intercourse of nations. How shamefully far behind these Hebrew idealists we with our much vaunted philosophies and theories of statecraft are today. The herdman of Tekoa is shocked by an atrocity committed by a Moabite king against an Edomite, and Tyre is upbraided for remembering not the covenant of brothers. From their little world these men observed far-away transactions. Jeremiah knew himself as sent to the nations, to the world. The doom which they all preach is a world judgment. Far above the world of nations destroying each other by internecine warfare they discern the world-plan which is but one. How finely Isaiah sums up the innermost motives of the Assyrian world-conqueror who is but a tool in God's hand to punish a wicked nation. What the prophet puts into his mouth we read now in the annals dug up from below the mounds of Nineveh with their ever-recurring boastful enumeration of the provinces annexed and of the thousands of prisoners taken and their detailed account of atrocities perpetuated. "For he hath said, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and I have removed the bounds of the peoples, and have robbed their treasures, and I have brought down as a mighty one—as a god—the inhabitants; and my hand has found as a nest the riches of the peoples; and as one gathereth eggs that are forsaken, have I gathered all the earth: and there was none that moved the wing, or that opened the mouth, or chirped." From the Hebrew seers the world must learn that criminal as it is for the citizen to remove his neighbor's landmark, it is equally wicked, immoral for a nation to remove the bounds of peoples.

It has been said that the Jews being unwarlike made a virtue out of necessity, and being beaten in the game of war they imposed upon the world the glorification of the Utopia of peace among nations in the end of days. It is true, the prophets of Israel were strangers to modern biologic discoveries which proclaim the survival of the fittest in an everlasting struggle for existence. We who believe in Divine Providence must accept the prophetic doctrine that the weak Jewish nation was the chosen Servant that through his sufferings the world might be healed and through his hand the world-plan might be consummated. Another charge against Judaism has been that it is this-worldly. It is quite true that the sum and substance of prophecy is the ushering in of the Kingdom of God on earth where just relations may exist between a man and his neighbor and between one nation and another. The intensified social conscience of our own days seeks the same end. The service of man which we emphasize as the quintessence of the service of God—that you will find repeatedly demanded by the Hebrew prophets in the name of God. And one more word which will show that though we have endeavored to realize the differences in conditions and aims separating us of today from those ancient teachers, though we cannot expect any theories, economical or social, from them, there stands forth that one condition and one aim which was before them as it is before all thinking men and women today, and that is: the existence of undeserved poverty and the wish to rid society of it. Like them we would heal the breach in the national organism, and so we may set about to learn from these protagonists of the afflicted and poor and let their righteous indignation against all social wrongs take possession of ourselves; perhaps then that we may rise to that lofty height of spiritual insight which beautifies poverty and which is summed up by him whose disciples Christians call themselves in the word: Blessed are the poor.

EQUAL RIGHTS BILL DEFEATED.

By a vote of 191 against 162, the Duma defeated a resolution to grant equal rights to all nationalities in the Russian Empire. The defeat of the resolution was brought about by the large vote against it on the part of the Octobrist party, which holds the majority in the present Duma. Many of the Octobrists, however, are opposed to the stand taken by their representatives in allying themselves with the Black Hundred members. It is reported in the "Retsch," the organ of the "Cadets," that there is a strong agitation being carried on within the Octobrist camp to have the resolution presented again and to induce all Octobrist members to vote in favor of it. If this is successful, there is no doubt but that the resolution will be carried.

The Golden Jubilee of the Philadelphia Jewish Hospital

Address by Hon. Jacob Singer

The Jewish Hospital of Philadelphia celebrated recently its Golden Jubilee. The occasion was made memorable by the presence of a large number of prominent public officials and citizens of the commonwealth.

Addresses were made by Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania; Mayor Blankenburg of Philadelphia; Hon. Judge Meyer Sulzberger, Rev. Dr. J. Krauskopf; Louis Wolf, President of the Federation of Jewish Charities; Hon. Jacob Singer of Philadelphia, member of the Executive Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 3, and others.

Jacob Singer's Address.

Hon. Jacob Singer, past president of District Grand Lodge No. 3, I. O. B. B., spoke in part as follows:

"The impelling motive of the B'nai B'rith in thus founding the Jewish Hospital gave expression to the common purpose of all the brethren of the fraternity—it was a call to sacrifice and duty, to a service of love and humanity. Its machinery, so often in its history set in motion for the accomplishment of great Jewish purposes, never moved more swiftly.

"Its influence and achievements quickly secured the generous co-operation of the Jewish community of Philadelphia, and in little more than a year, a noble institution, the beginning of this now historic and magnificent hospital and home, was started on its infinite mission for the glory of God and the benefit of man.

"With upwards of eight hundred Philadelphia members of the B'nai B'rith as a nucleus, the Committee extended the movement so as to embrace the whole Jewish community, with a devotion calling for the highest admiration, entitling the Order to the enduring gratitude, loyalty and support of all liberal-minded Philadelphia Jews.

'The Hospital and Home is the possession and pride of the community. Its beautiful growth, its humane and beneficent career, the suffering it has relieved, the tens of thousands of men, women and children it has rescued from death, or to whom it restored the power and vigor to live lives of usefulness, is a tale of love already eloquently told.

"The thought that I would add concerns the reflected influence of the Hospital upon the Jews of Philadelphia. It was a striking proof of the wisdom of the founders of B'nai B'rith in creating a democratic organization with high ideals to unite Jews for altruistic purposes.

"In its last analysis, the utility of hospitals and homes is not to cure the sick and provide for the aged and infirm, but to teach mercy, and because they stand for love and responsibility and thus become forces of civilization.

"The appeal of physical suffering makes the strongest attack on our common humanity. The response spiritually exalts the individual; it answers the call of religion; it satisfies the cravings of love in the human heart, which responds like a tuning-fork when its note is struck; it elevates and ennobles all who share in the personal sacrifice.

"Such were the influences of our Hospital upon the Jewish community of Philadelphia. Its list of members was regarded by them as a roll of honor; they felt a sense of dignity in the personal association; it dispelled the attitude of aloofness and hostility between the several Jewish groups. In a word, it soon exemplified the wisdom, the pleasure, the advantages, the possibilities and the necessity for brethren to dwell together in unity.

"Speaking for the B'nai B'rith, as the proud parent of this mature and splendid offspring, I see in the influences radiating from the Hospital, one of still greater importance. I find it in its immediate dedication to the relief of the sick and suffering, 'without regard to nationality, creed or color.'

"That spirit of human brotherhood was the practical application of the principles of humanity and patriotism taught by the parent organization. It was a glorious answer to the challenge of those who questioned the fitness of the foreign-born Jew for American citizenship. It was fitting evidence of gratitude of the Jews for the right of asylum and the guarantees of equal opportunity and freedom of conscience in the laws of the country. It won respect and confidence far beyond the limits of our city, from those who, from distorted views of the 'Chosen People,' had regarded them as a species of conspirator against the public welfare and growth.

"Its national significance was shown in the changing expressions of public opinion that the children of the stock of Abraham coming to our shores as bearers of the 'Book of the Law,' and who would not sell their birthright, brought with them the very highest zeal for the uplift of the national life and practiced the principles and possessed the qualities that would give strength to the nation.

"The esteem in which it is held by the people of our city, the confidence reposed in its management and work by the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, reflects honor and credit upon the entire Jewish community to whom it is endeared as its premier institution. We owe to the men and women officers and directors of the Hospital, its staff of physicians and surgeons and nurses, a tribute of gratitude and appreciation, which may today be fittingly expressed.

"But what of the master hand, which has held the helm and directed its activities for more than a generation, and whose services cover an unbroken continuity from its beginning. In the celebration of this jubilee, our thoughts turn as naturally to William B. Hackenburg as to the hospital itself. His hopes and aspirations for its welfare form part of its very walls and foundations; they have been mixed in the cement and plaster which hold them firm. He has given the best of his life and thought to its service. It has been the child of his youth and maturity; he has guided it from strength to strength at the cost of personal sacrifices uncounted and uncountable.

"He brought into it the spirit of the B'nai B'rith, of which he is a veteran member, and his brethren and the community entertain towards him as president of this hospital sentiments of obligation, the expression of which is beyond the power of words, and for him personally genuine affection and great esteem. We cherish the common hope and utter in unison the prayer that his life may be prolonged in strength, vigor and happiness to witness further fulfilment of the great purposes of the institution, with his steady hand at the wheel.

"The B'nai B'rith now encircles the world. It extends over four continents. It is recognized as the one international Jewish fraternity with ideals which make for a higher and better Judaism.

"It has founded, and, where necessary, maintains hospitals, homes and asylums in the States of the Union and across the seas—maintained schools, built monuments, and championed the cause of the Jew before Kings, Presidents and Rulers.

"Today it recognizes its real life work in the larger altruism, 'It is the democracy of Israel it seeks to serve.' Of all its works, its share in founding the Jewish Hospital of Philadelphia will ever be remembered with pride. May this hospital endure in its mission of love as in the song of the bard:

A moral pyramid to stand
As long as wisdom lights the land;
The granite pillar shall decay,
The chisel's beauty pass away,
But this shall last in strength sublime,
Unshaken through the storms of time.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, August 18, 1915.

A year of war has now passed and as Jews we can only deplore that one of our dearest ideals has been trampled in the dust. So much suffering, so much bloodshed, so many tears, so many dear ties broken forever, and all for what? Will anyone venture to assert that throughout the tragic drama ought but the lowest instincts have had full play? War produces ruthlessness, and the agreements that in time of peace are evolved for holding it in check are only as cords that yield to the flame. There is no check; passion and hate and prejudice are loosed in the fray. But what is worst of all is the glorification of war. Grant, for the sake of argument, that some wars are necessary. Yet you may still hold that war is hell. You may have to proceed with it; you may possibly see no end of it in view. But at least it is a comfort that you look at it as it is and hate it. Alas for mankind, however, when war is glorified. It is glorified today in some quarters, and as Jews we must utter our protest. To glorify war is to confess to heathenism, and in the past as in the present, aye, to all eternity, Judaism and Heathenism stand opposed. There can be no compromise. It is surely a legitimate reflection on Christianity that there has been no official and organized condemnation of war on the part of any of the Christian churches. It is small comfort to say that war will produce a wave of religiosity. What we miss is the condemnation of war by the organized religious communities of the world, or any of them. Surely with the experience of the last twelve months, to be increased, as we are given to understand, by that of another twelve months at least, all men and women in Europe and America must resolve to work for peace, even though they may not become professed pacifists.

* * *

At any rate Jews should help on the pacifist ideal, not only because it is one of the cardinal doctrines of Judaism, but because they have felt the pangs of war possibly more than any other people. Russia at once leaps to the mind in this connection. One wonders whether the world will ever learn fully how the cup of Jewish suffering in Poland in the year 1915 overflowed again and again. Fate would so have it that the battlefields in the East are districts largely inhabited by Jews. When the Russian hosts swept into Galicia, who suffered most? Jews. And when the German legions pressed on into Russian Poland, who were the greatest victims? Jews again. The sufferings of the Austrian Jews in the first case must have been terrible; but who can find adequate expression for what the Jews in the Russian pale have had to undergo? Heaven alone knows how many of them are left. In previous centuries the Jew has known the full meaning of the phrase "the dogs of war have been loosed." At the present juncture perhaps the Chmelnitzky massacres in 1647 may be instanced as a parallel. For let us not forget that if the Russian-Polish peasant suffers, at any rate he may retain his land and expect the assistance of a paternal government at some time or other. But what can the Jew hope for? His conomic activities are mostly urban, and the onward rush of armies deprives him of his livelihood. If he suffers, can he look for assistance to the government? The Russian government has always spurned him; can we expect it all of a sudden to love him and stretch out the hand of help? Even the conqueror only condescendingly tolerates him. Thus we were informed that the commandant of Lodz has issued a proclamation to the Jews pointing out that in wearing their gaberdines or long eastern coats they hurt the feelings of the German soldiers!

* * *

The sufferings of the Russian Jews are written in blood, but we shall not be able to read the record until after the war. We in England and you in America will have opportunities enough to hear the tale as the thousands of Jewish transmigrants and immigrants from the war area pass our way. What a problem we shall have to solve! But even fom the so-called more enlightened countries is the cry heard as of old: "Der Jude Wird verbrannt." In France the "Libre Parole" and the "Action Francaise" are as active as ever in their well-known role of Jew-baiting; and in Vienna the "Reichspost," which calls itself a Christian-Socialist newspaper, is carrying on the truly Christian work of anti-Jewish incitement which surely makes for the highest social well-being. And yet is it not common knowledge that the Jew is shedding his blood for the land of his citizenship? Cousins are fighting cousins, and one Jew killing another. A Jewish soldier writing home to his people in England tells them how he was up and down the trenches for twenty-four hours, with one hour's rest. "We captured a German officer, Lieut. Max Seller, of a Bavarian cavalry regiment. He and about fifty men were attacking us with hand-bombs, and the officer was bayonetted on the parapet. I helped to bury him with our own casualties. He was a Jew, so I had the service altered by the Chaplain." Nevertheless the French and Austrian anti-Semites rage as madly as ever they did. In Germany, it is true, all the old hatred of the Jews has been transferred to the English. Yet can the leopard change his skin? We were told how zealous the German Jews were in Germany's cause. Not only did the young Jews distinguish themselves as soldiers but their elders at home were foremost in all good work for the relief of suffering. The lodges of our own order provided a hospital train for the wounded; many Jews and Jewesses besides worked as only Jews can for the Red Cross. A year ago the Kaiser laid it down that henceforth in Germany there were to be no parties and no groups of interests, only Germans—which means, presumably, that all German citizens, whatever their political or religious creed, should receive equally honorable treatment. Yet we read that when the Empress undertook a round of visits to all hospitals in Berlin recently, she passed over the Jewish Hospital where a number of wounded soldiers were awaiting her. Of course the incident in itself is of very small significance. But it shows how the wind is blowing. It demonstrates the existence of anti-Jewish feeling in Germany for a' that, and a' that. There is no need to add to the evidence. But one fact is worthy of mention. All the Western powers have Jewish Chaplains in the field. England has two, France has quite a number, Italy likewise, even Germany's ally, Austria-Hungary, has a fair representation. But Germany has none. German Catholics and Protestants may receive spiritual comfort on the field of honor, German Jews may only die on it.

* * *

The two English "chaplains" in the field are the Rev. Michael Adler and the Rev. Vivian Simmons. There is much to do for these gentlemen. They visit hospitals, get into touch with Jewish soldiers and wherever possible they see to the interment of their brethren in faith according to Jewish rites. Moreover the graves of Jewish soldiers are being marked in a suitable manner in some distinctive Jewish way. Recently, too, the Chief Rabbi visited the English base in France and addressed Jewish soldiers, telling them that fifteen years ago he was engaged in a similar mission to the Jewish troops in the South African war. Today, however, the cause was immeasurably vaster, nothing less than England's life as a nation being at stake. In the wake of a national disaster there would follow the disruption of the British Empire, which was earth's nearest realization hitherto of might coupled with justice, of power joined to mercy. Such a calamity would convulse the whole fabric of the human race. The Jews of the Empire have fully realized the duty of the hour and nobly have they responded to their country's call. As the late Colonel Goldsmid so admirably expressed it, "Loyalty to the flag for which the sun once stood still can only deepen our loyalty to the flag on which the sun never sets."

* * *

But loyalty expresses itself in sacrifice and English Jews have offered themselves willingly. The list of Jewish soldiers grows apace; so, too, alas! does the roll of the fallen. Among the wounded (from the Dardenelles) the following names are to be found: Michoil Cohen, Elia Castel, Solomon Himmo, Matatiah Okuka, Mayer Perg, Isaac Alkaim. Unusual names for an English casualty list, the reader will say. Truly; but thereby hangs a tale. The British Expeditionary Force in the Eastern Mediterranean comprises a unit called the Zion Mule Corps, whose work it is to take provisions and equipment up to the trenches. Each man has two mules to look after, and the whole corps is made up of Jews, nearly all of them Palestine Refugees. They wear a "Mogen David" on their caps, and in their drill use Hebrew words of command. From all concerned they have won high praise and two of them have obtained the Distinguished Conduct Medal for bravery. Their Commandant is Colonel J. H. Patterson, D. S. O., a man of wide sympathies in general and of Jewish sympathies in particular. The picture of these Jewish Refugees from Palestine fighting under the Union Jack is one to be remembered. A poet might do the theme justice: a prophet might depict the bright future of Palestine of which this is but the augury. But that is not yet. The war must end first. Nevertheless, Michoil Cohen, Matatiah Okuka and their brethren will go down in the annals of Jewish history as having been members of a specifically Jewish unit in a British Expeditionary Force and that self-same British Expeditionary Force will likewise be honorably mentioned by future Jewish historians.

* * *

One disagreeable result of the war is the treatment of belligerent nationals in enemy countries. Englishmen in Germany and Germans in England are not to be envied just now. The rights and wrongs of the case cannot be entered into here; the fact remains that English civilians in Germany are at present interned in Ruhleben and Germans in England are similarly interned in numerous camps. This difference, however, should not pass unmentioned—that whereas in Germany all Englishmen are interned, in England a very large number of Germans have been allowed their liberty and go about their everyday avocations. One cannot help feeling that if just now Germany were to decide upon an act of magnanimity and set free all the interned English. the Germans in England who are in the various concentration camps would likewise be set free, and a position of extreme stupidity in both countries would thus be abolished. But it is doubtful whether the suggested magnanimity on the part of Germany is likely to show itself. So the position remains, and we need hardly say that there are Jews in the various camps of both countries. The London Lodge has shown practical help to the English Jews in Ruhleben by sending through the Foreign Office a sum of money for their needs, particularly as there were some among them who had no means. In this work the name of our President, Brother Rosenbaum, deserves honorable mention. But good as his work was for the Jews in Ruhleben, that for the German Jews in this country was even better. When the order for internment was issued, special forms wherein reasons for exemption from the order might be stated were made available, and here the lodge did excellent work. Side by side with other Jewish bodies it undertook to help and advise those that required assistance. We appointed a special committee for the purpose, and Brother Rosenbaum was exceedingly active and energetic in directing its work. All the members of this committee were most zealous, and if the name of Brother Wallach is specially mentioned the others will agree that he deserves the honor seeing that he attended at the office every evening in the week prior to the expiry of the period for sending in forms, and we know that his sympathetic interest in the applicants was much appreciated.

* * *

The fact remains that at the present time a good number of Jews who are German subjects are interned in various concentration camps up and down the country. From reliable evidence it is clear that their treatment in the camps is admirable, and they themselves are absolutely satisfied. So far as the Jews are concerned, the question of Kosher food had to be considered, and as the Board of Deputies (to its everlasting shame), refused to take proper action in this matter as in that of assisting those liable to internment, the First Lodge of England did all it could towards this end. The authorities have been sympathetic—indeed we have found them exceedingly sympathetic throughout—and Kosher food is now provided in two camps—at Douglas in the Isle of Man, and at Hansforth in Cheshire. We have it from an eye witness that at Douglas the Jewish inmates are quite contented and that the spirit among them is excellent. From letters we have seen we can only substantiate this evidence. The Douglas camp contains a number of our co-religionists from North London who were specially "orthodox," and we are informed that the grade of Kashrus in Douglas is all they desire. No wonder, seeing that their spiritual head, Dr. Schonfeld, has undertaken to see to it for them. For the rest there is nothing to prevent them holding a Talmud Shiur all day, and as many Minyanim as they choose. Moreover, subject to the consent of the camp commandants the "prisoners" may send out requests for what they specially need to a committee in London which has taken on itself the work of supplying these. One man asked for engraving instruments and he got them. A dentist requested a dentist's chair and appurtenances, and the chair came. So in other cases. We saw two medals executed by the first-named inmate at Douglas. They were beautifully done, and bore eloquent testimony to the peace of mind of the maker. It is not too much to say that in undertaking the work it did for the interned Jewish the London Lodge brethren have done an exceedingly good piece of work. worthy of them as B'nai B'rith, as Jews and as English citizens.

* * *

Who has not heard of Toynbee Hall? The word Toynbee has become international and the work of the institution has been appreciated and emulated in all parts of the globe. As everyone knows who has been there, Toynbee Hall is situated in Commercial street, right in the heart of the London Ghetto. When the Hall was first opened the neighborhood was "mixed," that is, there was a fair non-Jewish element, and the young university men who took up their residence at Toynbee were able to come into contact with the English working man. But in the process of time the Jewish population has spread and increased, with the result that Toynbee is far away from the people it primarily wants to catch. But let it not be imamined that the Jews are not catered to. On the contrary, Jews have always found a warm welcome at Toynbee. Only this spring a course of University Extension lectures on Jewish History were given there; while a second course on the same subject is planned for the coming winter. The spring course dealt with the period from Mendelssohn to Herzl, the second is to treat of the Spanish Age. Other classes specially for Jews are in contemplation. Finally, we must recall that at least the name of one There is a story still current at Toynbee Hall. That name is Harry Lewis's. You in America have managed to spirit away that splendid fellow to your shores; our Harry Lewis whom every Jewish child in Whitechapel knew is now Rabbi Harry Lewis, of New York. There is a story still current at Toynbee that on one occasion Canon Barnett, warden at the time, remarked that they had had only one Jewish resident at Toynbee, but that he was the best Christian that had lived within its walls. Those who really knew Harry Lewis will appreciate the inwardness of the statement. We hope some one or other in New York will see to it that Harry Lewis becomes a Ben Brith and a member of our Order.

* * *

All this is but to show that Toynbee Hall has ever been a good friend to our people. Now, however, it is felt that the residents would be more in their element if they moved further East, and accordingly the residential side of Toynbee Hall will be taken to Poplar, while the building in Commercial street will continue to be an educational centre as of old. In normal times, it is very probable that the authorities would have been ready to sell Toynbee Hall to the Jewish community or to some prominent Jews. But the times are not normal, and until peace returns the plan we have outlined will continue. In any event Jews will have much to be grateful for to Toynbee Hall and its residents, particularly to the present Warden and Secretary.

* * *

The latest enterprise of the London Lodge is to institute a Bureau of Social Service. What this is may be made clear easily enough. It will be a clearing house for those who require social service and those who are willing to offer the same. Many a Jewish institution needs more workers, and a scientific attempt to supply these ought to be welcome to them. On the other hand the war and its necessities will certainly train many people in the ways of social service and a supply of workers will thus be created. To bring the demand and the supply into touch will be the aim of our bureau, and we need say no more than that it is in the capable hands of Brother Maurice Myers. So the Lodge goes from strength to strength.

ABE RUEF PAROLED.

Abraham Ruef, once a power in San Francisco politics, was paroled on Aug. 21, 1915, from the San Quentin Penitentiary by the California State Board of Pardons. He has spent four years, five months and fifteen days in prison of a sentence of fourteen years, having been convicted for bribery in the famous San Francisco graft prosecution.

The Lynching of Leo M. Frank

Editorial Utterances in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Georgia Papers

FROM NEW YORK PAPERS.

Georgia's Shame.

(New York Times.)

The State of Georgia should either apprehend the murderers of Leo M. Frank and punish them according to its laws, or its people should honor them by election to the chief judicial and administrative offices in their gift. Any half-way course will be a cowardly evasion. Either the lynchers of Frank faithfully represent public opinion in Georgia or they do not represent it. If Georgia approves lynching, then honors bestowed upon the lynchers would attest at once the shameless courage of the Georgia public and its willingness to defy public opinion in all the other States of the Union. We must assume, however, that the prevailing feeling in the state of Georgia is one of horror and execration of the crime. If that is the case the lynchers will be punished. Only in that way can the people of Georgia atone for the shame and humiliation they have brought upon the whole country by permitting a mob to override the laws. The bar of Georgia should make itself the leader in the effort to absolve Georgia from the deep discredit of this monstrous act. Many members of the Georgia bar share the very widespread belief that Frank was innocent. They have a professional interest in putting down the spirit of lawlessness, they have an individual interest and duty as citizens in clearing the name of their State from this shame.

A Powerful Blow to the Law.

(New York Tribune.)

The people of Georgia charged Frank with a hideous crime, gave him a trial, and condemned him to death. But the people of Georgia support a constitution which permits their Governor to commute the sentence of a condemned man. Governor Slaton exercised his constitutional prerogative in sparing Frank's life. It then became the sacred duty of every public servant in the State, of every one of her citizens, whatever his convictions concerning this particular exercise of executive clemency, to abide by the decision.

Let the inhabitants of Georgia understand that the assassination of Leo M. Frank is a powerful blow at that fabric of laws which guarantees to the humblest of them the sanctuary of the State. The red hand of anarchy is dangling Frank's noose under every Georgian's nose.

What Can Be Done About It?

(Evening Post.)

There is no need to put words to the rack in order to seek to express the full horror and shame of the lynching of Leo Frank in Georgia. The crime was committed, as it were, in full sight of the nation. The victim, whether innocent or guilty of the act with which he was originally charged, had come to be a public figure of tragedy. The awful spectacle speaks for itself. We can only turn away from it with a shudder to ask what it all means and what can be done about it. We fear that the Georgia authorities cannot be acquitted of negligence. Let a society be founded—give it what name you will—State-wide at first, later nation-wide, with the specific aim of stamping out lynching.

Hounded by People of Georgia.

(Evening Sun.)

Frank was hounded from the day of his arrest to the last tragic moment of his life by a massed sentiment of prejudice, against which fact, logic, humanity, the temperate counsels of well-approved leaders of public opinion were vain and impotent. Georgia condemned Frank unheard, disregarding the principles of law or the demands of equity. As an organic force the people have been against Frank at every turn and their enmity was the inspiration behind the black deed of which only a few were the instrument. Let us now see whether anything like the same heat will be shown in pursuing these criminals that was displayed in the [illegible] of Frank.

Mob Wanted Only His Death.

(Evening Globe.)

In defiance of a nation-wide public sentiment, in spite of the fact that authorities and judges who reviewed the case clearly indicated their grave doubt, many Georgians made a shameful spectacle of the State by their fury when the Governor changed Frank's sentence to life imprisonment, so that he might have a chance to prove his innocence. The mob [illegible] want him to have such a chance. [illegible] the fury of a wild beast it wanted [illegible]. The State of Georgia cannot remove this blot of shame. But it can prove to all that effective government exists in that State by punishing every one of those murderers to the full extent of the law.

A Recrudescence of Race Prejudice.

(Evening Mail.)

America, the melting pot of the nations, in which the blood of all Aryan Europe has been fused during the past two centuries, is witnessing a recrudescence of national and race prejudices in most menacing forms. These racial lines of cleavage threaten to split our people, which had almost been fused into a homogeneous unit inspired by the American ideal, into a mixed conglomerate of nationalities and races upon which no great civilization can be built up.

Says Governor Harris Must Act.

(New York Sun.)

When the Governor of a State of the Union, who has considered it his duty to exercise the commuting power in a capital case, is threatened day after day with violence by the mob and it becomes necessary to call out the militia to protect him, and when a murderous attack is made upon the reprieved man in the prison, which should be his asylum, but which is mismanaged and feebly guarded, is it a matter of wonder that the depraved element which Governor Slaton called "the scum and riff-raff of the State" executes at last the sentence of Judge Lynch upon the object of its hatred?

Governor Harris promises to use all his powers to "see to it that the members of the mob receive fitting punishment for their crime." The people of the country will judge him by his performance.

State, or Nest of Outlaws?

(Brooklyn Eagle.)

Either Georgia is a State in which law is dominant, or she is a nest of outlaws, undeserving the name of civilization. In which category she will rank depends upon her punishment of this crime—a crime not only against a prisoner in her penitentiary, but against her own government and thousands of upright and law-abiding Georgians who have been proud of their State in the past and to whom the sentence of outlawry upon it by the rest of the country will seem cruel and unjust. But to avert that sentence those law-respecting Georgians must organize and assert their supremacy over the mob of barbarians who have brought their civilzation to a standstill.

What Will Georgia Do About It?

(New York Herald.)

What is Georgia going to do about it? Is there manhood enough in the law-respecting citizenry of that great State, is there strength enough in its government to see that prompt and condign punishment is meted out to the murderers of Leo M. Frank?

Frank was in the custody of the responsible authority of Georgia and should have had, at any cost, every protection that the power of its government can exercise. His murder is a crime against the State. On the surface it looks very much as if the government of Georgia cannot be absolved of direct responsibility for the crime.

FROM CHICAGO PAPERS.

(Chicago Tribune.)

For a very long time the name of Leo M. Frank will be remembered as indicative of something discouraging and not wholly explicable in American life.

We know that, elsewhere than in the ill-ordered South, communities can be aroused to acts of violence against law, but usually the demonstration is one of low elements and also one of hot blood.

What has taken place in Georgia is not due to mob violence. The psychology of the mob does not permit such steadfast malevolence, such a continuing purpose and determination. If a mob cannot act soon its will dies out.

Frank was murdered by men controlled by the spirit of the vendetta. In the background of his fate there was no element of law's futility to punish a crime. Law had not been indulgent to Frank. It had been severe. The questions of reasonable doubt in his case were resolved finally in his favor only to the extent that he was granted the mercy of spending the rest of his life in a penitentiary.

To this doubtful mercy, which Frank asked only as a means by which time for the disclosure of his innocence could be had, was added the terrible experience to which he was subjected when a convict cut his throat.

Frank has not been dealt with leniently. What he had gained was the smallest possible expression of doubt. He gained it at the last moment from the last man in authority to aid him at all. Every time he appealed to the law, every time without exception the law denied him the benefit of doubt.

Therefore there had been no failure of what we regard as retributive justice. The trial judge, who had denied him every plea, was disturbed finally by doubt. The United States Supreme Court which ruled against him contained two justices who had doubts. The then Governor of Georgia, Mr. Slaton, at last could not endure the responsibility of a conviction that there was doubt of Frank's guilt.

Clemency obtained for him the gift of life, but in its hardest terms. This must be thought of because when an American community yields to lawlessness it is a mitigation, however slight, if the processes of law have fallen, as occasionally they do, into disrepute and if it seem that outraged citizens had to do things of which they disapproved to get justice which they demanded.

Such considerations are not involved in the Georgia case. There had been no miscarriage of justice. At its worst, assuming Frank guilty, there had been only a slight departure from the sternest code, ordered by the last man who could save Frank, to meet the pressing and irresistible fear that the convict might be innocent.

Georgia did not have an excuse of law's failure for the sentiment it cultivated regarding Frank. And it did not have, as we have said, the excuse of mob passion. Georgia society has developed men who could carry for months a premeditated policy of outrage against law and cruelty to a tortured human being and execute that policy in the end by taking the man away from the State and killing him.

We have said that this is not wholly explicable and it is not. The failure of Georgia to protect the threatened man, even when he was imprisoned in a State penitentiary, reveals a fault in organization.

The present governor of Georgia, when he was told that raiders had broken into the State penitentiary and were running away with their victim to some place where they would kill him, said feebly that he was sure the good people of the State would deplore the act. We doubt it. The real protection the raiders had was the sentiment of the State and the real disgrace in which the State stands is that sentiment.

The murder was not by a mob, but by vendetta, which is determined, cunning, resolved, and cruel. A vendetta is possible in a low social organization, one which has not learned self-control, which has not been sufficiently trained in the rudiments of education to submit itself to restraints necessary to the orderly processes of society.

The South is backward. It shames the United States by illiteracy and incompetence. Its hill men and poor whites, its masses of feared and bullied blacks, its ignorant and violent politicians, its rotten industrial conditions, and its rotten social ideas exist in circumstances which disgrace the United States in the thought of Americans and in the opinion or foreigners.

When the North exhibits a demonstration of violence against law by gutter rats of society, there is shame in the locality which was the scene of the exhibition. When the South exhibits it there is defiance of opinion.

The South is barely half educated. Whatever there is explicable in the murder of Leo M. Frank is thus explainable. Leo M. Frank was an atom in the Americanstructure. He might have died unknown or ignored, a thousand deaths more agonizing in preliminary torture and more cruel in final execution, and have had no effect, but the spectacle of a struggling human being, helpless before fate as a mouse in the care of a cat, will stagger American complacency.

The South is half educated. It is a region of illiteracy, blatant self-righteousness, cruelty, and violence. Until it is improved by the invasion of better blood and better ideas it will remain a reproach and danger to the American Republic.

The Mob that Murdered Frank Will Not Escape.

(Chicago Examiner.)

Governor Slaton of Georgia was not afraid to deal justly with Leo M. Frank. Governor Harris, his successor, will not be afraid to deal justly with the ruffian mob that tore Frank from his cell and brutally murdered him.

Governor Harris has said: "It can be taken for granted that I will use my every power to see to it that the members of this mob receive fitting punishment for their crime. I wil see to it that the authorities of the country in which the crime occurred are given every help at the disposal of the State."

These words will be heartily approved by every representative citizen of Georgia. That commonwealth no more condones lynchings than New York or Pennsylvania or Massachusetts condones assassinations which may occur within their borders.

The outcry against Frank was raised by hate-crazed irresponsibles in whose ranks were enough criminals to carry out the hideous plot that resulted in Frank's assassination.

For this outrage there can be no toleration, North or South, East or West. To allow the murders to go unpunished would be to abondon justice and set anarchy up in its stead.

If the offering of a reward for the apprehension of the butchers will facilitate their capture, it should be offered.

Never have government and law and order been more flagrantly set at naught. Never has justice been more ruthlessly trampled upon.

Backed by the opinion of the best lawyers of the land, and sustained by the enlightened people of the State, Governor Slaton refused to permit Frank to be executed while there still existed grave doubts of his guilt.

The man was not freed. His sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. There was a brief demonstration against Slaton, which was frowned on by all intelligent Georgians.

Not daring to molest a courageous man the cowards who composed the mob retired. But among them were a few who, encouraged by a spirit of sullen hatred by an act unparalleled even in the bloody history of lynch law.

Mobs are always cowards. The murderers hoped to strike swiftly and escape. They did strike swiftly. Waiting until the act of Governor Slaton in commuting Frank's sentence had been generally accepted as the wisest course, they organized a force sufficient to overpower the ordinary penitentiary guard, dragged their victim forth and put him to death.

The attack was not expected. The guards were easily overpowered. Night aided the assassins in the purpose and in skulking to cover once it had been carried out.

Until every man who took part in this crime is found and punished, the people of Georgia will have a duty to perform.

Governments are not set up to be overridden by assassins. Governors are not elected and put in office to have their decisions flouted by murderous mobs.

There can be no condoning any lynching. A lynching of this daring and atrocious character is an insult not only to the people of Georgia, but to the people of the whole United States.

There must be no refuge for these butchers. To give them aid or comfort, to offer them opportunity for concealment, is a criminal act and should be punished as such.

For the authorities to rest while they are still at liberty would be inexcusable dereliction of duty.

Governor Slaton vindicated the honor of the State of Georgia when he commuted Frank's sentence, defying when he did so the threats of the men who are now cowering from justice. Governor Harris has again vindicated it in his courageous determination to hunt down the murderers.

No means must be spared to bring this about. While they have their liberty the honor not only of a State, but of the entire nation, is at stake.

FROM PHILADELPHIA PAPERS.

Hail, Georgia!

(Public Ledger.)

"Thank God he is dead and through with troubles; if he had lived they might have killed him in a worse way," said Leo Frank's mother. They would have. For two years and four months the people of Georgia have been out for blood; now they have got it. It is usually puerile to indict a whole State; but if ever the majority of the people of the Commonwealth was responsible for a murder, the majority of the adults of Georgia participated in the murder of Leo Frank. The legal treatment of Frank, with the exception of the courageous act of Governor Slaton, was a prolonged lynching. The mobs which threatened Frank were not, to be sure, composed of "the best people" of Georgia, but the mobs and the criminals who cut his throat in jail had the silent assent of "the best people."

The grotesque horrors of the murder will blot the name of Georgia as long as last the memories of this generation. It is not easy to forget how the pale boy in a night shirt, with a half-healed wound across his throat, was dragged by the heels along the corridors and down the steps of the jail, or how his corpse, covered with blood from the wound in the neck, which had been torn open by the rope which strangled him, was trampled by another mob. Unitl the most vigorous and determined effort has been made to bring to justice every one of Frank's murderers, Georgia's deep disgrace will remain.

Frank Lynched—Georgia's Shame.

(The Inquirer.)

Georgia is shamed before the world by the lynching of Leo M. Frank. A short time ago Frank was nearly murdered by a fellow prisoner, so that the authorities had plenty of warning. There has been talk of lynching ever since Frank's sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life. With no more than ordinary precautions it could easily have been prevented.

This is an indelible blot on the fame of Georgia. The salvation of this nation is in the just execution of the laws. Georgia has put itself in the category of Mexico. What Georgian can now blame Mexico for the brutal assassination of President Madero?

A Black Mark on Georgia.

(The Press.)

Georgia has allowed an everlasting blot to be cast upon her fame, her repute and her history in permitting a mob to take a prisoner from the custody of the State and hang him. It is the State of Georgia that was assaulted, humiliated and outraged by this mob. She was bound to give security to her prisoner. To suffer him to be torn from her custody and murdered is to confess herself imbecile and impotent and unworthy of her Statehood.

At the end of such a series of events, unparalleled in American history, mob violence has triumphed. Talk of punishing the offenders is idle, for a community that can breed such lawlessness can never punish it. An uneradicable blot has been cast upon the reputation of a great Commonwealth.

Mob Rule in Georgia.

(The Record.)

Georgia's Governor, her Prison Commission and the authorities of the State prison where Frank was confined have much to answer for. They have allowed the sovereignty of the State to be flouted by a handful of assassins who can easily be brought to justice if the will to punish them exists. The life of the murdered prisoner, the ward of the State, cannot be restored, but the task of vindicating Georgia can be accomplished by courageous performance of duty in the face of hostile public opinion. Ex-Governor Slaton put conscience before the demands of the howling rabble who demanded Frank's life at his hands. The eyes of the country will be upon his successor.

Georgia's Secession.

(North American.)

Georgia has again seceded from the truly American States.

Everyone thought that Cole Blease's record for maladministration of prisons would stand, but the Georgia officials take the championship.

FROM GEORGIA PAPERS.

(The Savannah News.)

The lynching of Leo M. Frank makes a black chapter in the history of Georgia. It is a chapter that every Georgian who loves his State will read with a feeling of regret and sorrow. And who was responsible? Undoubtedly the State's authorities.

(The Atlanta Constitution.)

The sovereignty of the State of Georgia has been assaulted, desecrated, raped. No word in the language is too strong to apply to the deliberate and carefully conspired deed of the mob. Every man, woman and child in Georgia will feel the ultimate effect of that act of the law-defying mob which went to Milledgeville and lynched not Leo Frank, who is only a detail in the awful story, but the State itself. It is Georgia law and justice that was hanged upon that Cobb county tree.

(Columbus Ledger.)

While there appears little to indicate that the prisoner was not guilty, he had been placed in the State penitentiary by the legally constituted authorities, and any one lending the slightest approval to the act of the mob is directly thrusting a stab at law and order.

(Savannah Press.)

The citizens of Georgia who stand for law and order—and, thank God, we believe we have more of this kind than any other—are appalled and ashamed at the actions of the mob which last night took from his prison cell at Milledgeville L. M. Frank and hanged him to a tree in Cobb county. No greater wrong was ever done a State than that committed against Georgia upon this occasion by the mob which took into its hands the law, and in so doing because a lawless element composed of cutthroats and assassins.

(Augusta Herald.)

With the fierce feeling that has been engendered in the many dramatic incidents of this famous case, it was criminal negligence on the part of the prison officials not to have been better prepared to protect the life of the prisoner intrusted to their care.

The whole case from beginning to end has been a horror and a nightmare that has challenged the roots of law and order and civilization itself throughout the State.

(Macon Telegraph.)

If, among the outside newspapers generally, there is any attempt at a sustained denunciation of this State, Thomas E. Watson will, with a quick eagerness, accept what he will consider a gage of battle thrown at his feet, and he will answer in kind—more than in kind.

Watson will be answered in kind again, and so it will go until the time comes when he will tell the people of the State of Georgia that the rich Jews of the nation have bought up the press of the Republic to villify and blackguard and defame the State of Georgia, in revenge for the killing of Leo M. Frank. And when that charge is brought, it will be passionately and plausibly presented—and Georgia generally will believe it.

What will follow such a charge and its acceptance, the "Telegraph" cannot say. Anti-Semitic demonstrations? Certainly Anti-Semitic riots? Probably actual violence to Jewish citizens? Possibly.

Have Mobbed the State.

The men responsible, ignorantly possibly, indifferently probably, are those mainly outside this State, who have mobbed the State to free a man who is believed by 90 per cent of the people of the State to be guilty in every degree, morally, and legally, of the murder of Mary Phagan.

These men now hold the comfort, safety, peace and happiness of the Jews of Georgia in the hollow of their hands. If they pursue their policy of aggression, abuse and condemnation of Georgia, Georgians can be led and agitated into a grim, a determined sense of outrage which may enliven into hot and consuming flame the now quiescent, but smouldering and merely temporary anti-Semitic sentiment, which we have already defined. Watson will see to that, and he will see to it with a most efficient thoroughness.

The "Telegraph" does not want this to happen. The "Telegraph" will do its best to stop it, but no agency can be effective if the Jews outside the State can be definitely aligned in any propaganda which can be construed, as any propaganda against this State can be with ease, as emanating from the Jewish race, to blackguard and defame the State in revenge for the lynching of Leo Frank.

JEWISH DEPUTY AMONG EXILED.

The Liberals in Russia are greatly agitated over the fact that the Jewish Duma Deputy Freedman was exiled from Poneviesz at the time when all the Jews were exiled from that town. Even Russian law gives immunity to members of the Duma and the expulsion of Deputy Freedman was against the law. An interpolation to that effect was introduced in the Duma by the Radicals soon after its opening.

In a powerful address delivered before the Duma, Deputy Freedman emphasized the loyalty of the Russian Jews and branded as falsehoods the accusations brought against them, which resulted in so much misery. He declared that among the dead and the wounded there are five per cent Jews. A copy of that address has been forwarded to Premier Goremykin.

JEW A CHIEF JUSTICE IN ITALY.

Senator Ludovico Mortara has been elevated to the position of president of the Court of Cassation, in spite of the opposition against him on account of his advanced views on political and social questions. Mortara is a brother of the Mortara who was the subject of the celebrated case which was used against the Church of Rome by the leaders of the Italian resurrection. While the celebrated Mortara preferred to remain a Christian, his brother is a Jew and a liberal and his elevation to one of the highest positions in the land is reported with favor by all liberal-minded Italians.

Israel's Mission is Peace

(Continued from Page 4)

That America, first of all nations, has learned this new doctrine of national subordination to the interest of humanity, is neither fortuitous accident nor unfathomable mystery. To my mind the reason is perfectly clear. It is owing to the influence of Jewish thought and teaching. You must remember that the Pilgrim Fathers and all of the early New Englanders were close students of the Old Testament, the Jewish Bible. It was their constant companion, their family book. They were thoroughly imbued with its spirit, and in fashioning the American commonwealth they were guided chiefly by the principles embodied in the ancient commonwealth of Judea. And that those early New Englanders, in a very true sense the products of Jewish teachings, have left a distinct impression upon the forms and principles of our public life, is too patent to require explicit proof. Moreover, it was in this country that Judaism first found its voice. It was in this country, first of all countries, where the Jew could raise his voice in aggressively championing and propagating his faith, and in trying to mould national aspirations in accord with the lofty teachings of Judaism. In this land, as nowhere else, Jewish teachings have found ready ears and receptive hearts. From a thousand pulpits, Jewish and non-Jewish, able and zealous men have been proclaiming for many years, respectfully, yet manfully and firmly, the rights and claims and aspirations of Judaism. In this country we did not have to hide our light; unchallenged we have kept the seven-fold shining light of our Menorah burning in all its glory, illuminating the souls of men and women on this great and broad land, and imparting some of its radiance to the stars of our flag. Perforce, therefore, the Celestial lights blaze in greater glory on the American horizon than anywhere else. And, therefore, I venture to suggest that, having impregnated our own nation with the newer and broader doctrine of national self-restraint in presence of humanity's demands, it is now our duty, and should be our privilege, to teach and preach the same doctrine to the world at large.

But, my brothers, in thus directing your attention to our world wide mission, I would not have you believe that our services and watchfulness nearer home are no longer needed. For they are. Probably more so today than ever before. Ominous clouds are appearing even on the American horizon, and rumblings are being heard that presage no good. Voices are being raised here and there and everywhere, vehemently demanding a larger American army and a bigger American navy. We are told that all sorts of dangers are threatening us, and that in order to keep the peace we must be armed to the teeth. In times of peace, they tell us, we must prepare for war. We must keep our powder dry and our swords sharp. By such and other half-truths the attempt is being made to innoculate the American consciousness with the deadly virus of militarism. Against any and all such attempts we Jews must set our faces as hard as flint and our minds as unbending as steel. We must not allow our country to fall a prey to the errors and false doctrines of the Old World. We are a young country, and we shall hew out our own path in history, but not with a weapon of might—only and solely with a sword of right. We shall not in times of peace prepare for war—rather in these times of war, we shall prepare for peace. We fear no one, for we have malice toward none, and charity for all. Distrusting nobody, nobody will suspect us. Arming against no nation, no nation will attack us. Having no mailed first to hold up against any people, no people will raise its arms against us. We desire no territory besides our own; no sovereignty save the sovereignty of ourselves, and no victory, save the victory of peace. We know that there is but one bond that draws men together—the bond of brotherhood; there is but one spirit that dissolves hatred—the spirit of love; there is but one path that leads to peace—the path of justice and good-will. We know that there is no superiority like the superiority of conscious rectitude. It is the strength of righteousness. It is the strength of God. I believe it is possible for the United States of America to cultivate and possess such a national character as shall outshine in splendor all the jeweled crowns and outweigh in authority and might the standing armies of the world. The youngest of nations, America has already taught the world the lessons of liberty and democracy; it is its manifest destiny to bring home to the world the blessings of peace of justice. This nation must do politically for mankind what Israel of old was appointed to do religiously; it must bear aloft the Ark of the Covenant containing the two tablets inscribed with the American Gospel: "Democracy through Equality," and "Peace through Justice." This I conceive is America's destiny. God has designed these United States his stewards, to make use of those splendid endowments and riches for the upbuilding of a nation—whose true grandeur shall be the grandeur of character, revealed in her calm and judicial bearing before the nations of the earth, teaching them to beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and not lift sword against nation, not to learn war any more. God has destined America to be free enough, strong enough, rich enough, wise enough, and, above all, just enough, to lift in her hand the olive branch of peace, to become the Prince of Peace amongst the nations of the earth.

My Brothers, we are gathered here to review the work wrought in the year past and to forecast the tasks awaiting us in the year to come. Among these, the first and foremost must be the Love of Peace, and the Pursuance of Peace. We, the B'nai B'rith, first and above all, must array ourselves on the side of Peace. We must take our places in the very vanguard of the movement for Peace now assuming world-wide proportions. We must with renewed courage and augmented hopefulness reconsecrate ourselves to the Pursuance of Peace. We must devote ourselves thereto with every breath of our soul, with every thought of our mind, with every beat of our heart, with every throb of our pulses, with every fibre of our being. And let us pray, and pray most earnestly and sincerely that God in his mercy may soon lift the darkness now hovering over the earth, and that the seven-fold shining light of Menorah may be rekindled so that the light of Peace may shine once more over a happy and contented humanity.

NEW EDUCATIONAL SCHOOLS IN RUSSIA.

A Bill has been prepared by the Ministry of Education, providing for the opening of a new type of gymnasium for all citizens without distinction of religion, according, however, to the managers of the gymnasium, the right to petition the authorities to introduce religious restrictions into the Institution.

Owing to the scarcity of vacancies for Jews in the universities on account of the inability of Russian Jewish students to attend foreign universities, commercial leaders and merchants of Odessa held a meeting and resolved to again agitate the question of founding a Jewish university in Russia.

The Ministry has shown a favorable attitude to the request of the Kharkof Pharmaceutical Society to abolish the percentage norm for Jews in the Pharmaceutical faculties.

The Kishineff School of Commerce has been opened to all Jews who have studied in similar institutions that have been closed on account of the war.

IMMIGRANT AID IN THE WEST.

A society was formed on the Pacific Coast to extend a helping hand to all Jewish immigrants reaching San Francisco and other Coast ports, and to assist the newcomers in every possible way. The new society is affiliated with the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America. It is planned to establish an employment bureau in connection with the society. Trained experts in immigrant aid work will impart to the newcomers all necessary information as to the best means of assimilating American ideas.

A school for immigrants also is in contemplation, and able teachers will be secured to aid those immigrants who are in need of education. It is intended to form agencies in the various Pacific Coast cities through the co-operation of the B'nai B'rith lodges in their respective communities. The B'nai B'rith of the Pacific Coast is represented in the South by Mr. Milton Meyer, who was also appointed member of the Immigration Commission for the District in accordance with action taken by the Constitution Grand Lodge at its last Convention.

Constitution Grand Lodge Convention of the I. O. B. B. in San Francisco was in every sense of the word a success worthy of the great Order. And, by the way, we wish to congratulate Brother Seelenfreund upon the splendid number of the B'nai B'rith News.—Jewish Voice.

God has lent us the earth for our life; it is a great entail.—Ruskin.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT MARQUETE, MICH.

On Sunday, Aug. 22, 1915, Superior Lodge No. 775 was instituted at Marquette, Mich., with a charter membership of twenty-two, of which number eleven reside in Marquette, five in Negaune, and six in Ishpeming.

Several additional candidates have been secured and will be initiated at the first regular meeting of the lodge.

Twenty-five prominent members of Calumet Lodge locate at Houghton, Hancock, and Calumet, Michigan, came in automobiles to take part in the institution ceremonies.

Brothers H. D. Frankel, of St. Paul, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District Grand Lodge, and Leon L. Lewis, Secretary of the Anti-Defamation League, acted as installing officers representing the District Grand Lodge. After the conclusion of the initiatory ceremonies, and the institution of the lodge, the visiting officers delivered addresses on the work of the Order, and their remarks were well received. After the closing of the meeting, a reception was held, during which the ladies served refreshments.

OFFICIAL VISIT TO PORTLAND B'NAI B'RITH LODGES.

A visit of Brothers Harry K. Wolff of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, and Milton Meyers, Grand Trustee of the District, accompanied by their wives, was the occasion of a new B'nai B'rith activity in the City of Portland.

The visitors arrived in Portland on Sunday afternoon, June 6, 1915, and were met at the depot by a committee of officers of the local B'nai B'rith, and were escorted to the hotel. On Sunday evening they were the guests at a dinner of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Mosessohn. On Monday they were taken on an automobile tour of the city, which wound up with a dinner at the Chanticleer Inn, at which there weer present about twenty officials of the local B'nai B'rith lodges Tuesday noon a luncheon was given to Brothers Wolff and Meyers at the Portland Hotel, and the ladies were entertained by members of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant at a luncheon at the Multnoah Hotel. On Tuesday evening the party were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. N. Weinstein at dinner, after which they went to the B'nai B'rith Bldg., where a joined session was held of the Portland and Theodor Herzl Lodges and the Daughters of the Covenant. Initiation by the degree team of Theodor Herzl Lodge of 25 candidates was a feature of the evening. District Deputy A. Boskowitz presided at the joint session, during which addresses were made by Grand President Wolff, Grand Trustee Meyer and Second Grand Vice President David N. Mosessohn. After the meeting a Dutch supper was served in the gymnasium.

BELLINGHAM, WASH.

The entire Jewish community of Bellingham turned out on Sunday evening, June 24, 1915, in honor of Bro. Harry K. Wolff of San Francisco, President of District No. 4, who came to pay an official visit to the lodge, as well as to give a message to his co-religionists that served as an inspiration to all those who were privileged to hear him. In his address he made clear the purpose of the Order and its wide scope of protecting and furthering the cause of Judaism throughout the world. Accompanying Mr Wolff was Mr. David M. Mosessohn of Portland, Ore., Second Vice-President of the Grand Lodge, who, in his address, urged every Jew to join the Order, emphasizing the need for combined efforts among the Jews.

The addresses of the two speakers were received with much enthusiasm and left a deep impression on the audience.

PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN IN ST. LOUIS.

What promises to be a noteworthy event in the Jewish community of St. Louis will be the proposed class initiation as a result of present B'nai B'rith activities to be held next October. So far the campaign has brought results far beyond expectations and it is hoped that at least one thousand new members will be enrolled in the two St. Louis lodges.

The Propaganda Committee is composed of [illegible] hundred members and [illegible] campaign to [illegible] B'nai B'rith field every [illegible] in the city.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT BUTLER, PA.

On July 19 a special car filled to its capacity with members of the Order, at the head of which was Brother Abe Weil, of Philadelphia, President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, journeyed to Butler, Pa., arriving there at noon.

After luncheon at the Hotel Nixon, at which over one hundred and fifty members attended, the party proceeded to the Masonic Hall where the institution of Butler Lodge No. 772 took place, with Bros. Abe Weil, President; A. L. Solomon, Past President; Marcus Feuchtwanger, Second Vice-President; Louis Sulzbacher, Secretary of the District, and Julius Weis, Sergeant-at-Arms, officiating. Forty new members were initiated by Bro. A. L. Solomon, who was assisted by the other officers of the District Grand Lodge. After the ceremonies of initiation were concluded the doors were thrown open to the public and several hundred ladies and gentlemen availed themselves of the opportunity to be present and listen to the addresses of the Grand Lodge officers.

After the meeting had adjourned refreshments were served by the ladies of Butler.

A large number of out of town visitors were present, among them 30 members from New Castle Lodge, of New Castle, Pa.; 10 members of Ellwood City Lodge, Ellwood, Pa,; 25 members from Kittanning Lodge; 10 members from Braddock Lodge; and Pittsburgh was represented by more than 100 members.

The establishment of Butler Lodge is due principally to the efforts of Bro. Hemple, who also has to his credit the institutions of Lodges at Reading and Kittanning.

ACTIVITY OF B'NAI B'RITH OF NEW ORLEANS.

A joint committee of the New Orleans lodges held a special meeting on August 2, 1915, on which occasion two matters of importance received the earnest consideration of the members present.

The first was a report of the progress of the movement to consolidate the New Orleans lodges, and the second was a report on the progress of the efforts of securing a home of its own for the B'nai B'rith.

In reference to the consolidation of lodges it was reported that arrangements were practically completed for the consolidation of Gulf Home and J. K. Gutheim Lodges, and arrangements are being made for a conference of Crescent City and B'nai B'rith Israel Lodges with a view of effecting plans for consolidation.

As to the erection of a B'nai B'rith Home the committee reported marked progress. Several parcels of property are being considered and it is estimated that the securing of the home with the necessary alterations and furnishings will involve a sum of about $15,000.00. The Home is to be made a B'nai B'rith Center for the convenience and comfort of the members of the Order at all times.

FOREST CITY, ARKANSAS.

Barnett Lodge No. 754, of Forest City, Ark., celebrated the fourth of July by holding its second annual picnic which was largely attended and was an unqualified success in every particular. Quite a number of friends and members of the lodge were in attendance from nearby cities. All the visitors were met at the trains by motor cars under the supervision of a special reception committee and were conveyed to and from the picnic grounds.

The event teemed with happy features for all, and the program included games and athletic events.

TACOMA, WASHINGTON.

Bro. Harry K. Wolff of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, accompanied by the Second Vice President, David N. Mosessohn, of Portland, Ore., and Grand Trustee Milton Meyer, of San Francisco, paid an official visit to Tacoma Lodge No. 741 on June 19, 1915.

The distinguished guests and their ladies were entertained in the early part of the evening at a dinner at the Tacoma Hotel.

A large attendance was present at the meeting of the Lodge and listened with keen interest to the addresses of the visiting Grand Lodge Officers who covered nearly every phase of important work accomplished by the Order.

ABERDEEN, WASH.

On Wednesday, June 9, Grays Harbor Lodge No. 757 had the pleasure and the privilege of entertaining three Grand Officers, the party consisting of Grand President H. K. Wolff, Second Grand Vice-President D. N. Mosessohn and Grand Trustee Milton Meyer. Mrs. Wolff and Mrs. Meyer arrived on the noon train and after partaking of a luncheon at the Washington Hotel, were driven in automobiles about town and then taken to Hoquiam, where a tea was served to them at the home of Past President Henry Levi. On the return from Hoquiam the party were entertained at dinner, nearly all members of the lodge with their wives being present. At 8 o'clock the ladies of the party were taken to the theater by a committee composed of some of the wives of the local members, while the Grand Officers repaired to the lodge room, where a large crowd awaited them. In the speechmaking that followed and lasted until midnight, the Grand Officers described what the order has already accomplished and what it intends to accomplish for the good of Israel. At 11 P. M. the ladies who had gone to the theater appeared at the lodge room and were admitted. The Grand Officers again were called upon and for the benefit of the ladies made a few more remarks explaining the work and the destiny of the order. After the meeting had adjourned and the good-byes had been spoken, much regret was expressed because such "heart to heart" meetings could not be held oftener.

ANNUAL SUMMER ENTERTAINMENT BY STOCKTON B'NAI B'RITH.

Hope Lodge No. 126, of Stockton, Calif., gave its first annual summer outing on July 18, 1915, and the gathering besides partaking of the usual picnic enjoyment, turned itself into a great Reception Committee to honor Rabbi J. Kopald, of Buffalo, N. Y.

More than three hundred members of the Stockton Jewish community attended and the day was spent with games and dancing at the Oak Park grounds.

A feature of the day was the address by Rabbi Kopald. Addresses were also made by Rabbi Edgar Magnin and by Rabbi H. J. Horowitz.

The affair was a success from the standpoint of bringing the Jewish community together, and the committee that had charge of the arrangements, consisting of Brothers Safferhill, Viner, Katz, Greenberg, Hirsch, Conway and Stamper, is deserving of much praise for its untiring efforts.

EDMONTON LODGE, EDMONTON, ALABAMA.

On July 15 the members of Edmonton Lodge tendered a banquet to their departing President, Bro. B. M. Goldman, at the Royal George Hotel. Bro. J. A. Friedman acted as toastmaster. Most of the members were present and many spoke feelingly, expressing their regret at Brother Goldman leaving the city and voicing the thought that the departure of Brother Goldman means an irreparable loss, not only to the Lodge, but to the Jewish community as well. Brother Friedman, in presenting an engraved medallion as a mark of esteem of the Lodge to the honored guest, expressed the appreciation of the members for the whole-hearted work that Brother Goldman had done in the interest of the Lodge and Edmonton Jewry.

Responding, Brother Goldman thanked the brethren for their good will and exhorted them to further the work of the Order.

GAN EDAN LODGE, TERRE HAUTE, IND.

Gan Edan Lodge No. 110 regrets exceedingly the loss of an active worker caused by the removal of Rabbi Jacob H. Kaplan to Cincinnati to fill the pulpit of the Reading Road Congregation. Dr. Kaplan made his stay in Terre Haute memorable by his monthly Chatauquas, which were appreciated and participated in with much pleasure by the members of the lodge.

The lodge is looking forward eagerly to the arrival of Brother Rabbi Isaac Marcuson of Charleston, S. C., Past President of District Grand Lodge No 5, and who is well qualified for his new post by his admirable services rendered to the Jewish cause and by the splendid record he made in another District.

IBN GABIROL LODGE, PITTSBURGH.

On Sunday, July 11, 1915, the following officers were installed at the regular meeting of Ibn Gabirol Lodge No. 114. Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, President; George A. Levy, Vice President; Louis Greenberger, Secretary; A. H. Kaufman, Treasurer; Simon Bluestone and Leonard S. Levin, Trustees.

Rabbi Coffee in his address accepting the office declared his intention of organizing a campaign for social service in the district. This work will first be taken up by members of his own lodge and then by propaganda, it is expected that it will be extended throughout the entire district. Extensive plans are in preparation for the work and Dr. Coffee will be assisted by the Vice President, George A. Levy, who is the efficiency expert for the City of Pittsburgh.

The acceptance of the office by Dr. Coffee was received with considerable enthusiasm, not only by the members of his own lodge but by the members of the Order generally throughout the western part of the State by reason of the fact that he is a natural leader and has acquired a national reputation as a social worker. Dr. Coffee's work has not been confined only to his duties in the Rabbinate, but also as a member of the Morals Efficiency Commission, appointed by the Mayor of the city, which did such excellent work, and also as a contributor to the Survey and other magazines.

Dr. Coffee has planned to start the work and make known the details thereof at a large meeting to be held some time during the month of September, to which all the members of the Order will be invited to attend.

In view of the fact that the Constitutional Grand Lodge at its convention at San Francisco took some steps towards the establishment of a Bureau for Social Service, the attitude of Dr. Coffee has been received with much favor and the cry of the young men in the Order that they want something to do, will be answered by him, by giving them that something to do. Ibn Gabirol Lodge is nearly fifty years old and has always been more or less of an influential factor in the district, and with the new set of officers just elected, it is certain that new life will be put into the work.

B'NAI B'RITH RALLY AT NEW ORLEANS.

The banquet hall of the Athenaeum presented a gala appearance on the evening of June 18. It was the place wherein the rally of the New Orleans B'nai B'rith was held.

The festivities were opened by Bro. Sam Blum, who stated the object of the meeting, after which he called on Bro. Myron M. Goldman, who presented the regrets of the aged Grand Secretary, Bro. Nat Strauss, on account of his enforced absence. Rev. E. W. Leipziger then accepted charge of the affair and in felicitous remarks alluded to the spirit of friendliness and co-operation that prevail between the Order and the Synagogue. The first speaker on the program was Bro. Archibald A. Marx, Second Vice President of the Order, who spoke of the activities and accomplishments of the B'nai B'rith, especially emphasizing the social service work about to be inaugurated, and urged for a healthy increase in the membership of the New Orleans lodges. He was followed by Bros. Eldon S. Lazarus, Charles Rosen and Ralph J. Schwartz. The several speakers alluded to the consolidation of the New Orleans lodges and emphasized the need of procuring a home for the B'nai B'rith of New Orleans.

The festivities were brought to a close about midnight and those who attended were more than pleased for having been present at the B'nai B'rith rally.

CINCINNATI LODGE.

The last regular meeting of the Cincinnati Lodge No. 4 before the summer vacation, was held on the evening of June 25, and was notable for the large attendance and the impressiveness of the initiation ceremonies, when a class of sixteen candidates were inducted into the Order. At the previous meeting of the Lodge 37 candidates were initiated, making 53 since the great class of 276 on May 24. Thus, the membership of the Lodge is now 1,056, which number is quite likely to be increased to 1,100 before the fall season is past.

The attendance at the last meeting was remarkable not only from the standpoint of members, but also considering the spirit which prevailed.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ACTIVITY OF WINNIPEG LODGE.

Beginning with March the first, Winnipeg Lodge, of Winnipeg, Canada, has introduced a new feature to make its meetings more interesting, namely, that every meeting should be addressed on some definite subject by a member of the Lodge.

Bro. E. A. Cohen, who was the originator of the idea, was the first speaker, his theme being: "My Fears for My People." The fears being that "my people" would not rise up to the occasion and miss the opportunity almost unique in his history, when it could, if united, make a claim for recognition and demand his dues—upon the peace congress, at the conclusion of the war.

March 18—Bro. Marcus Hyman on "Educating the Immigrant," pointing out the deficiencies of the immigrant when he arrives in our midst and urging the necessity of assisting him to reach a higher level.

March 27—Bro. E. R. Levinson on "Jewish Prejudice." The speaker went over the ground of prejudice against the Jew and urged that a good deal of that prejudice might be eradicated if the Jew would try to accommodate himself more readily to his surroundings.

April 15—Bro. Max Steinkopf on the "Effect of the War on Finances," dealing with the financial strength of the main belligerant nations, and the methods used to cope with the new situation and avoid panic.

May 6—The last address of the series and the only one by a "non-professional" (the previous ones being all lawyers), H. E. Wilder spoke on "Jewish National Stock Taking." (The first part, assets) indicating the contribution of the Jews to the progress of civilization and this not for the purpose of enabling us to boast as to what we have had and have done, but to enable us to realize what we are expected to do by virtue of this great inheritance, since: Noblesse oblige.

May 31—An open social evening, to which the members and their ladies and friends were invited. The program being as follows:

PART I.
Piano Solo...............Olga Guilaroff
Song...................H. Rufus Isaacs
Accomp. Miss E. Finkelstein.
Recitation.............Judith Osowsky
Song..................Bernice Tissman
Accomp. Rosie Ripstein.
Violin Solo.............W. W. Leavitt
Accomp. Judith Rackow.
Whist Tournament.
PART II.
Piano Solo...........Marcella Gardner
Song..................Fannie Robinson
Accomp. E. Finkelstein.
Song.........................S. Ostrow
Accomp. M. Gardner.
Refreshments.
Presentation of Prizes.

The success of the affair, which was due mainly to the efforts of Dr. E. D. Mitchell and Ch. Hoffman, is demonstrated by the fact that the people complained that they did not have enough, neither room nor music nor refreshments though a larger hall was secured for the evening and the program lasted till midnight.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

The visit of Brothers Harry K. Wolff and Milton Meyer of San Francisco, President and Grand Trustee of District Grand Lodge No. 4, respectively, to Samuel Lodge of Vancouver, B. C., was a distinct success. A committee of the lodge met the distinguished visitors at the depot on the evening of June 11, and escorted them to the Vancouver Hotel. The following day they were taken on an automobile trip through the parks. On Sunday they were the guests of the lodge on a launch trip to Indian River, stopping for lunch at the Wigwam Inn. On Sunday evening a special meeting of Samuel Lodge and its Auxiliary was held in honor of the Grand Lodge Officers. A class of candidates was initiated in the lodge hall, while in the adjoining hall officers of the Ladies Auxiliary were installed. After the conclusion of these two ceremonies, a joint meeting of the two organizations was held. President Max Grossman introduced Brother Wolff, who delivered an impressive address, which created a great impression. He was followed by Trustee Meyer who spoke on the co-operation of the Auxiliaries. After the addresses a musical program was enjoyed. A Dutch lunch was served at the conclusion of the evening.

LONDON LODGE.

The First Lodge of England, London Lodge No. 663, is growing apace, both in number and influence. Recently it made its influence felt in a lasting impression. At the annual meeting of all the constituent synagogues two resolutions were moved and adopted in reference to the work of the delegates on the Board of Deputies. The point of importance is that the resolutions were drafted and resolved upon by the lodge, and that the lodge saw to it that a member move the resolution. The incident proves conclusively that the Order possesses, in the London Lodge, a very effective branch.

Another important activity of the lodge was in connection with the care of alien Jews in the United Kingdom. Until recently German and Austrian subjects were, with comparatively small exception, left at large in the country, but a few weeks ago a more rigorous policy was decided upon and a very large number of these aliens were interned. The lodge made representations to the Home Office in regard to Jews, especially Bohemian, Galician and Turkish Jews, and received the assurance that any aliens who were Jews would receive sympathetic treatment. Thus the Lodge's representations will bear good fruit.

Already Jews who are enemy aliens, living in Glasgow and Edinburgh, have been granted exemption from internment en bloc.

London Lodge may be congratulated upon the excellent work it accomplished.

VICTORIA, B. C.

On June 15, 1915, Victoria Lodge No. 758, of Victoria, B. C., was honored by a visit from Brother Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, and Grand Trustee Brother Milton Meyer.

The occasion was one of the most successful affairs yet given under the auspices of the lodge. In honor of the distinguished visitors, a class of candidates was initiated, and after the business meeting was adjourned a Social was held, in which members and their friends partook. Brother Wolff addressed a large audience, presented a brief outline of the objects of the Order, and what it has accomplished for Judaism. He was followed by Brother Meyer, who spoke of the future of the Order, and his plans for serving the Jewish cause in every possible way.

During their sojourn in the city, the visitors were entertained by a number of prominent local co-religionists.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Magic City Lodge No. 725 of Birmingham, Ala., although but recently instituted, has already accomplished much good work. It numbers among its members many who are giving their individual attention to the welfare of the Lodge and to the interests of the Order. The meetings are well attended; initiation of candidates are always impressive and the degree team is an excellent one. There was hardly a meeting during the past year when there was no initiation of candidates.

At the regular meeting of the Lodge held on July 4 the officers were installed by Bro. L. Beitman. The new President appointed a publicity committee with a view of launching a membership campaign so as to secure every eligible Jew of the city as a member of the Lodge.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Lodge No. 16 is preparing to give a banquet at the Hotel Statler in honor of Mr. S. J. Kornhauser, President of the District Grand Lodge. The banquet will be held on Sunday evening, Oct. 24, and will mark the beginning of the Fall activities of the lodge.

Men of prominence have been invited to the banquet, among them Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Louis D. Brandeis, Louis Marshall and Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch.

BUTTE, MONT.

Brother Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, paid an official visit to Baron de Hirsch Lodge of Butte, Mont., on July 11th. Several elaborate functions during his stort stay were on the program.

On Sunday evening a banquet and dance was given by the lodge in his honor, on which occasion Brother Wolff delivered an address on the good and welfare of the Order.

INSTITUTION OF MENORAH LODGE, BALTIMORE, MD.

On June 20, 1915, Menorah Lodge No. 771 was instituted in Baltimore, Md., in the presence of representatives of the Executive Committee of the Order, District Grand Lodge No. 5, and various Lodges of the District.

Prominent Jews of the city are interested in the new Lodge, among them Rabbis Rosenau and Rubenstein.

The Executive Committee was represented by Brothers Jacob Singer, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Edward N. Calisch, of Richmond, members of the Executive Committee. The District Grand Lodge was represented by Dr. Geo. Solomon, of Savannah, its secretary, and Rev. Dr. Abram Simon, of Washington, members of the General Committee. Other prominent members of the Order present were Brothers Julius I. Peyser, and Samuel Gans, Past-Presidents of the District Grand Lodge, and Judge Milton Strasburger, of Washington.

Argo Lodge of Washington sent a delegation of 50 members who came in a special car.

The ceremony of the institution was most impressive and was presided over by Dr. E. N. Calisch.

Following the institution of the Lodge, election of officers was held and this feature of the meeting was under charge of Brother Jacob Singer.

The election resulted as follows:

President, Solomon Mendels; vice-president, Joseph M. Zamoiski; recording secretary, Michael Miller; financial secretary, Philip Sykes; treasurer, Herman Ganse; inside guardian, Nathan Kress; outside guardian, Walter Goldstein; trustees, Rev. Dr. C. A. Rubenstein, W. Levy and H. Kaplan.

At the close of the exercises, refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT TALLADEGA, ALA.

Leon Schwarz Lodge No. 774 was instituted at Talladega, Ala., on Sunday, Aug. 8, 1915. The Lodge was named in honor of Brother Leon Schwarz, of Mobile, the former president of the District Grand Lodge.

The District Grand Lodge was represented by Past-President Leon Schwarz, who officiated at the institution ceremonies, initiated the new members and installed the officers elected for the ensuing term.

After the formal exercises were completed, an open meeting was held in the Savoy Theatre, which was attended by all the Jewish people and many visitors from Gadsden and Sylacauga, and a large number of non-Jewish friends. Addresses were delivered at the open meeting by Judge Wellington Vanduver, Mayor of Talladega, and Captain Leon Schwarz, of Mobile. A fine musical program was also carried out.

The new Lodge is the first Jewish Society ever organized in Talladega.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT KITTANNING, PA.

Armstrong Lodge No. 770 was instituted at Kittanning, Pa., on June 6, 1915, under most favorable conditions, forty-two charter members being enrolled on the list.

Brother Isador Sobel, of Erie, Past-President of the District Grand Lodge, was the installing officer.

There were present many members from Pittsburgh, New Kensington, Braddock and surrounding cities. Indications point to a large membership for this Lodge, one of the newest lodges of the District.

NEW CASTLE LODGE, NEW CASTLE, PA.

At a well attended meeting of New Castle Lodge held on Sunday, July 11, the officers for the ensuing term were installed by Bro. Maurice J. Kraus, of Ellwood City.

On July 18, a number of members of the Lodge, including several officers, proceeded to Butler, Pa., to witness the institution of the new lodge in that city.

Bro. Marcus Feuchtwanger, Second Vice President of the District Grand Lodge, and a member of New Castle Lodge, was one of the installing officers.

On Sunday, July 25, the annual picnic of the Lodge was held at Dewey Park. The committee that had charge of the affair made all arrangements possible for the comfort of those that attended. Games and races were held and prizes were given out to the successful contestants.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Indianapolis Lodge No. 58, of Indianapolis, Ind., held a very largely attended meeting, as a grand finale before adjournment for the summer vacation, at the Indianapolis Club, on the evening of June 21st.

The meeting was especially arranged as a celebration in honor of the election of Brother Louis J. Borinstein of the Lodge as Second Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, and of Brother Sol S. Kiser as Trustee of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum.

A special class of candidates was secured for initiation at this meeting and at the close of the evening, a Kosher Dutch Lunch was served on the Roof Garden.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

By invitation of Ararat Lodge No. 13 of Hartford, Conn., the degree team of Horeb Lodge visited its sister lodge at its meeting and initiated a class of candidates. The members of the B'nai B'rith were entertained with a dinner at the club. The work of the team was particularly effective and the drill especially received high praise. After the degree work was completed, addresses were delivered by some of the visiting brethren.

Bro. Samuel J. Witz in his address reviewed the work of the San Francisco convention.

B. F. PEIXOTTO LODGE, SALT LAKE CITY.

On the occasion of the official visit of Brother Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco, President of District No. 4, B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City arranged for an outing at Lagoon, Friday evening, July 2, 1915.

A special trout and chicken dinner was prepared by the restaurant management. Tables were also provided for the comfort of the members and their families.

In the evening President Wolff delivered an address which was received with much applause. At the conclusion of the formal exercises, dancing, games and other sports were indulged in.

FRATERNITY LODGE, NEW LONDON, CONN.

Under the auspices of Fraternity Lodge No. 743 of New London, Conn. the children of the Bible School maintained by the lodge gave a presentation of the biblical play of "Joseph and His Brethren," at the Lyceum Theatre, on Sunday, May 23. 1915. The characters were costumed in garb appropriate to the period of the play; the settings were in harmony with the story and the young actors interpreted the lines with understanding. The cast was drilled by members of the lodge, teachers of the Bible School.

ABRAHAM GEIGER LODGE, SPOKANE, WASH.

The Lodge has a membership of one hundred and fifty, and holds bi-monthly meetings, one of which is for business and the other devoted to social affairs, on which occasion the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Lodge has charge of the entertainment and the social features.

The Lodge was honored at its meeting on June 24th, by a visit of the President of the District, Brother Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco. A class of six candidates was initiated at the time. After the close of the regular work of the Lodge, the doors were thrown open to the public and Brother President Wolff addressed an audience of about four hundred, regarding the work and accomplishments of the Order. His remarks elicited much applause, and at its conclusion a public reception was held to afford President Wolff an opportunity to personally meet the members of the Order and their friends.

Following the meeting, refreshments were served by the Ladies' Auxiliary, and the balance of the evening was enjoyed with a dancing party.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Lodge No. 16 has anounced that its plans for the coming year include the maintenance of a building and the social feature extension of its activities. To avoid duplication of work, a conference has been arranged by a committee of the lodge, and a like committee of the Jewish Men's Association, with a view of bringing about a plan for possible amalgamation.

DISTRICT No. 1.

The annual outing and celebration of Hebron Lodge No. 5 of New York City was held at the Home of Aged and Infirm at Yonkers, New York, on Sunday, June 13, 1915. The committee in charge of arrangements provided an excellent vocal and musical program and addresses were delivered by prominent speakers, after which a collation was served.

Members of Chananiah Lodge No. 165 of New York City visited the B'nai B'rith Home for the Aged at Yonkers on June 27, 1915. Brothers M. Oppenheimer and H. Meyers made brief addresses at the meeting of the inmates and the visitors.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee, of which Hon. J. Levinson is chairman, is arranging a big B'nai B'rith rally for the coming fall. The meeting will be addressed by prominent members of the Order.

DISTRICT No. 2.

Muncie Lodge No. 752 of Muncie, Ind., held a well attended meeting on Sunday. July 25, 1915, on which occasion a class of twelve candidates was initiated by the degree team of Indianapolis Lodge, consisting of Brothers Sol S. Kiser, A. Borinstein, L. Borinstein, L. Kaminsky, M. Segor and M. Miller.

On June 24, 1915, Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., held a large meeting in honor of Mr. Louis Borinstein, elected Second Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and Mr. Sol S. Kiser, who was elected Trustee of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum.

Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis, Mo., gave a complimentary moonlight picnic and dance on June 22, 1915. A large number of members of the Lodge and their friends attended the affair.

Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis, Mo., at its meeting held on June 21, voted an appropriation of $250.00 to the Shelter Home Building project.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 2 held its regular meeting at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, Ind., on July 26, 1915. All the officers and members were in attendance.

The local lodge entertainted the officers at a luncheon, and took them sightseeing in and about the city after the close of the session.

Rabbi Samuel Koch, of Seattle, Wash., addressed Denver Lodge No. 171, of Denver, Colo., at its meeting held on July 11, 1915. The subject was, "The Present Opportunity of the Jewish-American."

The first meeting of Gan Edan Lodge No. 110 of Terre Haute, Ind., after the summer vacation was held on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 5th, at which time a new plan for increasing the attendance at meetings was put into operation. The plan was for each member of the propaganda committee to personally undertake to bring another member of the Lodge to the meeting. The result was gratifying and an unusually large attendance was present.

DISTRICT No. 3.

McKeesport Lodge No. 523 of McKeesport, Pa., gave its annual picnic at the Olympia Park on June 17, 1915, to the various religious schools of McKeesport. The committee arranged interesting athletic events, and a baseball game between teams of the Y. M. H. A. was also held.

Under the auspices of the officers of the Institution, a special excursion to Erie, Pa., was held on Aug. 29, 1915, to enable a large number of friends and well wishers of the B'nai B'rith Home for Orphaned and Friendless Children, located at Erie, to visit and personally inspect the Institution. The outing took the form of a "Basket Excursion," and all who participated enjoyed the jolly outing and the occupants of the Home were made glad by the great gathering of friends that assembled there.

Since the election of Bro. Abe Weil, of Philadelphia, to the presidency of the District Grand Lodge, six new lodges have been instituted within the District. They are all actively engaged in doing good work in their respective communities.

The propaganda committee of the District is at work to bring about the institution of new lodges in the cities of York, Johnstown and Allentown, Pa.

At the June meeting of Joshua Lodge No. 23 of Philadelphia, Pa., Bro. Jacob [illegible], a member of the Executive Committee of the Order for the District, addressed the Lodge on the work of the San Francisco Convention of the Order.

Abraham Lincoln Lodge No. 672 of Pittsburgh held a largely attended meeting on June 14, 1915, on which occasion the officers for the ensuing term were installed by Bros. Adolph Edlis and Ellis [illegible]. The propaganda committee made a special effort to provide an enjoyable program for the evening and succeeded admirably.

DISTRICT No. 4.

The last meeting of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487, before adjournment for the summer vacation, was held on the evening of June 22, 1915, on which occasion a class of candidates was initiated. A good musical program and the serving of refreshments added much to the pleasures of the evening.

Hope Lodge No. 126 of Stockton, Cal., held a class initiation at its meeting of June 16th. The degree team conferred the work upon fifteen new candidates. After the ceremony was concluded Bros. M. P. Stein, Sam Aaron and R. E. Cohen gave interesting talks at the banquet table.

At the last meeting of Ida Strauss Auxiliary, held before adjournment for the summer vacation, the members of Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503, of Seattle, had a most pleasant surprise for the ladies, and they presented them with a purse for the treasury, profits of a recent dance, the success of which they so generously claimed was due to the Auxiliary. A most delightful lunch, together with interesting talks. finished the evening's program.

At an open meeting of Bellingham Lodge of Bellingham, Wash., held on Sunday evening, June 13, 1915, Rev. Dr. S. Koch, of Seattle, addressed an enthusiastic gathering on the subject of "American Judaism." After the address, a general discussion followed and plans were discussed for the opening of a Sabbath School. After the meeting an informal reception was held in honor of Dr. Koch.

Brother Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, is preparing to tour the southern part of the District early in October. This trip will include visits to the lodges in Los Angeles, San Diego, Bakersfield, Fresno and other cities.

Bakersfield Lodge No. 764 of Bakersfield, Cal., now composes nearly all the prominent Jewish men of the city. The lodge is preparing for the observance of the Holy Days and is fortunate in having secured the services of Brother Gus Ringolsky, of San Francisco, to take charge of this work.

A well attended meeting of Ida Strauss Auxiliary and the B'nai B'rith Lodges was held on June 3, 1915. A special feature of the meeting was the address by Rabbi Samuel Koch on the "Jewish Torah."

An interesting address on the Life of Judah B. Benjamin was delivered at a meeting of Theodore Herzl Lodge of Portland, Ore., by Roscoe C. Nelson on July 13, 1915, at the B'nai B'rith Building.

The twelfth annual picnic of Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 of Seattle, Wash., was held on Sunday, July 11th, at Fortuna Park. The program included various sporting events and a ball game by the teams composed of the members of the two Seattle lodges. Special prizes were given to the winners of all the sporting events.

A very enjoyable evening was had at the Stag Party held under the auspices of Rainier Lodge of Seattle, Wash., on the evening of June 7, 1915, for the benefit of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital of Hot Springs, Ark.

The first joint annual picnic of Abraham Geiger Lodge of Spokane, Wash., and its Ladies' Auxiliary, Ida Bloom Strauss, was held on Aug. 8, 1915, at Liberty Lake, and was attended by more than four hundred persons. A number of athletic events and dancing made the day an enjoyable one .

The Entertainment Committee of the B'nai B'rith Club of Portland, Ore., assisted by the Women's Auxiliary, gave a shirtwaist dancing party at the B'nai B'rith Building on the evening of June 30. A large gathering was present and the proceeds of the dance are to be used towards purchasing equipment for the swimming tank at the gymnasium.

A general movement looking to the amalgamation of all Jewish charitable and philanthropic work in Seattle, made especially necessary by an influx of Jewish immigrants, has been inaugurated in Seattle at the suggestion of Rainier Lodge, of that city. A meeting was held during the month of June, at which thirteen out of sixteen local organizations were represented.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 5 held a meeting at Wilmington. N. C., on July 26th.

The special order of business was the election of a successor to President Dr. I. E. Marcuson, of Charleston, who resigned owing to his expected removal to Terre Haute, Ind. Brother Harold S. Bloomberg, of Richmond, was elected President to serve for the unexpired term. Savannah was chosen by the General Committee for the next Convention of the District Grand Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Due to energetic efforts of Rabbi I. Koplowitz, of Hancock, Mich., an active B'nai B'rith worker of Calumet Lodge, a new lodge was instituted in the city of Marquette, Mich., on Sunday, Aug. 22, 1915. Its membership is composed of residents of Marquette, Negaunee and Ishpeming.

John Hay Lodge No. 634, of Fargo, North Dakota, mourns the loss of Brother Isador Goldberg, one of its prominent and active members. The funeral rites of the Order were conducted by Brother I. Papermeister, in the presence of a large number of the members of the lodge.

In connection with the recent Annual Commencement Exercises at the University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill., the first prize in the B'nai B'rith Essay Contest went to Mr. Isaac Siegel of Chicago, and the second prize to Miss Anita Hyman, also of Chicago.

The formal installation of officers of Winnipeg Lodge No. 650 was held on June 17, 1915, in the presence of a large number of members.

At the first regular meeting of Minneapolis Lodge to be held in the month of September, the following program has been arranged:

Discussion on the subject, "What is the Solution of the Jewish Problem in America," discussed from the following standpoints:

"Zionism," by Dr. M. Sherper.
"The Synagogue," by A. M. Calmenson.
"The Temple," by Dr. I. L. Rypins.
"Fraternalism," by Sylvan E. Hess.
"Evolution," by M. P. Firestone.
"Democracy," by G. Loevinger.

Brother Edward Menkin, as Director of Intellectual Advancement for the District Grand Lodge, issued a syllabus on the subject, "The B'nai B'rith and Other Organizations," and called upon the lodges of the District to arrange meetings for the discussion of the subject matter submitted to them.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

At the June meeting of Little Rock Lodge No. 158, which was largely attended, Brother Milton B. Rose addressed the lodge on the subject, "What it Means to be a Jew."

At a well attended meeting of Houston Lodge No. 434, of Houston, Texas. held on June 22, 1915, the officers for the ensuing term were elected and installed. An active and successful term for this lodge under the leadership of its new officers is assured.

A joint meeting of the members of the New Orleans Lodge was held on the evening of June 10, 1915, which took the form of a reception to the newly elected Second Vice-President of the Order, Brother Archibald A. Marx, and to Brothers Eldon S. Lazarus and Chas. Rosen, delegates to the recent Convention of the Order. These brothers gave their impressions of the proceedings of the San Francisco Convention. Brother Blum, Leipziger and R. J. Schwarz also made short talks. The meeting was followed by a Dutch lunch, music and cigars.

Clarksdale Lodge No. 660, of Clarksdale, Miss., is showing a steady growth in its membership. At the August meeting of the Lodge, eleven applications for membership were presented.

At a public election held in Clarksdale. Miss., on August 3d, Brother A. Spain. of Tunica, Miss., a prominent member and worker of Clarksdale Lodge No. 660. of Clarksdale, Miss., was elected Justice of the Peace of his District, defeating four other candidates and receiving more votes than all others combined

The installation of officers of Edar Lodge of San Antonio, Texas, was held on July 26, 1915. Rabbi N. Gerstein opened the meeting with a prayer. S. C. Eldridge gave an interesting lecture, and the program included also vocal and musical numbers. Dancing and refreshments were enjoyed after the meeting

Under the auspices of the Council of Jewish Women, the Ladies Auxiliary of Mobile, Ala., gave a linen shower for the benefit of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. A fine collection of useful articles were donated

At the meeting Mr. Leon Schwarz, of Mobile, Ala., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, gave a talk concerning the Hot Springs Hospital, its needs and its work.

At a large and enthusiastic meeting of Isidor Strauss Lodge, of Fort Worth Texas, held on July 6, 1915, at the Hebrew Institute, officers for the ensuing year were installed by Dr. Geo. Fox. Rabbi E. Horwitch also delivered an address. The meeting was in the form of a Smoker.

Rabbi Emanuel Sternheim, of Baton Rouge, visited Alexandria, La., on May 7th to address the Jewish Sisterhood of that city.

On Sunday following, a meeting of the local B'nai B'rith Lodge was held, which Rabbi Sternheim attended and on which occasion he delivered an address, at the conclusion of which a reception was arranged in his honor.

Herzl Lodge No. 608, of Houston, Texas, held a well attended meeting on July 7, 1915. The meeting was of the "talkfest" variety, with the installation of officers and the serving of refreshments as special features thereof.

The B'nai B'rith picnic, under the auspices of the lodge at Ft. Worth, Texas, on Aug. 8, 1915, was a great success. A handsome sum was realized, which will be used for charitable purposes.

Herzl Lodge No. 608, of Houston, Texas, held a most interesting meeting on the evening of July 14, 1915, on which occasion the installation of officers was held and a class of candidates was initiated. The lodge resolved to have a degree team, and a committee was appointed to take charge of this matter.

DISTRICT NO. 11.

Under the auspices of Siegmund Bergel Lodge No. 602, a library and reading room has been opened for the general Jewish public at Rutschuk, Bulgaria.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN BY CLEVELAND LODGE.

A campaign for one thousand additional members, by Cleveland Lodge No. 16, is now going on and the committee that has charge of the work is sanguine of making Cleveland Lodge the banner lodge of the District.

The lodges of District No. 2 are now actively engaged in increasing their membership. Cleveland, due to the fact that it is the home of President S. J. Kornhauser, of the District Grand Lodge, and further because the next meeting of the District Grand Lodge will be held in that city, is making an unusually strong effort to show the greatest results in the membership campaign now going on throughout the District.

Mr. W. R. Weidenthal, Vice-President of the Lodge, is chairman of the Propaganda Committee. The date of the big banquet and class initiation has been set for Sunday, Oct. 24, 1915.

MONTEFIORE LODGE, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Montefiore Lodge No. 70 of Buffalo, N. Y., sustained a loss in the death of Brother Hiram Exstein, who was a member of the lodge for fifty years and a past president and enthusiastic worker in the cause of the B'nai B'rith. Brother Exstein possessed an exceptionally courteous manner and a kindly disposition, which won him a large circle of friends.

Montefiore Lodge held its annual river party on July 8, for which elaborate preparations were made by the entertainment committee. More than 100 members and their families participated in the affair.

The Lodge is arranging now for the celebration of its fiftieth anniversary early in 1916 and in connection with this celebration an extensive propaganda campaign will be inaugurated by the Lodge.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

At the last regular meeting of the Lodge before the summer vacation held on June 27th, a committee was appointed consisting of 25 of the most prominent and active members of the Lodge to make arrangements for the celebration of the 60th anniversary of Horeb Lodge to be held next January.

A special committee of the Lodge arranged for a summer outing, which included baseball games, athletic events, and excelled in the variety of entertainment the high standard which was set by the previous outings of the Lodge.

The officers and active members of the Lodge held a banquet at the Morris Cove on September 2, 1915, at which time the work of the Order to be carried on during the coming year was discussed. Brother Herman Asher, of New York, President of the District Grand Lodge, was the guest of honor and delivered the address of the evening.

"B'nai-B'rithism" is a comparatively new expression and is used to convey the idea of Jewishness in the Order. It was the spirit of Jewishness which brought together last Sunday night an audience, or rather a congregation of three hundred, in one of our local Synagogues to honor in a memorial service those of the brethren who had passed away during the previous twelve months, and that is called: "B'nai-B'rithism," which, indeed, is worth preserving.—"Jewish Voice."

The Great Order of the "Sons of the Covenant" has never belied its past, and it never will.—Jewish Voice.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY

Vol. VIII. OCTOBER, 1915 No. 2

Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

Joint Meeting of New York City Lodges

Official Visit of the President of the Order

One of the most enthusiastic meetings which has taken place in a long time, was held at the Hotel McAlpin, Monday evening, Oct. 4th, the occasion being the visit of President Adolf Kraus and the Executive Secretary, A. B. Seelenfreund, to our city. It was a distinguished gathering, the most prominent men of the District, both of the Metropolis and other cities being present. Bro. Joseph Levenson, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, opened the meeting, introducing Brother Herman Asher, President of the District, as the presiding officer of the evening. Brother Asher in his usual earnest manner, appealed to the members present to add to the strength of the District by increasing its membership. He paid a glowing tribute to President Adolf Kraus, whom he introduced as the speaker of the evening as follows:

Introductory Address.

It is not often that the President of the District has an opportunity to talk to so many members in the city of New York at one time, and it is a little difficult for me to restrain the impulse to discuss with you the internal affairs of our District and to say perhaps a word or two that might spur you to renewed activity in its behalf, but I realize that tonight having our distinguished visitors here that nothing should be done to delay the message which they have come to bring to us and which I know we are all so anxious to hear.

No one could have crossed this great country of ours and have seen how the various Jewish communities, large and small, those in the great northwest and those in the great southwest, those scattered everywhere throughout the breadth of this great country, have been linked together under the banner of the B'nai B'rith; no one could have seen these things, and but realize that it is a tremendous honor that attaches to the Presidency of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and with that honor comes the burden of the responsibility that rests upon the shoulders of the man who heads this great organization, that not only covers this country, but spanning the seas has spread its banner throughout the civilized world.

It would be an easy matter to pile compliments after compliments upon the head of our honored guest this evening, but I know him too well to think that he wishes me to do that, and so, gentlemen, what I say to you in brevity, I mean in volume.

Brother Kraus has served two full terms of 5 years each as President of this Order and is now entering upon his third term. In that time he has given to the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith the best which the grace of God has given to him. All his energy, ability, personal resources and personal sacrifices he has given unstintingly to the work of this Order with dignity, in statesmanship, and in the conscious endeavor he has proven himself worthy of the credit and the honor that has come to him.

District No. 1 honors itself in honoring our distinguished guest tonight, and it is my great pleasure, my great honor to present to you, gentlemen, the President of the Order, Bro. Adolf Kraus.

Address of President Kraus.

Brother President and Brethren:

The Order B'nai B'rith aims to unite Israel. We make no distinction between a Russian and a German Jew, an orthodox, a Zionist, or anti-Zionist; all are our brothers.

The greatest drama in the history of the world is now being staged in Europe. At no time has there been so much misery; at no time so much suffering; at no time were so many human beings sacrificed as now.

It has always been said that the Jews are a united people. Today they are fighting each other; not because they want to, but because the Jew is always loyal to the country which gives him a home, and when that country is at war with another, the Jew stands by his country in preference to standing by his own brother. Jews today are butchering one another, in order that their respective countries may receive greater glory.

In some of the European countries, Jews are treated worse than domestic animals. Animals are at least sheltered and fed. Jews are robbed of their bread their homes are destroyed; they are driven from places where their ancestors lived for generations; driven bare-footed, penniless, to beg or starve.

Jews from all lands are expecting that the Jews of America will take up the cause of the down-trodden, for the American Jews being citizens of a neutral country are supposed to be the only ones from whom help can come. And how do we meet the situation? We fight among ourselves. All are working to help, provided their particular plan for salvation is adopted. One set believes the only way to save the Russian Jews is to hold a great Jewish congress in the City of New York on democratic principles. As yet we have not been told what such Congress can or may do. By this I am expressing no opinion for or against such a Congress.

Another set of Jews protests against a Congress. They say: We do not want an irresponsible set of men to talk at public meetings, for they may say foolish things and thereby destroy the chance we have to do some good. They declare for a conference. The Jewish newspapers have been publishing letters and interviews, letters which should not have been written, and interviews which should not have been published. Local questions are permitted to enter into and shape action which ought to be influenced only by the thought, how can we best serve the persecuted Jews in the war zone? Why should we now try to settle the question whether any existing organization has the right to claim that it represents the Jews of America, or whether such a committee should be created, or whether those who desire such a committee or those who now claim to be it, should be denounced?

It seems that on every possible question the Jews in this country are now divided to such an extent that it prevents them from acting unitedly on the one now most important question, and the only one upon which they seem to be willing to be united. That question is, "What can be done to bring to our co-religionists in Russia and Roumania the right to live, to enjoy liberty, on an equality before the law with the ruling class?"

The Order B'nai B'rith strives to bring all the warring factions together. At the Conference Meeting held yesterday by the different factions, not as much was accomplished as was expected, but we made a good start. I hope that after the next meeting there will be no lions, but all will be gentle lambs.

As to our Order, I am not going to speak of the past. It is sufficient to know that we can recall the past with justifiable pride. No other Jewish Organization in this land can show such a long existence of continuous usefulness. We have been growing from strength to strength. But never in the past has our Organization been put to the test which awaits it in the near future. Conditions are changing in this country. At present the Jews enjoy all rights, all privileges as heretofore. Will they always be able to do so? Much will depend upon them, upon their own actions whether they will or not. Laws can be changed by the votes of the majority of the people. We are in the minority; we are supposed to represent about two per cent of the total population of America. Two per cent cannot control ninety-eight per cent, but ninety-eight per cent can control two per cent. Prejudice against our people is growing at a terrific rate. Our aim must be to uproot such prejudice. Let us for a moment contemplate the Georgia crime. A Jew was taken out of prison by a mob and hanged. Was that crime committed owing to prejudice against Jews? Directly, no; indirectly, yes. Those who lynched poor Leo Frank, who, I am convinced, was innocent of any crime, lynched him not because they were prejudiced against Jews, but because they believed he was guilty of murder. But they would never have believed him guilty of the murder if he had not been a Jew. No white Christian in the State of Georgia could have been convicted upon the testimony of such a negro. The negro would have been found guilty of the crime, but because Frank was a Jew he was not believed, and a negro, who was a self-confessed liar and perjurer, was believed.

When prejudice against our people can have such an effect it is time for us to wake up. There was a time when the penitentiaries of the land were free of Jews, and lewd Jewesses were unknown. Alas! it is so no longer. We have now our quota of convicts and that fact is well advertised. Those of other faiths are designated by name or number; those of our faith have attached to their name or number the word "Jew." If a Jew offends, the fact that he is a Jew is usually advertised, and so the impression that Jews are criminals gains ground. It is the old, old story: The faults of one Jew are charged to all Jews. It is believed that we stand together, right or wrong. In other words, that we protect our criminals. Mere protestation on our part that it is not so will not change conditions. We must act. How? Let us each be a model to others by leading an exemplary life. Let it be the work of this Order to bring violators of the law among our people to justice. Let it be understood that we stand for enforcement of law against all crimes. If there is one among us who would bring disgrace upon us, cast him out. Let us so act that the word "Jew" shall be recognized as synonymous for righteousness, and then prejudice against us will be no more and our descendants will live in peace and safety in this land—refuge of the oppressed of all nations.

On the theory that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," the Order has lately undertaken to prevent our boys as far as possible from becoming criminals. While we intend to look after the convicts and try, when they are released, to find employment, care for them, so that they do not become backsliders, yet the most important part of that work will be to prevent fatherless or motherless boys, as well as those who are not properly taken care of by their parents or by their elders, from going astray. By order of the last convention we have undertaken Social Service Work. Rev. Dr. Coffee will take charge of this work for us.

The work to prevent our boys and our girls from going wrong will be the Order's work. That work can give all of you something to do. By undertaking this work you will be doing something for humanity, for yourselves, and very much for generations to come.

The trouble with the Lodges in the past has been that they did not give their members much to do, therefore many Lodge members did not find the meetings interesting. With the new work an active life has started. The B'nai B'rith is on the march for usefulness. It cannot be stopped. The Jews of the country now feel that they need this organization, an organization which works for unity in Israel, an organization ready to fight to uphold the fair name of the Jew. One thousand were initiated one evening a short time ago in Cincinnati, one thousand are going to be initiated in St. Louis this month. We will initiate one thousand in Chicago next December. You in New York with a Jewish population of a million, how many recruits will you enroll in the army of peace and brotherly love? In this city with the largest Jewish population, you ought to have the largest membership. It can be done. Show your usefulness by your work, by fighting for the uplift of mankind, for what the world recognizes as noble and just, and your co-religionists will not only call you "Blessed," but will flock to your standard by the thousands, requesting the privilege of being counted among the Sons of the Covenant.

Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, Secretary of the Order, made an earnest appeal in the interest of peace and harmony, and in concluding his remarks, dwelt upon the great progress the Order has made throughout the world.

Bro. Harry Fishel, one of the new candidates, a well known local communal worker and philanthropist, said that the great work of the Order is not generally known. "I confess," he said, "that while I have taken considerable interest in Jewish matters, I have never fully appreciated the great work of the Order until recently. I visited several communities, and I found that the best work in the field of true charity and humanity is being done quietly by men of the Order. We need more publicity."

Bro. Charles Hartman of the Executive Committee, in a graceful speech, said that while District No. 1 was not numerically very large, owing to the numerous organizations in Greater New York, each one having its quota of members, it has splendid material in its ranks, and that its progress, though conservative, is steady and sure. He commented upon the perfect harmony with which the General Committee is working. He asked the brethren present to co-operate with the President to make this year a memorable one in the annals of the District.

Brother Samuel Fleischman, the "Sage of the District" in his usual dignified and statesmanlike manner, presented a set of resolutions, couched in sympathetic terms, expressing the sympathy of the District for our suffering brethren in Eastern Europe, who, while fighting most bravely and most patriotically, are denied the common rights of man. The resolution called for a united protest against such injustice and such inhumanity. The resolution was referred to the General Committee for its attention.

A feature of the meeting was the initiation of 25 candidates, among whom were such men as Congressman I. Siegel, Assistant District Attorney Geo. Z. Medalie, Dr. L. Adams, Dr. M. L. Radin, and others prominent in the various professions. The initiation was ably and impressively conducted by Brothers Wm. Asher, I. Deutsch and Harry Silberstein of Jordan Lodge, Dr. M. M. Stark of Washington Lodge, and Rev. Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein of Maccabee Lodge. The musical program was in charge of Brothers Dr. Lieberman and Wm. Falk of Zion Lodge.

Bro. Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman closed the program with prayer. The Menorah used on the occasion was one just presented by Bro. Myer L. Victorius to New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1 in memory of his late esteemed father, M. Victorius, who was a prominent and active member of that lodge.

The Joint Meeting was preceded by a banquet in the Blue Room of Hotel McAlpin, participated in by Brothers President Herman Asher, Joseph Levenson, Harry Cutler, Charles M. Stern, Edwin J. Goodhart, Maurice P. Davidson, Dr. Joseph Silverman, Henry Lasker and Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan, members of the General Committee, Brothers Myron Sulzberger, I. B. Schmidt, Henry W. Pollock, Benjamin Kashman, William Asher, Edward Rosenfeld, Isidor H. Kempner, Henry Gutenstein, Isaac Golland, Mo. Minzesheimer, Abr. Anhalt, Wm. B. Koller, Henry Meyers, Julius Illch and Dr. J. L. Blumenthal, Governors of the Home at

(Continued on page 13)

The Jews of the United States

By S. C. ELDRIDGE of San Antonio, Texas

About two hundred and sixty years have passed since the first settlement of the Jews in the United States at New Amsterdam.

This settlement marked an epoch of the most vital importance in the history of the Jews. But, to properly understand the real significance of this event, it will be necessary to take a brief retrospect of the causes that compelled the Jews to seek this country for a home. They came, as did the Pilgrim Fathers, to find liberty and to establish religious freedom for all.

The Jews were scattered throughout the world for the purpose of fulfilling the divine injunctions, to promulgate the doctrine of the unity of God, and that we should "love our God with all our heart, soul and might and our neighbors as ourselves." And though they are no longer a specific nation, yet have always been regarded as an "imperium in imperio," a nation within a nation, and as such have been the easy prey of religious bigotry, fanaticism, slander and vile abuse, and the victims of political intrigues, that found expression in all manner of oppressions and tortures.

In Mediaeval times the Jews were wanderers in all lands and climes, furthering their divine and glorious mission, yet crushed by vituperation, charged with the most heinous crimes, as, for instance, of using the blood of Christian children for their Passover Feast; yea, even accused of the death of Christ. All of the evils that befell mankind were attributed to the Jews. They were martyrized by religious fanatics, and at last the unreasoning hatred, blindly nurtured for centuries culminated in the appalling horrors of the Inquisition. We find that almost all of the nations of antiquity, including the Egyptians, Greeks, Babylonians, Assyrians and others, who oppressed the Jews, have lost their independence and nationality, while the Jews still remain a very potent factor in modern civilization. After over two thousand years of unceasing wanderings and oppressions, the Jews at last weary and footsore, reached this land. Although fleeing from the oppressions and persecutions of other countries, to this land of then supposed religious freedom, they were at first not allowed to land by Peter Stuyvesant, but finally Peter Stuyvesant, yielding to superior authority, reluctantly assented that the Jews shall have permission to sail to and trade in New Netherlands and to live and remain there, provided the poor among them, would not become a burden to the Company or the community, but be supported by their own nation.

While contemporary construction of this great country tends to show that it was not intended to be limited by unexpressed conditions, and is regarded by many as the first great charter of civil and political rights made to Jews in modern times, yet the American Jews look even further and deeper than this, for their rights as American citizens. They are entitled to be counted, in priority of settlement, along side of the Pilgrim Fathers and the Jamestown settlers, because of the material aid they gave Columbus in furtherance of his discoveries, and because of their very extensive settlements in South America and West Indies, during the period immediately following the discovery.

During the Revolutionary period, as at all times in their history, the Jews believed that all men are born free and equal before the law, and were unwilling to submit to unjust restrictions, vigorously protested against unjust taxation, fought with other patriots against tyranny and to remove religious proscription, bigotry and persecution, and, to give all citizens, freedom of speech, freedom of thought and the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

Now, after more than two thousand years of unceasing wanderings and oppression in other lands, the Jews have assisted in this country to establish a land that has relegated religious proscription to the terrors of the dark ages, upon which we shudder to look back for the fear of being [illegible] with dismay at the horrors we have escaped. A land where we can bid defiance to Pharaoh and his [illegible], where the tortures we have undergone seem the creatures of a distorted imagination and the terrors of the Torquemada pass before our eyes like dreary, unnatural and inhuman spectres.

[illegible] here today in these times and [illegible] religionists? Can you realize it when you consider America? How strangely does it appear when contrasted with the [illegible] of Egypt, the tyranny of Rome, the barbarity of Spain and the cruelties of darkest Russia! A land of freedom for the first time in almost three thousand years has this gift been offered [illegible] fullest [illegible]. No doubt it [illegible] haunting mockery and appears like an 'iridescent dream.' You [illegible] ere you extend your [illegible] grasp [illegible] it might disappear like [illegible] fear that at the very [illegible] you prepared to enjoy it, your freedom may be turned into oppression, and that there will be "a trembling of heart, and failing of eyes and sorrow of mind." That you will send up your plaintive wail to your Heavenly Father, saying, "would God it were even and at even you would say, would God it were morning."

But this is dispelled when we recall the words of the pure and noble Washington, in his farewell address to his countrymen, in September, 1796, in which he voiced the sentiments of this government. He said: "Citizens by birth or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of America which belongs to you in national capacity must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discrimination. With slight shades of difference you have the same religion, manners, habits and political principles. You have in a common cause, fought and triumphed together—the independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts of common dangers, sufferings and successes."

The Jews aided and assisted in the discovery of America, braved the hardships of colonization and fought in more than their due proportion for the independence of the United States, and have thereby assisted in establishing a country that has its ideals, laws and social structure, Jewish ideals and laws, reared upon the ruins of past tyrannies. It will then not be amiss to go further and see what the Jews have since contributed to the support and development of this country. It is indeed gratifying to find how well they have performed the duties of American citizenship, whether on the battlefield, in public life or in private rank.

Since our persecutions have ceased, the means of education granted to us, all of the trades and professions opened to us and social ostracism removed, we have left our impress of excellence in all branches of literature, art, drama, music, philosophy, medicine, science, jurisprudence, statesmanship, finance, and finally in religion we have planted the goal, which all mankind is now striving to reach, "The Fatherhood of God, and the Brotherhood of Man." At a celebration at Carnegie Hall, in New York City, of the 250th anniversary of the landing of the Jews in America, Ex-President Cleveland said: "We have today only to look about us to discover that in every phase of present American enterprise and effort of the Jews of the United States, with unrestricted toleration and equality are making their impress more and more deep and permanent upon our citizenship. They accumulate wealth without exhibiting or encouraging harmful extravagance and business recklessness. They especially care for their poor, but they do it sensibly and in a way that avoids pauper-making. On every side are seen monuments of their charitable work, and evidences of their determination to furnish their children and youth equipment for usefulness and self support. It is not among them that dangerous discontent and violent demonstration against peace and order are hatched and fostered.

"There may be something of separateness in their social life among us, but this should be naturally expected among those who are not altogether free from the disposition born of persecution and the loss of nationality, to seek in a common devotion to their peculiar religious creed the strongest bond of their social fellowships. And yet with all they are by no means laggard in the civic duty and the work in behalf of the general welfare of the State which are the badges of good citizenship.

"It is time for the unreserved acknowledgement that the toleration and equal opportunity accorded to the Jews of the United States have been abundantly repaid to us. And in making up the account let us not omit to put to their credit the occasion presented to us through our concession to them of toleration and equality of strengthening by wholesome exercise the spirit of broad minded justice and consideration which as long as we are true to ourselves, we must inflexibly pronounce as the distinguishing and saving trait of our nationality. I know that human injustice, especially that growing out of race or religion, is cruelly inveterate and lasting. But wherever in the world prejudice against the Jews still exist, there can be no place for it among the people of the United States, unless they are heedless of good faith, recreant to the underlying principles of their free government, and insensible to every pledge involved in our boasted equality of citizenship. The Jews of the United States have become our fellow citizens, and like us, have at heart the prosperity and safety of our common country, for as much as we have desired not that liberty to ourselves, which we would not freely and impartially weigh out to all the consciences of the world besides.

President Roosevelt on the same occasion thus expressed himself in regard to the Jews' contributions to our national progress and achievements:

"Because the lamentable and terrible suffering to which so many of the Jewish people in other lands have been subjected, makes me feel it my duty as the head of the American people not only to express my deep sympathy for them as I now do, but at the same time to point out what fine qualities of citizenship have been displayed by the men of Jewish faith and race, who having come to this country, enjoy the benefits of free institutions and equal treatment before the law. I feel very strongly that if any people are oppressed any where the wrong inevitably reacts, in the end, on those who oppress them—for it is an immutable law in the spiritual world that no one can wrong others and yet in the end himself escape unhurt."

The celebration of the 250th anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in the United States properly emphasizes a series of historical facts of more than merely national significance.

Even in our colonial period the Jews participated in the upbuilding of this country, acquired citizenship and took an active part in the development of foreign and domestic commerce. During the Revolutionary period they aided the cause of liberty by serving in the Continental Army and by substantial contributions to the empty treasury of the Republic. During the Civil War thousands served in the armies and mingled their blood with the soil for which they fought. I am glad to be able to say, in addressing you on this occasion, that while the Jews of the United States, who number more than a million, have remained loyal to their faith and their race tradition, they have become indissolubly incorporated in the great army of American citizenship, prepared to make all sacrifice for the country, either in war or peace, and striving for the perpetuation of good government and for the maintenance of the principles embodied in our Constitution. They are honorably distinguished by their industry, their obedience to law, and their devotion to the national welfare. They are engaged in generous rivalry with their fellow citizens and other denominations in advancing the interests of our common country. This is true not only of descendants of the early settlers and those of American birth, but of a great and constantly increasing proportion of those who have come to our shores within the past twenty-five years as refugees reduced to the direst straits of penury and misery. All Americans may well be proud of the extraordinary illustration of the wisdom and strength of our governmental system thus afforded. In a few years, men and women hitherto utterly unaccustomed to any of the privileges of citizenship have moved mightily upward, toward the standard of loyal self-respecting American citizenship; of that citizenship which not merely insists upon its rights, but also eagerly recognizes its duty to do its full share in the material, social and moral advancement of the motion."

And thus we see that the thoughts, ideals and works of the Jews in the United States have become a part of the warp and woof of the nations social, political and moral structure. It is also very gratifying to us that a true and just recognition of the Jews' position in this country is recognized and conceded by such eminent authorities.

The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith has contributed largely to build up and maintain the Jews' splendid position in this country. Our Order was founded at a time—by a handful of patriotic American Jews—when the Jews were denied the full rights of citizenship in the nations of the old world, and were finally expatriated by the tyrannical hands of the rulers of the lands in which they and their forefathers had dwelled for centuries. Reaching this country with different ideas of government it was necessary that a meeting place be given them and a welcome extended to them, indicative of brotherly love and harmony. The necessity of the times called our Order into existence. The work of assimilating this hetrogenous mass into a body of Jews imbued with the idea of benevolence, brotherly love and of the highest principles of citizenship was undertaken by the I. O. B. B., and how well they have succeeded is a matter of history. Our Order is a school of patriotism, and at no time in our country's history have we failed to respond to the country's need in her hour of peril.

A few years ago, when the unconscionable persecutions of Russia and Roumania caused many of our co-religionists to flee to this country, and much difficulty was being experienced in gaining admission on account of some provision of our immigration laws, then it was that our Order said to this government and the world at large: Admit our brothers, poor, oppressed and unfortunate though they may be, we pledge to all, that they will never be a charge on any public or private charities, that they will become good and useful citizens. And they were admitted. Even today our influence is exerted to see no literacy tests or kindred restrictions are inserted in our immigration laws. Again, while the nations of the world were listening to the Czar's seductive words, to let the Angel of Peace reign supreme over the world, came the piercing and agonizing cries of our cruelly outraged and foully dealt with brothers, at the hands of the subjects of the Czar of Russia. So atrocious was the crime against liberty and conscience as to bring down upon Russia the just and righteous indignation of all liberty loving men. Thereupon our Order again asserted itself, and addressed the famous Kishineff petition to the Czar.

This document was signed by thousands of patriotic and liberty loving people, irrespective of religious belief or nationality. In my judgment this paper will be classed in importance with the Magna Charta and Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the United States, because when all nations shall declare religious persecution wrong and not to be countenanced by civilized nations, then the persecution of the Jews and of others must cease. It is true that these declarations were at that time in advance of the age, this document has been sacredly preserved in the archives of our government and must, when the time is opportune, be recalled to the world's attention and through the instrumentality of this government and the Jews be universally accepted and practiced as true.

I cannot divest myself of the thought that the time has now arrived, when the Jews of the world must see that this doctrine of opposition to religious persecution is subscribed to by all civilized nations.

In the midst of this present awful conflict of the European nations, that has involved almost the entire world in the greatest and most destructive war of any age in history, we find a great number of the Jews fighting for their respective countries, and Jews against Jews. Russia, with her alluring promises of permanent freedom to the Jews after the war; Germany, recognizing the stalwart citizenship and military ability and bravery of the Jews, is proudly decorating many of them with the iron cross of bravery and distinction; Austria-Hungary, France, England and other nations claiming them as soldiers and commanders, have for the time being stayed the hand of oppression, abuse and social ostracism.

The Jews, forgetting past insults, oppression and abuses are fighting courageously and honorably—for what? Liberty and religious freedom for themselves and all mankind.

As the Jews of the ancient days carried and sacredly guarded the Holy Ark of their religion, so have the Jews today carried and preserved the doctrine that religious persecution is contrary to civilized humanity.

So it is the duty and pre-eminently the right of the Jews after this titanic conflict is at an end, to be allowed the privilege and distinction of presenting to the Hague Peace Conference the principle that every civilized nation shall hereafter be compelled to place in every treaty that is made the requirement "that none shall suffer in person, property, liberty, honor or life because of his religious belief. That the humblest subject or citizen may worship according to the dictates of his own conscience, and that government, whatever its form or agencies, must safeguard these rights and immunities by the exercise of all its powers; and then, those nations who refuse to subscribe to this doctrine will be known, classed and treated as uncivilized nations.

This great political reform so presented by the oldest of all civilized nations, if adopted by the Hague Tribunal, will be the magnificent contribution of the Jews to the International jurisprudence of the world.

Never have the Jews stood upon such vantage ground as in this country; never have the times been so opportune as now to remove the bigotry and the prejudice of the dead centuries, by the revival of learning by the giving of supremacy to reason, by the broadening of our views, by the love of humanity, by the uniting of all mankind in a common union of brotherly affection. Let us jealously guard the principles and institutions of this country that have for its ideals, laws and social structure, Jewish ideals and laws. Let it be our life's work to see that no laws are made uniting church and state, or that any sumptuary or other laws are passed that destroy the true principles of our government as guaranteed to all in the Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the United States. Let us use our efforts, so that all persecutions and oppressions of the Jews or other people wherever situated, must cease and so that they shall have granted unto them the same privileges and rights as we enjoy here. Let us, in common with all American citizens, love, honor, defend and sustain the flag of our country.

"America is the hope of the world and is becoming more and more an example and an inspiration to all mankind. Let us ever remember, 'To be a Jew is an honor and always has been.' To be an American is an equal honor, but to be Jewish-American, an American Jew, is to bear a double distinction, is to wear a two fold crown, and is the greatest honor of all."

Jewish Unity and the Congress

By LOUIS D. BRANDEIS

Address Delivered at the Lyric, Baltimore, September 27, 1915

When the war ends, the Jews of America hope to aid in the solution of those problems which most deeply affect their brethren abroad. Every one recognizes that without unity this is impossible. But many fail to understand what unity means, and what the essential conditions of unity are. When the meaning of unity is made clear, and these essential conditions set forth, it must appear that a congress is indispensable, if the end sought is to be attained.

First: Unity means not oneness in opinion, but oneness in action. Division in opinion may be helpful. Division in action is fatal. Differences of opinion are inevitable among thoughtful men, if the question under consideration is one worthy of discussion. Differences in opinion are not only natural but desirable where the question is difficult; for only through such differences do we secure that light and fuller understanding which are necessary to a wise decision. On the other hand, when action is contemplated, some decision must be made. Then some one opinion must be accepted as the basis of action. It may be one of the hitherto opposing opinions, or it may be a new opinion developed out of and possibly reconciling those previously conflicting. But when a decision is made all division should cease. Only so can effective action result.

Second: The making of a decision implies the existence of a body which has authority to decide. Such a body may be either autocratic or democratic. It is autocratic where it is self-constituted, and imposes its decision or will upon those for whom it purports to act. It is democratic when it is selected by and expresses the decision or will of those whom it actually represents. Among a free people the body which makes a decision must necessarily be democratic, since among a free people there can be no self-constituted body of men possessing the power to decide what the action of the whole people shall be.

Third: Absence of discord does not imply unity. Absence of discord may be due to indifference. Unity implies interest and participation. There may be acquiescence in the decision of a self-constituted body purporting to act on behalf of a free people. But there cannot be unity of action of a free people unless the decision is the act of that people participating through its properly constituted representatives.

Fourth: What is demanded of the Jewish people now is action, not acquiescence. We must seek to put an end to those conditions which through the centuries, and not merely during this war, have brought misery and suffering to the Jews. We must consider more than the superficial effects of the war, grievous though they may be. For the Jewish suffering in this war would not be so great if the Jews had not been victims of oppression and persecution during so many centuries. The position of the Jew is not entirely unique. The history of the Bohemians, Poles and several other Slavic races, as well as the Armenians, provides remarkable parallels, and among all these nationalities hopes are now high that in the peace that will follow the war their elemental wrongs will be righted. Several of these peoples are actively participating as belligerents. The Jews as a people have joined neither one side nor the other. But the Jewish people cannot stand by and simply look on with folded arms. We must take other action after careful deliberation and with a thorough understanding of what is at stake.

But we can do this only if the Jews of America will that those conditions shall end; and undertake to express that will through action. What this action shall be involves decisions which are both difficult and serious; decisions on which reasonable men will necessarily differ. The Jews are a people of thinkers; and they have a passion for freedom. If we acquiesce in decisions made for us and not by us, it can only be because we are practically indifferent; because we do not care, or, at all events, do not care enough, to assert our views. And if we do not care enough to assert our views, we certainly will not care enough to make the sacrifices necessarily involved in saving our brethren, and solving the problem of the Jewish people.

Fifth: There are certainly a large number of Jews in America who are not indifferent to the suffering of their brethren abroad, or to the injustice to which these are subjected. There are a large number of Jews in America who are eager that something should be done to remove the causes of their brethren's misery. These Americans have views differing widely from one another as to what can be done, and what ought to be done, and how it should be done. They ask to be heard on these questions through their duly constituted representatives; and they ask also to hear the views of others in order that the different proposals may be subjected to the test of public criticism. They deem it necessary that in view of the grave and difficult problems involved, the minds not of a few, but of many, should be turned towards their solution. It is for these reason, among others, that they have demanded a Congress, and have demanded that it be convened on a democratic basis, and that the proceedings shall be made public. The deliberations of such a Congress should be enriched by the public discussion from others who are not delegates to it. And the Congress itself will create needed public opinion in support of the measures which it determines upon.

Sixth: But the Congress is essential also for other reasons. Besides those Jews who have already given evidence of their readiness to aid in remedying the condition of their brethren, there are many in America whom the present need of action has failed to rouse. They are indifferent largely through lack of knowledge. We have such faith in our people as to believe that with most of them knowledge will overcome indifference and will lead to active participation in the effort to solve our people's problem. We must bring home the situation to those seemingly indifferent and make clear to them not merely the intensity of existing suffering, but also that they can play a part in ending it, and indeed that they must do their part or we cannot succeed. And for the awakening of interest the Congress is a necessary means.

Seventh: The Congress is not an end in itself. It is an incident of the organization of the Jewish people—an instrument through which their will may be ascertained, and when ascertained may be carried out. In order that their will may be ascertained truly the Congress must be democratically representative. In order that their will may be carried into effect, the decision of their delegates must be supported by Jewish public opinion, intelligent, widespread, and expressive of deep conviction. In order that there may be a definite public opinion to be so expressed, the Congress must be preceded by public discussion. In order that the decision may be the wisest possible, the Congress should be preceded by general public discussion of the measures proposed. The decision must embody the wisdom, not of the few, however able and public-spirited, but the thought and judgment of the whole people. The support must be active; it must be financial as well as moral. It must be the support of the million, not of a few generous, philanthropic millionaires. In order that the support may be adequate, the Congress must also be preceded by such organization of the Jews of America as will ensure their co-operation in carrying out such measures as shall be decided upon. The Congress is not to be an exalted mass-meeting. It is to be the effective instrument of organized Jewry of America.

It cannot be effective if its functions are limited to the passing of resolutions, however carefully framed. Those whom the Congress authorized to act for the Jewish people must have the actual support of the Jews of America. They must not only be prepared to act, but must be supplied with the means to do so.

Such being the necessary function of a Congress, it must be clear that there can be no substitute for it. The meeting of the organization presidents for an exchange of views called by Mr. Kraus of the B'nai B'rith to be held October 3rd, is a proper beginning of the discussion of the grave problems involved.

There should, from time to time, be many such gatherings not only of those whose official positions place upon them special responsibilities for Jewish interests, but also of many others whose special study of the questions involved enable them to make valuable contributions to the thought on this subject—and whose intense interest will aid in the great task of effective organization. On the other hand, the conference which the American Jewish Committee proposed should be held on October 24th would be not only futile but dangerous. It would be futile because the conference would purport to be an assembly authorized to express the will of the Jewish people, whereas it would in fact have no such mandate and would lack the necessary support of the Jews of America without which its action would be ineffective.

Such a conference would be positively dangerous to Jewish interests; first, because its deliberations would be secret, and the fact of secrecy would lead necessarily to suspicion and misrepresentation of Jewish purposes and deprive us of non-Jewish support. We seek action in the open so that there shall be no misunderstanding either among our own people or among our fellow-citizens, as to our aims and methods. We need to void any real or seeming secrecy of action and of aim which might cause mistrust and which might breed prejudice. The ends which the Jewish people seek are so simple and their difficulties are so well known that no one has yet been able to state an adequate reason for holding a Jewish conference in secret.

Secondly: such a conference would be dangerous because it would discourage activity on the part of the Jews of America who would assume that the conference had relieved them of the necessity of doing their part.

In the third place, such a conference, in secret, would inevitably prevent Jewish unity, because a large part of the Jews of America have definitely declared against it. Of the organizations originally invited, organizations to which more than two-thirds of all the delegates arranged for have been assigned and which, together, have a membership of more than 400,000 persons, have already refused to participate in the Conference.

Let us bear in mind the statement made by Earl Derby in 1876 to the memorial which Baron Worms presented in the hope of securing a removal of the Roumanian disabilities: "I cannot advise you better than to appeal constantly and on all fitting occasions to that which you will find stronger support than that which any government can give you, namely, the support of general public opinion." The demand for democracy in the consideration of Jewish problems is not a matter of form. It is of the essence. "Democracy is not a mere form of government; it does not depend on ballot boxes of franchise laws or any constitutional machinery. These are but its trappings. Democracy is a spirit, and an atmosphere, and its essence is trust in the moral instinct of the people." This is a matter which every true American, and particularly every true American Jew, should take to heart.

September 26, 1915.

THE BURIED CITY OF WIELICZKA

In the earlier days of the war, when the troops of the Czar were sweeping triumphantly through Galicia and stood almost on the threshold of Silesia, the name of Wieliczka, a town some ten miles south of Krakow, appeared frequently in the dispatches. As a strategic point the Wieliczka printed on the map was a city of interest, but for nearly a thousand years a city of far greater interest has lain below the surface of the earth, under the Galician town. This buried—or, rather, burrowed—city is two and a half miles in length, the Manchester "Guardian" declares, and over a third of a mile wide, and consists of a gigantic salt-mine, one of the largest and oldest in the world. As we read:

It has seven levels, and the lowest is nearly a thousand feet deep. It is entered by eleven shafts. The different levels are connected by flights of steps hewn out of the rock salt. In the mine are chapels, tramways, a railway, a railway station, a ballroom, and several other halls, all hewn out of the rock salt with elaborate architectural decoration.

There are sixty-two miles of pony tramways and twenty-two miles of railway. All these lines, and the principal passages, or "streets," meet in a sort of central cavern. Here is the central railway station, with spacious waiting rooms and an excellent refreshment room. It looks, according to one visitor's description, "more like a summer pavilion than a railway station, with its latticed galleries and its rows of stately pillars that gleam white and iridescent."

The oldest "building" in the mine is the Chapel of St. Anthony; it dates from 1691. It contains three altars, a pulpit, and much statuary, all elaborately carved out of rock salt. But services are now held in the modern, but equally elaborate, Chapel of St. Cunigunde, which is entered by descending forty-six salt steps. The chapel is fifty yeards long, fifteen yards wide and thirty feet high, and is used regularly for worship.

The ballroom is a huge room, where the miners often hold their festivals. A miners' orchestra plays regularly in the hall, not only for the dances, but for the entertainment of visitors. The mine has been worked for at least eight hundred years. It belongs to the Austrian government, and gives work to a thousand men.

THE PROCESS OF THE PROVOKERS OF ANTI-SEMITISM.

A terrible picture of the danger in which the Rusisan Jews of the war-swept territory find themselves was presented by a process which has recently taken place in the military court of Lomza, which, as a court of justice of the second army corps, was a higher tribunal. The accused were the agents of the Counter Espionage Division, Tschupanjuk, Mizkewich and Dereshenko, three Poles, and the presiding judge was General Tawastsherin.

Following are the facts of the case:

The above-named agents had made the statement that they found in the kinomatograph of a certain Eisenbuegel, a telephone apparatus, and they accused the owner of the kinomatograph of having installed a telephone for the enemy's army. The officer who was sent to search the house reported that the wire could not be used for a telephonic connection. In the course of further investigation Eisenbuegel was freed of the accusation, while the three accusers were placed before the court. In this process Eisenbuegel also appeared as a witness. He, however, did not come into court as a free man, but was escorted by a guard. In answer to the question of the presiding judge as to why Eisenbuegel was presented as a prisoner, the chief of the Counter Espionage Division explained that other accusations were pending against Eisenbuegel, but he refused to state the nature of these accusations. The presiding judge thereupon ordered the clearing up of the question. The fact was then established that there were really no other accusations against Eisenbuegel and upon the order of the presiding judge he was then and there set at liberty.

In the course of the court proceedings the agent, Mizkewich, confessed his guilt and disclosed the reason for the activity of all the three accused—Tshupanjuk, Mizkewich and Dereshanko. He made the judge acquainted with all the details of the work of the Counter Espionage Division. By his information the fact was established that in consequence of information furnished by Tshupanjuk seventeen innocent Jews had been executed.

This process of the provokers was brought about by an especialy cunning act of Eisenbuegel's relatives. Without this cunning Eisenbuegel would have been hanged just as the other seventeen Jews were hanged. When this fearful process was instituted against Eisenbuegel by the depositions made by Tshupanjuk and consorts the relatives of Eisenbuegel made the discovery that Tshupanjuk had intimate relations with a Jewess. Through this Jewess they offered 5,000 roubles to Tschupanjuk if he would withdraw his accusation against Eisenbuegel, but at the same time they informed the states attorney of their act. This one advised them that in order to secure positive evidence against the latter they should not only give him money, but they should also make him a present of a costly ring. It was the ring which saved Eisenbuegel's life and brought Tshupanjuk and his accomplices to trial.

When his house was searched and the ring was found Tshupanjuk tried to save himself by declaring that he took the ring in order to have in his hand positive proof of Eisenbuegel's guilt, for if Eisenbuegel's relatives offered him such a sum as a bribe, the activity of Eisenbuegel as a spy was established as clear as day. This lying explanation of Tshupanjuk did not go down with the military tribunal, especially after the real truth had been exposed by the confession of Mizkewich. The judge sentenced Tshupanjuk as well as Dereshenko to serve for six years in the prisoners' company.

After the case was closed the presiding judge sent a report of the proceedings to the chief commander, Alexeyeff, in which he stated that although it was not possible within the scope of this process to clear up all the circumstances of the provocative activity of the Counter Espionage Division, the fact of its special work of provocation had been fully established. For a full inquiry into the matter a special investigation would be necessary. Alexeyoff acknowledged the receipt of the report of the presiding judge. So far nothing is known about the further progress of the affair.

B'NAI B'RITH HISTORY.

Past Grand President Edmund Tauszky, at the request of Grand President Harry K. Wolff, has written a concise and lucid little history of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith, which has been printed and distributed among the members of the order. Especially to the younger men of the organization who are not familiar with the history, aims and objects of the B'nai B'rith, Past Grand President Tauszky's efforts will have great value as a guide in the study of B'nai B'rith history and literature.

First Trip of Hospital Train of the German B'nai B'rith Lodges

By Dr. BERTHOLD TIMENDORFER, Berlin

By direction of the war ministry of January 24, 1915, I received the authorization to accompany the B'nai B'rith Hospital Train on its first trip. I also received the badge of the Red Cross, an identification card and the right to free rides on the railroads, free board and lodging.

On Monday, March 8, at 4:35 p. m., the hospital train started on its way. We had learned previously that it was assigned to an army in the East. Numerous relatives of the fellow passengers gathered at the Steglitz freight depot. Still there were no touching leave-takings, for excitement and the feeling of going towards something unknown were stronger with each individual than the feeling of parting from his relatives.

After the agitation of the hour of leave-taking had subsided, one was left to his own thoughts.

My first feelings were those of deep gratitude to the Rhineland Lodge, to which our thanks were due for the first suggestion to provide this hospital train and to all the lodges of the German District for their joyful readiness to bring sacrifices for the consummation of this suggestion.

The individual lodges contributed towards the hospital train, Marks 75,967.60.

Several lodges donated for interior furnishings, Marks 2,855.00.

Cash contributions for friendly gifts, Marks 25,573.00.

Value of other friendly gifts, Marks 20,000.00.

This brings the total up to, Marks 134,395.00.

Like all hospital trains, ours traveled at a speed of 18 to 20 miles an hour.

On Tuesday, March 9, about 6 o'clock in the morning, we arrived in Konitz. There the immense influence of the war upon the province of Prussia was already visible.

In Dirschau we received the first mighty impression of the faultless measures of all military administration. This impression was continually strengthened; it was like the mechanism of a perfectly regulated machine, so that one could now readily acknowledge militarism without injuring his other views.

In Dirschau we were expected by the delegate of the sanitary depot of that place, a chief staff physician, sub-physician, nurses and sanitary officials. If one of our physicians should have been taken sick on the way, a substitute physician could at once ride along. It was the same case with the nurses and sanitary officers. In the depot there is a large room for wound dressing, which is generally to be found in the larger depots. Seriously wounded soldiers can immediately be taken into the depot. If sick soldiers are to be operated, which is generally not to be done in the hospital train, they are kept in the depot. We were so overpowered by the arrangements that we wished to show our gratitude to the sanitary depot at that place and to leave friendly gifts. These were not only not accepted but we were on the contrary forced to take along two boxes of sugar which were allotted to us before we arrived there. Red Cross nurses there, as well as at all other stations, wanted to provide us with refreshments. One could really see that it caused them pain to find that we were not in need of such things.

From Dirschau we proceeded at a slower speed to Marienburg. We stopped before the depot opposite the castle front which looked as beautiful as a picture in the splendor of the sun. We had a long stop and could take a rest. Just then a very long train with Russian prisoners arrived.

It was mostly Belgian wagons which we saw on our journey in great numbers next to Russian wagons. Fifty-two Russian prisoners were placed in each car. They all had white fur caps and they therefore seemed to have been from Siberian and Circassian regiments; they made an alarming impression; some looked partly very stupid, but some had also comely faces. I especially noticed the excellent teeth of the prisoners and their equipment of overcoats and shoes.

Also in Marienburg there was a Red Cross sanitary station, where, like at all such stations, one received restoratives free of charge.

From Marienburg we went to Rosenberg in Westphalia.

From Rosenberg we were directed to go back to Riesenburg on a side track, in order to wait there for traveling [illegible]

Here something happened to us for the first time which we often experienced later on—the confounding of our lodges with the Free Masonic lodges.

The station directory transmitted to us the petition of two of our members, who had participated in the raising of funds for this hospital train, for permission to inspect it. This did not appear strange to us, as according to the address book of our lodges, two members really lived in Riesenburg. Thereupon the two directors of the sugar factory of that place—Free Masons—came, with whom we spent a very animated hour, as they told us many instructive and interesting stories of the war and its influence upon that region. The gentlemen showed their gratitude by bestowing a gift of 100 pounds of crystal sugar.

Later we also received the visit of our brother who lived there. He came with his wife and daughter, the latter being a Red Cross nurse. The brother was visibly proud of being a member of a society that had organized the hospital train.

There we had to explain, as we often had to do later, the words "B'nai B'rith." Every article in the hospital train is marked with the letters I. O. B. B. This naturally arouses numberless questions, and I believe that today thousands know already that there is a "Jewish" hospital train.

After a stay of twelve days in Reisenburg, we started away on March 12, in the direction of Koenigsberg. We first had to return to Marienburg, and from there to Elbing, at which depot we found troops who were equipped with field kitchens and various war materials.

Our soldiers looked exceedingly fine, their mood was as though they were going to a jolly dance. The frame of mind of our soldiers was for us a real exaltation; one really had the feeling that our fatherland can rest securely.

We arrived in Koenigsberg on Wednesday, March 10, paid a visit to the city and found there the same life as in other forts—everything military. There, too, we met with the same heart-refreshing aspect that the soldiers who marched to the front were in excellent condition and in the best of humor. In this respect even the militia battalions showed no inferiority.

We left Koenigsberg on Saturday, March 13, unfortunately during bad weather, by way of Korschen to Loetzen. We could plainly discern the more distant forts of Koenigsberg and the great preparations for the war.

What a vast amount of work lies in all these things!

Fifteen miles from Koenigsberg there is the station of Tharau and the Russians came up to that place, of course, reconnoitering posts only.

In Preussisch-Eylau, celebrated on account of the battle which took place there, we could plainly observe the two Napoleon-pines and the monument with the two cannons.

Up to that place one saw nothing yet of destruction. But already in Bartenstein the picture changed entirely. The railroad bridge was destroyed by the Russians—of course, our brave railroaders have built another long ago. The place was bombarded by the Russian artillery, when many houses were destroyed. For fourteen days Bartenstein was cleared of all officials, Karschau was also occupied by the Russians from August 26 to September 3, and there too the destruction was quite considerable.

On the way farther we came to Loetzen with the castle Boyen on the Masurian lakes. But to our regret it became dark, so that we could hardly recognize the lakes. But in spite of the darkness, perhaps just because of it, we all were profoundly agitated in the remembrance of the great battles which were fought in this region.

The hazy clouds which were wrapped in darkness stirred our imagination, and in the pictures which they created by their lowering and sinking they conjured before us lamenting women and children who have lost here their husbands and fathers, and the many crosses on the road seemed to us to be accusations rising up to heaven against the wicked authors of the war.

The ruination of so many fine modern places of German industry and German culture touched our hearts deeply.

Early on March 14, towards 5 o'clock, we arrived in Lyck, and there we all received the strongest impression of all the previous ones. All the buildings which belonged to the very big depot were burned down and the railroad ties were all torn out. Numerous graves with the simple wooden crosses agitated us in the deepest way. We heard there that Lyck was three times in the hands of the Russians, the last time for three months in a stretch, and that during the last two times it was terribly destroyed.

But by the side of the many things which make one shudder there are others which cause exaltation. The German energy is undauntedly at work in order to set up again as much as possible of what beasts in human shape have trampled down.

We came to Marggrabowo and thereby to the Russian border.

The depot on the border is a gigantic building. From the frontier down the picture was unchanged. We saw dead horses, overturned locomotives, destroyed railroad bridges and railroad tracks, holes made by grenades, vast numbers of graves, wire obstructions and trenches were so frequent that one no longer looked at them.

Of the places which we passed through some were not at all damaged, many were damaged slightly, and others were completely destroyed to the last house.

The potatoes in many big fields were not yet taken out. The farther one came the more one beheld of the ravages of war, the numbers of fallen down and burned autos were excessive. We even saw Russian hospital trains, which were captured, and Russian field kitchens.

The destruction was especially great at the depot in Ratzky. At that depot there had been 600 filled wagons; in order not to let them fall into our hands, 450 of them were intentionally burned by the Russians. We saw provision columns, field batteries and other things.

Our soldiers felt the greatest joy—and this speaks volumes—not so much in the distributed gifts, as in the newspapers which we threw out to them. They were simply fighting for them.

On the 14th of March, towards one o'clock in the afternoon, we arrived in Suwalki. At the depot we found the hospital train of the District of Niederbarnim, which was already laden with 150 wounded soldiers. We consequently knew that it would take many hours before the loading of our train could be thought of. We therefore first paid a visit to the city. A peculiar feeling agitated us. The German Jew who was not a representative of business affairs, had formerly no possibility of visiting Russia, and now we five Jews were walking through the streets of a Russian city without any passport, relying upon the authority of the German Empire.

Suwalki is a military headquarter of the first rank. One could stand for hours in one place and see nothing but wagon after wagon with ammunition, with material, etc. In the main place a part of the booty from the Masurian battle was ranged, cannons, ammunition-wagons in unnumbered masses. The churches were filled with Russian prisoners.

Suwalki has 24,000 inhabitants, among these are more than 13,000 Jews. A brother lives there, and when I inquired of a Jew on the street where I could find this brother, I received the answer that the one inquired after belongs to the rich persons, and the rich citizens are no longer in the city. We naturally saw many Jews in the street, caftan and ear-locks are no longer seen. But the Jews nearly all made the impression of being generally degenerated in body and depressed mentally. We talked to a few individuals and learned that the Jewish inhabitants feel themselves very well off under the dominion of the German Government.

It was remarkable how often the physicians were asked for their aid with the remark that wife or child are lying sick in the dwellings and there is no medical aid to be had. The Jews even offered to pay for such help. Of course, our physicians had to refuse to help in order not to run the risk of infecting perhaps later the hospital train.

The weather was bad. Hundreds of prisoners were cleaning the city. In spite of this it looked quite dirty.

Suwalki proper is a large government city, has nice government buildings, large caserns and especially beautiful churches. Every second house contains a military bureau, the administration is German, the post office is German, but upon the business places one saw only Russian and Polish signs. We had to attend to something in connection with the service in the offices of the etap-commandery and of the general command. Notwithstanding the fact that it was Sunday, the offices were overcrowded. The work, especially for the higher military officers, is enormous. In the officers, which obviously were formerly residences of distinction, we found the portraits of the Russian imperial family. This trifling trait of noblemindedness has forcibly impressed us. What would have happened to the pictures of our imperial family if they should have fallen into the hands of Russian officials!

In the streets one saw nothing but military, infantry, cavalry, artillery, munition and forage columns, etc. All business houses were open, the buyers were German soldiers exclusively.

We presented ourselves to the etap-physician in Suwalki, who informed Brother Dr. Staub that his excellency the sanitary chief had manifested his special interest in our hospital train.

Already on the evening of March 14 we admitted twenty wounded to our hospital train, who could find no room in the hospital train QIII. In the forenoon of March 15 the admission of more wounded followed, and up to the afternoon we had taken on board 165 men.

In Ratzky, 63 more came, part of them wounded and part sick. The beds were all occupied. The supernumerary patients were happy to have found accommodation, some upon chairs, some on the floor of the hospital cars, well wrapped up in coverlets. They were glad to be permitted to remain. Several more officers and troopers had also to be taken along, so that the train was over full.

With the inlading an enormous work commenced for the physicians, nurses and sanitary assistants. Part of the injured were suffering from most serious wounds. There were 121 shot wounds, 35 other injuries (such as contusions, frozen limbs, burns), 16 external, 54 internal diseases, and 2 other diseases. Nineteen wounded had many shot wounds, 15 shot injuries were combined with hurts by freezing.

The wounded who were admitted in Suwalki came mostly direct from the battlefield in Seiny, 15 miles from Suwalki, where a battle was just being fought. They were brought to the depot partly in hospital autos but partly also in peasants' carts, often bedded upon a little straw only. It was self understood that some were completely exhausted and torpid. When they wanted to lift a wounded soldier into the hospital train, he was already a stiff corpse. One could frequently hear what happiness these poor soldiers felt as they were being bedded in the warm coverlets. Every second or third wounded soldier repeated the exclamation: "Here it is just like in heaven!" The one who could not speak, you could perceive the gratitude in his looks, for the speedy refreshment with warm drinks, for the suitable bedding and for being laid down in an easy position to alleviate his pains. A number of soldiers who, as they were being placed in the train, were partly unconscious, almost completely exhausted, were recovered already on the next day with eyes bright and full of life.

Alas, a number of injuries were so dangerous that already on the journey to Koenigsberg three deaths occurred (two were shot in the head and one in the chest, to which tetanus was added).

For the rest the work of the physicians was worthy of thanks. According to the medical reports which I have before me, about thirty large splint bandages were applied to shot wounds in the bones of the extremities, which immediately greatly relieved the sick of their pain and made it possible for them to assume a comfortable lying position. All the wounded received fresh antiseptic bandages, which were changed within the next few days according to need. Exhausted patients with weak hearts received digitalis preparations, wine, strong coffee; other patients received opiates, gruel and were warmed with warming bottles. Eight who partly showed over forty degrees fever with pneumonia were treated with high upright lying positions, Priesnitz-poultices and camphor, also morphine injections. The results were so good with these patients that most of these eight were discharged from the hospital train almost without any fever. Two shrapnel bullets, which were imbedded quite close to the surface, were removed during the trip.

The care of the wounded left nothing to wish for. The kitchen arrangements were so well made that different forms of diet could be attended to. Wherever there was no need of a special diet, the wounded received full man's fare. All their requirements in this regard were fulfilled. To the greatest astonishment of the physicians and sanitary assistants, portions were often consumed, which were really wonderful, but they were well digested. The physicians had the joy to behold the visible recovery of many of the patients during the few days of the transport.

So has the arrangement of the hospital train proven itself splendidly useful in every respect. The positions of the stretchers and the way they can be adjusted can be considered as perfect. Even patients who suffered from shots in the abdomen declared that they noticed nothing of the shaking of the moving train.

We owe hearty thanks to our brothers, the physicians, for their great work, also to the nurses and to the sanitary assistants, and especially our four nurses, who showed themselves particularly willing. each one was inspired in her way by patriotic zeal to be useful to the common cause.

But the same was the case with the sanitary assistants—nobody lacked good will and missed finding joy in the work. To work dav and night was not too much for any of the nurses and any of the sanitary assistants. The nurses and the sanitary assistants really felt like comrades, frictions or difficulties about competency never came to the ears of the physicians.

The activity of the nurses was a sort of assistance to the physicians; they were responsible for the carrying out of all orders concerning medicaments and temperature taking; they helped in bandaging, attended to the sterilizing of the bandage material and the instruments.

The sanitary assistants, one to each wagon, that is, one for ten patients, attended to the clean keeping of their divisions, the cleaning and bedding of the sick; they fed them and fulfilled all the coarser duties at the sickbed.

The way on our return trip passed over Angerburg and Gerdauen to Koenigsberg, where the destruction by the Russians is of considerable extent. There we discharged thirty wounded, twenty-seven wounded were discharged in Stargard. and 120 in Stettin, the rest in Stralsund and Greifswald.

The reception in Griefswald was an especially festive one. The professor of pharmacology and his assistant were present, and society ladies presented flowers to the wounded soldiers.

It was often hard for the sick to take their departure. Every one would have preferred to stay in the hospital train till the end of the journey. Many said good-by with tearful eyes and with words of the deepest gratitude, and promised to keep us informed about their state of health. Such letters of information really reached us in great numbers. All were filled with the deepest gratitude. I wish to read to you one letter of thanks from a wounded soldier:

"All ornamental words and expressions of praise will not come near to reproduce that which a soldier feels when he steps upon this train. A soldier who, after a long time in dirty Poland, sees again something which up to that time he has only seen at world expositions. How agreeable was this affluence and wealth to us all after such a long time of want and privations; how they rejoiced over the kind care and good treatment. No wonder that I was not the only one who became almost well during the journey and at the last station felt so strong again to return to the front. Therefore thousand thanks to the dear founders who made a present to myself and to many others of the nicest railroad trip of their lives."

In Stettin the train remained for several days to make the necessary repairs and especially to attend to the disinfections of the train, which had constantly to be repeated. The members of the lodge of that place and their relatives visited the train under the leadership of their able president and contributed cash donations and friendly gifts, treated our brethren, the physicians and nurses, hospitably and called a special meeting of their lodge, in which the chief physician and the bookkeeper of the hospital train submitted reports.

For all this Allemania Lodge be heartily thanked.

Concerning the distribution of the friendly gifts I will state that, in compliance with the original determination, the main part was assigned to the sanitary depot in Suwalki, for the hospitals of that place. The list of the friendly gifts distributed at that place comprises three pages. In the main the gifts consisted of sewing materials, cocoa, preserves, a great variety of fruit juices, chocolate, soaps, rum, cognac brandy and more than 300 white shirts. Other friendly gifts were distributed to a reserve company of railroad builders, to the etap-commandery and to the intendancy, for the purpose of shipping direct to the front. Great quantities of woolen things were especially brought there, such as shirts, vests, woolen shawls, stockings, besides many cigars and cigarettes, chocolate and marmalade.

We were especially gratified by the ability to distribute these friendly gifts, and the expedition with which the things were brought to the front afforded us great joy. We only regretted that it was impossible for ourselves to bring the friendly gifts to the front.

Very agreeable, although at the same time also very sorrowful, was the distribution of the friendly gifts among the wounded who were on the train. We distributed shirts, chocolate, cakes, biscuits, fruit jelly, wine, cigars and tobacco As I was the only one who was not vaccinated neither against cholera nor against typhus, I was not permitted by the physicians to set foot in the sick-wagons.

Brother Schuermann undertook the distribution for me. He reported about it that he returned from his, in itself, easy and pleasant task, physically and spiritually exhausted by the shocking sight of the grievously wounded, although he also found satisfaction and gratification in the joy of the recipients of the friendly gifts.

Commanders of soldiers, officers of railroad battalions, solicited from us friendly gifts for their troops and they also received them. Requests for friendly gifts continued persistently. They came from the private soldier up to the higher officers. A number of officers and sub-officers visited the hospital train. All requests were granted.

Two feelings especially manifested themselves within us during the distribution of friendly gifts. The first was the good care which the officers took of their troops; indeed, we received explicit requests from officers to give them things for their personal use, especially linens, but first, however, with all of them came the solicitude for the troops, and then they thought of their own welfare.

The second feeling was that the requests for friendly gifts were made entirely nonchalantly and as something which is self understood, and they accepted them in the same spirit. One received the impression from it that the solicitors took the granting of their request as something which is self understood because they would under the same conditions just as readily share their affluence with those who suffer from want.

Yes, this is the great thing in this war; it has made men equal and has caused every individual to feel great joy in doing good.

I have already related of the special joy of the few brethren whom we have met with the hospital train.

When our nurses took a walk in Suwalki they met an assistant physician who would have liked to fall on their neck, and this would not have been on account of the female sex, but because of the sign I. O. B. B. which they carried on their uniforms.

Distant from home this physician, whose three brothers belong to our Order, found the sign which he knew so well. It was natural that we accorded him the heartiest welcome, and it gratified us when he assured us that was his nicest day. Also this physician told us of the sad fate of the Jews who lived in Suwalki. He had visited the synagogue on Saturday and he saw there innumerable sick persons. He was glad to write daily a number of prescriptions and to serve his co-religionists, free of charge, with medical assistance.

In Suwalki we were visited by the field chaplain, Dr. Levi of Breslau, who was glad and also proud to see us there. I was able to make Dr. Levi acquainted with the Quartermaster, who was just then paying us a visit. I found a hearty relation between the different confessions and the endeavor of the highest military authorities to satisfy the religious needs to the widest extent.

On the return trip we met in Ratzky a military hospital train which also stopped at that place. A gentleman in uniform jumped from that train over to us, greeting us with radiant joy. It was a brother from Hamburg, with whom we also remained in pleasant conversation, and we were glad to be able to serve food and drink to the officers of the military hospital train, who having been a long time on the way were hungry and thirsty.

So one will understand when I assert that all of us on the train felt special satisfaction and gratification and that I considered myself justified to congratulate the Order from the fulness of my heart upon the equipment of the hospital train.

There were really two feelings which led to the equipment of this train: the love for our splendid fatherland and the gratitude to our incomparable troops. These two feelings must continue to reign within us and therefore the warning goes out to our members not to cease their contributions to the friendly gifts, for already in the beginning of the activity of our hospital train we have gained the conviction that in spite of the great amount of money collected and in spite of the great quantities of friendly gifts, we will not have enough.

If I only could conjure up before you the pictures of the suffering which we beheld, also the scenes of joy called forth by the good deeds which we have done, I am convinced that you would give with full hands. But I have confidence in the joyful readiness of our brethren to bring sacrifices, which has often been verified, that even if I cannot conjure them up, my appeal will not be in vain.

I surely do not wish to speak disparagingly of other places of collection of friendly gifts, but justice demands that the fact be established that friendly gifts mostly then fulfill their aim when they are entrusted to a hospital train, on account of the security and especially for the reason of the swiftness with which these gifts reach the destined places.

And so I close this report with the urgent monition to our brethren, sisters and relatives:

"Be alive and ready for further deeds of love and gratitude."

POTENCY OF THE JEWISH RACE.

By Dr. Charles W. Eliot.

For many centuries the Jews have had no country of their own or even national headquarters. They have been scattered among many nations all more or less unfriendly, and some really oppressive; yet they have retained, under the most adverse circumstances, the capacity to earn their livelihood, to bring up families, and to maintain the great traditions of their race. The main reason for the indestructibility of the Jews is that they early embraced certain invaluable ideals, and have struggled towards them indomitably for thousands of years.

The principal difference between races is difference of ideals. Whenever several distinct races come to live side by side on the same territory in the bonds of a peaceful and co-operative fellowship for all common public purposes, it will be found that they have all reached common political and social ideals, although in regard to many racial attributes and even in regard to religious beliefs they remain distinct.

The assimilation of different races can be brought about only by a gradual acceptance of the same ideals and aspirations. For several centuries this process of assimilation has been going on in many parts of the earth, and is now going on at an accelerated pace, resulting in larger conceptions of nationality and larger political or governmental units.

The Influence of Lofty Ideals.

The Jewish race affords the strongest instance of the influence on a human stock of lofty ideals, persistently held wherever on the face of the earth a fragment of the race has planted itself. In all generations and in all environments the Jews have succeeded in competition with other races to a remarkable degree. Among a poor population they are less poor than their neighbors; among a free and prosperous population the Jews become richer and more prosperous than the average. Confined in unwholesome Ghettos, they retain to an astonishing degree their health and vitality, helped doubtless by the dietary and sanitary directions given in their ancient Scriptures. Deprived of the right to bear arms in many countries, and, therefore, unable to resist savage attack, they remain inextinguishable. Wherever they become prosperous they develop an extraordinary community feeling, and take care of their own poor or unfortunate. In short, in all generations and in all their various environments they have exhibited, and still exhibit, a remarkable racial tenacity and vigor. It is manifest that this normal success of the race is not due to any especially favorable material conditions, but to the rare strength and significance of its ideals.

What are these ideals? What have they been for thousands of years? The first of the Jewish ideals has been that of one God—the noblest of all human ideals—early attained, and persistently clung to by the whole race. Mohammedan monotheism is noble, and is the main source of the strength of those races which have embraced the religion of Mahomet; but the Mohammedan doctrine of One God arrived thousands of years after the Jewish, and never was so pure. The most significant sentence in the English speech is the first sentence of the Hebrew Bible—"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." That is the first of the Jewish ideals, to which the race has been true in all environments, in weal and woe, and that belief has delivered it from many sorts of enfeebling and degrading terrors and superstitions.

The Ideal of the Family.

Another Jewish ideal which has counted for much in the history of the race is the ideal of the family—pure, honorable, and sacred. The veneration of ancestors, which has been an important part of the religion of China and Japan, is only an undue exaggeration of the Hebrew commandment, "Honor thy father and thy mother." The Jewish race has seen fulfilled the promise which is the last phrase of that commandment, "that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," although in many lands and not in any land of their own. The organized human society most likely to prove durable or permanent is that which possesses and maintains in theory and practice a lofty ideal of the family. The reverence shown by children toward their parents and the devotion of parents to their children, which prevail in Jewish families, are both more intense than is usual in Christian families. These sentiments yield infinite good in any human society they produce, and pass on from generation to generation, purity of life, family honor, and a real consecration of the best human affections. That is the second potent Jewish ideal.

The third effective ideal is the ethical teaching contained in the Ten Commandments, the most compact and yet comprehensive code of morals ever written. These ethical principles have been held before the Jewish race for thousands of years wherever it has lived, in good times and bad, an ideal toward which the race has always struggled, though with frequent lapses. This code contains the institution of the Sabbath Day, which by itself accounts for much of the extraordinary endurance of the race.

The Jewish have always been distinguished for their respect for learning and their zeal for education. In the Ghettos of Europe, under the most discouraging conditions, their Rabbis kept alive the ancient learning, and through many centuries gave the elite of the rising generation some mental training, when no instruction was to be had by the masses of mankind. A persecuted race, provided it retains its vitality and elasticity, receives admirable training in loyalty to its ideals. In the case of the Jews, this was a loyalty not only to race, but to religion; and religious loyalty is the finest and most sustaining of all loyalties. The religion of the Jews emphasizes an ideal to which the Jewish mind and heart have responded ardently from the earliest times—the ideal of righteousness. Loyalty to this ideal includes loyalty to race, family, religion and all righteous perons. The Jews believe that righteousness alone exalteth a nation, a family or a man.

The Test of Liberty.

For two thousand years the Jews have led their daily lives under exposure to bodily harm, injustice, and all sorts of disaster, and under such grievous trials have preserved their ideals. The race is now to be put to another and severer test. In the free countries of Europe and America the Jews enjoy complete political and industrial liberty. They were for centuries excluded from most professions, arts, and industries, and were driven into trade and money-lending. Now all callings are open to them. In the Middle Ages there were only a few directions in which a successful Jew could safely spend his money. Now he can spend it in any direction—wisely and beneficently, or foolishly and ostentatiously. Will the race bear liberty as well as it has borne oppression? The liberty, which is the only atmosphere in which the strongest men and women can develop, often causes the downfall of weak-willed human beings. Rich Jews, like other rich people, are in danger of becoming luxurious—the more so because the race has been cut off from military service, and has not been addicted to out-of-door sports. The worst destroyer of sound family and national life is luxury. If the race is to meet successfully the test of liberty, it will get over its apparent tendency of the moment towards materialism and reliance on the power of money, hold fast to its social and artistic idealism, and press steadily towards its intellectual and religious ideals.

AFTER THE JEW.

"After the Jew, I see again, aren't you, with three articles in one number by Jewish authors?" writes a reader. Yes, and after the Gentile, too, my friend, with sixty-eight articles by Gentile authors in the same number. After the Gentile, too, you see! After everybody! And sometimes—it may seem strange to you, but it is a fact—we don't know whether a subscriber is a Jew or a Gentile. Curious, isn't it? And curious, furthermore, that it should be a matter of indifference to us as well. That is due to our lack of discrimination, perhaps, or again, it may be due to something else. "For instance?" you ask. Well, suppose some day, when you have a little leisure from writing anonymous letters to editors, you go to some library and ask for a good work on Jewish history, and read it. And if you read that history aright, perhaps you will find in it somewhere something that will explain why we should have a soft spot for the Jew; why, to be perfectly frank with you, we should be so inexpressibly proud to have every Jewish family in America on our subscription list, and every Jewish author who has a message have that message printed in this magazine. The only trouble is that the Jewish households do not need, in the same measure, the call to the hearthstone and to family life that those of other races do. Did you every stop to think of that?—Ladies' Home Journal.

MAX LILIENTHAL

1815-1882

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

In the first volume of the "Occident," published in 1843, we find a brief account of the dedication of the sixth synagogue of the city of New York. Jewish congregations were then still scarce in this country, and had a small membership. The reactionary tendencies of most of the European governments brought the young people to America in ever increasing numbers, and, confronted with living conditions, entirely different from those which they had left behind in Europe, and filled with liberal ideas, both in politics and religion, they prepared the soil for a new interpretation of Judaism, which began in 1841 in Charleston, S. C., in a congregation which was originally founded by Portuguese Jews, who are usually leaning towards rigid conservatism, and was continued by the growing German congregations under scholarly rabbis, who took the place of the former ministers, who, sincere in their work and earnestly striving to advance themselves by hard study, were autodidacts. Amongst the pioneers of the advanced school of American Judaism, Max Lilienthal occupies a prominent place, and therefore his biographer and successor in office is right in calling him an American Rabbi.

Of the forty-two years of Lilienthal's public activity only a little over five belong to Russia, and more than thirty-six to America. In America he was one of the leading men who shaped the religious aspects of our community, under what must be considered normal conditions. It was different in Russia. There Lilienthal was not one of the leaders, but the leading man connected with one of the most important periods of Jewish history in a unique, critical epoch. This epoch we wish to understand. As always in history, we have to appreciate the general entourage in which these events take place. The year 1830 had created a great excitement amongst the believers in the divine rights of kings. In 1815 Czar Alexander I had called into existence the Holy Alliance, an organization which was to stand on the basis of dogmatic Christianity, and was to defend the divine rights of monarchs, and in addition all the autocratic institutions for which Russia more than any other country in Europe has been and still is typical. Alexander died ten years later, and therefore was spared the shock that came to his brother monarchs in 1830. Paris, the storm center of Europe, once more gave the world a surprise. King Charles X, the successor of his brother, Louis XVIII, whom European dynastic interests had placed on the old Bourbon throne, was given indefinite leave of absence. As if this were not bad enough, a distant cousin of his, one who ought to have stood for the interest of divine rights of kings, accepted the vacant throne. So two facts had become patent. People could not be depended on to simply obey the dictates of their rulers, and mere power could not govern nations. There was from now on a decided tendency in European politics towards liberalism. Mostly was this felt in the southern states of Germany, which bordered on France, but even more distant countries could not close their eyes entirely to the important experience furnished by the French July Revolution. The lesson drawn from this event was that in order to prevent an outbreak like that of the French revolution of 1789, it was necessary to make some concessions to the spirit of democracy. In the recognition of this fact, the condition of the Jews also came up for discussion. That conditions could not remain as they were, forbidding, for instance in Norway, that Jews set foot on the land, in Switzerland the right to settle outside of two villages in the canton of Aargau, in Bavaria restricting their right to marry, in England withholding from them the right to take part in municipal and state elections, or at any rate forbidding their holding any public office, was admitted.

Nicholas I, who succeeded his brother in 1825, and showed from the start that he had a strong will was influenced by the same movement. Something had to be done for the Jews and in this sense the law of April 13, 1835, was promulgated. Lilienthal, in a letter addressed to his brother (page 139) speaks of the law as having given to the Jews all liberties. The editor, feeling the incon[illegible], adds the footnote that Lilienthal refers to Riga, but he evidently re[illegible] the law which was given for all [illegible] Jews, and which he (on page [illegible]) [illegible] dates 1837. The principle of this law was that the Jews should get secular education and therefore those who attended a gymnasium should be honorary citizens, and those who attended a university should obtain still larger rights. One can clearly see here the reflection of the debate which took place about the same time in the diets of the South German states, notably in Baden and Bavaria. In all these states it was admitted that the condition of the Jews ought to be improved, but at the same time it was demanded that they should throw off the yoke of the Talmud, and get rid of their "Asiatic prejudices." It was natural that the Jewish leaders in western Europe, in full sympathy with these ideas, should interpret the Russian movement in a sense favorable to them. Ludwig Philippson, who in 1837 began to publish "Die Allgemeine Zeitung des Judentums," and was a very energetic young man, was the first to propose to Count Uvarov, the Russian minister of education, that he call some German Jews to Russia in order to slowly transform them from obscurantists of the old type into modern Jews, like those of western Europe. Uvarov answered favorably. Philippson's paper had readers in the enlightened Jewish circles of Russia, notably in Riga, which, a German city, had a Jewish population better educated than their co-religionists in the neighboring province of Lithuania. Uvarov answered in very polite words, and declared himself in sympathy with the idea. At the same time Riga wanted to establish a Jewish school, and looked for a German principal. Philippson was asked to name a candidate, and he proposed Lilienthal, who had asked him to remember him when an occasion should arise. Lilienthal was then not quite twenty-four years old. Though of little consequence, a correction may be in place. Philipnson decides between the two statements which in one place makes Lilienthal born October 16, 1841, and another one which says he was born November 6, 1815, that the former is correct because in his letter to his wife, to whom he was engaged at that time, he speaks in 1841 of October 16 as his birthday. The matter is evidently this. Lilienthal, according to the custom then general amongst Jews, celebrated his birthday according to the Jewish date, the 1st of Marheshvan, which in 1815 coincided with November 4, and in 1841 with October 16.

Lilienthal was highly elated at the task before him. We can see this from every line of the letters which he addresses to his family, and from the reminiscences which he wrote ten years later. It is a pity that he does not seem to have kept a diary in detail. He may have had some notes, to which he occasionally referred, and which now are lost, but he certainly did not keep an exact diary, as one instance clearly proves. Giving his experience in Brest Litovsk (page 362) he says the people warned him not to touch any food which unknown people would offer him, for the Hasidim were apt to poison him, as was the fate of Rabbi Abraham Kohn. A. Kohn, preacher in Lemberg, and recognized by the government as district rabbi, was indeed poisoned by a fanatical clique, September 7, 1848. Then, however, Lilienthal was already in America, and therefore the people in Brest could not possibly have cited this instance as a precedent. It is clear, however, that Lilienthal was warned, because indeed there was bitter feeling between the Hasidim and the enlightened Jews just as well as between them and the orthodox Talmudists, and what Lilienthal actually ought to have said was that the people warned him of such murderous plots, and that in 1848, about seven years later, when he heard of the case of Abraham Kohn, he remembered how just these precautions had been. Memory is a very uncertain commodity.

Lilienthal was now principal of the school, and preacher of the congregation of Riga. In both qualities he was eminently successful. A sermon outlining his policy, which he sent to the Emperor, evidently aroused the latter's interest. He sent the preacher a valuable diamond ring as a present, and Count Uvarov, seeing how successful the experiment in Riga was, intended to have this movement spread over Russia. Therefore Lilienthal, without receiving any definite official appointment, was employed by the government to travel all over the Pale of Settlement, and encourage the Jews to establish similar schools which perhaps he was to superintend. His experiences were different in different places. What finally determined him to abandon his task is not clearly stated. In a letter addressed to his prospective father-in-law, with whom he discusses the plan of his marriage, he does not show any intention of abandoning his post. In an allusion to his material position he clearly seems to give his family to understand that it is better for him to remain in Russia, and that he would sooner reach a definite future than if he were to return home to Bavaria, and wait for his chances, which are rather poor. This letter was written December 8, 1844, and a few months later, Lilienthal came to America. The inference, therefore, is permissible that his determination to leave Russia was not due to the change of the policy of Nicholas, especially to the terrible order expelling all Jews living in the border districts, which was issued 1843, but he must have had other reasons. One can easily understand that a young woman, raised in Munich, did not fancy the idea of living in Russia, and that the parents of the bride, feeling that the conditions in Russia were too uncertain, would prefer if uncertain conditions should be faced, to face them in America, where some members of the family had preceded the young couple.

Why did Lilienthal's mission in Russia fail? The first answer is that it did not fail. He certainly left a very strong impression on the young people with whom he came in contact, which is quite evident from a passage in Pauline Wengeroff's "Memoiren einer Grossmutter." Just with the arrival in Brest Litovsk, the home of Pauline Wengeroff, Lilienthal's memoirs close. It is a great pity. We would have liked to have heard more about his future experiences, about the places which he visited, and especially about his meeting with the Hasidic rabbi, Mendel Schneiersohn of Lubawitz. Such a man was a novelty to a young man born and bred in the Bavarian capital, and it would be highly instructive to learn how this peculiar character impressed him. This would have been a valuable addition to our knowledge of the movement, because it is more than questionable whether, as Philippson thinks (p. 12), the motives of the founder of the sect, "Baal Shem," were so pure and noble. I have grave reasons to doubt it. It is remarkable how history is swayed by sentiment. About a hundred years ago, and much later, the progressive wing of Judaism could not find strong enough words to denounce Hasidism, as dangerous obscuratism, as superstition and fraud. I merely refer to the works of Joseph Perl and of Isaac Erter. It is the nationalistic conception of Jewish history, for which to a great extent Asher Guenzburg is responsible, and which was taken up by S. A. Horodetzki, that sees in Hasidism a noble, emotional movement. This conception was popularized in German by Martin Buber, significantly enough an avowed infidel. One must not forget the fact that the first edition of the biography of Israel Besht was published in 1815, more than fifty years after the man's death (1760). Referring to the case which I just quoted, how Lilienthal, writing about twelve years after an event, could be so gravely mistaken, one knows what half a century means. In addition this biography was written by blind admirers, believers in the silliest miracle stories, who had no interest in writing history, but in the glorification of their faith. S. J. Horowitz proved clearly that the biographers contradict each other in a very important point. One says Besht was asked how he could be a religious leader, since he was ignorant of the rabbinic law, and in order to prove it, the rabbi upbraided him, asked him a question about the synagogue ritual. Besht answered evasively, "Why should I have to know it, there are always rabbis in Israel." Another report has it that Besht answered, "I do not know it, and you do, but the difference is that while you know it, you will forget it when the time for prayer comes, because you do not think of prayer, you think of your Talmud, but when I pray I am only mindful of the prayer, and therefore I will never forget it." One sees clearly the difference between the two conceptions. The one conception presents Besht as submissive to rabbinic authority, the other report again makes him an opponent of Talmudism. One can clearly see that there is a tendency in the anecdotes. The fact is that Hasidism has of late greatly been exaggerated, that it is really based on sordid mercenary motives, and is a low and repulsive superstition, besides leading to excesses on sensuous life, especially drunkenness.

It is a great, great loss, one must admit again, that Lilienthal did not continue his reminiscences. He is a delightful narrator. The story how he, stepping off the sleigh on which he made a trip from St. Petersburg to Riga, got lost, and was in grave danger of freezing to death, is really romantic. The description of the impression which the Sabbath in Wilna made on the young men from a German capital shows that Lilienthal, who afterwards so emphatically pronounced the belief in America as the real Palestine, is carried away by that kind of Judaism which develops in a strictly Jewish center. Amusing is the story how a committee of a synagogue insists on waking him up at 4 a. m. to announce that they have selected him for a certain honor on Simhat Torah. Highly interesting is the description of his meeting with the president of the Yeshibah of Volozhin, Isaac ben Hayyim, Reb Itzele, whom he had selected, upon the advice of friends, as a member of the committee of four called by Czar Nicholas to discuss the Jewish question. Lilienthal does not at all suppress facts that are unpleasant to him, so he tells us that Rabbi Isaac, inviting him to make Kiddush, said, "You pronounce Hebrew like a proselyte." Still more definite is an old member of the Riga community, Rabbi Nehemiah, who, calling upon Lilienthal when the latter returned from St. Petersburg, tells him plainly, "You cannot do anything for the Jews, because you are no Jew." He tells this story in connection with a charming Jewish anecdote. The Jews were ordered to send a representative to the emperor. Wishing to make a good impression, they selected a good-loking man, dressed him in modern fashion, shaved him, etc., but when the emperor saw him, he said, "I didn't want this man, he is no Jew at all." We would have liked to hear more about Reb Lebele (p. 344), son-in-law of Rabbi Isaac, who is known afterwards as Naphtali Zebi Jehudah or Hirsch Loeb Berlin (1817-1893), father of the late Rabbi Hayyim Berlin of Jerusalem and of Meyer Berlin, representative of the Misrachi movement in this country. It is a great pity that Rabbi Hirsch Loeb did not write memoirs on his part, so as to enable us to appreciate the different views of the same situation. It is quite clear that the president of the old Yeshibah could have not much use for Lilienthal's ideas. Even this son-in-law, Hirsch Loeb, writes in a letter at a much later date that just as it is impossible for holy and unholy meat to be placed side by side, so it is impossible for the student of rabbinical literature to engage at the same time in secular studies while he has to devote his time to the Talmud. This makes us regret still more the inability to obtain the views of such an intelligent observer, as Lilienthal was, on Hasidism and Rabbinism. Both were represented at the St. Petersburg conference in 1843. The Yeshibah at Volozhin was founded by Rabbi Hayyim, a disciple of Elijah of Wilna, evidently with a purpose similar to that which selected little towns for educational institutions. The founder had two purposes, on one hand the dangerous influence of the German school, following Mendelssohn, should be paralyzed, and on the other hand the religious eccentricities that made their way into Lithuania from Volhynia and Podolia, should be kept out.

It is also a great pity that we have not the family letters, written by Lilienthal at that time, in full. One can easily understand that there are found in them some delicate matters that are not ripe for publication, but at the same time we have to regret it. We also regret that they have not been given in the German original. In English translation it certainly reads queer that the young man writes to his prospective father-in-law as "Most Honored Mr. Netter." This is a formality which reminds us of the good old times before 1848 of hoop skirts, and high hats, and blue swallow tails with brass buttons, and the like. In English they give a wrong impression. It cannot be helped either that the translation will occasionally be incorrect, so when Lilienthal writes that he saw the daily drill of the troops in St. Petersburg, it ought to be translated, the troops "drill" daily, not "exercise" (page 136), which is a literal and therefore false translation of the German "exercieren." The same must be said of the expression, gainful occupation (page 156). The legal term in German, "ordentlicher Erwerbszweig," would have to be translated in English as an occupation which makes a man self supporting. Lilienthal's English was in the first years of his American career naturally rather poor, which is often disturbing in the reading of his reminiscences. When he speaks of the "gigantic admiralty" (page 171) he evidently means the navy department. When he makes Uvarov say, "You will make your fortune in Russia and I will aid you in making the best of it" (time), he evidently meant to say that Uvarov promised him that he would have success, not that he would make a fortune, and that he would assist him that, while he was waiting in St. Petersburg, he should be able to put his time to good use, not to "make the best of it" (page 191, 241). As a rule it is not so difficult, at least for one who understands German, to find out what Lilienthal means.

When he speaks of the Russian clergy in uniform (p. 233) we know that he means in their robes or vestments, but when he says (p. 249) that Rabbi Nehemiah was guided by "fanatical ultra missionary principles," I have to confess that I do not know what the latter term stands for.

Rather socially interesting and at the same time comical is Lilienthal's statement that Count Uvarov, the minister, kissed him on both cheeks when he left him. Lilienthal was quite proud of this token of love, but learned later that this was not a special distinction, but a general custom, for "Russians kiss each other like men and women" (p. 209). Naturally living in a German environment, Lilienthal never acquired the Russian language, and so it comes that he explains the word "Dvornik" as doorkeeper (p. 205), deriving it from dvera (door) instead of from dvor (court). So he writes constantly Jarmeke for Yarmulka (skull cap) (p. 262 and often). He is also a little slipshod in Talmudic quotations, and in historic facts. His alleged Talmudic statement that through discussion the truth will be established (p. 94) cannot be Talmudic because the word "Vikuach" is no Talmudic word. When he tells us that he had met a Jewish soldier who had fought at the battle of Navarre (p. 162), he probably means the battle of Navarino, October 20, 1827. He is seriously in error when he says (p. 106) that the Syllabus was issued by the Roman see in 1869, after the adjournment of the Vatican council. The Vatican Council was not adjourned until October 20, 1870, when Rome had been occupied by the Italian troops and the Syllabus was promulgated December 8, 1864, in connection with the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the proclamation of the dogma of Immaculate Conception. Napoleon did not say: "Les extremes se touchent." This statement had been made as early as the seventeenth century by Pascal, who spoke of "deux extremites qui se touchent," and was in the form usually quoted, coined by Mercier in 1782, at the time when Napoleon was a boy and did not yet know one word of French. Relying on these facts, I doubt very much whether Lilienthal is right when he says that the rabbis of the sixteenth century declared the Protestant reformation the dawn of the Messianic era. I have never come across such a statement.

The reason for giving so much space to such details is my desire to justify a certain skepticism in regard to statements which are now of great historic interest, and would help us greatly to understand the history of seventy years ago, could we rely on their accuracy. An interesting analogy is furnished by a legend, of which Lilienthal is the leading figure. It was told frequently and published for instance in the "Allgemeine Zeitung des Judenthums" (1876, p. 46) that Lilienthal was once in company of the Roman Catholic archbishop Purcell at a dinner when the bishop teased him with the question, "Won't you eat some of this delicious ham?" Lilienthal is supposed to have replied, "I shall do so at your wedding, Archbishop." The trouble with this story is that it was told in the "Allgemeine Zeitung des Judentums" some years previously (1867, p. 80), of a rabbi and a priest without giving any names. It was also told of Chief Rabbi Adler, and a cardinal (Bancroft: Recollections of Sixty Years) and quite lately of Rabbi Krauskopf and Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia (Philadelphia "Press," June 11, 1915). In this connection we are interested to read in the collection of Lilienthal's addresses strong attacks on Archbishop Purcell, where we should expect some mention of his intimate social relation with the Catholic prelate. The story is like many others of its kind, an anecdote, which is told in every country, of different people. Similar is the story told by Lilienthal (p. 174) of Czar Alexander I, who, when people complained about the illumination of the Sukkoth, gave order that the lights must be extinguished within a fortnight. The same story is told of Prague (Monatschrift f. G. u. W. d. J., vol. 53, p. 721, 1909), and I heard it in my native town, when I was a boy, of Chayyim Ball, who, not having a court yard, built his Sukkah on the street in front of his house. People complained to the Oberamtmann Schumann of the obstruction of a public highway, but Cahyim gave to the official some tangible reason for keeping the Sukkah where it was and the Oberamtmann decided that the booth was an obstruction of a public highway, which had to be removed within nine days from date. Chayim Ball and Schumann were historic personalities, personally known to everybody in town of the age of my parents. I, therefore, never had any doubt as to the truth of the story, but Lilienthal heard it in Russia, Sol. H. Lichen in Pague, and now I am in doubt whether it ever happened in Kanitz.

All these remarks are merely illustrative of historic criticism. The historic importance of Lilienthal's work comes from his five years in Russia. A young man of twenty-four went into that country inspired with the confidence which comes from youthful enthusiasm. The German states, especially those of Southern Germany, began to discuss in 1830 the question of the improvement of Jewish conditions. People were liberal in those days, and it was generally conceded that disabilities imposed on people on the ground of their religious belief were unjust. The arguments of the opponents, therefore, were that the Jews, speaking a language of their own, keeping aloof from their environment, sticking to antiquated notions such as found in the Talmud, had no right to claim equality with their fellow citizens. Secular education and improved forms of religious services with a view of revising some tenets of the Jewish faith, were advocated as remedy. At the same time it was admitted that the individual Jew, and even the individual Jewish congregation, possessed no authority. Therefore, a consistory was advocated. The government of Bavaria was especially insistent on this point and denounced the Jews who would not act upon this proposition. This was Lilienthal's idea in suggesting the calling of a rabbinical conference. He also introduced in his congregation confirmation, and worked successfully in improving the education of the youth of the children.

We therefore might say that he succeeded. His work was one of the forces which brought about a transformation, and it would have brought much better results had the government aided him in granting to the Jews more civic freedom. Pauline Wengeroff tells us the amusing story how her brothers-in-law, living, as was the custom then, in the house of their wives' parents, exclusively engaged in Talmudic studies, received through Lilienthal's visit the impulse to study natural science. The mother-in-law, seeing the young men collecting insects as specimens, yelled through the house that the boys had gone crazy.

On the other hand, it cannot be denied that Lilienthal was not the right man to achieve great results. He tells us repeatedly that the people referred to him contemptuously as the "Datschel." Why he uses this transliteration I do not understand, because he never lived in Poland, where they say "Datch," and in Lithuania they say "Daytch." Learned Talmudists, as well as a plain observant Jew of the Russian type were bound to see in Lilienthal's Judaism a diluted article that might just as well be exchanged for Christianity. The progressive Hebrew authors like M. A. Guenzburg, whom Lilienthal did meet, and some others whom he might have met, could not be won for a German "culture." They were indeed the pioneers of a new era. It is absolutely safe to say that Abraham Mappu's novel, "The Hypocrite" and Leon Gordon's poems did more to bring light into the dingy Cheders, and to awaken the young men who considered Talmud and codes the sum total of all human wisdom, than any cultured German ever could. We can see it in the cases of Abraham Neumann, Lilienthal's successor in Riga, and Simon L. Schwabacher, rabbi of Odessa. Although they spent their lives in Russia, they never succeeded in exercising a strong influence on the development of Judaism. As one factor, however, in the subtle machinery of human progress, the five years which Lilienthal spent in Russia have their lasting place in the history of modern Judaism.

PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Jewish Publication Society of America announces a prize of Two Hundred and Fifty Dollars ($250) for a book of fiction in the English language.

The following conditions must be observed by the competitors:

1. The story must treat of Jewish life in America.
2. It must be an original story not printed or published before.
3. It is to contain not less than 25,000 and not more than 35,000 words.
4. The manuscript must be legibly written or typewritten on quarto size paper with ample margins.
5. The manuscript should be inscribed with an assumed name and accompanied by a sealed envelope bearing the assumed name on the outside, and giving within the real name and address of the competitor.
6. The manuscript must be in the office of The Jewish Publication Society of America (Broad Street and Girard Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.) on or before February 1, 1916.
7. All rights in the prize-winning story become the property of The Jewish Publication Society of America.
8. The committee reserves to itself the right not to award the prize if all the manuscripts submitted fall below the expected standard.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN IN DISTRICT NO. 2.

Under the auspices of the Propaganda Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 2 and especially under the guidance and direction of Mr. Manny Strauss of Cincinnati, a most effective campaign for membership has been going on in various cities of the District. The securing of a large list of new members is one of the steps calculated to place the District in position to do effective work for the cause for which the Order stands.

A resume of the result of the campaign follows herewith:

Kansas City, Mo.

The captains and workers are reporting satisfactory progress. So far, 340 new applications for membership have been received. The campaign in this city is being conducted by 15 teams.

Louisville, Ky.

The campaign in this city is under the direction of Mr. Jos. Lazarus, who has seven teams at work securing new members. The results so far have been satisfactory.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The campaign in this city has been started in October under the direction of Mr. Lehman.

St. Louis, Mo.

St. Louis is the first city that has closed its campaign. At a meeting held on Sept. 26th the captains and workers brought in their reports showing an increase of membership of 1065 by the two local lodges, Missouri No. 22 and Ebn Ezra No. 47. Initiation of this large class of candidates will take place on Sunday, Oct. 17th, and no doubt this will be a gala occasion not only for the B'nai B'rith but also for the Jewry of St. Louis.

Denver, Colo.

The Denver campaign is under the supervision of Bro. J. J. Lieberman and reports are very encouraging.

Indianapolis, Ind.

The campaign in this city started on Oct. 3rd under the direction of Brother Bamberger, and it is expected that every eligible man in the community will be secured to increase the membership of Indianapolis Lodge.

St. Joseph, Mo.

Reports from this city show that the campaign conducted by Brother Silverman is bringing good results.

Terre Haute, Ind.

Gan Eden Lodge No. 110 of Terre Haute reports that 90 per cent of all the eligible men in the community has been secured as candidates for the lodge.

Leavenworth, Kan.

The campaign in this city started on Oct. 3d under the guidance of Brother Ettenson.

Dayton, Ohio.

Enthusiastic reports are received from Brother Kusworm, who has charge of the campaign in that city, stating that Dayton will secure at least 200 new members.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

Cincinnati Lodge is the largest lodge of the Order in the country and will retain this distinction until the new class of candidates will be initiated by the St. Louis lodges. Cincinnati Lodge is still active in securing new members and 111 candidates are waiting to be initiated.

Cleveland, Ohio.

This city is making an extraordinary effort to excel all other cities in the District in the matter of increasing the membership. This is due specially to the fact that the next convention of the District will be held in Cleveland, also for the fact that the President of the District, Bro. S. J. Kornhauser, resides in that city. A large number of teams are at work under the special direction of Brothers Benesch and Wiedenthal, and they are sanguine that the high record secured by the workers in St. Louis will be excelled by Cleveland Lodge.

JEWISH ORPHAN ASYLUM, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The quarterly meeting of the Board of Trustees and Directors of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland was held at the Hotel Pfister, Milwaukee, Wis., on Sunday, Oct. 10, 1915. Various charitable workers of Milwaukee were invited and did attend the session. The Jewish citizens of Milwaukee tendered a luncheon to the Board.

In holding the meeting in Milwaukee, the Board was actuated by the belief that interest in the asylum would be increased if its meetings were held from time to time in cities within the District, so that the work of the institution and its wants might be made known by direct presentation.

NEW EDUCATIONAL CONCESSIONS IN RUSSIA.

It is reported from Petrograd that the Cabinet's decision was confirmed by the Czar whereby universities are authorized to admit above the percentage norm all Jewish students who took part in the war or the children of Jews at the front.

JEWISH DIPLOMATS.

Those who are opposed to the restoration of a Jewish state in Palestine or some other part of the globe, use as an argument the assertion that the Jews lack the necessary fitness to govern themselves, that they would make a botch of the governing business. It is such a long time since the Jews had a state of their own, and its concomitant governmental machinery that it would require a long period of training before the Jewish state could furnish a sufficient number of statesmen and diplomats in whose hand the reins of government would be secure.

Now, even if we did not have in our history an abundance of illustrious examples of Jewish statesmen who helped in the piloting and steering of many non-Jewish ships of state, doing it with splendid success, too, the present correspondence between our leaders in this country on the Conference-Congress issue should remove all doubt as to their diplomatic qualifications.

The diplomacy that is manifested in that correspondence is unsurpassed even by the recent exchange of notes between our government and that of Germany. With men like Dr. Cyrus Adler, Louis Brandeis, Adolf Kraus, and others, at the helm, the Jewish state would not lack in astute statesmanship.—"The American Jewish World."

THE RUSSIAN GENERAL STAFF AS A CENTER FOR ANTI-SEMITISM.

In an order issued by the chief administration of the Russian General Staff, dated April 27 (old style), 1915, and numbered 1193, the heads of the different military divisions have been commanded to gather and to group the most particular "information" regarding the behavior of the Jewish soldiers. This collection of information shall, 1, extend from the time of the beginning of the war to January 1, 1915, and, 2, separately, from January, 1915, to May, 1915. The same work is to be continued for a further period of time. The end designated in this order is the close of the year 1915.

The "official investigation" contains such questions only, the answers to which must establish an anti-Semitic tendency. For instance, it should be stated how eager the Jews are to be taken captive, how they fight, what influence they exercise upon their non-Jewish comrades. The questions are so prepared that by the suspicion they form the answers are self-understood to be against the Jews.

And in order to conceal more completely the aim of this investigation the circular containing the command for this investigation closes as follows:

As the opposition will surely endeavor in later days to destroy the value of this material by pointing out its one-sidedness, it is in particular necessary to register several cases of merited conduct on the part of the Jewish soldiers.

IN UNITY THERE IS STRENGTH.

We are glad to note that the B'nai B'rith and Jewish Men's Association will become united. This is as it should be, and we have every reason to believe that this union will accomplish wonderful results.

The B'nai B'rith is doing a grand and noble work for Judaism, not only in this country, but in foreign lands, and with the large number of young men comprising the recently organized Jewish Men's Association in this community we have every reason to believe that these amalgamated organizations will do much to promote the advancement of Judaism, not only in Cleveland, but throughout the world.

With an organization composed of men who have had the benefit of experience and those who have within them the vigor of youth we have every reason to believe that it will achieve great success.

There are numerous activities for the association to pursue, and to win the desired results harmony and good-will must predominate all of its actions.

There must be a unity of purpose and a desire to work for the welfare of the organization, though at times self-interest may be involved.

This union means an organization that will prove a great blessing to the Jewish community of Cleveland.—Cleveland Jewish Review.

JEW APPOINTED TO HIGH RANK IN BELGIUM.

Dr. Rudolph Schower was appointed by the German government as the Chief Justice of Belgium. Dr. Schower is well known as a scholar of jurisprudence and as a Jewish communal worker. He is also affiliated with the Zionist organization in Germany. Another Jew, Aronson, a member of the German Landtag, has formally been appointed financial agent and referee in Poland.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

Published Monthly (except July and August)
under the auspices of the
INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Printed by Excelsior Printing Co., Chicago.

Editorial Office
1228 TRIBUNE BUILDING, CHICAGO.
All matter intended for publication should be addressed to the editor.

Subscriptions received through lodges only.
Subscriptions, one dollar per annum.

No responsibility is assumed for articles published over the signatures of the writers thereof.

JEWISH CALENDAR

5676-1915

Simchas-Torah	Friday, Oct. 1
Rosh-Chodesh Cheshvan	Saturday, Oct. 9
Rosh-Chodesh Kislev	Monday, Nov. 8
Chanukah (Feast of Dedication)	Thursday, Dec. 2
Rosh-Chodesh Tebeth	Wednesday, Dec. 8
Fast of Tebeth	Friday, Dec. 17

5676-1916

Rosh-Chodesch Shehbat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Rosh-Chodesch Adar	Saturday, Feb. 5
Second Adar	Monday, March 6
Purim (Feast of Esther)	Sunday, March 19
Rosh-Chodesch Nissan	Tuesday, April 4
Passover (Pesach)	Tuesday, April 18
Passover (Seventh Day)	Sunday, April 24
Rosh-Chodesch Iyar	Thursday, May 4
Lag-B'Omer	Sunday, May 21
Rosh-Chodesch Sivan	Friday, June 2
Shabuoth (Confirmation Day)	Wednesday, June 7
Rosh-Chodesch Shebat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Fast of Tammuz	Tuesday, July 18
Rosh-Chodesch Ab	Monday, July 31
Fast of Ab	Tuesday, Aug. 8
Rosh-Chodesch Ellul	Wednesday, Aug. 30

5677-1916

OUR SOCIAL SERVICE BUREAU.

It is a source of great satisfaction to us that Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, of Pittsburgh, has accepted the position of Direction of the Social Service Bureau of our Order. His record as a teacher in Israel and as a communal worker has been such as to justify the prediction that the work of directing the social activities of the bureau now created could not have been entrusted to a more earnest, zealous and competent gentleman.

The need of social service by Jews and for Jews is impressing itself upon us with compelling force. It is in keeping with the policy of the Order which has made of it the most potent organization for ministering to the needs of our less favorably situated co-religionists that in addition to our manifold activities this new service has been undertaken by the Order. Social service among the Jews is as old as all the other branches of charity organized and maintained by Jewish communities. But just as methods of philanthropic activity have been improved about us, so also the imperative need of the personal service along social lines has imposed itself upon the attention of mankind and with it new methods have been evolved which the Jew has been quick to learn and apply.

Social service recognizes the presence of social evils which it proceeds to remove. Just as in medicine we are learning that much more important than the healing of diseases is the prevention thereof, so likewise in the sphere of the ills that attend human society it is becoming recognized that they can best be stamped out by forethought and timely action before the evil manifests itself. Social service is social hygiene. The aim of the social worker is to lift the man and the woman and the child out of darkness and squalor to light and decency. We recognize that viciousness is bred in unwholesome conditions of life. We realize that the children of the poor need their diversions as much as the children of the rich, that the boy and girl will and do seek amusement, and that when these boys and girls are taken hold of by the trained social worker they may be led to prefer refinement to vulgarity and to choose the recreations that upbuild body and soul rather than the pleasures that weaken and degrade. And so we create in the quarters of the poor [illegible] settlements, from which [illegible] radiated [illegible] h transforms [illegible] of the poor and makes [illegible] rather than unsightly lodging places. In the social settlement the useful citizen is trained to take his place worthily in the nation.

We have had Jewish centers for social service. But the trouble hitherto has been that the trained social worker in charge of these centers has failed to recognize the peculiar nature of the work that is pre-eminently his or hers. For the most part these men and women, zealous, eager, highly intelligent and self-sacrificing, received their training at the hands of non-Jews. They have shown themselves deficient in attachment to Judaism. Religion is tabooed in the Jewish social settlement or at best just tolerated. Now it should be clear that when we are dealing with the immigrant Jew who is usually the socially ill-situated Jew we ought to try on the one hand to make of him a good American citizen and on the other a good Jew. To the extent indeed that he will be a good Jew will he be also a good citizen. The children come from modest homes that are Jewish. The parents brought their traditions with them. The change in conditions must necessarily bring about a rift between the older and younger generation. To heal this rift, not to widen it, must be the task of the social worker. To do this they must possess themselves of a knowledge of things Jewish and of sentiments Jewish. The good man is an abstraction, just as the good religion is an abstraction. We want to be good Americans, good Jews. The child must be taught to keep Passover as well as the Fourth of July. Judaism is not antagonistic to Americanism, but on the contrary most helpful to it. If we want those of whom we assume the spiritual care to thrive spiritually, we must build upon the foundations which we find in their homes, and these foundations are Jewish. We must lead them back to Judaism rather than estrange them from it. What we want to build up is the harmonious character, but there can be no room for harmony which begins with a divided conscience. There can be no greater service done by our Director both to Judaism and to this Order, which has always worked for the interests of the Jew and of Judaism, than to undertake to train such workers as will be imbued with the spirit of Judaism and will recognize that in the Jewish associations they possess an anchorage for morality and decency and good citizenship. A new era will then have arrived in social work undertaken by Jews and for Jews and we entertain no doubt that as the beneficial results of the new undertaking will unfold themselves the step which we have taken will be acknowledged to have been at once timely and momentous in its potency. It is with us a new departure, and justified it shall be by the new point of view which we bring to bear upon it, new and yet old, for it is the time-honored and safe road of Judaizing our social service work that we intend to travel.

WE DO NOT DESPAIR.

To the many arraignments of Russia's brutal treatment of her Jewish citizens which have appeared in these editorial columns there was added last month the "Protest" submitted by Bro. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch and unanimously adopted by the Executive Committee of our Order at its session in Atlantic City. If American Jewry is called upon to protest repeatedly against Muscovite outrages, the blame rests solely upon the head of Russia. We shall gladly record the least concession to right and decency on the part of the Russian government. And we will record such concessions in a spirit of gratitude. But we shall never neglect to emphasize that nothing short of the complete removal of all disabilities is compatible with the inalienable rights of the Russian Jew, that what he asks for he has ground to demand as a matter of justice. We had grown callous to Russia's inhumanities. But when the war broke out and our co-religionists in Russia nobly and dutifully took part in the defense of Czar and country, when hundreds of thousands of Jewish young men were serving with the colors and dying in the battlefields, it was reasonable to expect that at a time when unity and concord should triumph over the discord born of religious intolerance and race hatred the government would show a kindly disposition to the Jewish people.

Our hope, alas, has been in vain. Russian barbarity has surpassed itself. With a cynicism of which only the Muscovite government is capable the Poles have been turned loose against their Jewish fellow-citizens. Whether the Poles, themselves struggling to free themselves from Russia's systematic oppression and suppression of their national life, will now be able to count upon the sympathy of the world, must be exceedingly problematic. At any rate in utter forgetfulness of the Jewish service to the cause of Polish emancipation in the past, the oppressed became oppressors: they libeled the Jew as a spy. And so the Russian government has proceeded to uproot the Jewish population of Poland and Lithuania and of all those provinces which have been invaded by the central empires, to banish them from their habitations and to transport them like cattle to strange places, often only to be sent back by the local authorities, to be tossed to and fro along the vast domains of the Russian empire. What hardships such wholesale uprooting must needs bring in its wake requires no elucidations. But harder than loss of property, aye than loss of life, is the indignity cast upon a loyal element of the citizenry of Russia, the fact that of all the multitudinous races that inhabit that unlucky land the Jews have been singled out for opprobrium and calumny. The Russian government has seen fit in dastardly perversion of truth to pronounce its Jewish subjects traitors.

Our quarrel has always been and still is with the Russian government. The Russian nation we pity. We take no sides in the struggle in which it is a participant. It has a right to its place in the sun and it has just as little right to an aggressive policy by which it would have more than what is coming to her. We sympathize with the liberal aspirations of a large proportion of the Russian people for self-government. What the ultimate outcome will be is in the hands of Him who alone directs battles and gives victory or defeat in accordance with His holy will. But whatever the outcome we the Jewish people do not despair. We are inured to harsh treatment, to persecutions petty or far-reaching. We have tasted of the bitter cup of cruelty for thousands of years. We have stood firm all these centuries and we have witnessed momentous transformations in the destinies of nations. We have outlived our tormentors. We do not take our troubles light-heartedly indeed. We fully realize the weight of the calamity and the sting of the indignity. But there is that in us which helps us defy evil, that spirit of buoyancy and resilience which is our endowment and our weapon of defence, the spirit of hope born of the consciousness that on our side is right and justice and that no nation that wilfully tramples them under foot can succeed. The public opinion of Western Europe and America will be with us when Russia's actions are brought to its notice. The time will come when Russia will be called to account. The cause of our unfortunate brethren in that eastern empire must find an advocate in the councils of the West. We do not despair. We are confident that truth and justice will prevail. Out of the present mad struggle peace must ultimately issue forth, and when the affairs of the great and the little nations will come up for readjustment we have no misgivings that the fate of Russian Jewry will be decided in a manner compatible with right. Out of distress cometh relief, out of darkness light. When Israel sufferings are greatest, redemption is nearest.

THE HEROIC DEATH OF A BEN B'RITH.

Many prominent members of the bar and members of the B'nai B'rith lodges of the city of Berlin, Germany, recently assembled in the crematorium of that city to attend the obsequies of the advocate Alfred Story, who fell on the battlefield near Gorlice. The deceased was a partner of Brother Timendorfer, the Privy Counselor of Justice. Brother Story enjoyed the highest respect of the court authorities and was a favorite with his clients. He was a zealous member of Berthold Auerbach Lodge No. 338, of Berlin, of which he was president when yet a very young man and as such he rendered good service to the Berlin lodges. At the outbreak of the war he voluntarily joined the army. In Belgium, where he was a long time in garrison, he was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant of infantry and then sent to Poland to fight in the great drive which was then undertaken against Russia.

Near Gorlice he fell as a hero on the field of honor, while he was rushing at the head of his column to bring aid to his next company which was being hard pressed. His brothers brought his body to Berlin and according to his wish it was cremated in the city crematory. Rabbi Dr. Blumenthal delivered the funeral oration, in which he gave expression to deep felt words of remembrance and of parting. He especially reminded his listeners how devotedly the deceased served with him in the Board of Administration of the vacation colonies for Jewish children and how happy he was when he saw the children invigorated and made more able to face the duties of life. Brother Timendorfer and Dr. Jacobsohn also spoke words of respect and affection for the departed associate and friend.

The memory of the righteous is a blessing.

ADALBERT SKALL.

Brother Adalbert Skall of Prague, a member of the Executive Committee of the Order representing the District, died after a lengthy sickness. He labored hard and conscientiously to spread the tenets of the B'nai B'rith within his District, and it was due to his many efforts that the Order is so well represented there.

NAT STRAUSS HONORED.

Mr. Nat Strauss of New Orleans, for more than a quarter of a century Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 7, was presented with a handsome token of appreciation by members of the Grand Lodge and the New Orleans lodges at his residence on Friday evening, Sept. 10, 1915. The occasion selected was the 81st birthday anniversary of Mr. Strauss and he was surrounded by his relatives and friends quietly celebrating the event when the members of the Order walked in and surprised him with the gift. The gift is a fine product of the silver and goldsmith's art. It is a silver laurel wreath and enclosed therein near the top is a gold Menorah and at the bottom of the wreath is a gold monogram of the recipient. In the middle of the wreath is a silver tablet engraved with a copy of the resolution adopted by District Grand Lodge No. 7 at its last convention, on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of his services as secretary of the Grand Lodge.

Mr. Archibald A. Marx, Second Vice-President of the Order, made the presentation address, in which he referred with deep feeling to the long and faithful service of Mr. Strauss. He was followed by Mr. Chas. Rosen and others who conveyed greetings on behalf of various institutions. Mr. Strauss replied to the presentation address, expressing his regret that on account of his age he is prevented from doing as much as he would like to do for the Order.

MR. HENRY J. DANNENBAUM HONORED.

Mr. Henry J. Dannenbaum of Houston, Texas, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, and one of the most prominent and active workers in the Order, was appointed Judge of the Sixty-first Civil District Court by Governor Ferguson of Texas. Mr. Dannenbaum is one of the best known men among the Jewry of the South and the honor conferred upon him reflects credit upon Jewry in general.

FAREWELL TESTIMONIAL TO RABBI COFFEE.

A large gathering of members attended the farewell testimonial arranged by Ibn Gabirol Lodge No. 114 of Pittsburgh to its President, Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 10th. The program included music and addresses and at its close refreshments were served.

DR. MAX SAMFIELD.

Rabbi Max Samfield, who for more than 44 years has been rabbi at Memphis, Tenn., died on Sept. 28th in that city after a brief illness. Rabbi Samfield was born in Bavaria and received his rabbinical training in that country. He came to the U. S. in 1867 and served as rabbi at Shreveport, La., until 1871, when he accepted the call to Memphis. Dr. Samfield was one of the most prominent rabbis of the South and was active in all affairs pertaining to the welfare of the Jew. He was the founder of the Hebrew Relief Association and the Y. M. H. A. of Memphis, a member of the Board of Governors of the Hebrew Union College, a director of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, a director of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, and a supervisor of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. He was also one of the founders of the Tennessee Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and of the non-sectarian United Charities of Memphis. He was a most active Ben B'rith and held various offices within the gift of the lodge and the District Grand Lodge. His demise is a distinct loss to American Jewry.

THE DEATH OF A FAITHFUL BROTHER.

Brother Adolf Oppenheimer, a banker of Wiesbaden. Germany, died recently in that city. Brother Oppenheimer was a faithful Ben B'rith and has given much help in the founding of Rhenus Lodge in the city of Mainz. At his grave Rabbi Dr. Kolb and representatives of Jewish benevolent institutions spoke touching words of eulogy.

May his soul rest in peace.

A LOYAL JEWISH ARTIST.

Recently the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith began a campaign against a series of cartoons appearing under the name of Samuels and Sylenz, which were very objectionable to our coreligionists. These cartoons were the work of Mr. Bert Levy, a well-known Jewish artist, who hearing that they were distasteful to our people immediately wrote to Dr. Mendel Silber, editor of the New Orleans Jewish Ledger, promising to withdraw them.

The remarkable incident connected with this promise is that Mr. Levy gives up a twelve thousand dollars a year salary and pays a forfeit of twenty-two hundred dollars rather than be instrumental in doing that which would reflect unfavorable upon his fellow Jews.

When we have such men as Mr. Levy within the ranks of Israel we are willing to maintain the truth that the Jews are not as materialistic as our enemies would have the world believe, but that there are those who have attained eminence in their vocation that are willing to sacrifice their material welfare for the sake of their religion. Such men as Mr. Bert Levy are a pride and a glory to Israel—Jewish Review and Observer.

JEW IN RUSSIAN COUNCIL OF EMPIRE.

Representatives of commerce and industry have elected M. Weinstein, a Jewish merchant of Odessa, a member of the Council of Empire. He is the first Jew to sit in that Council, which is in the nature of the Upper House of the Russian Parliament, the Duma being the Lower House. It comprises an equal number of elected members and members nominated by the Czar. It has equal legislative power with the Duma. Twelve of its 48 elective members are chosen by the representatives of the houses of commerce and industry in the empire.

Mr. Weinstein attributes his success mainly to the fact that the anti-Semitic Polish and German electors did not participate in the election, because they are now under German rule. He was supported chiefly by the bourses of Southern Russia, Volhynia and Siberia. He also declared that he would support the liberal parties and champion the Jewish cause in the Council.

The merchants of Rostov have recently nominated another Jew for the Council of Empire, M. Feldman, who has also a good chance of being elected.

ANTI-JEWISH RIOT IN ODESSA.

A censored report from Odessa received in London tells vaguely of an anti-Jewish riot that occurred on the Day of Atonement in Odessa. It seems that while the Jews were away in the synagogues a gang of hooligans attacked Jewish houses and shops. The Jews apparently came out to defend their property with the result that one Jew was killed and several wounded.

It is possible that the affair was much more serious than the report would indicate. The censorship in Russia is now very strict and the details of this attack were probably not permitted to be published.

Conference of Presidents of National Jewish Organizations

At the invitation of Mr. Adolf Kraus, President of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, twenty-two presidents of National Jewish organizations and institutions met on Sunday, Oct. 3, 1915, in the Hotel Astor, New York City. Mr. Adolf Kraus presided and Mr. A. B. Seelenfreund acted as secretary.

The purpose of the conference was to discuss what steps can best be taken toward obtaining for the Jews in countries abroad civic and religious rights at present denied to them. Incidentally it was hoped that it might be the means of bringing together the leaders of the so-called "Conference" and "Congress" movements.

The following were in attendance:

Louis D. Brandeis, Provisional Executive Committee for General Zionist Affairs.

Dr. Wm. Rosenau, Central Conference of American Rabbis.

Dr. Cyrus Adler, United Synagogue of America.

Samuel Dorf, Order B'rith Abraham.

J. Walter Freiberg, Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

Dr. Frank E. Rosenblatt, National Jewish Workingmen's Association.

Simon Miller, Jewish Publication Society.

Oscar S. Strauss, American Jewish Historical Society.

Prof. Dr. Solomon Schechter, Jewish Theological Seminary.

Emil Tausig, Independent Order Free Sons of Israel.

A. D. Katcher, Federation of Galician and Bucovinian Jews.

Louis Marshall, American Jewish Committee.

Leon Sanders, Independent Order B'rith Abraham.

Dr. L. S. Rubinsohn, Independent Order B'rith Sholom.

Dr. Harry Friedenwald, Federation of American Zionists.

Dr. Bernard Drachman, Union of Orthodox Hebrew Congregations of America.

Dr. J. L. Bluestone, The Mizrahi.

Rabbi M. S. Margolis, United Orthodox Rabbis of America.

Solomon Diamant, Federation of Roumanian Jews of America.

Judge Julian W. Mack, Council of Young Men's Hebrew Associations.

C. Carlinger, Federation of Russo-Polish Hebrews of America.

Adolf Kraus, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

The conference lasted from 10:00 in the morning until 7:00 in the evening, with a short intermission for luncheon.

The meeting was devoted to a frank and friendly discussion of the relative advantages and disadvantages respectively of a Congress or a Conference or of holding neither.

All who spoke at the meeting were of opinion that at the opportune time the Jews of this country should, through concerted action, place before the proper authorities, national or international, as may be deemed best; their basic demand, that the Jews be awarded equal civil, political and religious liberty in countries where they are now oppressed.

No definite conclusion was reached. It was the general opinion that those present should confer further with one another informally.

When the meeting closed it was voted that the meeting adjourn subject to the call of the chairman.

Rev. Dr. Wm. Rosenau, one of the attendants at the Conference, says of the meeting:

"The relative values of Conference and Congress were discussed in the most friendly way. No definite conclusion was reached; the meeting therefore adjourned to be called again some weeks hence by Mr. Kraus, the president of the committee."

Asked what the Conference had accomplished, Dr. Harry Friedenwald, who represented the American Federation of Zionists, said:

"The Conference was a long and earnest one, and the differences of opinion were very sharly drawn. The result could not be gauged, for there was no vote taken on any of the questions involved. My own impression, however, was that the very frank statement of the issues on both sides coupled with the intense earnestness of all who spoke, led to a better understanding of opposing views.

"I do not believe that it is simply the result of the desire that I felt that all present had been brought much closer together and that there is much greater likelihood than before that 'any action taken by American Jewry will be concerted.' "

THE CAMPAIGN IN DISTRICT NO. 2.

By Samuel J. Kornhauser, President District Grand Lodge No. 2.

District No. 2, in its campaign for increased membership, just ended, has obtained three thousand and fifty new applications. This announcement is made not in any spirit of boasting nor of overweening pride, but solely with the view of pointing out to our sister Districts, to those in authority and to all our brethren what can be achieved by systematic effort, in the hope that our example may be emulated, and the Order raised to the position it ought to occupy. This extraordinary increase in numbers obtained within an incredibly brief period must be a source of keen satisfaction to every well wisher of the Order; a similar increase throughout all the Districts would multiply our gratification.

The plans for our campaign were framed last summer following the last meeting of the Grand Lodge. Feeling that our Order is the body best fitted, by reason of its fundamental purposes, its history, traditions and its machinery, to represent our people, convinced that to make our Order truly representative and decisively influential, we must first vastly augment our numbers, we determined to make an effort to obtain new recruits on a scale never hitherto attempted. Our expectations were regarded with undisguised skepticism and we received, in the beginning, scant encouragement for our schemes which were pronounced chimerical. Nevertheless we found a sufficient number of men willing to make the effort and it was not long till the early doubts were dissipated.

Our plans were simple. Every member of our Order knows that we have an ample basis for appeal to every right-minded Jew. Our task then was to bring that appeal forcibly to the minds and hearts of those whose names were not written on our rolls. Bro. Manny Strauss of Cincinnati, who had demonstrated his capacity to handle with exceptional efficiency the problems of systematic propaganda was selected to manage the details of the campaign. In each of the lodges where campaigns were to be conducted, a leader was selected, and under him ten captains each to command a team of ten men. Lists of eligible men were provided; communications were daily sent to these "armies" and every device that ingenuity could originate was employed to arouse the interest and stimulate the ambition of our volunteers to obtain new members. The period of the campaign, in its intensive features, was set for one week after due preparation had been made.

It was astonishing how soon enthusiasm was aroused, how a spirit of competition was instilled among the men engaged, how the cities in which the campaigns were conducted became alive with B'nai 'Brith activity. Members who had formerly shown little or no interest in the Order suddenly became zealous workers; men who neither knew or cared about what we are, began to inquire about the organization that was attracting so much notice. The number of applications grew, and each day at noon during the campaign the captains and team members met to hand in their applications, discuss further plans, and to listen to addresses calculated to maintain their interest and excite new effort. Many interesting and amusing stories might be told of the amount of time and energy given by these workers. During that week they had no opportunity to follow their usual course of life, but impelled by an influence that could not be evaded, they gave every hour they could steal from business and rest, by day and by night, to the work they had undertaken. And thus came to the lodges of District No. 2, three thousand and fifty new applicants. Nor is that all; for additional members will continue to flow in, the movement having gained such force that it will continue of its own motion.

I cannot do more than touch upon the details, and wish merely to point out that every problem that may be encountered in the other districts has been met in ours. In a small community like St. Joseph, Mo., there was an increase of seventy-five; in Dayton, Ohio, where the effects of the flood have not yet been outlived, the number of applicants is one hundred and seventy-five; Indianapolis, two hundred; Denver, with its numerous poor, one hundred and thirty; Kansas City, Mo., four hundred and eighty-five, a remarkable achievement, when the number of its Jewish population is considered; Cleveland with a membership of five hundred and sixty-five, obtained eight hundred and fifty applications; and the two lodges in St. Louis which had a combined membership of eight hundred and twenty ended their campaign with one thousand and seventy-five new men to initiate.

What has been accomplished by these lodges can be done by every other lodge in the Order. In this District, embarking upon the project with doubts and misgivings, our men, now that the campaign has ended, assert that we have only scratched the surface, and their judgment in this is well warranted. If the plans as outlined are followed throughout the American Districts, there is no doubt that we can raise our membership to One Hundred Thousand. It has been demonstrated that this can be done and we shall fall short of our duty if we fail to do all that in our power lies. Apart from merely swelling our numbers, the benefits which flow from these campaigns are incalculable. Not only is the Ben B'rith aroused to a stronger and deeper attachment to the Order, but every Jewish activity is stimulated and strengthened. That which calls forth fealty to Jewish ideals inures not only to the benefit of our Order, but as well to that of our congregations, our philanthropic organizations, our citizenship, our every activity. It should be our ambition to make our Order the chief factor for the accomplishment of those broad and paramount purposes for which it was founded. If we would place in the hands of our leaders the power to wield an overwhelming influence for good let us strive to give their words and their works the backing of an hundred thousand earnest Jews. Then will the Order B'nai B'rith be equipped to embark upon a new era of usefulness, of benefit to our people and to all mankind.

It can never again be said that this object is impossible of accomplishment. The question will not be, "Can we reach the goal?" but rather, "Why do we not reach that which is within our grasp?" And as for District No. 2, it can contemplate no greater satisfaction that could fall to its lot than that which it would derive from a repetition in every District in the Union of its achievement toward the building up of the Order.

TRADES UNION CONGRESS AND RIGHTS FOR JEWS.

The Trades Union Congress of England, at a recent convention held at Bristol, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"That this Congress fervently hopes that civil and political rights will be granted to the Jews of those countries where these common rights are at present denied to them, in recognition for the great sacrifices the best manhood of Jewry is making on the side of the Allies in our common fight for the liberties of the world, and that the Parliamentary Committee shall petition the British Government to use its good offices in that direction when the opportunity will arise."

THE POSITION OF THE JEWISH EXILES.

The Jewish exiles from Riga and the neighboring towns are still wandering from place to place. They were first sent to Ekaterinoslav, but the governor there refused to admit them because the towns in that province were already overcrowded with refugees. They were then transported to Tambov, but there also the governor refused them admittance. They were then brought back to Ekaterinoslov and left to settle in the fields in improvised huts.

All Jewish refugees who arrived in provinces of Kieff and Tchernigov have received orders to remove to the provinces of Tambov and Pensa, in the interior of Russia.

PROMINENCE OF JEWS IN VARIOUS ACTIVITIES OF THE WAR.

The head of the British Hospital Fund Committee was Lord Rothschild, a Jew.

The head of the British Finance Commission, just arrived in America, is Baron Reading, the Lord Chief Justice of England, born Isaacs, a Jew.

The Kaiser has put the management of the entire railway system of Germany under the supreme control of Herr Ballin, creator of the great German merchant marine, who is a Jew.

In France the Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, General Heymann, who has been put in command of a French army corps, is a Jew.

In Turkey the Supreme Military Commander, Enver Bey, who has just received the order Pour La Merite from the Kaiser for his signal successes in defending the Dardanelles, is a Jew.

In Italy the Foreign Minister, Baron Sonnino, is a Jew.

THE NEW MUNICIPALITY OF WARSAW.

The new Municipal Council of Warsaw consists of twelve Germans, twelve Poles and six Jews. The latter represent the interests of the Polish Jews who remained in the city, the Russian Jews who had resided there, as well as those who had connections with Russia, having left the city before the arrival of the invaders.

The Social Message of the Prophets

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

With the limitations which we set to ourselves in the previous paper we may now proceed to an examination in detail of the social message of the Hebrew prophets. We are dealing with heroic figures, great personalities. They stand forth like peaks in a mountain range—solitary, majestic. There were prophets and prophets in Israel, but those whose utterances the Synagogue cherished are the true prophets. There were prophets among the neighboring peoples and in the pagan cults outside Israel. There were the prophets of Baal whom Jezebel imported into Israel, enthusiasts who, like the dervishes of Islam, danced about the altar of their god; they likewise cut themselves with knives and lances, till the blood gushed out upon them. Religious enthusiasm even with us is apt to partake of pathological character. A species of mental derangement is likely to ensue and often enough excesses and orgies of a questionable character result. Where the inner fire is lacking, stimuli are resorted to and with the average person they pass for genuine inspiration of which they are only the counterfeit.

As with all great movements, the beginnings of Israelitish prophecy are on a low level of psychic excitement. At the time of Saul, music and dancing were the accompaniments of prophecy. The symptoms are often those of derangement: to prophesy means to rave, and the man endowed with the spirit is in popular phraseology accounted a madman. Even when prophecy reached its highest forms, there still lingered a trace of those early associations. Note Elisha, who has recourse to music to stimulate his powers of vision; Ezekiel complains that he is taken by the people for a minstrel, one that hath a pleasant voice and can play well on an instrument. For Jeremiah the day of prophetic inspiration was a day of sickness. There were guilds of prophets, seminaries where the young enthusiast was taught the arts that went with his vocation. The prophet was naturally an orator; his rhapsodies were in measured verse. A native talent there must have been in all of them; but even native gifts of voice and gesture may be heightened by cultivation. Indeed the prophet must possess himself of more than an ordinary education: all of the devices of a noble rhetoric must be at his beck and call, and he must command the lore of the ancients, the sages and sacred traditions, the wisdom of the ages, and his speech is replete with allusions to a rich store of traditional facts and fancies.

But what marks the true prophets is that pathetic loneliness, the sense of isolation; when the hand of the Lord touches them, they sit alone, shunning the company of merrymakers, for how can they rejoice when the burden of their message is indignation? Amos refuses to be identified with the common prophets of the guilds: I am no prophet, neither am I one of the sons of the prophets, but I am a plain herdman. Micah knows himself at variance with the ordinary prophets who divine for money, who cry Peace so long as they are fed, but whoso putteth not into their mouths, they prepare war against him, who prophesy of wine and of strong drink, whereas he is full of the power of moral courage to declare unto Israel his sin. Among the pillars of society that shall be gone in the debacle of the state, Isaiah enumerates the various castes, such as the military, judicial and administrative: with the general and captain and judge and the honorable politician he classes the prophet and the cunning charmer and the skillful enchanter. Jeremiah condones the prophets of Samaria who prophesied by Baal and caused Israel to err; they were guilty of folly whereas the prophets of Jerusalem are gross adulterers and strengthen the hand of evil-doers with their lies. Ezekiel upbraids the lying prophets and prophetesses who follow their own spirit and have had no vision and hunt innocent souls. Zachariah in the [illegible] of prophecy hopes that the prophets and the unclean shall pass away from the land. But at a much earlier date there stands out at the court of the king the lonely figure of Micaiah, son of Imlah, who, when all the prophets predict success for the arms of the Israelitish king, alone is firm in his prophecy of evil, for he alone stood in the council of God and knew that the lying spirit has been directed to confound the prophets of Ahab that the king might [illegible] in battle.

[illegible] prophets were our prophets [illegible] well-meaning patriotic [illegible] who believed that it was [illegible] to swim against the current [illegible] was of the mob which they sustained and whose passions they fanned. A truer patriotism was that of our prophets who saw deeper and aimed higher, who lamented the national woe, who wept for their people's calamities, but who placed far above love of country and kindred the love of God and the right, who believed not that statecraft could override the conscience, and who readily sacrificed the interests of national independence that right might prevail, whose motto was "let justice have her sway, though the world perish." That theirs was a truer patriotism we know today. It is they that saved Israel from destruction in the sweeping catastrophe that befell petty nations. The kingdoms of the idols perished, the people of God survived.

Great as these personalities were, they rest in an order of things which was not of their making. They do not represent themselves as innovators but as reformers, if you please, as restorers and repristinators of an older order of things. If far simpler than our present-day civilization, the conditions amidst which they lived were, nevertheless, of great complexity. There was an ordered government, more stable in the South than in the North. The division of the two parts of Palestine was not of such a nature as to cause a rift in the national consciousness which was one. The nation had not only been united in the days of Saul and David and Solomon, but back of the heroic period lay the memories of common effort, the common deliverance from Egyptian bondage. The whole nation had entered into the covenant beyond the confines of their present home. "By a prophet the Lord brought Israel up, and by a prophet was he kept." Disruption was favored by the business of the conquest and by the natural configuration of the mountainous country.

There ensued a supreme struggle between the indigenous civilization of the Amorite and the desert traditions which the conquerers brought with them. There was for a time acute danger that the Lord who revealed Himself to the fathers might take on the nature of a Baal. The Baal cult was interwoven with the life of the rural population. The Canaanite looked unto Baal for the dew and the rain, without which the crops could not mature. Israel took over the Canaanite sanctuaries and the Lord was identified with the local Baal, who was believed to inhabit the tree and the stone. In the sequel, Israel was on the point of succumbing to the allurements of the Syrians and Assyrians from the East and of the Philistines from the West. Impure worship and impure accessories were penetrating the royal sanctuaries in Bethel and Jerusalem. From this acute submersion the prophets rescued Israel. They harked back to the desert times when Israel was wooed and won by the Lord. They turned the nation from the track of losing itself into the ancient paths of a distinct individuality. They revealed to Israel his vocation and recalled him to his truer self. They made him realize his potencies for the service of mankind. Return, turn upon yourselves, is the watchword of them all, is the quintessence of the prophetic message.

This is the common ground upon which they all stand, but with it there is enough of individuality of temper and style and the impress of originality which makes of every one of them a distinct personality. And one more word: they speak in the name of God, in the name of religion, but religion, or as they express themselves, the knowledge of God, means to them the right relations between man and man, between nation and nation.

They are not addressing an impious community, impious in the churchly sense. They find religion a vital interest of the people, but it is to their thinking of the wrong kind. They stand somewhat aloof from the official piety that a purer and more inward worship may take the place thereof. Just as they combat their own colleagues of the humdrum sort, so they come into repeated collision with the vested interests of the priesthood. If the priests are become venal and corrupt, they hold up the ideal of the true priesthood. "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and the people should seek instruction at his mouth." For such was the forefather Levi, an ideal figure: "The law of truth was in his mouth, and uprightcousness was not found in his lips: he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from sin." Sin was for the common man, as it is still largely with us today, markedly in the sphere of religious transgression, and as religion concerned itself more tangibly with ritual matters, sin meant ritual trespass. A man might in a state of uncleanness partake of consecrated food or commit a trespass in misappropriating holy things, and so on. Of course, where a ritual exists, wilful or unconscious deviation from it involves an element of moral turpitude: it touches the conscience, and no expiatory sacrifice will avail if confession do not precede, and confession is the purifying act of a guilty conscience.

Organized piety of whatsoever description means a training-ground for the human conscience. Add that atoning sacrifices were required when the guilt meant a rash vow or failure to keep a promise or robbing and stealing, and sin, while still conceived as a religious offence, comes nearer a civic misdemeanor. Nevertheless sin was externalized by its association with atoning rite of a somewhat mechanical character and the priests are accused by the Prophet Hosea of encouraging, as it were, the people to sin that their revenues may be assured. It goes without saying that the accusation has in it an element of exaggeration, and while it may have been true of this or the other priest, the priesthood as a class were far above such practices. Think, nevertheless, of the wide gulf between the priestly teaching and the popular estimate. Think of Roman indulgences and Luther's invectives. you will then understand what the prophetic reformation meant in those far-off days, how indeed the prophets were anathematized and inveighed against as destroyers of religion. They did reform the popular religion, root and branch, for destroy it they could not. But their aim was more radical, nothing short of doing away with sacrifices and outward ceremony once and for all. If in the days of Amos and Hosea multitudinous scrolls existed on matters of priestly law, Amos pointed out that during the forty years of wandering no sacrifices were offered at all, and yet that was the ideal period of the nation's life and religion, and Hosea declared that sacrifices were an inferior mode of divine service. Isaiah chides the people for their lip worship, the fear of God being turned into a commandment of men learned by rote, and he sees no purpose in the multitude of their sacrifices, in their trampling the courts of the temple, in their new moons and appointed seasons. Micah suggests that thousands of rams and ten thousands of rivers of oil will not please the Lord and rejects the abominable practice of child sacrifice. Jeremiah considers the possession of a written law ineffective—in vain hath wrought the false pen of the scribes; a new covenant unlike that of the exodus and a new law written in the people's inward parts were needed; yea, he denies, that at the time of the exodus sacrifices were enjoined. No wonder that the prophets with the pronounced radicalism abhorring circuitous roads and all manner of indirection found themselves in isolation, but it is this splendid isolation that marks them off as the great teachers of morality and their influence as prodders of conscience is still with us today.

JEWISH STUDENT CONGREGATION OF THE U. OF M.

All Jewish students of the University of Michigan who expect to return this year, as well as Jewish young men and women beginning their scholastic work at that institution, are urgently requested to affiliate themselves at the opening of the fall semester, with the Jewish Student Congregation of the U. of M. They may send their names to the supervising rabbi, Leo M. Franklin, Temple Beth El, Detroit, or the president, Mr. Edward Hoffman, 3710 Baltimore Ae., Kansas City, Mo.

Plans are under way to secure the services of a large number of men eminent in the Jewish ministry, to officiate at the weekly services of the Congregation, which are to be held each Sunday evening during the scholastic year at Newberry Hall. The officiating rabbis will include men of prominence in the Reform and in the more conservative congregations of America.

The purpose of the Congregation is to unite the Jewish student body of the University of Michigan along religious lines. During the two years of the Congregation's existence it has been a telling factor in the life not only of the Jewish students; it has as well, exerted a fine influence upon the entire student body. Its work has been received with noteworthy enthusiasm by the members of the University faculty.

This year services will be held in more commodious quarters than heretofore, and the ritual itself will be made more attractive by the introduction of congregational singing.

The scholastic year begins at the University of Michigan on October 5th, and the work of the Student Congregation will be resumed shortly thereafter.

RUSS SOLDIERY NONE TOO KIND TO POLISH JEWS.

We publish herewith extracts of a report by the Associated Press:

The Jews of Russian Poland appear to have suffered, prior to the Russian retirement, more than the normal amount of hardship imposed by war. An investigation by a correspondent of the Associated Press discloses that there was a rather promiscuous execution by the Russians of Jews accused of espionage, that many persons were subjected to assaults committed with knouts or flats of swords, and that in many places, chiefly out of the way villages and rural districts, there was some plundering of Jewish shops and houses by the Russian soldiery.

The correspondent visited the two chief cities of this district—Lodz and Piotrokow. The outstanding feature of every case investigated was that, in the words of one Jewish scholar, "nothing happened to the Jews without a previous denunciation." In some instances this feature of the case was immediately admitted; in others it was brought to light by further inquiry.

A typical case of the latter sort was that of a Jew named Kozlowski, a storekeeper at Malinitz. The story first told was this: When the Russians came to Malinitz in November they were angry because it had come to their ears that some Jew of the village had boasted that the Germans would make short work of the Russians. The Russians lined up all the male inhabitants and threatened to shoot them unless the man responsible for the words complained of were delivered up. Thereupon Kozlowski stepped forward, assumed responsibility, and was hanged.

The correspondent finally succeeded in having a talk with Kozlowski's son and his father. They said when the Russians first entered the village they asked for Kozlowski. He had been hidden by a friend, but was eventually found. He managed, however, to escape from the soldiers guarding him, and the commander of the Russian regiment thereupon had all male Jews drawn up in a line, and announced that all would be killed unless Kozlowski was delivered up. Kozlowski, informed of the threat, presented himself. He was taken away by a squad of soldiers and shot.

The Associated Press correspondent found many instances in which the victims were stood against walls and, instead of being killed by volley fires, as is usual in such executions, were killed by soldiers firing at will. Kozlowski appears to have been executed in the same manner, after having been bound to a tree.

Polish denunciations, according to witnesses, were responsible for the only three cases of atrocity found in Lodz itself. Russian soldiers came to the home of Abraham Kochan on the Baluter market in November and took him away. His wife was prevented from following him. The man's body was later found outside the city.

Israel Blockmann, an old man, told how the Russians took his son from the house and how the body was found two days later outside the city. He had been shot and bayoneted.

There was some plundering of small shops in Lodz by Russian soldiers, but it appears to have been limited. Some Jews told of cases where their countrymen had been badly beaten in the streets.

Jews in Piotrokow said there were three days of plundering and rioting by Russian soldiers there, in which Jews generally were clubbed and whipped. Seventeen of the city's prominent Jews were banished to Viatka. Seven hundred male Jews, it is declared, were assembled at the railway station and the Russians announced that every tenth man was to be shot. The local Russian pope (priest) knelt before the men with a cross and defied the soldiers to shoot. None of the Jews was executed.

Six Jews are said to have been hanged at Suliojeff, charged with laying in supplies for the Germans. Twenty-six are alleged to have been taken away from Brzczyn, of whom thirteen were afterward found dead and the other thirteen not again heard of.

Six Jews, including a rabbi, are alleged to have been hanged at Subota because they had harbored German soldiers. At Slupci a man named Hoffmann is said to have been robbed and then killed while defending his wife; eight Jews to have been shot at Vloshova, charged with supplying provisions to German soldiers; a rich Jew at Novo-Radomsk to have been compelled to pay 2.000 rubles to ransom his daughter from Russian soldiers.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

It is reported from Constantinople that the Minister of War has published an announcement in which he expresses the thanks of the government to the Jewish societies in Germany, who collected for Turkey more than 100,000 marks and sent 47 wagons of medicines, medical instruments and field kitchens.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, September 20, 1915.

Sir George Birdwood is one of our most experienced Indian ex-administrators, and is, besides, a man who has grasped the inwardness of the spirit of the East. He told a story recently of his early experiences in that part of the world. It was in March, 1856, and a number of gunboats were proceeding along the Shat-el-Arab (the junction of the Tigris with the Euphrates) to bombard Mohamerah. On the road an Arab pilot was taken on board and Sir George fell into conversation with him. The Arab, "a dear old gentleman," told his new acquaintance of Ibrahim, "the Friend of God," and the Princess Sarah, and pointed out the position of Ur of the Chaldees. Sir George was greatly interested in the speaker, and in his zeal urged him to become a Christian. What followed is best told in his own words. "It is hard to turn a Semitic monotheist into Aryan, and particularly a Hellenized Aryan polytheist; and so, at the last, I, very stupidly, put forward the Scots economic argument of the superiority of Christendom in material civilization as shown in our steamships and railways and electric telegraphs being a proof that Christians were more favored of God than Muslims. Looking over the deck of the Ajdaha, already cleared for action, he replied: 'These piles of shot and shell, and that 96-pounder, and that yawning mortar, are they proofs of the superior favor of God toward you or of the devil (Shaitan)?' I argued with him no more that day, and have never since pressed the point on any one—Muslim or Jew!"

* * *

That surely sums up the present deplorable war from the point of view of religion. Does it not sound as a travesty of religion when one of the belligerents is constantly calling on God? "Our old God," forsooth! It is taking God's name in vain as never before in all history. But the whole business rather suggests the bankruptcy of effective Christianity. It is true that the forthcoming Church Congress in England will occupy itself with the war in relation to life as a whole. It will deal with (1) a renewed nation, morally, socially, and economically; (2) a renewed world, and (3) a renewed church. But it all takes the war for granted. We wonder if a Christian protest against war and its workers will be heard at the congress, and a sound condemnation of writers on the continent of Europe who glorify the slaughter.

* * *

Yet men turn to religion for comfort in time of trouble and stress, and men surely go to religion for comfort now. They say the churches are fuller; they tell us that life is more earnest. This must hold good for Jews and Gentiles alike. On the High Festivals that have just passed the synagogues were certainly well filled. Whether more so than in other years it is difficult to say. For the Jew is always serious in the Penitential season. Nevertheless many a one must have been moved when on the greatest day in the year, on Kippur, a memorial prayer was offered up for those fallen in the war. Let us hope that "friend" and "foe" were included in the prayer, and Jew and non-Jew equally. Let us hope that the spirit in those solemn moments was like that which manifested itself at New College in the University of Oxford. The College authorities decided to erect a memorial tablet in the College Chapel on which was inscribed the names of members of the foundation who had laid down their lives for their country. In the list future generations will find included the names of two Germans who have fallen for their Fatherland. It was a fine spirit to arrange it so; a fit reply to the Hymn of Hate.

* * *

But not the dead only received attention; the living, too, were given their meed of praise. On the New Year, as well as on Kippur, many men in khaki were to be seen in the synagogues. In some of them the Mitzvot were distributed by a senior officer and the recipients of the honors were all soldiers. On the former festival nearly every synagogue in London welcomed the Jewish members of the army, and the words of encouragement and the spirit of hearty friendliness will be long remembered. In many instances the local mayor attended in state at the synagogue to witness and take part in the welcome, and the Lord Mayor of London was present at a service on the Day of Antonement in the East End. This joining of hands, this amicability, is undoubtedly a fine thing. May it grow. One's only regret is that it was necessary to have a war before men would learn it. But anyhow it is very needful—in England less possibly than elsewhere. The British Empire comprises so many races and languages and religions, and all who dwell within its borders are fellow-subjects. Yet even in England there has been a closer approach of different and differing elements. How much more needful, however, will this self-same spirit be in Germany, in Austria, in Russia! Let us be grateful for small mercies; we Jews require as many as we can obtain. That is why, to say the least, it was good to find the year's Trades Union Congress, one fraught with so much that was significant, passing unanimously a resolution in favor of rights for Jews. The wording is too important to be passed over. Here it is:

"That this Congress fervently hopes that civil and political rights will be granted to the Jews of those countries where these common rights are at present denied to them, in recognition of the great sacrifices the best manhood of Jewry is making on the sides of the Allies in our common fight for the liberties of the world, and that the Parliamentary Committee shall petition the British Government to use its good offices in that direction when the opportunity will arise."

* * *

In the London community the event of the last month has been the great welcome given to Corporal Issy Smith, the second Jew to obtain a Victoria Cross. (This decoration differs from its Iron prototype in that its bestowal is not so widespread.) The award was made "for the most conspicuous bravery on April 26th, 1915, near Ypres, when he left his company on his own initiative and went well forward toward the enemy's position to assist a severely wounded man, whom he carried a distance of 250 yards into safety, whilst exposed the whole time to heavy machine-gun and rifle fire. Subsequently Corporal Smith displayed great gallantry, when the casualties were very heavy, in voluntarily assisting to bring in many more wounded men throughout the day, and attending to them with the greatest devotion to duty regardless of personal risk." Corporal Smith, who is still alive to tell the tale, is an East End boy.

* * *

But all this is connected with the war. Internally the community has undergone little changes. Those who are responsible for the erection of a Jewish hospital have decided to go ahead with the scheme and begin building. The movement when it first started met with a good deal of opposition. Now that opposition is not very determined, partly because greater things occupy men's minds, partly too because at the present juncture the more available hospitals there are, alas! the better. Before long, therefore, London will have its Jewish Hospital, and no one can deny that it will be of great usefulness. The question of support will clearly be a trying one. But the promoters have confidence in the future. And who can build without confidence?

* * *

Apart from the Jewish Hospital scheme there is nothing new to relate of the internal affairs of the community. Our charitable institutions go their way as of yore; our synagogues are prayed in; our schools continue to impart secular and Jewish knowledge. But into the midst of this idyll a bomb-shell came bursting—a Jewish Minister resigned his post! Never was heard such a terrible crash. Anglo-Jewish Ministers as a body are smugly and snugly content to jog along (there are exceptions, of course). The men of the older generation (leaving out the few exceptions again) have taken root, and the force of habit has grown upon them. If ever they were dissatisfied the disaffection vanished with the years. There was wife and children and social position to consider; and after all, if they did their duty as prescribed by their communities (in London the United Synagogue) their lot was not so unbearable after all. In the words of the poem, "their's not to reason why, their's not to make reply, their's but to do and die." And here comes one of them and resigns. A striking thing in any event. But where must this occur but in one of the most select of congregations—the New West End Synagogue in London! The force of it was considerably strengthened. But more than that. There have been cases on record where Rabbis or Ministers resigned their "curacies" because, for private reasons, they resolved to become plain Bal Habatim. Fortunately, as Judaism has no priestly caste, there was nothing remarkable in these cases if and when they occurred. But we are speaking of something very different. Here was a minister who gave up his post as a protest against unsatisfactory conditions which, though he tried, he could not alter. The minister in question is Dr. Joseph Hochman, and we are glad to claim him as a member of the First Lodge of England, and, therefore, of the Order. For he has done something that was courageous, something that may lead to the removal of crying abuses. We say may lead; for the only criticism that may be leveled against Dr. Hochman is that this is not a particularly propitious moment for calling attention to urgent communal reforms. People are too much occupied with other things. Everybody knows that when the war is over—it will be over one day—all manner of changes are bound to come about in the general European outlook on life. Dr. Hochman, as we know, has been dissatisfied for a long time; he might have waited a bit longer. There is a time for everything, so the wise man of Ecclesiastes taught. He must have meant a right time. We are not sure that Dr. Hochman has chosen his time aright. But his action is splendid. It is a pity only that he has marred it somewhat by hot-headed expressions of opinion in wrong quarters. It is true, he has expressed contrition. But what is done is done.

* * *

Briefly, the position is somewhat as follows: The "orthodox" or conservative section of the Jewish community in London is organized in the United Synagogue, an institution formed by Act of Parliament and, therefore, ended or mended only by the same authority. Its constitution is rigid, its prescriptions narrow, its financial machinery questionable. It was all very well two generations ago. Today it is behind the times. One thing above all it ought to allow—the greater freedom of action within its bounds. Now Dr. Hochman slowly realized the cramping, vicious effect of the United Synagogue, one of whose ministers he was, and he strove to get them improved. Needless to say, he failed. Failure engendered discouragement, and discouragement led to resignation. It is a thousand pities that petty personalities should have crept into the scene. Dr. Hochman worked obviously to call attention to a communal weakness. That, then, should have been the question to look at. And in very truth, it is a large question. Will anyone submit that our communal life is healthy and vigotous? Will anyone assert that our Synagogues are centers of communal activities, as in America? Take one illustration: In all the London (United Synagogue) Synagogues save one there is no library, and in the one where there is the precious collection is locked from one year's end to the other. Intellectual movements, charitable movements, social movements arise outside the Synagogues. All that flourishes in connection with them is—not even prayer, but the burial of corpses. It was against this atrophy that Dr. Hochman wanted to protest; it was this death-in-life that he desired, if we understand him aright, to call attention to and, if possible, to remove. For removable it is. It needs but will-power. In the meantime we understand that Dr. Hochman has enlisted in the army!

* * *

Whether we shall hear more about the whole matter remains to be seen. But the general communal position is not without promise. A Society for Hebraic studies has been suggested and met with great favor. One of its objects is to publish a journal of Hebraic studies. and the supply means that there is a demand. No doubt the educational efforts of the last decade are making themselves felt today, both in providing readers as well as writers for the proposed journal. Time was when England was a Sahara for Jewish scholarship, with an oasis here and there. Today that is no longer true; and the new society is not without significance. When the war is over even more in the way of spreading Jewish learning will be possible. The men are there, and we are glad to be able to report that a large majority of them are members of the London Lodge. One in particular we would mention on this occasion, only because he happens to have published a book which is a true delight. We refer to Dr. M. Gaster, the learned Haham, and his "Rumanian Bird and Beast Stories." Dr. Gaster is at home in many fields of knowledge, but he is certainly at his best when he is dealing with fairytales; and his latest work is in his finest vein. No wonder it has won universal praise. It deserves it. For sympathy, for tenderness, for poetry, for seeing into the heart of things we have read nothing better than this volume. The London Lodge may well be proud of its learned members and the learned members may well be proud of Dr. Gaster.

* * *

The Summer Recess is still with the London Lodge; our next meeting is not until towards the end of October. We look forward to a greater membership and further activities, of which due account shall be given in these columns. In conclusion today, we should like to place on record the pleasure afforded us by the Report of the Tenth General Convention, in San Francisco. Perhaps at the next we shall be formally represented. In the meantime the record of the Order's activities is an inspiration to us; above all, it helps us to realize that sense of large corporateness so essential in these days, helps us to feel more clearly that "all we are Brethren."

PERSECUTION OF THE RUSSIAN JEWS IN FRANCE.

(From the Muenchener Neuesten Nachrichten.)

During the last months Jew-baiting became constantly more conspicuous in Paris against the Russian Jews who live there is considerable numbers. Not only the pronounced anti-Semitic papers, but also a number of the leading journals, to flatter the chauvinistic feelings, fell upon the Russian Jews, who, by the way, are mostly workingmen who fled from the pogroms. Unequivocally the reproach was hurled against them that they, while the sons of France are bleeding to death, are leading the life of parasites, that they have fled from Russian military service in order to lessen the force of the allies and to make use of the opportunity, so to say as "inner enemies," to despoil France. And at the same time all the disreputable adventurers of all possible countries whom France shelters today were put down to the account of the Jews. In the whole French press, without exception, this Jew-baiting contiuually increased, and at last culminated in the demand to send these Jews back to Russia.

One day Gustave Herve uttered a word of protest in his "Guerre Sociale" of June 20, 1915. In this number Herve quoted one of the inciting comments from the "Petit Parisian," he answered it in a few words and published three letters. From that the particular facts were learned for the first time about the Jewish Legion, which up to that time had figured as "Slavic" division in the Foreign Legion. Right at the beginning of the war more than 4,000 Russian Jews presented themselves for service in the defence of the French flag in their conceivable wish to assist with all their might in the hour of distress the country which had given them an asylum. The fate of these 4,000 was fulfilled—they are no more. The Foreign Legion of whose formidable storm of death the report of the German general staff relates, was no other than the Jewish Legion.

During the time when the Jewish Legion bled to death the abuse of those who remained behind grew louder in Paris. One day a great number of Jews were cited before the commissariates where they were ordered in a categorical form to choose between enlisting in the Foreign Legion or being expelled. To the perplexed Jews, who knew of the outrageous treatment and the wretched end which had befallen the Jewish Legion and much more, were seized by a panic. Again there was nobody besides Herve who protested against this arbitrary act of the police which, of course, was supported by the anti-Semitic sheets.

Herve mentions in his article of defence the drama of "Carency," of which he, however, did not wish to speak for patriotic shame. Before Carency the Jewish soldiers protested against the outrageous treatment, and as answer nine were executed and eighteen sentenced to hard labor.

The intercession of the Jewish-Russo-Polish committee through the Socialistic deputies and the courageous press campaign of Herve, at last brought results. The Minister of the Interior promised a deputation to force nobody to join the military service or to expell anyone. This promise was confirmed by an official question and answer in the "Journal Officiel." To be sure, the Jewish quarter was by no means quieted by it, since they lost their confidence. The anti-Semitic agitation is being continued

The Jew in Medicine

Read Before Theo. Herzl Lodge, Sept. 14, 1915

By DR. A. TILZER

In choosing my subject, "The Jew in Medicine," as a subject of interest to the lodge, I am not actuated by any desire to especially exalt our co-religionists in the field of medicine, but rather to give them due credit for the wonderful work which they have done in the past, considering the enormous disadvantages under which they have labored, as far back as history teaches us.

It is generally admitted that in ancient days the Jews had virtually a monopoly on medical science, and some writers even claim that the early Christians, in their brutality and ignorance, absurdly believed that the Jews were the only ones possessed of the talent for medicine.

First and foremost, of course, I must mention our venerable teacher, Moses, whose immortal laws are primarily based on hygienic and sanitary principles which even to the present day are and have been unanimously endorsed by the entire medical profession.

You are all aware of the fact that the laws of Moses, with reference to the dietary conduct, are based primarily on cleanliness, and in all his prescriptions for the general conduct of the Jewish life cleanliness is the outstanding feature.

It is certainly superfluous for me to mention how Moses and the sages of the Mishna which succeeded him insist on the humane method of slaughtering animals; the inspection of the body for possible signs of disease, and the subsequent treatment of the flesh until it is partaken of as food.

Moses always puts the moral elements into the foreground, but guided and tempered by physical laws. The Mosaic hygiene takes cognizance of the influence of the stomach on the head and the head on the stomach. Hence the assertion is justified that hygiene is morality and morality is hygiene.

To illustrate the great stress laid upon the hygienic element in the cleaning of the hands, it appears, from a passage in Tract Sabbath (F. 128) according to which one should cut off his hands rather than touch the eyes with unclean fingers, or scratch the ear, etc., as that is liable to cause blindness in the one case, or bring about deafness in the other. Likewise we find in the same tract (F. 109), "that he who is in the habit of touching mouth or nose in the morning with unwashed hands is prone to become afflicted with polypi and offensive breath." (Ketub 771). According to Talmudic interpretation, a condition such as this, resulting from unclean hands, forms sufficient grounds for divorce.

The Jewish social hygiene instituted by Moses and practiced by his successors was invested with new life by Maimonides, based on the lines of the Jewish and Arabic civilization. He aimed to perpetuate the fruits of the intellectual labors of the prophets and Talmudists. His work, "Yad Hachazakah," consequently, contains the hygienic ordinances of the Torah, supplemented by precepts of his own, and those, adopted from other sources. In that code Maimonides embodies the entire health regime of man. The elementary principles of a rational hygiene, touching upon every phase of life, are made the laws obligatory upon all. Without leaving the religious grounds, in which the Jewish social hygiene is rooted, Maimonides, neverthless, dwells upon the value of health culture with a clearer comprehensiveness and emphasis than any of his predecessors were capable of doing. His work, "Yad Hachazakah," culminates in the conclusion "The cleanliness, health and vigor of the body is not its sufficient aim, but rather the first preparatory step to the moral and intellectual perfection of man." This code is undoubtedly one of the most interesting and eminent monuments of social hygienic legislation of all times and people. Indeed, there was probably never a health code issued to equal it.

While in the latter day many non-Jews have attained great fame in the field of medicine, none of them ever surpassed their Jewish confrerers in their scientific achievement. Rev. Madison C. Peters, one of the foremost admirers and defenders of the Jewish race, a non-Jew himself, who is pleading for justice to the Jew and in a book entitled by that name gives a highly interesting account of the achievements of the Jews in the various fields of the arts and sciences, and under the title of my subject amongst other things has to say about the Jew in medicine. As physicians, the Jews have always held peculiarly high positions. During the middle ages they were sought for all over the world so that even the [illegible] bulls against them and [illegible] their practice of medicine, [illegible] their bodies to the [illegible] Jewish physicians. While there [illegible] a king or queen in all Europe during the middle ages but employed Jewish physicians. He then goes on to mention the various Jewish physicians who in their day were called upon to attend the various Popes and royalties. Francis I, for instance, refused to employ Christian physicians, and when on sending to Spain for a Jewish physician he could not obtain any from there, he sent to Constantinople.

In Germany, Emperor Frederick III had as his physician, Jacob Ben Jechial Loans, upon whom he conferred Knighthood.

Maimonides was the physician of Saladin, and refused the invitation to be court physician to Richard Coeur de Lion. Many other prominent Jewish physicians are named by Mr. Peters, together with the exalted positions which they occupied in their days. Among the modern physicians he considered Traube (1818 to 1876) as second to none. The high regard in which he was held by the Germans is attested to by a splendid monument erected to his memory in the city of Berlin and located in the second Court of the Charite which, as far as I know, is the only Jew that has thus been honored in Germany.

Traube had spent almost a lifetime in experimental work, and published several volumes containing the results of his labors, which not only commanded the attention and admiration of the medical profession of his day, but also attracted the German government and influenced it to such an extent that high honors were showered upon him by the same. Not only was he appointed Geheimer medicinal Rat, but in 1862 he was appointed professor at the Prussian institution for army surgeons, and in 1872, he became extraordinary professor at the University of Berlin.

Another most prominent Jewish physician, and one who is still amongst the living is Professor James Israel, of Berlin, who by his prolific contributions to medical literature, having published more than 100 works on the various subjects pertaining to medicine, has attained to great eminence in the German capital. He, too, received honorary professorship, and it was he for whom the Czar of Russia issued his famous manifesto to permit the Jews to travel freely in Russia for a few days upon the occasion of the stabbing of his heir for whom he intended to enlist the services of Professor Israel.

In spite of the fact that the universities of Germany were closed to the Jews until 1847, twelve of the professorships in the University of Vienna are held today by Jews in the medical department alone. That in our own country Jewish physicians are very numerous and highly successful, is known to you, and it certainly would not serve any special purpose to mention a list of their names.

However, I may be permitted to mention a few of the most prominent ones who, even amongst the profession today, are considered head and shoulders above their contemporaries. First and foremost among them stands Abraham Jacobi, who in the fullness of years and honors showered upon him, has been named the "Father of the Profession of today," a man, enjoying the universal love and esteem of his enlightened fellows.

Next, I might mention, Simon Flexner and Jacques Loeb, two most brilliant representatives in the department of physiology and pathology. Another pillar of renown in the medical field highly honored by his confreres and appointed to prominent positions by our Government in both army and navy, is Jacob Da Solis Cohen, a brother of our own D. Solis Cohen. He was especially active during the Civil War, and as early as 1864 was visiting surgeon of two military hospitals in Philadelphia. He made a specialty of the diseases of the throat and lungs, and in 1902 was given honorable mention as the leading laryngologist. In 1882 he became honorary professor of laryngology in the Jefferson, one of the leading medical schools of our country. He, too, is a prolific writer and contributed many famous articles to the medical journals.

The honorable Professor Wm. Osler, another famous physician of our day, also a non-Jew, voices his sentiments and appreciation of the prominent Jewish physicians and the eminent work done by them in a highly interesting contribution under the title, "Israel and Medicine," which was published in the "Menorah" of June of the current year. Among other notable comments, he mentions the following:

Medicine in the Talmud.

It is a striking fact that there is no great Oriental name in science—not one to be put in the same class with Aristotle with Hippocrates, or with a score of Grecians. We do not go to the Bible for science, though we may go to Moses for instruction in some of the best methods in hygiene. Nor is the Talmud a fountain-head in which men seek inspiration to-day, as in the works of Aristotle. I do not forget the saying:

"In uns 'rem Talmud kann man Jedes lesen,
Und Alles ist schon einmal dagewesen."

With much of intense interest for the physician and in spite of some brave sayings about the value of science, there is not in it the spirit of Aristotle or of Galen. It is true we find there one of the earliest instances in literature of an accurate diagnosis confirmed by post mortem. A sheep of Rabbi Chabiba had paralysis of the hind legs. Rabbi Jemar diagnosed it ischias, or arthritis, but Rabbina, who was called in, said that the disease was in the spinal marrow. To settle the dispute, the sheep was killed and Rabbina's diagnosis was confirmed.

In a review of our Jewish celebrities in the medical field, the name of Maimonides stands out pre-eminently, and I do not think that it requires an apology to speak of him the second time in the same essay when quoting Prof. Osler's estimate of him:

Maimonides: Prince Among Physicians.

"But the prince among Jewish physicians whose fame as such has been overshadowed by his reputation as a Talmudist and philosopher is the Doctor Perplexorum—dux, director, demonstrator, neutrorum dubitantium et errantium!—Moses Maimonides.

"Cordova boasts of three of the greatest names in the history of Arabian medicine: Avenzoar, Albucasis and Averroes (Avenzoar is indeed claimed to be a Jew). Great as is the fame of Averroes, as the commentator and transmitter of Aristotle to scholastic Europe, his fame enhanced as the teacher and inspirer of Moses ben Maimon. Exiled from Spain, this great teacher became, in Egypt, the Thomas Aquinas of Jewry, the conciliator of the Bible and the Talmud with the philosophy of Aristotle. He remains one of Israel's great prophets, and, while devoted to theology and philosophy he was a distinguished and successful practitioner of medicine and the author of many works highly prized for nearly five centuries, some of which are still reprinted. He says pathetically: 'Although from my youth Torah was betrothed to me and continues to live by me as the wife of my youth, in whose love I find a constant delight, strange women whom I took at first into my house as her handmaids have become her rivals and absorbed part of my time." The spirit of the man is manifest in his famous prayer, one of the precious documents of our profession, worthy to be placed beside the Hippocratic oath. It ends with: 'In suffering let me always see only my fellow creature.'"

Summarizing his views and estimates of the achievements of our co-religionists in the field, he himself was mostly interested in, Prof. Osler, thus closes his contribution mentioned above.

"I have always had a warm affection for my Jewish students, and the friendship I have with them have been among the special pleasures of my life. Their success has always been a great gratification, as it has been the just reward of earnestness and tenacity of purpose, and devotion to high ideals in science; and, I may add, a dedication of themselves as practitioners to everything that could promote the welfare of their patients. In the medical profession the Jews had a long and honorable record and among no people is all that is best in our science and art more warmly appreciated; none in the community take more to heart the admonition of the son of Sirach, 'Give place to the physician, let him not go from thee, for thou hast need of him.'"

The press reported a few days ago the death of Prof. Paul Ehrlich who, in his discovery of the now famous 606 remedy, has built a memorial to himself which is considered a boon to the medical profession as well as to suffering humanity at large. The highly laudatory comments which accompanied the news of his demise is a testimonial to the high regard which he enjoyed in every civilized part of the globe.

If we cast a retrospective glance through the pages of history, we find nations have flourished and perished because they attempted to do things in defiance of natural laws. The Jewish nation alone flourished but never perished. Happy in its faith, happy in its knowledge, it knows no doubt; it is not rent atwain as a nation, by dissensions nor affected by discords in the universe. Every Jew entity, the widely scattered nation without a fatherland, without alliances, yet one great hand of intellectual brotherhood, Israel, always loyal to its duties, stands forth in the world of today, like an unmoved rock in the sea, because it follows out a natural plan in life's work, in relation to mind and body.

Let me conclude with the expression of Virchow: 'The physical welfare is the basis of all education and liberty.'"

THE TERRIBLE TALE OF KUSHI.

With the most dangerous threats the Russian anti-Semitic press trumpeted forth to the world for weeks in all variations the terrible tale of Kushi. The act of treason which was claimed to have been proven against the Jews of Kushi commenced to be almost like the Beilis affair, a watchword of the enemies of the Jews.

The greatest blame for it, however, belonged to the authorities. The organ of the Russian army, "Nash Vyestnik," spread the terrible tale of the Jewish treachery. According to the story told the Jews of the town of Kushi had concealed in their cellars many German soldiers and had let them loose when a Russian military division entered the town. In this way many Russian soldiers, among them Colonel Wawiloff, fell victims to the Jewish treachery. The Russians settled with the Jews in the right way. They meted out strict punishment to them, deporting a part of them to Siberia.

The official telegraph agency of Petrograd transmitted the whole accusation and its assumed consequences to all the Russian newspapers, and posted the same upon the pillars where all Russian official announcements are posted. All the Jew-baiting organs then opened brutal pogrom campaigns, and a fearful panic seized the Russian Jews. The Jews felt themselves compromised before the entire population as traitors. The name Kushi which a Jew hardly ever heard of before, now became a new disgrace to be hurled at the Jews.

Notwithstanding the many difficulties the Jews had the Kushi affair investigated locally, and established the following facts:

First: In Kushi, which is a village and not a town, there lived three Jews only.

Second: Neither Jew nor Christian inhabitant of Kushi ever owned any kind of a cellar. It is true that one Jew had some kind of a pit, but a man could hardly get down into it.

Third: A Colonel Wawilow was in fact never killed in Kushi.

Fourth: The Jews of Kushi were never beaten, nor hanged, nor deported to Siberia, but are in Riga, where they came as refugees with many other Jews.

To be sure, two officers were quartered in the house of a Jew named Kibart, but they were very much pleased with the Jews who furnished them with useful information. When in consequence of a bombardment by artillery the house of a Christian neighbor caught fire and the house of Kibart also commenced to burn, the officers tried to tranquilize the Jewish family and commanded the soldiers to help the Kibarts to remove things from the house. Such were the relations of the Jews to the military in Kushi.

How then did the legend, which caused the Jews to shiver, originate? It is asserted that a colonel who had the chief command at Kushi, found himself guilty of having permitted the enemy, by gross neglect on his part, to surprise his troops. To save himself from punishment he conceived the thought of using the Jews as scapegoats. So the fairy tale was born which being embellished with invented details furnished bloody material to anti-Semitic hearts. The terrible tale of Kushi is not yet banished from the world. In some churches masses are still being read for the repose of the soul of Colonel Wawiloff, who fell as a victim to Jewish treachery. Who knows whether those who were killed at Kushi will not soon live in the phantasy of the people as martyrs? For the pogrom apparatus still continues to do its work.

B'NAI B'RITH PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN IN ST. LOUIS.

The B'nai B'rith propaganda campaign, instituted by the local lodges, has ended successfully. One thousand new members have been acquired. The work of the campaign committee will culminate in the grand initiation and banquet to be given in honor of the "one thousand class" on Sunday afternoon, October 17th, at 5 o'clock. The initiation and banquet will take place at Moolah Temple, Lindell boulevard and Vandeventer avenue. The beautiful and impressive ritual of the B'nai B'rith will be rendered by a select and efficient degree team. This is to be a noteworthy occasion. Never before in the history of the St. Louis Jewish community has there been such a perfectly organized and mammoth campaign as the one that is about to be celebrated. The B'nai B'rith membership in St. Louis has been doubled. Every St. Louis Jew is proud of the achievement. Rabbi Leon Harrison will be the speaker of the evening. The president of the District Grand Lodge, Mr. Samuel J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, Ohio, will attend the celebration.

He who makes himself beloved by his fellow-creatures, makes himself acceptable to God.—The Talmud.

The Neutrality of the United States From the Standpoint of the American Jew

By MAURICE P. DAVIDSON

Address Delivered at the Hebrew Educational Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.

To the American Jew the neutrality of the United States in the present world conflict, presents a vital issue full of possibilities for the greatest good to humanity. Proud of his history and his achievements he believes that he sees in the consistent neutrality of the United States a means by which, upon the termination of the present war the cause of peace may be set upon a firm and lasting foundation, and as a necessary incident, a final and successful appeal may be made to the awakened conscience of the world on behalf of universal civil and religious liberty and equality for the Jew.

The American Jew, beyond and above all, is proud of his Americanism. He has played a part second to none in the upbuilding of this country. It should be remembered that men of his faith financed the enterprise of Columbus—that men of his faith accompanied him upon that historic voyage—and men of the same faith settled in New York, then under the rule of the Dutch, in 1637; in Maryland in 1634, in the Providence Plantation of Newport in 1657, and in Georgia in 1673. That the American Jew gave freely of his blood and of his treasure in the War of the Revolution. Indeed, it should not be forgotten that perhaps the greatest individual contributor to the treasury of the American Revolution was Haym Solomon, of Philadelphia, who gave six hundred thousand dollars in all to the cause of the United States, not one cent of which was ever repaid, and that his financial genius played a worthy part in the triumph of the American cause. The blood of the American Jew has mingled with that of his fellow citizens on the battlefields of the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, and should a foreign foe ever menace these beloved shores the American Jew will spring to the defense of his country, animated and inspired by the deeds and examples of his American forefathers and their undying faith in America and all that she stands for.

In war as well as in peace the Jew has demonstrated the utmost devotion to the ideals of the American commonwealth. His patriotism is beyond reproach. In the mind and the heart of the Jew Americanism and Judaism are one and inseparable. Gifted with the vision of a patriot he approves and endorses the policy of that great American, Woodrow Wilson, in proclaming and practicing strict neutrality in this crisis.

Recently President Wilson spoke these words:

"I need not tell you that the President by himself is absolutely nothing. The President is what the American nation sustains, and if it does not sustain him then his power is contemptible and insignificant. If I can speak for you and represent you and in some sense hand on the moral forces that you represent, then I am indeed powerful. If I cannot, then I am indeed weak. I shall hope and believe that I go away from here sustained as Bishop Candler has so generously said, by your prayers. I hope I shall feel that I am also sustained by your confidence."

He can absolutely rely upon a hearty response from all American Jews. But the patriotism of the American Jew is not of that narrow and misconceived kind which shouts: "My country, right or wrong," but rather of that noble and far-seeing kind, which ever prays: "God bless my country, may she always be right." And this is why he views this question not only as a lover of his country but as a lover of humanity, one who believes in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all mankind. And well may be do so! Has he not been ground in the crucible of the ages, has his spirit not been tempered and tested for four thousand years? He has run the gauntlet of all the nations in every period of human history and now, like one who has successfully climbed a mountain top, he well may view the phenomena of this world with a perception sharpened by long experience, not with bitterness, but with love and understanding. Fully agreeing with Sir John Lubbock, who said: "The real conquerors of the world indeed are not the generals but the thinkers; not Ghengis Khan and Apbar, Rameses or Alexander, but Confustius and Buddha, Aristotle, Plato and Christ. And he might have added Moses and the spiritual leaders of Israel.

It is for the reasons thus indicated that the spirit of the Jew is essentially cosmopolitan. How could a Jew be provincial? He is bound by ties of a common faith to French, English, the Italian, German, Russian and Austrian Jews, and in fact, Jews of all nationalities. This very fact expands his vision and makes it entirely natural for him to consider this question of neutrality from an international standpoint, from the standpoint of one who desires the regeneration and enlightenment of all the nations. "Why?" asks the Talmud: "Was there but one Adam in the beginning?" "In order that all men should have the same father and that one nation should not be able to say to another: "Our ancestors were richer or greater than thine."

In short, the American Jew aspires to the same goal so ardently desired by his ancestors four thousand years ago. It has been said that when the mitred Asyrian crushed the people beneath the wheel of his chariot of war the captive Jew yet dared to proclaim that the day was coming when peace and harmony would reign forever among the nations. And so history only repeats itself when an American Jew, Dr. Henry Moskowitz, now president of the Civil Service Commission of the City of New York, decries that false conception of patriotism which is the belief that the particular nation in which one accidentally happens to be born is the greatest nation of the world and must dominate all others. True, we do believe that the American nation is the greatest nation of the world, but primarily because of her great moral reserve force, great in righteousness and in the power to do and perform the works of righteousness. He has this conviction in all humility. And he would have America justify that faith. He recognizes that the neutrality of the United States at this critical juncture in the evolution of human history involves not merely a national but an international problem, not only the question of what is best for us but a broad altruistic impulse to do that which is best for his own fellow men. He believes that the maintenance of the strict neutrality under present conditions is essential to the future welfare of the human race, and the perpetuation of occidental civilization. Time was, as Leroy-Boileau said, when the Jew was accused not only of imperiling the religious and the traditional foundation of human society but also the national genius. Now, we have reason to hope that diffused among all the nations he may yet prove the cement to weld them together, and like the stone which the builder rejected, may become the head-stone of the corner.

This is the ideal of the Jew and for the realization of this ideal he sees in America the instrument of Providence.

Again and without hesitation or embarassment he views this question of American neutrality from a purely Jewish standpoint. For here where the Jew has reached his full stature, in this Land of the Free where the sun of equal opportunity has enabled him to expand and to increase and to develop, where as the oldest race on earth he has become rejuvenated, he does not forget that he is a Jew. Here where the Jew is found in the lowest as well as in the highest walks of life, where his spirit surges through all the pulsating arteries of American society, he reaches forth his arms to welcome his less fortunate brethren. He would share with them his good fortune. He would bring to them the blessings which he enjoys. He feels that the march of America, of a hundred million souls must swing like a resistless tide around the earth, liberating all the peoples, bringing salvation to all victims of superstition and persecution, and dissolving the artificial barriers erected by man and the natural barriers resulting from diversity of language. Can any American Jew be oblivious of the fact that at least five hundred thousand Jews are fighting in the opposing armies of Europe; that they are enlisted under every banner. He is proud indeed of the Jews of Germany, England, France and Austria, who in this clash of national interest are proving their patriotism. They are meeting the supreme test of nationality according to the light as they see it. But with what sadness does he regard the spectacle of the hundreds of thousands of Jewish soldiers in the armies of Russia. Shall it not be regarded as the very apotheosis of patriotism? That even in Russia a Jew should be a patriot, should feel that instinctive love which every man has for the home which shelters him, no matter how poor, and the land that nourishes him, no matter how grudgingly. Words are inadequate to measure that devotion of the Russian Jew which rises superior to what might be considered only a natural reaction against the outrages inflicted by a barbaric autocracy upon a helpless people. But alas, Russia is the only country that the Russian Jew knows or has experienced. After all, to him it is his country. He feels, that he is part of that country and that he is bound up with her destiny. On the face of these facts the American Jew may be neutral, but he cannot remain indifferent. Here is what has been termed the cockpit of the nations. In that portion of the earth's surface known as Galicia, Poland and East Prussia, one-third of all the Jews on earth are in the very midst of the contending forces. There murder, rapine and all the miseries of war are being most heavily visited upon the Jewish population. There we see a spectacle to shame humanity, for we find that while hundreds of thousands of Jewish soldiers are in the ranks, laying down their lives for Russia their helpless wives and children are being subjected to systematic persecution. It is as if in accordance with some diabolical plan it was determined to seize the opportunity and under the cover of the war to decimate people of Jewish faith. And after the war is over who will bind the wounds of the Jew? Who will help him to his feet then? Who is qualified for the task? Who better equipped and upon whom does the responsibility most heavily rest, if not upon the American Jew. We can understand that men should live and die for principle, but the bitterest satire of history is the spectacle that in the very vortex of the maelstrom the Russian Jew is fighting against his brothers. For them it is a fratricidal strife. Of them is may be said:

"We are the voices of the wandering wind
Which moan for rest and rest can never find,
Lo! As the wind is so is mortal life,
A moan, a sigh, a sob, a storm, a strife."

With these reflections in mind we turn to a consideration of the true meaning and significance of neutrality. We find that in international law neutrality is defined as the attitude and condition of a nation or state which does not take part directly or indirectly in a war between other states but maintains relations of amity with all the contending parties. On the other hand, neutrality does not mean indifference, for a nation may be very far from being indifferent and yet may observe strict neutrality by refraining from helping the one that it wishes to be victorious or hindering the one that it wishes to see defeated. Among the precious gifts to his country by George Washington was the doctrine laid down in his farewell address, which has been the guiding star of our nation ever since, when he cautioned his country to be friendly with all the nations of Europe but to have entangling alliances with none. And well may we say, with the psalmist: "Behold, a good doctrine has been given unto you, forsake it not." By virtue of the practice of this doctrine we stand today unhampered and in a position to direct our voice and our influence in the right direction when the right time comes. And that that time is coming no one may doubt. Far removed from the scene of strife our country is so situated that it has a better and saner perspective for the contemplation of the great events now transpiring. Moreover, the causes at the bottom of the mutual animosity of the warring nations and the objectives of their conflicting ambitions are entirely outside of our orbit. As a nation, so far as our material interests are concerned, there is no provocation nor inducement to make the U. S. swerve from her course of strict neutrality. The very fact that our nationality has been recruited from every nation under sun should give strength and determination to the maintenance of that neutrality. It has been well said that not England but all Europe is the mother country of the United States. Therefore, to be partisan is to be unneutral and to be unneutral is to be unpatriotic. On the other hand we do not view this matter as an outsider. We are one of the family of nations and we are not unmindful as a nation that in the highly develop state of modern industry the prosperity of all nations is dependent upon one another. But we know that the issues which are at stake are vital and fundamental and outweigh selfish considerations. Mighty events are brewing. The paramount question is: "What will become of that vaunted civilization of ours which has been reared by humanity after so many ages of toilsome sacrifice?" The world will never again be as it was before. At the close of hostilities the richest nations on earth will be drained of men, materials and money. If, as some think, peace will come only as a result of mutual exhaustion, this will only mean a breathing spell in preparation for another conflict, unless something more than a mere truce is concluded. We believe the time is coming when America will rise to the full height of her opportunity. She must be ready when the psychological moment comes, both by precept and by example, by the power of right—yea, and if necessary, by the power of might, to participate in the final councils. That is why, as we see it, the neutrality of the United States is not the result of indifference nor does it rest upon a narrow policy of natural self-interest. When the emergency comes America in thought, in purpose and in action must be, as Caesar's wife, "above suspicion." When Columbia enters the council room of the nations she must come clad in the stainless garments of peace and good will, and all the nations will bid her welcome. No aspersions will be cast upon her motives. Strong and unperturbed with undaunted mien and impartial eye, clothed in the garments of righteousness, her word will prevail for none will gainsay it. Then from the ashes of war will spring forth the phoenix of peace under whose wings all the troubled nations will be at rest. Then will be written a new bill of rights—a new Magna Charta for the nations. No one can say what form this will take, but it is certain that the moral force of America will be exerted in the direction of a federation of the nations which will guarantee the peaceful development of all the nations for all time. When this time comes out of the travail of the nations will be born a new spirit of nationality which will leap across the old boundaries and flower into a lasting international spirit of amity, understanding and good will. The Jew is an optimist and when that better day dawns for mankind the sons of the covenant will come into their own, the tribe of the weary breast and the wandering foot will at last be at rest. The influence of America already potent will prevail over all the nations of the earth and civil and religious libery will be proclaimed to all mankind. Then, indeed, will be achieved the golden time of which Tennyson spoke, when he said:

"Ah! When shall all men's good be each man's rule,
And universal peace lie like a shaft of light across the land,
And like a lane of beams athwart the sea,
Thro' all the circle of the golden year."

Proud of his spiritual heritage, glorying in his American citizenship, the American Jew is jealous of the honor of his country. Growing out of the experience of centuries is a better understanding of the blessings of liberty which the American Jew yearns to extend over those benighted lands where still stalks the ghastly spectre of the rack, the stake and the grave, those engines of ignorance and superstition. When America speaks the world will listen, for her accents will be divine. Then will the mission of Judaism be fulfilled, when on earth will be realized the common brotherhood of man and the common fatherhood of God. The maintenance of the neutrality of the United States stands and will continue to stand unshaken and unalterable.

"For the cause that lacks assistance, for the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance
And the good that we can do."

Joint Meeting of New York City Lodges

(Continued from Page 1)

Yonkers, and Dr. M. M. Stark, Julius Lewin, S. J. Friedlander, Myer L. Victorius, Nelson A. Bartow, P. Irving Grinberg, Philip Cohn, William H. Silk and Dr. M. H. Hazay, representing the Presidents of the Metropolitan lodges.

The District's guests of the evening were Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, and Bro. A. B. Seelenfreund, the Executive Secretary. President Herman Asher acted as Toastmaster. Secretary Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan said grace and the following brothers delivered appropriate speeches on the occasion: President Kraus, Executive Secretary A. B. Seelenfreund, Bro. Myron Sulzberger, Acting President of the Home, Bro. Harry Cutler, Chairman of the Immigration Commission, Bro. Joseph Levenson, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, Bro. Charles M. Stern, ex-President of the District, Bro. Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, ex-President of the District, and Bro. Dr. M. M. Stark, in behalf of the Presidents of the Metropolitan lodges.

The Committee in charge of the banquet and the joint meeting consisted of President Herman Asher, Bro. Joseph Levenson and Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan.

Extreme avarice almost always mistakes itself; there is no passion which more often deprives itself of its object, nor on which the present exercises so much power to the prejudice of the future.—Rochefoucauld.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ISIDOR STRAUSS LODGE, FT. WORTH, TEXAS.

The lodge was organized on June 13, 1902, with a membership of 22, and originally bore the name of Elias Sanger Lodge, but it was subsequently changed to its present name,

In 1904, when the removal of Jews from the congested cities of the southwest was undertaken by the Industrial Removal Office, the lodge was instrumental in settling many families in Ft. Worth. Through the efforts of different committees appointed by the lodge these removal cases were made self-sustaining.

The lodge contributes liberally to the following charitable institutions: The Orphans' Home of New Orleans, the Denver Consumptive Hospital, the Jewish Consumptive Relief Society of Denver, the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital, the National Farm School, the Immigrant Aid Society, and the Hebrew Relief Society.

The membership of the lodge has gradually increased until it now has 160 members. The lodge is recognized as one of the strongest and most active of District No. 7.

Under the auspices of the lodge and with the co-operation of other organizations more than $2000 were collected from co-religionists of Ft. Worth on behalf of the Jewish sufferers in Europe.

HAMBURG.

The commission for the welfare work of the German-Jewish community, the sister auxiliaries of Steinthal Lodge No. 649 and Henry Jones Lodge No. 367, of Hamburg, the Jewish Women's Benevolent Society, the Women's Society of the Zionistic Local Groups, the Society for the Feeding of Needy Jewish Children and the Society for the Care of the Health of Weak Jewish Children have established a "Vacation Colony Society for Jewish Children," of which Head Teacher Miss Marcus is president and Dr. R. Pels, secretary. The representatives of the individual societies subscribed liberal amounts and outsiders, who were interested in the cause, also contributed considerable sums, so that the financial foundation was fully made secure.

The vacation society had rented an idyllic location on the Alster in Fuehlsbuettel, with accommodations for a dining room and for shelter during unfavorable weather. Several hundred children were given a chance to enjoy a vacation of five weeks in the fresh county air. They were in the open air, under supervision, as much as possible and were often taken on excursions into remoter parts of the vicinity.

The B'nai B'rith Jewish Training School of Beelitz, Germany.

The work of instruction at the Jewish Training School for mentally defective children, "Wilhelm-Auguste-Victoria," at Beelitz, has lately met with great difficulties. Two assistant teachers and the instructors in manual training were drafted into the army in the beginning of the war. But thanks to the pedagogic assistance of the wife of the superintendent, the instruction continued in the regular way. The institution has even been enlarged by the addition of a new building to the boys' wing, which gives more room for instruction and for the admission of fourteen more boys. The new building is to contain an apprentice department to give the older pupils the opportunity to prepare themselves for an independent trade. But at present the [illegible] of suitable crafts are all serving in the field, the new rooms will be used for [illegible] of an age fit for admission from 6 to 14 years. Many new applications have already been received, a fact which proves the great need of such an institution. In the past year the old rooms were occupied by 33 boys and 32 girls. During the seven years of its existence 67 [illegible], 29 boys and 38 girls were [illegible] and supported in the institution.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The first meeting of the new term held by Los Angeles No. 487 of Los Angeles on Thursday evening, Sept. 14th, was unusually well attended. The meeting was in the form of a smoker.

The following guests attended the meeting and delivered addresses: [illegible] Mayor; John [illegible] Superintendent of Schools; [illegible] City Attorney, and W [illegible] City Prosecutor.

JORDAN LODGE, NEW YORK.

On Thanksgiving Eve., November 24, 1915, at the Hotel Majestic, West 72nd Street, New York, Jordan Lodge No. 15 will tender a banquet to the President of the District, Bro. Herman Asher.

Brother Asher has been a member of Jordan Lodge since becoming associated with the work of the Order and has occupied office within the Lodge for many years. He was first elected Warden and thereafter rose to the office of President of the Lodge; for a number of years he has been elected to the Grand Lodge as a representative of Jordan Lodge, and at the Convention held in the City of Worcester, Mass., last March, he was elected President of the District.

In honor of the event and as appreciation of the efforts of Bro. Asher, Jordan Lodge has made arrangements for this banquet on Thanksgiving Eve., to be followed by a reception and dance. Though the affair is given by Jordan Lodge, the attendance is not limited exclusively to members of the Lodge.

Members of other Lodges desiring to attend can communicate with Bro. Adolph Schwarzbaum, Sec'y No. 351 St. Nicholas Avenue, New York City.

CHANANIAH LODGE, NEW YORK.

The visit of Chananiah Lodge to the Home at Yonkers this year will long be remembered by all who attended. The program was of unusual excellence and was enjoyed by everybody present. Governor Henry Meyers, who acted as Chairman, spoke most sympathetically about our duties to our aged brethren. Bro. M. Oppenheimer, Chairman of the Arrangement Committee, spoke of the work of the Order. President Henry Weiss appealed to the brethren present to continue their interest in B'nai B'rith work. Bro. Victor Freitag spoke along the sames lines. Bro. Emanuel Stern delivered a splendid oration, and made a special appeal to the ladies present to join the Ladies' Auxiliary Society. He complimented the work done by the Ladies' Auxiliary Society in connection with the Home. Bro. Stern's earnest and eloquent appeal resulted in the gain of ten new members. Acting President Myron Sulzberger, in a happy manner, thanked all present for their labor of love in the interest of the Home.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.

July 25th of this year was an extraordinary day as far as Winnipeg Lodge is concerned, inasmuch as it was a day that was graced by the presence of two of the highest officers of the Order in the persons of Bro. B. J. Samuels, President of the D. G. L. No. 6, and Bro. A. B. Seelenfreund, the Secretary.

Considering that the visit was rather suddenly announced, the two events that took place on that day must be considered very successful indeed.

In the afternoon we had an initiation meeting at which thirteen candidates ewer initiated, the degree team being led by Brother Seelenfreund, who delivered the presidential addresses in a most impressive manner. The ceremony was followed by addresses on the activity and purposes of the Order by Bro. Samuels and Seelenfreund.

In the evening we had a very large public reception in honor of the guests in Talmud Torah Hall, where nearly one thousand people were assembled. Here again Bro. Samuels delivered a short address passing in review the history of the Order and its development and was followed by Brother Seelenfreund who in a more lengthy, convincing and yet comprehensive manner dwelt more largely on the manifold problems with which Jewry is confronted and the absolute necessity of dealing in a practical manner with them and at the same time emphasizing the many proofs the Order has given that it possesses an efficient organization to deal with the situation.

Both addresses have stimulated the members and have undoubtedly prepared a good field for gaining new members for the Lodge.

MENORAH LODGE, BALTIMORE, MD.

Menorah Lodge No. 771 of Baltimore, Md., held its regular monthly meeting in the vestry rooms of Har Sinai Synagogue on Sept. 28th. The meeting was well attended. Preparations were made for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Oct. 17th, at one of the local theaters, which meeting will be open to the public. The president of the lodge appointed the various standing committees for the ensuing term.

RIMMON LODGE, RICHMOND, VA.

The regular monthly meeting of Rimmon Lodge No. 68, of Richmond, Va., was held on Sunday, Sept. 19th in Temple Beth Ahabah, at which a large number of members was present. The committee on membership reported favorably or sixty-two applicants for membership, all of whom were elected.

At a called meeting of the Lodge on Sunday, Sept. 26th, a number of new members were initiated into the Order by a degree team which had made careful preparation for the work of initiation. After the meeting, Bro. E. N. Calisch, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, explained to the newly initiated members the purposes of the Order. Plans were reported for the Fiftieth Anniversary Celebration of the organization of the Lodge, which will be held Oct. 20, 1915, at the Jefferson Hotel Auditorium, and it is expected that at least five hundred people will be present on this occasion. Rimmon Lodge now has a membership of over two hundred, and is doing excellent work in this community.

JOSHUA LODGE OF PHILADELPHIA.

Plans are now on foot for a big celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the organization of Joshua Lodge, to take place some time in November.

At a special meeting of the Propaganda Committee it was decided to have a big demonstration and a banquet to follow a class initiation of sixty new members. The work that the local lodge of the B'nai B'rith is doing in prison reform and in the distribution of the immigrant will be dwelt upon by prominent men who are leading in the work.

Those present at the committee meeting besides President Obermayer, included the following officers: A. H. Simons, Hyman Josephs, Herman Levinson, A. L. Levi, Wolf Levinson and J. Solis-Cohen, Jr.

BAKERSFIELD, CAL.

On Sunday morning, Sept. 19th, Bakersfield Lodge No. 764 held a very enthusiastic meeting. The lodge had previously appointed a committee to take charge of the holiday services. At this meeting voluntary contributions were offered for the erection of a synagogue and the lodge feels confident that it will be but a short time before a Temple will be erected which will be an honor to the Jewry of Bakersfield.

RAMAH LODGE, CHICAGO.

The first meeting of the lodge after the vacation season was held on Monday evening, Sept. 13, 1915, at which more than 200 members and visiting brothers were in attendance. Special features of the meeting were installation of officers, initiation of a class of 13 candidates and a discussion on the syllabus submitted by the Director of Intellectual Advancement on the subject, "The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and other Jewish Organizations." Brothers A. B. Seelenfreund, Maurice Berkson and Henry S. Blum participated in the discussion. At the close of the meeting refreshments and cigars were served and a social hour was spent.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.

Dacotah Lodge No. 731 of Grand Forks, N. D., is planning interesting work for the coming season.

At the regular meeting of the lodge, held on Sept. 12th, Brother Sig. Wolff, delegate to the recent convention of the District Grand Lodge, submitted report of the proceedings. Following the report memorial services were held, at which Rev. Brother Benj. Papermaster delivered a prayer.

At the close of the meeting, Brother Geo. Papermaster addressed the lodge on the subject, "The Mission of the B'nai B'rith and Its Immortal Spirit."

BELLINGHAM, WASH.

On Sunday evening, Aug. 29th, a Women's Auxiliary to the local B'nai B'rith lodge was instituted. The installation ceremonies and musical entertainment, serving of refreshments and dancing, made the evening a memorable one for all those present, which included many out-of-town visitors. After the installation ceremonies the president of the local lodge, Brother L. Verstandig, addressed the gathering. He was followed by the Rabbi, Rev. Mr. Cohen, and others. A well prepared musical program concluded an enjoyable evening for those present.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND, ORE.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 held its first session after the summer vacation on September 14, 1915. A splendid program was prepared which included an address on "The Jew in Medicine," by Dr. A. Tilzer, and a humorous talk by Carl Reiter, manager of the Orpheum. A feature of the evening was also a boxing bout between members of the Building Association. Cigars and refreshments were served at the close of the meeting. Another feature of the meeting was the presentation of sixteen applications for membership.

The Daughters of the Covenant of the B'nai B'rith held their first fall meeting on September 14th, which was well attended. Enthusiasm prevailed throughout the meeting and many important matters were attended to. A vigorous campaign for new members will be instituted.

Theodore Herzl Lodge No. 314 held its regular meeting on October 12th at the B'nai B'rith Building. A class of twenty-five candidates was initiated.

At the meeting of Portland Lodge No. 416, held on October 5th, 1915, eleven applicants for membership were elected.

Portland Lodge will give its first dance of the season on October 19th. The affair promises to be a success, as members of the lodge are taking much interest in it.

Theodore Herzl Lodge No. 314 plans a grand entertainment during the middle of November.

A County Fair, under the auspices of the Portland B'nai B'rith Lodges, including the Ladies' Auxiliary and the B'nai B'rith Y. M. H. A., will be given on October 27th and 28th at the B'nai B'rith Building. It is intended to convert the entire building into one mammoth County Fair, having all the side shows and devices which contribute to the success of such an event.

The Daughters of the Covenant, Auxiliary of the Portland B'nai B'rith Lodges, gave its first of a series of entertainments for the benefit of their sick fund, on the afternoon of October 5th. The affair proved a great success.

Dr. W. F. Ogburn, professor Reed College, lectured on "View of Social Progress" on September 28th at the B'nai B'rith Building to the members of the Theodore Herzl Lodge. The lecture was enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

B'nai B'rith Day, an annual occasion set aside for observance by members of the Order, will be celebrated at the Golden Gate Park Stadium on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 17, 1915, with a festival for the young people, at which hundreds of members' children and inmates of institutions will be the special guests of the occasion.

Extensive preparations for the affair are being made by the Committee of Fifty, representing the San Francisco lodges, under whose auspices the event is to be given. There will be games and other attractions and an aviation exhibition is also planned.

Plans are progressing rapidly for the big kiddies' festival to be given on B'nai B'rith Day, Sunday, October 17, in the stadium of Golden Gate Park under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty. Invitations will be extended to the children of all members of the Order in San Francisco and Oakland and to the boys and girls of the Pacific Hebrew Orphan Asylum.

It is expected that an aviation exhibition will be a feature of the affair. There also will be games, athletics and other events, all calculated to please the youthful guests of the day.

The scheme of entertaining the kiddies instead of spending the day with a formal program of oratory and athletics was conceived by Grand President Harry K. Wolff, who asked the assistance of the Committee of Fifty. The Grand President is working hard for the success of the affair.

Columbia, Modin and Ophir auxiliaries, Daughters of the Covenant, are completing arrangements for their ball to be given October 10 at Pucketts Hall. Proceeds will be devoted to the philanthropic work of the auxiliaries and to the gymnasium fund.

In honor of Grand President Harry K. Wolff, a monster class initiation will be held in the B'nai B'rith building December 8th. The work will be performed by the crack degree team, which made its first appearance before the Constitution Grand Lodge at its recent convention here.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ST. LOUIS, MO.

A meeting of the captains and workers active in the St. Louis campaign for members was held at the Harburger Hall, St. Louis, on Sept. 26, 1915, on which occasion the tabulated reports showed an increase in membership of 1009 by the two lodges of that city.

At this meeting Brother Jacob Furth, Treasurer of the Order, spoke on the subject of "New Recruits" and what a great field is offered in the B'nai B'rith for philanthropic and educational work.

The workers at this meeting included the leader of the campaign, Mr. Manny Strauss of Cincinnati, W. R. Wiedenthal of Cleveland, Ralph Bamberger of Indianapolis, E. Silverman of St. Joseph, Mo., and J. Lazarus of Louisville.

After the reports of the captains and leaders of the campaign in their respective cities short addresses were made by various brothers reciting their experiences gathered in their respective campaigns. The meeting voted a resolution conveying the thanks and appreciation of the St. Louis lodges to Brother Manny Strauss for his activity in guiding the campaign, which has so successfully been brought to a close.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

An enthusiastic joint meeting of Abraham Lodge No. 89 and Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., was held at Park Avenue Temple in Bridgeport, Bro. Rev. Dr. Levy presiding. The meeting was honored with the presence of Brother Herman Asher, President of District No. 1; Bro. A. B. Seelenfreund, Executive Secretary of the Order; Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee; Bro. Joseph H. Ullman, Chairman of the State Board of Deputies of Connecticut; Brother Cohen, President of Abraham Lodge; Brother Stein, President of Harmony Lodge, and others prominent and active in the work of the Order. All of these brothers delivered able and inspiring addresses, which created new enthusiasm amongst the brethren in Bridgeport.

HOPE LODGE, STOCKTON, CAL.

Hope Lodge No. 126 has succeeded in winning the attention and interest of young Jewish men of the community and almost all of them have affiliated with the lodge. During the call for funds for the war sufferers abroad, the lodge succeeded in raising more than $600 in a very short period of time and since then it has been instrumental in sending $50 monthly to the relief fund.

The outing arranged by the lodge this summer, when all the Jews came together to carry out a literary and social program was a fitting close to the year's work of the lodge. Much of the success achieved was due to the splendid efforts of Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin.

WASHINGTON LODGE, NEW YORK.

On Wednesday evening, Nov. 3, 1915, a joint meeting of Washington and Edward Everett Lodges of New York City will be held to mark the return of the fraternal visit paid to Washington Lodge. The meeting will be the occasion of an exemplification of the ritual by the degree team of Washington Lodge in competition for the degree team prize offered by the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge.

Washington Lodge has received and paid more fraternal visits in the past few years than any other lodge in the metropolitan district.

INSTITUTION OF MONONGAHELA VALLEY LODGE AT MONESSEN, PA.

Monongahela Valley Lodge No. 776 was instituted on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 3, 1915, at Monessen, Pa. Mr. Louis Sulzbacher, Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 3, had charge of the installation ceremonies and was assisted by several members of Braddock Lodge.

Hon. A. C. Stein of Pittsburgh, a member of the State legislature, was the principal speaker on the occasion. He dwelt in his address on the possibilities for the Jewish people through the instrumentality of the Order. He was followed by other visiting members.

Following the institution of the Lodge, election and installation of officers was held and at the close of the ceremonies the members of the lodge and the invited guests enjoyed an informal banquet at the adjoining hotel. Among the prominent men from other cities of the District were Messrs. Louis Sulzbacher of Braddock, A. C. Stein of Pittsburgh, J. Lasdusky of Homestead, H. Friedman of McKeesport.

ACTIVITIES OF THE CENTRAL B'NAI B'RITH COUNCIL OF CHICAGO.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council, a membership campaign has been inaugurated, and it is expected that a large class of candidates will be secured during the coming fall months. The campaign is under the direct charge of a membership committee composed of some of the most prominent members of the Order. It is contemplated to hold a monster class initiation at the La Salle Hotel on the evening of Dec. 18, 1915, on which occasion also an entertainment will be arranged and buffet lunch served to all those attending the affair. Prominent members of the Order will address the gathering.

The Council has also arranged for a musical, to be followed by a dance, on the evening of Nov. 20th, which will take place at the large ball room of the La Salle Hotel and for which occasion some of the best professional talent of the city has been secured.

The annual B'nai B'rith Day celebration will be held on Saturday, Jan. 8, 1916, and will consist of a banquet, to be followed by a reception. The affair will be brought to a close with a ball.

On Feb. 19th the annual ball of the Council will be held at the Hotel La Salle and will be known as the Purim ball. Admission to the foregoing social evenings is restricted to members of the Order and admission will be by card only.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN IN CHICAGO.

A membership campaign, under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago representing the three local lodges, has been inaugurated at the beginning of this month with a view of securing a thousand new members of high standing in the community, the plan of campaign being followed much upon the lines inaugurated by Bro. Manny Strauss of Cincinnati, who has originated and is conducting the campaign in District No. 2. Ten teams composed of ten workers have been appointed and the captains of these teams are as follows: Dr. Harry A. Kraus, Edw. Menkin, Sig. Fish, Benj. J. Samuels, J. J. Gusfield, A. D. Weiner, Henry S. Blum, E. S. Glickauf, A. F. Mecklenberger and A. B. Seelenfreund. As a result of the first week's efforts, 192 candidates were secured, and it is confidently expected that before the campaign closes, the desired quota of one thousand new members will be an established fact.

Arrangements have been made for a monster class initiation and stag at the Hotel La Salle on Dec. 18th next, and prominent members of the Order are expected to address this gathering.

CLEVELAND LODGE.

A big campaign for members, under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 is on. The teams are holding daily meetings for the reception of applicants, and discussions of plans of the coming day's work. Great rivalry for leadership has developed. Speakers attend all the meetings and the outlook for a successful campaign is favorable.

A regular meeting of the Lodge was held on Sunday, Oct. 10th, on which occasion the totals of all the teams were announced.

The great banquet will be held on Oct. 24th, when addresses by prominent members of the Order will be delivered, and prizes awarded by the Lodge to the successful team.

GALVESTON APPRECIATES B'NAI B'RITH AID.

The good that the B'nai B'rith has done in securing prompt aid for the Galveston tidal wave sufferers is recognized and appreciated by no one more than by the Galveston Jewish community itself. This is evident from a message sent by Rabbi Henry Cohen to Mr. Archibald A. Marx of New Orleans, who headed the Relief Committee. In this message Rabbi Cohen said: "I wish to express on behalf of the Galveston Jewish community their indebtedness to your kind offices during their late trouble, assuring you that, thanks to the B'nai B'rith, they are on the road to rehabilitation."

So far, more than $10,000 has been secured by the Relief Committee at the head of which is Brother Archibald A. Marx of New Orleans, the Second Vice-President of the Order.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND AND THE JEWISH MEN'S ASSOCIATION TO UNITE.

On Thursday, Sept. 2d, the members of the Jewish Men's Association of Cleveland held a meeting at the Elks' Club at which a resolution was adopted favoring the proposed consolidation with Cleveland Lodge No. 16. The plan submitted by the joint committee embraces substantially the following points:

First, that all members of the Jewish Men's Association over 21 years of age shall become eligible for membership in the new lodge to be known as Cleveland Jewish Men's Association Lodge No. 16.

Second, those under 21 years of age shall become members of an auxiliary league which shall have equal power as the members of the Lodge in developing social features of the new organization.

Third, the lodge is to obtain immediately a home.

The meeting was addressed by Messrs. A. Lewenthal, Max E. Meisel and Martin A. Marks, all prominent members of Cleveland Lodge, advocating the amalgamation of the two organizations.

President A. A. Benesch of Cleveland Lodge appointed a committee of six to make inquiries and perfect arrangements for the securing of temporary quarters, and at the next meeting of the lodge a resolution to amalgamate, similar to the one adopted by the Jewish Men's Association, will be presented for final action.

INSTITUTION OF ANSHEN STERNE LODGE.

On Sunday, Sept. 19, 1915, Anshen Sterne Lodge No. 778 was instituted at Anniston, Ala., with a charter membership of 23. The organization of this lodge was effected through the efforts of Brother Frenkel of Talladega. Brother Engle of Birmingham, past president of Birmingham Lodge, represented the President of the District Grand Lodge as the installing officer.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

The recent joint meeting of Washington and Maccabee Lodges of New York City excelled all expectations. Not only was the attendance large, but the occasion for the joint meeting added greatly towards making it an "ideal" B'nai B'rith lodge meeting. Rev. Dr. Joe Blau delivered an address entitled "Jewish Religious Genius," which was enthusiastically received. Five new members were initiated by the degree team of Maccabee Lodge.

The Propaganda Committee of Maccabee Lodge No. 71 of New York City, under the leadership of Brother Wm. Klapp, is energetically at work. During the past month six applications for membership, all of professional men of high standing, were secured.

President Herman Asher, assisted by the Intellectual Advancement Committee, of which Brother Joseph Levenson is chairman, is bending every effort to increase the membership of the District. He is meeting with considerable success, especially in the smaller communities, where our coreligionists more or less know one another and come more into personal contact. President Asher is making frequent visits to the lodges and his earnest words are always listened to with attention and respect. President Asher has been authorized by the General Committee to offer prizes for excellence in degree team work. The following lodges have already expressed their willingness to enter the contest: Washington, Henry Jones, Manhattan and Worcester.

Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan of District No. 1 has organized a class in degree team work where attention will be given not only to the proper rendition of the ritual, but also to the historical, religious and ethical significance of the impressive ritual of the Order.

Brother Harry Cutler of Providence, R. I., member of the General Committee of District No. 1, has been appointed chairman of the Immigration Commission created by the Constitution Grand Lodge Convention in San Francisco, Cal.

Manhattan Lodge No. 156 will celebrate its forty-fifth anniversary next March.

Brother Myer L. Victorius has presented New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1 with a beautiful Menorah in memory of his late esteemed father, M. Victorius, who was a prominent and active member of that lodge.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee of the District held an interesting meeting Monday, Sept. 13, which was addressed by the president of the District, suggesting plans by which to increase the membership of the District.

The following lodges visited the Home for the Aged at Yonkers during the summer months and entertained royally the members of the Home and their friends: Manhattan, Washington, Maccabee, Hebron, Jordan and Chananiah. Brother Henry Meyers, who is chairman of the Entertainment Committee, presided over these entertainments.

Services on the Holidays were held at the Home at Yonkers and were attended not only by the members of the Home but also by some of the governors and friends of the Home. Rev. B. Lissauer conducted the services. Chairman William Asher of the Committee on Religious Services, who is a brother of the president of the District, has general charge of the services which he attends regularly.

Services have been arranged in memory of the late Jacob Cane, ex-president of the Home. The services are in charge of the following committee: Bro. William B. Koller, chairman, and Brothers Moses Minzesheimer, Henry Meyers, Abraham Anhalt and William Asher. The service will take place Oct. 24. Rehoboth Lodge No. 38 will, on that occasion, present a painting of the late Jacob Cane to the Home.

Chananiah Lodge No. 165 mourns the demise of Mayer Goldschmidt, who was much beloved by all brethren.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Louisville Lodge No. 14, of Louisville, Ky., is making arrangements for an extensive membership campaign this fall.

Gan Eden Lodge No. 110, of Terre Haute, Ind., held its regular meeting on September 5th, on which occasion Mr. Manny Strauss, of Cincinnati, addressed the lodge in the interest of obtaining a large increase in the membership of the lodge.

Cleveland Lodge No. 16 held its first meeting for the fall term of the year on Sunday, September 12, 1915. The meeting was largely attended as the proposed union of the lodge with the Jewish Men's Association was scheduled for discussion. The matter was carefully considered and was referred to a subcommittee for further investigation and final report at the next meeting of the lodge.

At the September meeting of Zion Lodge No. 62, of Columbus, Ohio, Brother Edw. Hemple, of Pittsburgh, an active and enthusiastic Ben B'rith, paid a visit to the lodge and addressed the members on the work of the Order.

Eshcol Lodge No. 55, of Dayton, Ohio, is arranging a banquet to be held on October 24, 1915, on which occasion a class of 100 candidates, recently secured, will be initiated.

Lexington Lodge No. 289, of Lexington, Ky., is experiencing a revival of interest among its members due to the propaganda campaign inaugurated by the chairman of the District campaign committee, Brother Manny Strauss. The lodge has been growing steadily in the past six months and at this time is securing a large number of candidates, which will be initiated at a banquet to be given in the near future.

A special meeting was held on September 26, 1915, by Missouri Lodge No. 22, of St. Louis. Mr. Manny Strauss, of Cincinnati, the guest in whose honor the meeting was called, is directing the membership campaign throughout District No. 2.

A celebration without precedent is scheduled to take place in St. Louis on Sunday evening, October 17th, on which date a class of over a thousand candidates will be initiated by the two St. Louis lodges. This will be preceded by a banquet, on which occasion Rabbi Leon Harrison will be the speaker of the evening and Samuel J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, will be one of the guests of honor.

A Jewish Immigration and Employment Bureau will be established at Dayton, Ohio, under the auspices of Eshcol Lodge of that city.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Joshua Lodge No. 23, of Philadelphia, resumed its activities for the fall and winter season at its regular meeting, held on September 14, 1915. At this meeting plans for the work under consideration were laid out and various committees were appointed.

The anniversary of the lodge will be celebrated in October, at which time it is expected to have a class initiation of fifty or more candidates.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

(Continued from Page 15)

Armstrong Lodge No. 770, of Kittanning, Pa., one of the recently instituted lodges of District No. 3, held an outing and on that occasion raised the sum of $300 for the Jewish war sufferers abroad.

A membership campaign is about to be started in Pittsburgh under the direction of Brother Edward Hemple, one of the active B'nai B'rith workers in that District.

The religious School conducted under the auspices of New Castle Lodge, of New Castle, Pa., started active work for the year on October 3rd under the superintendency of Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge No. 3.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 3 has made arrangements for the institution of Beaver Valley Lodge No. 777 on October 10th at Beaver Falls, Pa.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City, Utah, held the first meeting of the season on Sept. 7, 1915. The lodge resolved to donate a pearl emblem pin to the member whose efforts to increase the membership of the lodge proves most successful.

During the visit of Rabbi Montague N. A. Cohen of San Diego to San Francisco he attended a meeting of California Lodge No. 163 and addressed the members on the work of the Order.

Unity Lodge No. 273 of San Francisco helds its annual function on Sept. 28, 1915, at the California Building, Exposition Grounds. A committee arranged special features for the entertainment of the members and their friends.

Under the auspices of Bakersfield Lodge No. 764 of Bakersfield, Cal., the United Hebrew Congregation made the arrangements for observing the recent holidays which were most appropriate and were carried out in an impressive manner.

Samuel Lodge No. 668 of Vancouver, B. C., in union with its Ladies' Auxiliary has a combined membership of considerably over 200. The two organizations are furthering the splendid principles of the Order with loyal devotion.

Under the direction Mr. Harry K. Wolff, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, an employment bureau is being organized as a new activity of the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society at San Francisco.

For the purpose of establishing uniform regulations for ladies' auxiliaries to the B'nai B'rith in District No. 4, Grand President Harry K. Wolff has appointed a special committee to consider the subject in all its phases and to prepare the necessary laws.

Mr. Max Grossman, president of Samuel Lodge of Vancouver, B. C., visited the congregations of the city during divine services on Rosh Hashonah and made a stirring appeal for contributions to aid the suffering co-religionists in Russia.

Columbia, Modin and Ophir Auxiliaries to the San Francisco B'nai B'rith Lodges are making extensive preparations for their annual ball to be held on Oct. 10th. The proceeds will be devoted to philanthropic work of the auxiliaries and the lodges.

Los Angeles Lodge 487 of Los Angeles, Cal., is making arrangements for the establishment of a Woman's Auxiliary. A committee has been appointed to secure the names of such ladies who may be expected to welcome the formation of such an organization.

At a recent meeting of the lodge a committee of seven was appointed with power to establish a course of lectures.

The first meeting of the Ida Blum Strauss Ladies' Auxiliary of Abraham Geiger Lodge No. 423 of Spokane, Wash., was held on Sept. 16th. It was in the form of a reception and entertainment for the members of the Lodge and the ladies. The afternoon concluded in a card party, and serving of refreshments.

Bellingham Lodge No. 756 of Bellingham, Wash., held a well attended meeting on Sept. 26th. Much enthusiasm was displayed when the subject of religious teaching in public schools was brought up for discussion.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Bellingham Lodge gave an entertainment on Oct. 3d, 1915.

Bakersfield Lodge No. 764 of Bakersfield, Cal., will celebrate B'nai B'rith Day on Oct. 17th. Mr. Homer C. [illegible] will deliver an address on "Sunday School and its Methods."

Hildesheimer Auxiliary No. 303, Daughters of the Covenant, met on September 2nd in regular meeting, which was well attended. At the conclusion of the meeting the ladies served refreshments to the members of Hildesheimer Lodge which met in an adjoining hall.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

Menorah Lodge No. 771 of Baltimore, Md., is arranging to celebrate B'nai B'rith Day on Oct. 17th at the Temple of Har Sinai Congregation. Among the speakers and special guests who have been invited to attend are Hon. Simon Wolf of Washington, Hon. Morris A. Soper of Baltimore, Dr. Edw. N. Calisch of Richmond. The meeting will be open to the public.

The next convention of District Grand Lodge No. 5 will be held in the city of Savannah, Ga.

Rimmon Lodge No. 68 is making a determined effort for new membership. It recently secured a list of sixty applicants and is proceeding to initiate them. On Sunday night, Sept. 26th, a very interesting and well attended meeting was held at which a large group of candidates was initiated, the ceremonies being conducted by Dr. E. N. Calisch and Mr. Chas. Hutzler.

Rimmon Lodge is also preparing for a big celebration during the month of October. It will be fifty years old on Oct. 22d, and is combining the observance of B'nai B'rith Day with this Jubilee Anniversary and is going to have a very fine celebration on Wednesday night, Oct. 20th with a splendid program of oratory and music, to be followed by a banquet.

Under the auspices of Gate City Lodge No. 144 of Atlanta, Ga., a most pleasant vacation for the children, inmates of the Atlanta Jewish Orphans' Home, was held during the summer at Lakewood.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

At a meeting of Minnesota Lodge No. 157 of St. Paul, Minn., held on Sept. 13 1915, discussion was held on the question submitted by the Director of Intellectual Advancement of the District Grand Lodge as to the advisability of holding either a conference or a congress. The meeting was well attended and much interest was manifested in the discussion.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 6 held its regular meeting on Sunday, Sept. 26, 1915, at the La Salle Hotel. The sessions lasted from 10:00 o'clock in the morning until 5:00 in the afternoon. After disposition of all routine matters the question of Propaganda and Intellectual Advancement was taken up for consideration and arrangements were made for the launching of an extensive propaganda campaign throughout the District.

Under the auspices of Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521 of Omaha, a Social Service Committee has been organized and the different Jewish organizations of the city have been asked to co-operate with this committee to correct some of the conditions existing in the community.

Saginaw Lodge No. 636 of Saginaw, Mich., has arranged for a propaganda campaign in its community by the appointment of two teams headed by captains to canvass the entire Jewish community in an endeavor to secure all available material to increase the membership of the lodge.

Isaac Lodge No. 87 of Milwaukee, Wis., inaugurated the fall season on Oct. 7th with an enthusiastic meeting at which an entertainment program was carried out, including also the initiation of a class of candidates. The lodge is now at work preparing plans to inaugurate a membership campaign and teams will be appointed to compete for prizes for obtaining the largest number of applications.

Dacotah Lodge No. 731 of Grand Forks, N. D., through its Intellectual Advancement Committee, of which Bro. Papermaster is chairman, is arranging for a lecture course during the coming winter season. A special committee is also at work to prepare for the annual B'nai B'rith celebration, on which occasion some out-of-town speakers will be present to address the lodge.

Winnipeg Lodge No. 650 of Winnipeg, Canada, through its Propaganda Committee, of which Brother A. J. Abramovich is chairman, is arranging to launch an extensive membership campaign immediately after the high holidays. A campaign well organized in that city would bring at least one hundred good members in less than a month.

The Jewish congregation of Green Bay, Wis., has remitted to the Central Committee for the relief of Jewish sufferers the sum of $1,000. Much credit is due to the president, Mr. John Baum, for this accomplishment and he was greatly aided in his work by the officers and members of Green Bay Lodge No. 618.

Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 of Chicago held its first meeting of the season on Monday evening, Sept. 27, 1915. The program included installation of officers, initiation of candidates, also a discussion on the subject, "The B'nai B'rith and Other Organizations," led by Brothers Julius H. Meyer and A. F. Mecklenberger.

The fall and winter activities of Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., began with the regular meeting of the lodge held at the Hebrew Institute on Tuesday evening, Sept. 28, 1915. Plans were made for the winter and the subject submitted by the director of Intellectual Advancement was discussed by the members of the lodge. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served.

David Fish Lodge No. 130 of Chicago held a well attended meeting on Monday evening, Sept. 20, 1915. A class of candidates was initiated by the degree team of Central B'nai B'rith Council. consisting of Brothers Edw. Sonnenschein, A. B. Seelenfreund and A. Lefkow. The officers of the lodge were installed by the secretary of the Grand Lodge. At the conclusion of the regular order of business a discussion was held on the subject, "The B'nai B'rith and Other Organizations," and was participated in by Brothers Ben Samuels, Rabbi Cohon and A. B. Seelenfreund.

At a well attended meeting of Jacob H. Schiff Lodge No. 694 of Lansing, Mich., held on Sept. 19, 1915, a class of eight candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

Due to the efforts of Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer and Chas. Silberman of Des Moines a public meeting was held in Ottumwa, Iowa, with a view of interesting the Jewish community of that city to organize a B'nai B'rith lodge. Their efforts met with success and it is confidently expected that within the next few days a petition for a charter signed by about thirty of the prominent Jewish residents of Ottumwa will be filed with the Grand Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Clarksdale Lodge No. 660 of Clarksdale, Miss., gave a benefit ball on Sept. 27, 1915, at the Court House.

The New Orleans contributions to the Galveston relief fund exceeded the sum of $10,000.

District Grand Lodge No. 7 is arranging for the institution of a new Lodge of the Order in the city of Anniston, Ala. The name of the Lodge will be Anchen Sterne and will start up with a membership of 22.

Isadore Strauss Lodge No. 519 of Ft. Worth, Texas, is planning for an open meeting on Oct. 19. A musical program will be rendered and a discussion held on the question of "Which is More Desirable, a Jewish Congress or a Jewish Conference?" This is the first of a series of open meetings to be held each month.

DISTRICT NO. 10.

Dr. Edmund Kohn of Vienna, First Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 10, accompanied by a representative of the Israelitische Alliance of Austria, made a tour of Galicia to familiarize themselves with existing conditions there, and upon his return be submitted an exhaustive report wherein he states that the Russians acted worse than wild animals, that atrocities against inoffensive Jews, both men and women, were committed by the Russian hordes, and that it will take the united efforts of the Jewry of the world to bring relief so urgently needed to take care of the thousands of women and children before the cold weather sets in.

OUR VISITORS.

Some of the delegates to the Convention of the Constitution Grand Lodge, Independent Order B'nai B'rith visited our city. We had the opportunity to come in contact with them, to hear them express their opinions upon many phases of Judaism and B'nai B'rithism. Their earnestness, sincerity and thorough Jewish sentiment made a deep impression upon the hearers. Inspiration for Jewishness and fidelity for the high principles of B'nai B'rithism permeated those who were at these hearty deliberations. The very air was charged with the spirit of Jewish responsibility, Jewish solidarity and Jewish equality. We wish that such visits be more frequent in our city, that the Jewish soul be more often stirred towards the practice of the best and sublimest in Judaism.—Portland Jewish Tribune.

We have contended that one of the most serious faults of the B'nai B'rith leaders is that whenever occasion arises they invariably hitch the B'nai B'rith star to a tombstone and lovingly linger in the cemetery of the past. Dr. Hirsch very pointedly criticises this attitude on the part of the lodge orators and suggests that the tasks of yesterday have been well performed, so let's forget them and instead of wasting time in idle glorification of the past we should turn our attention to the duties of the present. We are utterly out of patience with the lodge orators who are absolutely without the slightest vision and insist on a stand-pat policy and bitterly resent any one who attempts to route them from their smug self-complacency.—Jewish Comment.

JUSTICE FOR THE JEW IN ALL LANDS.

The Jews as a race have tremendous interests in the terms of the peace that will follow the present war. But the way to conserve these interests is not by concerted action on the part of the race, but by the enlistment of all races and creeds in the cause on the broad ground of humanity.

When Russia's dishonoring of American passports held by Jews was treated simply as a Jewish question, no progress whatever was made. The treaty which Russia violated was abrogated only after the Evening Mail took up the issue as one that involved the honor of America, and when the demand of this newspaper that the flouting of the American flag be resented was backed by a nation-wide committee that included men of every race and creed.

When influential Jews prevent the holding of the international congress of all races that was called to meet in Berlin, preferring to handle the issue themselves, the fight for the liberties of the Roumanian Jews came to naught.

Now few of the countries involved in the present war accord to the Jews the full rights of citizenship and the liberty to live and work unhindered; in some of these lands the Jews are persecuted, deprived of all civil rights and systematically plundered.

This is a condition that concerns all humanity—that particularly concerns all America in this respect, namely, that the denial of fundamental rights to the Jews in other countries produces a larger volume of immigration into Americn than this country can comfortably digest.

It is therefore to the interest of America, both as the exponent of the broader humanity and as a matter of self-protection, to raise its voice in the peace conference, when that day arrives, and urge that conditions be made tolerable for Jews in all the countries involved in the negotiations.

But this voice should be the voice of America, not of the Jews in America, not of a Jewish congress, but for a truly representative emancipation committee in which all races and creeds are united in seeking justice for the Jew in all lands.—New York City Evening Mail.

A JEWISH GOVERNOR OF GEORGIA.

Mr. David Schneir disputes the statement that Gov. Moses Alexander of Idaho is the first Jewish governor of an American State. He writes to the "New York Evening Mail":

"I respectfully refer you to a book published in March, 1915, by the Rev. Madison C. Peters, entitled, 'The Jews who stood by Washington,' wherein, on page 30, the following appears:

"David Emanuel was the first Jew to hold the office of governor of one of the United States—Georgia. He was born in Pennsylvania, and settled in Burke County, Georgia, about 1768. From the very beginning of the American Revolution, he was a prominent figure on the patriots' side, as an able scout, a fearless soldier, and an important member of the executive council. Besides serving in the field, he was a member of the Assembly and county judge for a long time. Georgia was one of the battle grounds of the war and Emanuel served throughout the entire struggle. After the war he became president of the Senate, and March 3, 1801, sixth governor of Georgia. It is certain that the laws of that year, 1801, are signed David Emanuel, governor. Since that time, no Jew has served as governor of any state until the present Moses Alexander of Idaho.

"In view of recent occurrences in the state of Georgia, I would earnestly recommend the reading of this little book, so that those who are unacquainted with the facts, may learn what an important and vital part was played by the Jews in the early history of this nation, and especially during the war of the Revolution."—Modern View.

RUSSO-JEWISH COMMITTEE ABOLISHED.

The Russo-Jewish Committee of London, which was organized in 1882 as a result of the historic Guild Hall meeting in protest against anti-Jewish riots in Russia, has gone out of existence and its funds were handed over to the Jewish Board of Guardians. The committee has rendered much help to the Russian Jews, both during the period of the pogroms and also after that, during the period of Russian Jewish emigration. The first treasurer of the committee was Sir Samuel Montague, later Lord Swaythling. The reason for the step on the part of the Jewish leaders in England is quite obvious. Loyalty to England and to its allies forbids the existence of such an organization which is a constant reminder of Russia's barbarity.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS
BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY

Vol. VIII. NOVEMBER, 1915 No. 3

Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

The Duties and Obligations of the American Jew

By RABBI LEON HARRISON

Oration delivered at the 1000 Class Initiation by the St. Louis Lodges

It is a high privilege to address this august assemblage. It is phenomenal in these cold days of indifference to behold so vast a company of representative men gathered together to be initiated in a Jewish order, that shall promote the highest interests of their people, and the holy cause of God. To witness so notable an achievement is indeed an encouragement to all who labor for Jewish ideals. It is an inspiration such as our brethren have always called a "Kidduch Ha-shem," a sanctification of God's Name.

It would seem to indicate that the age of faith is not dead, that the Jewish heart in our breast is not withered, that there is still a great potential store of enthusiasm and devotion even in those seemingly apathetic. Fortunate indeed therefore is this superb demonstration in the face of existing conditions that peremptorily demand from us benevolence, brotherly love, and harmony, the vital principles of our Order; in an age that asks of us no less than to give ourselves when duty calls, in a task that might well appall weaker souls or hearts less stout and true. Auspicious indeed it is that this magnificent Order, that has crossed the ocean and belted the globe can tonight give an adequate answer to the demand made upon it by the crying needs of our times; the demand, assist the helpless, lead those too bewildered and distressed to find their way; be brotherhood energized; be a blessing.

For never since Jerusalem fell has such a catastrophe as this befallen Israel. Never since then until today have so many hundreds of thousands of Jews been violently uprooted from their native soil, and driven forth homeless and penniless; without a friend, without a refuge; without a hope. It is awful enough to contemplate the tragedy of Jew against Jew in the embattled armies, brethren in blood and faith slaughtering one another under divers flags. But especially is it a terrific spectacle to contemplate our brethren in the Russian war zone, swept by the hostile fires of both sides, driven from pillar to post by both contending armies; smitten by a calamity more awful than words can express, before which even imagination staggers.

It is for us therefore not simply to shudder in horror; not simply to denounce or to bewail; but to act helpfully and wisely. We who have arrived at our goal, who have struck root into a land of freedom, whose labors have been fruitful, may not feel like the tribes of Reuben, Gad and half Manesseh, that they will sit quiescent in the territory thus conquered, and allow their brethren to march on and struggle alone. That is surely not indicated by the self-sacrifice and generosity of the early generation arriving on these shores, and cheerfully shouldering vast subsequent burdens. Such selfish and cowardly indifference is not indicated by the presence of this great battalion of loyalty and enthusiasm more than thousand strong, rallying around the ancient insignia of Israel and breathing the olden words of self-dedication. But rather of these sons of promise, the great word of Joshua is true that was spoken to those recalcitrant tribes, soon to become pioneers and leaders. "But ye shall go before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valor, and help them."

For it is precisely because you of the B'nai B'rith have done so much that you are confidently expected to do more; that you are expected to go before your brethren, armed with every instrumentality of helpfulness, to relieve and sustain them. It is with utter confidence that such an appeal can be made to an organization whose chief reason for existence has been its wise and manifold philanthropy. It is this noble Order that was chiefly responsible for the inception and sustenance of the Denver National Home for the victims of the Great White Plague. It is the B'nai B'rith that kept alive the great Orphan Asylum at Cleveland during its years of struggle for existence. It is the B'nai B'rith that not only cares for the helpless child from the cradle upward, but that smoothes the pathway to the grave for the aged that have no other refuge; for the venerable sons and daughters of our people, that but for this kindly aid would have fallen by the wayside, with none to care for them in their declining years.

And it is therefore that we turn with a certain sense of assurance, to the heart that beats in the breast of the B'nai B'rith, in the face of the calamity that has not fallen upon all who bear the name of Jew. Soon a great wave of immigration will strike our land—these countless hosts of men and women, already torn away from their native soil, and constituting by their entrance into our country, a tragic problem that we must solve; a huge responsibility that we must shoulder. We see them now in hundreds of thousands, storm-driven and homeless. We see a nation pauperized and paralyzed; the Pale of Settlement, once their miserable refuge, conquered by the victorious German; its wretched Jewish denizens, now helpless wanderers without a refuge, with no friend in the hostile land they call their Fatherland, but their own poor kith and kin.

Under these conditions, it is a privilege to have wealth that one may give munificently. For how else does riches serve any man, save by giving him splendid opportunities for generous helpfulness? In this cruel emergency, it is a time to give, not only liberally, but self-sacrificingly. The rope that bound the candidates of tonight together in a single company, was but a material emblem of the tie that is stronger than countless cords, the tie that stretches from heart to heart beyond the seas. uniting all of Israel together; forgetful then of all selfish interests, like the regenerate tribes of Reuben, Gad and half Manasseh. Let us go before our brethren, armed with all possible resources and powers, all the mighty men of valor, and help them.

Armed we are to go before them, to lead and point the way. Armed then with what? Equipped with what?

How shall we furnish guidance, save as a Pillar of Fire by night, when the darkness is thickest, and the dawn seems most remote. Armed we must be in hours of darkness with the fear-dispelling, gloom-scattering power of light. It is that great emblem of our Order—the Menorah—that must symbolize for us this great duty. With what must we be armed, when we take our place in the vanguard of our people? Armed surely with intelligence, with culture; equipped to the fullest extent with the light of the mind. Wealth has its uses, and is not unworthy of honor when rightfully gotten, and worthily expended. But we are but too prone to idolatry of mere material possessions. This is natural enough for struggling pioneers, that have but the scantiest resources, and honor those that have early reached the goal they all are seeking. But it is alike an advance beyond this stage of progress, and a reversion to the sound and splendid ideals of our forefathers, to honor above all else sheer intellect, to value learning, to prize the possessor of noble and inspiring ideals. All this is typified by the Menorah; is illustrated and symbolized by the Ner Tomid, the Perpetual Light, that hangs in front of Israel's Holy Ark. For thus we are to combat ignorant prejudice, not simply by relieving its victims, but by dignifying them; by vindicating their solid claim to the admiration and esteem of mankind.

We are to give the world a new conception of the Jew, not of the Jew greedily fingering hoarded gold, but burning the midnight oil in the patient study of sacred lore, the Jew who may be a materialist at his worst, but is ever an idealist at his best; a race whose Heines have not all chanted their lovely melodies, whose Spinozas have not all spun out their world-encompassing thought, whose Disraelis have not all visioned their Asiatic dreams of empire. The typical Jew is not the financier, but the scholar, the reformer, the lover of truth, the idealist sacrificing himself for his cause.

Those who would go before their brethren armed, to help them, must above all else be themselves the examples that shall inspire; the splendid illustrations that will engender an entirely new conception of the Jew. They will inspire those just struggling up from among the submerged, and seeking to gain a secure foothold among their fellows. It would indeed be much if this Order, one of whose cardinal symbols is the light of the sacred lamps, should impress upon the Jewish mind, that high education, together with undiminished Jewish loyalty, should be the goal steadfastly pursued by the American Jew; reason with reverence, science with spirituality. Whether we are Zionists or not, it is wonderful to note how this great national movement in Israel has awakened the slumbering Jewish loyalties of scholars, and academic teachers, and great Jewish stars in the literary firmament, in whom all Jewish feeling has been deemed extinct. If this were the only achievement of Zionism, it would deserve much in the estimation of true Jews. For we must not perish at the top. We must retain and strengthen in the faith those that are our natural leaders; those in whom strength of mind and richness of culture should be paralleled by warmhearted loyalty and devotion to the sacred ideals of our fathers.

Ye shall go before your brethren, armed in this fashion, yet mighty men of valor. For thus chiefly shall ye help them.

And note that it is before your brethren that ye shall go. The rich are not mentioned, nor the poor. It is not to be supposed that any difference was noted as to their tribal affiliation. They were all included in the one fraternal bond. They are not called co-religionists or fellow countrymen, but your brethren, your blood-brothers.

It is with this idea in mind that the B'nai B'rith has rendered its greatest service to the Jewish cause. It has sought from the beginning to fuse and harmonize all Jewish elements; to bring together what had virtually become different social strata in Israel; to make the German Jew acquainted with the English Jew, and the Polish and the Russian immigrant with both.

It has steadfastly been the aim of the B'nai B'rith, to destroy the ridiculous if not tragic excrescence of what one may call Jewish snobbery. The worst anti-Semites are Jewish anti-Semites. Once the Spanish Jew looked down with contempt upon the unpolished German Jew arriving in this land. So now many of the German settlers, in their turn, look down with a certain patronage upon the Russian Jew. They see only the outside of them, the manners and habits that they have perforce absorbed from their miserable environments, but do not see the fine insight of them, the souls that are aflame with love for their faith, that burn with a veritable passion for learning; the hearts that prompt them to every sacrifice for their children's education and advancement. They constitute, at any rate, the vast majority of the Jews in America; and in the next generation they will occupy the pews in the fashionable Temples or they will remain largely unoccupied. And they will marry your daughters, or many of them will wither away in hopeless celibacy. Is it not time that we should say with Joseph of old, I seek my brethren; not simply those whose cradle was placed in the same locality as mine, in England, or Germany, or America, but all my Jewish brethren, the men of my race, the men of my faith.

The spirit of solidarity should be there, the sense of collective responsibility. The proudest boast of each and every one of us should be the cry of Jonah of old, Ivri Onochi, I am a Hebrew. I am at one with the generations past and gone that have perished for their faith in God. I am at one with the highest and the lowest among my people. I am glorified with the Jewish Lord Chief Justice of England; and I am crushed and humiliated with every Russian Jew, beneath the heel of his oppressor. Ivri Onochi, I am a Hebrew. Beyond all else, above all else, I seek my brethren. My proudest possession is the blood that flows in my veins, and in theirs. Armed ye shall go before this people, that are your brethren; and thus indeed ye shall help them.

How shall we help them? How shall we achieve this? Armed with what shall we bring them this aid? Armed, I would say, chiefly with the truth, the simple truth about the Jew; to fight lies and cruel prejudices; to nail down every slander, as it begins to raise its head; to fight above all, unitedly and publicly, for the human rights, the equal rights of our suffering people.

Soon, please God, the war will cease; and a Congress of Plenipotentiaries will be called to arrange the terms of peace. And then the voice of world-wide Israel must be heard, not petitioning, not supplicating, but demanding equal human rights, in the most benighted lands, that are now denied to millions of our brothers in thraldom. It is not only tragic, it is loathsome, to witness petty bickerings and differences between rival Jewish authorities in this country, as to the competing Jewish bodies that are to represent American Jews. We are almost tempted to say, "A plague on both your houses." The curse of our people has always been fatal dissensions in the face of the foe, in the very crisis and climax of destiny. May it cease now. May all differences be composed. And with this great Order in the van, as in the petition to the Czar, as in the securing of the immortal John Hay's protest to Roumania, let us of American Israel go before our helpless brethren armed, and help them.

O men of Israel, my brothers, in blood and faith, sons of pioneer fathers, yourselves largely pioneers, today we stand in the face of a colossal catastrophe. Let us rise to the occasion like men. Into this chaos of contending forces may we project our enormous vitality, organized, united, and strong. Go before your brethren in the van in the place of leadership, thrice armed; and help them to climb upward and onward, until they stand on the topmost levels of humanity.

Be true to the ancient pledge, We will obey and will hearken; to the oldest and the newest commandment, Be a blessing.

In the forefront, no longer feebly defensive, but boldly aggressive, fighting for the full rights of men for all the disinherited of the earth, loyal, zealous, unfaltering, march on and on, as true B'nai B'rith, Sons of the Covenant, faithful servants of the Eternal God.

ENGLISH JEWISH LEADERS APPEAL FOR HELP.

The following cablegram has been received by Mortimer B. Davis, of Montreal:

London, England, Oct. 9, 1915.

MORTIMER B. DAVIS, Montreal.

Number of Jewish sufferers in Russian war zone exceeds one and a half million. Unparalleled tragedy, appalling suffering render further efforts imperative. We are appealing to leaders of communities throughout Empire further to assist.

Beg your co-operation for Eastern Canada.

LEOPOLD de ROTHSCHILD, SWAYTHLING.
Chief Rabbis: HERTZ & GASTER.

Zionism and Democracy

By Dr. H. M. Kallen

At the beginning of the great war there were over 100,000 Jews in Palestine. Broadly speaking, they were divisible into two classes, rapidly fusing into one. The first class were mainly inhabitants of Jerusalem, European Jews, who, under the pressure of a religious idea, had gone to Palestine to die, and who, failing death, survived and bred in a sort of Orientalized death-in-life, and were sustained in that condition by the pious charity of other European Jews. The second class were mainly inhabitants of the coastal cities and the agricultural colonies. They were also European Jews. Under the pressure of a social ideal they had adventured into Palestine to live, and having come to live, had brought the message of life and self-respect and independence to those who had journeyed there to die. They built forty-one agricultural colonies with co-operative features; they put into execution, in several of them, significant experiments in economic justice; they built garden-cities, established social settlements, gymnasiums, workingmen's clubs, literary and learned societies, a national drama with community theatres, a national press and a national library, a school of arts and crafts and a public school system—from the most approved form of the modern kindergarten to excellent gymnasia. They urged and projected a national university, and only the war came in the way of its foundation. In short, they created under the impetus of a profoundly democratic social ideal a spiritually autonomous, characteristic national Jewish life.

The language of this life is Hebrew; its ideal is formulated in the program of Zionism. The agency by means of which it was being realized is the Jewish National Fund. This fund is the national treasury of the Jewish people. It is the result of a voluntary tax which Jews all over the world levy upon themselves as they choose. Its function is to acquire land in Palestine as the permanent and inalienable property of the Jewish people, and to guide and assist the healthy growth and free expression upon that land of their culture and spirit as "the indispensable ground for the fullest service of the Jewish people to all mankind."

The realization of the Zionist program is thus, it will be seen, a fact. Although far from consummation, it was, when the war broke out, steadily in prograss. Its initiators were a body of tenderly nurtured young Russian Jews, intellectuals who, although ignorant of the land and its conditions, adventured because of the immemorial Jewish love for Palestine and in obedience to the urge in them towards a free and self-respecting life as Jews—as pioneers to win this life under an indifferent and sometimes hostile government, against inimical neighbors and disease, and upon a denuded soil. This enterprise would have been merely another communistic flesh-in-the-pan had it not in fact been the symbol of the common will of millions of terrorized and oppressed people, a will which needed only organization and direction to become efficacious.

The necessary organization and direction came to it through the efforts of Theodor Herzl. This brilliant and magnetic leader, ostensibly a Viennese of the Viennese, resident of Paris, was led by his observation of Jewish disabilities and anti-Jewish agitations in Western Europe to conceive a "Judenstaat" whereby the maladjustment might be relieved. His first intention was philanthropic rather than humanistic, the mitigation of an evil, not the creation of a good.

Consequently he took his plan to financial magnates of Jewish extraction all over Europe. These would not listen to him. "Civil rights" for Jews in Western Europe were then hardly a generation old. They had been won at the cost of suppressing and eliminating as much as possible of what was distinctively Jewish, in fact, by denying the reality of Jewish nationality and declaring the Jewish people as merely a religious sect. From the complete exercise of these rights the so-called "emancipated Jews," of whom the magnates were the leaders, were still far; [illegible] they developed a sort of protective coloration by virtue of which [illegible] could not cease to be Jews, but did become amateur Gentiles, ashamed of their Jewish connection and concealing it as far as possible. Withal, although they had cut themselves off to the limit of their power from the Jewish people, they continued to legislate and speak for [illegible]. They were in fact the natural [illegible] of the mediaeval "Hof Juden" [illegible] between the Jewish [illegible] and the neighboring peoples but while mediaeval conditions had ceased to obtain in Europe, their attitude towards the problems of Jewish life remained, and remains, hieratic and mediaeval.

Hence those that listened to Herzl were the intellectuals, who had reflected upon the contradictions in the Jewish position, and the great masses in Eastern Europe, who had neither wished nor needed to destroy their self-consciousness as a nationality. The first Zionist Congress, held in Basle, Switzerland, in 1897, defined the general alignment of the Jews of the world on their own status and destiny. It arrayed the intellectual, the "progressive," and the masses, against the clergy, the radical, the Bundist, and the classes, but it showed in the range and variety of its membership how potent over all differences was the common denominator, Jew. Since the congress the radicals have been slowly coming over, partly through a realization of their own hopeless abstractionism, partly through a realization that Zionism is the one practical answer to the Jewish question, in that it has provided the Jews of the world with a common instrument for its solution, for registering their corporate wishes and carrying out their corporate purposes.

These wishes and purposes were not, however, remedial. They were expressive and constructive. The first congress made much of the tragedy and injustice of the Jews' position, but this fact fell, in the course of the successive congresses, more and more into the background, most conspicuously in Herzl's own mind. Between the publication of his "Judenstaat" and his "Altneuland" he had learned to share the vision of the people. Zionism became first and foremost the Jewish program of international service through national self-realization, aiming to lay in Palestine the foundations of a new and living Hebraism, which, under modern conditions, should carry into effect the social and spiritual ideals of the Hebrew prophets, and so fulfil, in Mazzini's words, the Jews' "special function in the European work of civilization." Its democracy was double. To the Jews of the world it came as a program of self-help and social justice within Jewry; giving the same rights and responsibilities to both sexes, and actually trying out experiments in economic organization to abolish the exploitation of one man by another without abolishing the impetus towards individual excellence. To the nations of the world it reasserted the prophetic ideal of internationalism as a democratic and co-operative federation of nationalities, an idea which Mazzini had formulated for Western Europe half a century before. Zionism asks, in the light of it, the same freedom for the Jewish people to realize its national individuality as a people that is demanded by all European peoples for themselves. Within Jewry and without, it took its stand flatly upon the principles of democracy and nationality.

To do this meant to face the energetic anathema of de-Judaized, anti-Jewish "Jewish" haute-finance; to accept the risk of the vengeance of a Russian bureaucracy devoted to the policy of the "Russification" of the Empire by making the Jews scapegoats for the errors and misdemeanors of the Government. Both were faced. The last suspicion of philanthropism was abolished at the sixth congress, in 1903, by the heroic rejection, through the vote of the very groups who might most have been benefited by acceptance, of the British offer of a territory in East Africa. That vote declared the people's unchangeable will to place the legally assured home of the Jews in Palestine and nowhere else. It alienated the philanthropically minded, notably Mr. Zangwill, who, not being democratic enough to accept the decision of the majority, withdrew in 1905, one year after Herzl died, and set up an organization of his own.

The split added to the difficulties which the movement confronted. Nevertheless, the work went on, in Russia against overwhelming difficulties; in the rest of the world against the obstructionist tactics of the well-to-do Jews; in Palestine itself against the uncertainties of the law of the land, the irresponsibilities of officials, the enmities of neighbors. Particularly there was the delicate task of teaching the Turks to understand that, since their Empire was organized on the basis of nationalities or millets (the term is religious, but it implies nationality in the Turkish system), an accretion to the Jewish millet in Palestine would strengthen the hands of the Empire. Little by little the movement made headway. As its purposes became better understood, it gained the universal respect of the non-Jewish world, and the adherence and sympathy of Jews, particularly of the intellectuals and the young. It brought spiritual freedom and self-respect to the amateur Gentile in the West, giving him an impersonal ideal to live for and international social purpose to attain. For the Jews in Russia, confronted with harsher and harsher measures of repression, it became a gospel of salvation. To Palestine it brought a new life, in the building of which even non-Zionists, particularly in America, co-operated. Willy-nilly, it was becoming the Jewish center of vision and action for all the Jews of the world, bidding fair by slow and peaceful and largely unconscious development greatly to mitigate, if not to solve, the chronic "Jewish question," when came the war.

The war has made the principles of democracy and nationality for which Zionism stands the paramount issues of contemporary life. Because the Russian bureaucracy, to cover the treachery and incompetence of its officials, has once more made the Jewish people its scapegoat and converted the Pale of Settlement into a Belgium thrice repeated, the war has brought the chronic Jewish question to a crisis. Turkey's participation in it has jeopardized the hard-won beginnings of a generation in Palestine. The tragic anomalies of the Jews' position have never been so explicit, nor the need for healing action so great. Under the circumstances the responsibility has fallen, naturally, upon the Jews of America, and how they will carry it must largely influence the fate of European Jewry.

With respect to Zionism, the same conditions that obtained among European Jews obtain among American Jews. At the beginning, Zionism signified a social program based on a democratic social philosophy only to the Jewish immigrant; for native American Jews who sympathized with it, its implications were chiefly philanthropic. The changes in sentiment were here the same as in Europe. Most violently opposed by the extreme radicals and amateur Gentiles, it gained its adherents among the intellectuals, the students, the "progressives," and the working classes, and it is from the last, in fact, that its greatest strength comes. The Jewish masses look to Zionism for leadership on all questions pertaining to the Jewish people as a whole. That, in the present crisis, they feel their obligation, and which to assume the burden of it, any reader of the Jewish press may see. The means proposed is a democratically constituted congress of Jews, and the press, the great fraternal organizations, the Landsmannschaften, have united in requesting the Zionists to lead in the formation of this congress. To accept their mandate means to carry the struggle towards democracy within Jewry one step farther. Powerful interests, interests analogous to those which opposed the calling of the first Zionist congress by Herzl, are opposed to such a gathering of Jews, and for analogous reasons. The Zionists have accepted the mandate. They propose to call, in co-operation with all Jewish organizations in the country, a congress which shall be representative of all our Jewish citizenship, which shall discuss publicly and freely every phase of the Jewish question, and shall formulate some program of action.—The Nation.

DR. COFFEE LEAVES.

Rabbi Coffee left Pittsburgh this week to assume his new position in Chicago as Director of the Social Service Bureau of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. Rarely has a man in our communal life been the recipient of so many evidences of esteem as were meted out to Dr. Coffee. The climax of a series of farewell dinners and receptions was reached last Sunday when the Y. M. H. A. tendered him a dinner and reception. Among others who spoke was Mayor Armstrong, who took occasion to pay an eloquent tribute to Dr. Coffee, particularly giving him credit as "the one man above all others who has helped make Pittsburgh a clean city." But it is significant to note that while Rabbi Coffee devoted a considerable portion of his time to general public service, he kept a strong hold on his congregational work, and today the Tree of Life Congregation has reached a higher degree of development than ever before in its history.

As A. Leo Weil well said, at the banquet of the Judeans last week, Dr. Coffee has helped to make Pittsburgh better and he is going to devote his efforts to making the conditions of our people better in every part of the world.

So in saying goodbye to Rabbi and Mrs. Coffee we assure them that they have left behind them in this community an influence that should always prove a source of pride to them in the years to come.—The Jewish Criterion.

PHYSICAL TEST OF ALIENS URGED.

We reprint herewith an article on the above subject as published in the New York "Evening Mail" of Oct. 12.

For the purpose of barring out a class of undesirable aliens that have for years flocked into this country and who are regarded by physicians as a menace to future generations, a movement has been started to establish a mandatory physical standard equivalent to the minimum requirements of the United States army. This plan, if adopted, is expected to put a stop to the influx of physical nondescripts from European countries.

Alienists of wide experience have long realized that mental defectives were not the only objectionable form of immigrants that come into the country by way of Ellis Island. How to exclude the physically weak was the problem. The present law makes provision for mental delinquents, but gives officials no other course than to admit men who are undesirable from a purely physical standpoint.

Dr. Howard A. Knox, assistant surgeon of the U. S. Health Service, detailed on Ellis Island, has come out strongly for physical disbarment in an article published last week in the New York "Medical Journal." Dr. Knox is an expert on the subject and he believes the present law needs going over.

"We need a law to give us the power to exclude a class that is a real danger to the community. The mentally weak we can handle, but the law gives us no option in the matter of the physically infirm," said Dr. Knox today in his home, 33 South Elliott place, Brooklyn. He said:

Literacy Test Unfair.

"The literacy test did the immigrant an injustice. It was unfair. We believe an able-bodied man who is intelligent, even if he is uneducated, can be, and very often is, a valuable asset to the country. But what about the physical defective?

"In what way is he a desirable citizen? I am not speaking of the man who has lost a leg, or an arm, or an eye, and who is constitutionally normal. I mean the kind that is inherently weak.

"We have studied the question very carefully and have come to the belief a law is absolutely urgent that will give us the power to exclude the riff-raff that comes to Ellis Island, to be an encumbrance, sooner or later, upon the community.

"We know how to handle the problem of the mentally incompetent. Let us have the same power to deal with the other sort which is of equal importance. A mandatory physical standard is demanded, along the lines of the requirements of the army and navy.

"If we can have this provision incorporated in the present law, vast hordes of potential psychopaths and defectives, both physical and mental, would be prevented from landing. A standard for women might come later.

"Every person who presents evidence of inferior germ plasm, physical or mental, must be regarded as bad potentially and should be excluded without bonds. Many of our defectives seem to lack constitutional vigor and stamina, and I believe all individuals of poor physical development for the age should be mandatorially excluded.

"Physical weaknesses interferes with the fullest functions of the mind and the motto, 'A sound mind in a sound body,' is a good one. The large majority of a certain people entering the country at this time are physical weaklings, and it is a remarkable fact that this race furnishes us with the larger relative and absolute percentage of insane and defectives.

Points to Strange Contrasts.

"To my mind it is more than a coincidence that the country furnishing us with the mental defectives should also furnish the highest percentage of physical defectives.

"At the present time fully 1 per cent of the people in this country are confined in institutions for blind, feeble-minded, insane, criminal, juvenile delinquent or paupers."

Dr. Knox said the movement had only just been started and he and the other officials on Ellis Island hoped a successful result would be accomplished.

In his article in the "Medical Journal" Dr. Knox discussed various phases of mental and physical defectives and showed by a comparative table that English boys, quoting a British authority, were vastly superior physically to those of similar ages from another country.

(The foregoing is a new move which may seem to be directed against the Jewish people, who as a rule, owing to persecution and poor economic conditions to which they have been particularly subjected in certain countries, furnish the weakest immigrants from the standpoint of a physical test.—Editor.)

Moses Mendelssohn's "Preface" in its Relation to Dohm's Work, "About the Amelioration of the Civic Condition of the Jews."

By Dr. Hedwig Fischmann—Allgemeine Zeitung des Judeuthums

In his "Preface" to Manasseh Ben Israel's "Deliverance of the Jews," Moses Mendelssohn for the first time said a word publicly about the question of the emancipation of the Jews. This question was one that deeply stirred him as well as most of the superior minds of his century. In this "Preface" he sought to restrain his standpoint and at the same time to confirm it by representing himself as being far removed "from the cabinets of the great and from everything that has an influence over them."

To this he added that he was living within the narrow limits of a restricted circle of intercourse. Once before, in a private letter, Mendelssohn doubted more energetically his philosophical views of the state. When an unknown man asked him to give his opinion about a project of his for the restoration of the Jewish kingdom, he replied: "I must confess that I know no more about the political form of government of the states than what one can perchance learn through the usual intercourse with persons who are not much above my class. . . . If I possess dauntlessness of spirit it extends to speculative things only. In the practical things I was always confined within a much too narrow sphere to have made it possible for me to attain the dexterity to rise to great things and to overlook common difficulties. Who can add one inch to his height?" We will have to modify this decisive verdict of Mendelssohn regarding his fitness to be a social-politician, in the same manner as a just posterity has already modified a similar verdict of Lessing regarding his fitness to be a poet. In both verdicts there, no doubt, lies concealed a good portion of diplomacy next to genteel modesty, and the demand of the highest perfection for one's own achievements.

At all events, this narrowness, this condition of being bound by national and temporal circumstances of which Mendelssohn complained signified for his philosophical views of the state a moment rich in unending blessings—if it can at all be said of a man who stood in the center of the intellectual currents of his time, in the liveliest interchange of ideas with the thinkers like Lessing, Abt, Kant and Herder, that he was bound by the means surrounding him. The heavy yoke which weighed down upon his coreligionists and which he carried along with them as a fellow sufferer, restrained his wishes to dare to rise precipitately and phantastically and to feign to invent a state-utopia in which the literature of the 18th century is so rich. So Mendelssohn always remains entirely a politician of reality and his socio-political thoughts are constantly rooted in the soil of actuality, or in the things of his time, for the attainment of which there was a possibility. The proportionately narrow limits within which they moved were partly brought about by the character of his people, which he knew more intimately than the strange writers who were fighting for toleration and Jewish emancipation, and partly by the natural restraint which he was forced to impose upon himself in the treatment of a question in regard to which the reproach of "tua res agitur" could only too easily be hurled at him. For at that time when any work appeared which was in favor of the Jews, search was assiduously made for some personal motive of the author. This is plainly evidenced by the homely explanation given by Michaelis, the wise man of Goettingen. This learned man states: "Dohm's able work 'About the Amelioration of the Civic Condition of the Jews' is only therefore free from the suspicion that it has been bought with Jewish money because its author mainly sets himself up as the defender of those who are without means but not of the rich Jews." Thus it is written in an earnest review by a learned reviewer.

How much prudent modesty, how much clarified worldly wisdom were really made use of until Mendelssohn had subdued his glowing wishes for the welfare of his enslaved people to the mildly gleaming flame which radiates from his "Preface to the Deliverance of the Jews." As Mendelssohn exposes himself here in his analysis of Dohm's work which originated under his auspices, agreeing with Dohm in essentials, but also completing, restraining and contradicting in fundamental points, the all-comprehending insight of Nathan the Wise is reflected in the imperfection of the state-form shaped by man.

It was an exceedingly fine move by Mendelssohn to make Manasseh Ben Israel's "Deliverance of the Jews" of the year 1656 the point of issue for his disquisition. This work of defense by which Manasseh Ben Israel gained from Cromwell the permission for his coreligionists, who had been banished from England under Edward I, to return home, offered a handy dark background. On the one side through the description of the fearful suspicions and persecutions of the utterly inhuman treatment of the Jews in the 17th century, Mendelssohn was able to let the blessings of the enlightened era of Frederick the Great shine in a much brighter light before the eyes of his people. But on the other side the wise philosopher was in this way able to expose unconstrainedly, how much of those mediaeval prejudices and of those diabolical schemes of darkest superstitions were still kept alive in his time by the oppressors as a curse to the oppressed, and, luxuriating under the covering stratum of enlightenment, they always again lifted up their venomous heads. Mendelssohn accentuates the fact that Dohm "hardly considered it worth while to mention even cursorily those inhuman accusations which bear upon themselves the marks of the times and of the monk-cellars, in which they were hatched, for he thought then that in the circle of his readers they had died long ago. But the Jewish philosopher, who had read the history of the sufferings of his people in their deepest depth, to whom his coreligionists turned again and again, seeking counsel and help in their distress, knew well that those musty prejudices have by no means been extinguished by their groundlessness; that the phantoms of well-poisoning, sanctuary-profanations and ritual murders, being stirred up again and again by religious zealots, are awakening to new life, even if in the enlightened 18th century those coarse accusations were more and more replaced by more finely polished weapons.

After Mendelssohn had tried his best powers in this combat, he gave up in weary resignation and despaired of ever being able to completely banish them from the midst of the dull masses: "One can cut through all the roots of an inveterate prejudice without depriving it of nourishment. At all events it sucks it in from the air. . . . Reason and humanity raise their voices in vain, for prejudices that have once become gray have no hearing." The inutility of all attempts to dig off the ground from under foolish, widely-spread legendary inventions of Jewish deeds of atrocity by the weight of historical facts, as well as the bloody shades of the two Rabbis in Posen, who were sacrificed to the wrong notions of faith even in Mendelssohn's time—they fell as victims to the fairy-tale of the Easter murder—caused Mendelssohn to despair of ever gaining the victory over the powers of darkness and superstition. Here the way of Dohm, who lived in a free atmosphere and had the highest faith in the future, sharply diverged from the way of the experienced man who grew ripe in suffering.

More than a century has since then passed, but, to the disgrace of the 19th and 20th centuries, the ghost of the ritual murder is still walking around in the darkest corner of Europe, and no spirit of tolerance exorcises it and sends it to its eternal rest. Like a discordant echo of those dreadful mediaeval voices, like a confirmation of Mendelssohn's scepticism sound in our days, the unmercifully truthful descriptions of the Russian persecutions of the Jews by the northern author, Aage Madelung, in his novel, "Die Gezeichneten" (The Branded), a hopeless picture of ignorance.

Gifted with this prophetic cassandra glance for the indestructibility of human delusion, Mendelssohn was in no way able to believe in the speedy realization of the hopeful dreams of Dohm in the civic equalization of the Jews. Here, too, the facts prove that his doubt was right. For the Jewish population of Prussia had to wait yet a full generation in vain for these rights, while Emperor Joseph, the ruler with a milder mind, had granted them to his subjects already in the year 1781 by his edict of toleration, but upon the yet uncultivated soil of his time he did not see the desired harvest of his precious peace-seed. And so, "even if all principles of reason unite in favor of granting to the Jews an equal share in the human rights," Mendelssohn seeks in his "Preface" only to analyze and to attend to momentary conditions, and as a wise advocate of his people he seeks to demonstrate how useful and rich in blessings it may become even in its present sorry condition to the state whose toleration and hospitality it enjoys, as it is evidenced by the flourishing commerce of tolerant Holland. Dohm fought with all the power of his eloquence, which was inspired by passionate love of justice and humanity, for the admission of the Jews to the occupations which were closed to them, such as agriculture, trade, profession, sciences and arts; yes, even to military service, and he refuted the reproach that the Jews lack ability with the most impressive historical and practical arguments. As a true child of the time of enlightenment and being in close touch with strivings for reform similar to those of Emperor Joseph and the enlightened Jewish circles, he hoped to elevate the spiritual level of the Jews by enhanced possibilities for education and—for those days an intrepidity never anticipated—to gain for them the qualification for and the access to public office, even if only in later generations.

In his "Preface" Mendelssohn does not say one word about this state of the future. He knows only too well that fearful iron ring which hate, intolerance and professional jealousy have during the centuries firmly forged around his people, keeping it by force far away from all useful occupations, in order to use this lack of culture in this very circle from which Israel cannot escape, as a pretense for new oppressions. "They tie our hands and tax us with not making use of them," so sounds Mendelssohn's touching complaint about the fate of his people. He was forced to experience in his own flesh and blood how narrow and impossible to break through were the limits drawn within which the Jews were allowed to move about. When a few years later his son Joseph was confronted by the necessity of choosing a profession, he wrote in the bitterest feeling of the impotent pain of the father to Elise Reimarus: "I heartily regret that I must keep him away from the sciences in order to make of him a slave of Mammon. He has no desire to study medicine, and as a Jew he must become a physician, a merchant or a beggar." And how hard the Ahasver-fate, the homelessness of the Jews oppressed his mind, we can also read between the lines of a remark in the "Preface" which seems to have been made casually: "The humblest Jewish tradesman is . . . a useful inhabitant (I am not permitted to say citizen) of this state." A people's suffering which is a thousand years old pressed together within a parenthesis!

But if Mendelssohn is not willing to join Dohm in the fight without a prospect of success to conquer the unattainable new land, he is the more passionate and dauntless a champion when it comes to defend the soil in which are the roots of his people against unjust attacks. He makes use of the sharpest weapons of his reason in order to free the Jews from the reproach that as a people exclusively engaged in commercial pursuits, they are an unproductive nation, a parasite in the great economy of the state. With arguments as sharply cutting as knives, Mendelssohn here draws the lines of distinction between producers and consumers, explaining with irrefutable clearness that nearly all professions must with the same right as the mercantile class be designated as unproductive, "for not merely making but also doing it well can be called producing." Here in this most subtle distinction between logical conceptions the ingenious friend of Lessing positively stands in the dominion of his own powerful mind.

Mendelssohn, however, does not completely lose himself in mere theoretic speculations. The way in which he advocates the idea that all forces should be free to vie with each other, that the blessed commercial competition shall prevail as unhindered as possible, shows the experienced man of the practical life, shows the clear insight for the welfare of the state and charms us even today as modern and progressive. And in contrast to Dohm, who, less far-seeing, was inclined to set a limit of the maximum density of population, the accentuation of the philosopher of the connection between the increase of population and the prosperity of a state, appeals to us like a presentiment of the wiser economy of man of future centuries.

But if Mendelssohn up to this point stood in relation to Dohm's work only to restrain and to complete, yet agreeing in fundamental tendencies, in a question of principle he assumes a very harsh, unbridgeable opposition to Dohm's views regarding church rights in general and the priestly right to excommunicate in particular. Here Mendelssohn touches the deepest vital nerve of his spiritual and moral being, the thought of toleration. The preservation of one's own free opinion and the respect for the equal freedom of the fellowman, this is the divine doctrine in which the superior minds of the century stand united as in a church high above all churches.

Enlightenment and humanity, the two ruling currents of the 18th century, meet in keeping holy the liberty of conscience.

The wisest thinkers of the time preach it in their works, two mighty rules make it the categorical imperative of their activity and out of the creations of our greatest poets resounds its hymn in an imperishable manner. This is the spiritual atmosphere in which also Mendelssohn lived and worked, and out of which he was forced to spurn from himself the idea of a church right, a church power, as an absurdity—a problem which he pursued in his later great work, "Jerusalem," to its last consequences. But in the "Preface" he decidedly spurns from him, before everything, Dohm's demand to grant to the Jewish authorities the right of churchly excommunication (for Dohm demands autonomy for his Jewish state), recognizing too well how the most dangerous tinder was being massed in our own camp for an intolerant religious fanaticism, while the best hands were working to extinguish this fearful conflagration raging in the midst of the different confessions. With historical as well as ethical reasons Mendelssohn supports his teaching that this right of the church to excommunicate and to exclude must never exist, for "reason's house of devotion needs no locked doors." With all the power of warm-hearted eloquence, Mendelssohn pleads for the unfortunate victims of narrow-minded intolerance, touching most closely the similar thoughts expressed by Herder and Lessing. And when Mendelssohn closes his work, "Jerusalem," with an appeal to the reigning church for toleration, he turns here as a benign and just mediator, like the one he stood all his life time between the confessions, to his own co-religionists with the same request: "If you wish to be cherished and spared by others, then cherish and spare one another! Love so you will be loved!"

So sounds the best socio-political testament left to posterity by the philosopher, it is a gospel of benevolence and toleration.—Allgemeine Zeitung des Judeuthums.

JEWISH ORPHAN ASYLUM, CLEVELAND.

The first quarterly meeting of the 48th year of the Cleveland Orphan Asylum was held in Milwaukee, Wis., at the Pfister Hotel on Oct. 10, 1915, with President Louis S. Levi in the chair. In addition to the trustees and directors who were present, there were also in attendance a number of representative Jewish people of Milwaukee.

The minutes of the previous meeting and intervening meetings of the local Board in Cleveland were read and approved.

An amendment to the by-laws was offered, providing for the appointment of a nominating committee to make nominations for the various offices and employees of the institution and to define their duties and fix their compensation.

Max Stern of Fargo, N. D., was unanimously elected director to fill an existing vacancy in the Board. After a recess, during which the members were the guests at a dinner arranged by the Milwaukee friends of the Asylum, application for admission were considered with the result that eighteen were admitted, five were laid over until the next meeting, two were ruled out as being ineligible and three were referred to the St. Louis Local Board.

Reports of the secretary, superintendent, and auditor were presented and adopted.

The question of arranging for the establishment of a Summer camp was discussed and upon motion it was resolved that a committee of fifteen be appointed to consider ways and means of establishing such Summer camp and to report at the next meeting of the Board.

After the close of the regular business session Mr. Simon Peiser, the superintendent of the Home addressed the gathering on the work of the institution, illustrating his remarks with stereoptican views. Messrs. Martin A. Marks and Judge Philip Stein also addressed the audience. President Levi closed the meeting by extending the thanks of the Board to its Milwaukee representatives and to the Jewish community of the city for the courtesies extended to them.

CZAR'S APPRECIATION OF JEWISH EFFORTS.

By command of the Czar, General Prince Vassiltchikoff visited the Jewish Military Hospital at Kieff. The Prince distributed to the soldiers the decorations won by them during the campaign, and thanked the Jewish community for the excellent condition of the hospital.

The War and the German Jews

By Dr. S. Behrens

(Report of the Grand Lodge for Germany)

Inter arma silent musae. In the midst of the din of arms the muses are silent, is an old Roman saying with some variation. This world conflagration which has rushed upon us, arrests our attention and interest as never before. Whether we want to or not, our thoughts are with never failing intensity with those who are fulfilling our destiny with the edge of the sword.

With joyful pride the German Jews are looking upon the grand number of fellow combatants who are their co-religionists, upon the submission and the faithfulness which they have shown in living and dying and upon the distinctions which they have gained. In silence and modesty they do nothing else than their sacred duty to the fatherland, like all the deeds of love and kindness at home, which emanate from the natural impulse of the heart. It is nothing else but the conceivable consideration that no sacrifice of blood and possession can be big enough in the face of the glorious deeds of our soldiers which are at the same time so full of renunciation. The Jewish heart which has never refused its sympathy to a righteous cause. only followed its innate trait when in these days of earnestness and grandeur, of love and of generosity it contributed its share in all places. It can be designated as an act of special merit when the B'nai B'rith lodges have, of their own accord, established a hospital train. With its excellent arrangement and its expert management this train will help to heal and sooth the wounds which the war must bring. But it will also eradicate the old views which right into the present time have led to false judgments and conceptions about the confessors of Judaism.

For from the hour when the war broke out the word of the Kaiser has been valid and is not to be questioned or doubted: "I no longer know any parties. I know Germans only." The mighty historical grandeur of this war has pulled down the partition walls which the political conflict had erected. It has bridged the confessional contrasts, which projected into our days as a sad heritage from the past. The quarrel which once raged, has become dumb and all clasp hands harmoniously in the wide fatherland in order to consecrate all forces in brotherly union as a holy offering to the one aim of victory, to fling down our enemies. In the face of such aims what will the paltry discords of years gone by signify? It is this idea which first of all inspires our fighting brothers, which moves them closer to each other as human beings and ties them together in fellowship, yea, reaching even into the ranks of the field chaplains and causing them to go joyfully hand in hand. We must deplore it when this peace is occasionally disrupted by extremely religious or political groups. We must leave to them the responsibility for their action, which does not show their comprehension of the fated hours of our fatherland. All groups of religious or political nature have to submit to the command of the hour. Without being prejudiced by the deep going contrasts we bury old disputes, we renounce all mutual attacks and trust that the conflict which will return later will create new forms and will rebuild itself upon the basis of respectful toleration. Surely, we all stand bent down by the sad impression that this war has torn asunder so many threads as only the community of culture creates among the different tribes and nations, and we look uneasily into the future. Will it again lead one man to the other to work in common in the various fields of science, of social care and mutual understanding, as it so promisingly commenced to do before the war? This is a fateful question for wide circles of the German people and therefore also for the German Jews who had up to now assumed a leading part in social and scientific affairs. Time must heal this perceptible wound and give room to the hope that no impassable barriers will be erected for the spirit, for love of mankind. To be sure the hard reality of the present has wiped out for many years to come many a dream, many a plan for the future and a most prominent part of the future work of the lodges will be to overcome estrangement and misunderstandings which separate us meanwhile from many of our brethren beyond our borders. If there is anything that can strengthen the faith of the German people in the future it is religion, which shall work to unite the nations and to embrace the world. [illegible] becoming addicted to a dan- [illegible] we can assume that religion has now more than ever before [illegible] taken hold of the souls. The ideal sense is again awake, materialism is disappearing, it is giving way to a new world-conception. Calamity has once again gripped our hearts in a salutory manner, for many circles it has appeared as a saving and liberating force, it has extricated them from a life of pleasure and self-assurance and has taught them again the real conception and earnestness of life. We are again taking hold of the Bible, of this eminent counsellor and warner of the conscience, we are again open to the Word of God, which reveals to us His wisdom and profundity in a new splendor. The war becomes for us all a moral educator if we only walk through these days with thought and with feeling. It needs no assurance that the war will not banish all prejudices and not remove all shadows. There is no doubt that he who faced the enemy abroad and looked into the eyes of death will return home with moral ripeness with religious power which will remain conscious through his own spiritual shock and through his personal experience. But it will be shocking if this religious depth and width will not be imparted to those who remain at home who remain in safety and are protected against the fearful misery of the war.

"This war will introduce a new era into the interior of Germany." With these words Ludwig Frank the pecocious, has offered us an outlook into the future. It were presumptuous to undertake to give here an outline for the new upbuilding of the fatherland. Far be it from us to demand any compensation for doing the self understood duty to the fatherland. We trust in the final valid victory of German arms and in the glorious peace which we are helping to attain by fighting. We rejoice in the fraternization of Jews and Christians, which is bound to spread in the field and at home. We are sure that after such soulful experiences, that after this storm-tried fellowship the flame of the old hatred will not blaze up again. Our warriors will contribute to this, who will return from the war as matured men. We believe in the words of L. Frank. There are enough signs at hand, they will not deceive us. We do not believe that history is pleased with repetitions or that it exhausts itself in reiteration. So the fears are eliminated which are frequently expressed in looking towards the occurences of a century ago. With this the ground may be removed in our community from perfidy and apostasy which have deprived us in the dark sad days of so many valuable forces. In order to attain complete equality we and our larger organizations must be on guard. It will not fall into our lap by itself, but only when we do not permit ourselves to fail to co-operate now and in the future, politically, socially and scientifically, when we take an active part in the combats of which there will be no want, when we will one day gather with all the rest of the German people around the old yet new device:

"Es soll am deutschen Wesen
Noch einmal die Welt genesen."

German character and conduct shall once more make the world well again.

JEWS OF SERVIA.

Belgrade has a Jewish population of about 2,500 souls. The Jews in Servia enjoy equal rights and many of them distinguished themselves in the service of their country. The Jewish population of Servia in 1910 was 5,729. There was a considerable Jewish community in Belgrade already in the sixteenth century and their settlement in Servia probably preceded that by several centuries.

We have carefully read the correspondence between the B'nai B'rith, the Jewish Congress Organization Committee and the American Jewish Committee, which we printed in our news columns last week. We make this statement because we wish it to be understood that our deliberate opinion favors the consummation of the ends of the B'nai B'rith in this matter. Much as we support the ideal of a democratic congress for the discussion of the problems of Jewry, we should not wish to see Jewry a house divided against itself in this troublous hour, and this would undoubtedly result if both sides of the congress conference controversy persist in their first intentions. We note with satisfaction the American Jewish Committee's readiness to sink its differences for the sake of the common good. For all these reasons, then, we repeat, we trust the labors of the B'nai B'rith in the premises will be crowned with success.—Hebrew Standard.

Armenian Christians, Russian Jews, Wherein do they differ?

In an address at his Temple, Rabbi Edward N. Calisch of Richmond compared the attitude of the world to the reports of Turkish massacres in Armenia to the protests which were made in respect to the persecution of Jews in Russia.

He said in part: "It was to be believed that the doctrines of right and justice and liberty had, in this twentieth century, progressed so far that no person or group of persons would be persecuted for sake of conscience or religious belief. Yet it has remained for Russia and Turkey to deny this hope of mankind and shatter this belief.

"The stories of the Turkish persecution of Armenian Christians and Russian persecution of her Jewish citizens are unspeakably harrowing.

"The newspapers and periodicals are full of reports of the Turkish persecutions in detail and with the vivid imagery of writers. They have aroused the horror and resentment of the civilized world, so much so that a call for action has been made. It has been suggested that the survivors about 500,000, be transported to America. It is interesting to note that Mr. Morgenthau, a Jew, our ambassador to Turkey, not only suggested this, but has been so active and energetic in protection of Christians generally, their lives and property, the missionaries, and their buildings and colleges, that he has been accorded votes of thanks from the churches and conventions.

"Now, to turn to Russian Jews. It was at first believed that they were suffering only from natural and inevitable conditions accompanying warfare, such as any people suffer when war brings battles and invasion of their land and homes. But the horrifying and well nigh incredible part of it is, that in the midst of her military activities, the Russian government takes time and strength to devil and harass her Jews. Russia, in both her earlier victories and later defeats, should certainly have endeavored to unite her people. But she did not. It was to be expected that she would make the Jews the scapegoats in her defeats, but that her officials should take time to indulge in the fearful outrages that they have seems simply madness.

"Now the point is, why is it that the world at large is not stirred up with regard to Russian Jews as it is with regard to the Armenian Christians? Is it perhaps because the story of persecution of Jews by Russia is an old one, and the world is aweary of it? Yet the story of Armenian persecution is not a new one. In fact, it has been used more than once to give color to attacks upon Turkey, that could not be given other reasons. Is it because Armenian Christians are more enlightened, further advanced in civilization than the Russian Jews? I hardly think so, for while I will not claim that the Russian Jews are conspicuous in the arts and sciences, or in the learned professions, or in the general activities that make for leadership in the artistic or philosophic or scientific or commercial worlds, yet I do say that considering the inhibitions and restrictions and tyrannical regulations and deprivations of rights and liberty, under which they suffer, they hold a position in even these directions which is highly creditable to them. When people, who suffer not only from the sporadic violence of Russian pogroms, but continuously and unbrokenly from the most irritating and debasing of permanent. restrictive and sumptuary legislation, can produce such names as these: Rubenstein, Wieniawski, Mischa Elman, Antolkolski, Bernstamm, Guenzberg, Gabrilowitsch, Muehlmann, Mandelstamm. Brodsky and Frug, and a host of lesser artists, composers, sculptors, poets and musicians, and all these are Russian Jews, then one cannot say that they are backward or unenlightened. The soul of a people is reflected in the genius of their leaders.

"I do not recall, possibly because I am ignorant of them, but I do not recall any names of similar import among Armenian Christians.

"Why, then, does the world become aroused over the misery of a half million Armenian Christians, and look on with indifference upon the misery and martyrdom of five times that number of Russian Jews? Can it be possible that it is only because the one class is Christian and the other is not—or that because the one tyrant is Mohammedan Turkey, and the other orthodox Christian Russia?

"The debasing influence of the fearful war has spread its pall over the nations. It has subverted morals, overthrown honor, and justice, and truth, in the stress of military necessity. It has made England and France, the freest countries in Europe, to condone or be silent about Russian tyranny, it has made enlightened cultured Germany to try to excuse Turkey and her atrocities because of political alliance.

"But surely America is free from the incubus of military necessity. Surely America can do justice, can hold the even-handed balance of human sympathy, and help to the martyrs on one side as well as the other. Can it be possible that in the very elemental sentiment of sympathy for innocent suffering sectarianism is stronger than humanity? It is true that all feel most keenly for our own, or for those with whom we are allied in thought or belief, but the call of our common human brotherhood should not sound unheeded."

Religious Work Among Jewish University Students.

By Rabbi Leo M. Franklin, Temple Beth El, Detroit.

In these times, when the religious indifference of the Jew has become a byword, and when, as a result, religious leaders have resorted to all sorts of worthy and unworthy schemes to revive an interest in the synagogue and what it stands for, it seems almost inconceivable that the Jewish student should have been so generally overlooked as a possible factor in the regeneration of Judaism. It is a noteworthy and altogether lamentable fact that a large number of Jewish young men and women seem to leave all Jewish interest behind them when they enter the halls of the college or university. Reasons for this are not difficult to trace. Absence of home influences and the direct supervision of parents; entrance into an environment essentially Christian or nonreligious; the upsetting of all religious tradition by the first taste of philosophy and science, and the natural tendency to moral and intellectual selfsufficiency on the part of the young student account for his breaking away during the period of college life from the religious moorings of his fathers.

It is only recently that the significance of all this has been clearly recognized and that steps to win back the allegiance of the Jewish student to his fathers' faith have been taken. The Menorah movement has dealt with this perplexing situation from the intellectual and cultural side, and it has done much to awaken in its members an appreciation of Jewish ideals. Some congregations, situated near the great centers of learning, have in these last years shown an interest in the religious life of the students by inviting them to attend services in the synagogue on the high holydays, to participate in the Seder and to take some part in the social life of the Jewish community. Unquestionably, however, the most effective means that has yet been devised to maintain the religious interest of the Jewish student has been the establishment of Jewish Student Congregations in connection with our great institutions of learning. The most noteworthy example of such an organization is the Jewish Student Congregation of the University of Michigan, which, about to enter upon the third year of its existence, has greater promise than ever before. The students of the University to a very considerable number assemble each week on Sunday evenings to participate in a religious service and to listen to an address by some prominent rabbi who comes to Ann Arbor for the purpose It is planned this year to include among the speakers representative rabbis of both Reform and Conservative congregations.

The newly created Commission on Student Welfare Work, composed of delegates from the Central Conference of American Rabbis and the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, expects to take up this work most aggressively. It shall be part of its policy to study the status of Jewish students in all the large institutions of learning, and in every way possible to awaken their loyalty and enthusiasm for the Jewish cause. The work of this new Commission will undoubtedly be watched with great interest by the whole country, for it represents a departure along lines that will unquestionably mean much to the future of American Israel.

The Jews of Richmond During the Civil War.

By Herbert T. Ezekiel.

Address Delivered Before Rimmon Lodge I. O. B. B., Richmond, Va.

In the palmy days of the republic, a certain teacher one day directed a scholar to bring in a composition on "Pins." The child did as directed, and began the paper with the startling assertion that "pins have saved the lives of a great many people." When asked how this could be, she replied tersely, "by not swallowing them." The Chairman of your Committee has evidently heard that I, in my humble way, have contributed much to the gems of oratory—by not writing and printing speeches as they were delivered, for in no other way can I explain his request that I talk to you this evening.

He asked that I tell you something about "The Jews of Richmond During the Civil War." Why he chose such a theme for one who was not born in the United States[*] puzzles me no little. In one respect, though, he was kind to me. He laid on me no such restriction as the foremen of newspapers did in war times, when their supply of type was extremely limited with no means of renewal. Often they would call down the tube to the editor, "Send up a column of copy with 10 a's and 26 e's in it."

Some years ago I had an argument with a San Francisco editor. I had intimated some time before that, in some respects, Jews were more moral than other peoples. He came back at me with the plain but forceful statement that we are neither better nor worse than others, but we can fry fish a little nicer.

I would, therefore, begin by saying that the Jews of Richmond during the war were just like other people. They fed the hungry, clothed the poor, nursed the sick and wounded, and buried the dead. The wives and mothers and sisters did valiant work in the hospitals. Their ministrations were bestowed regardless of faith. The services of the latter were not without recompense, for many a Richmond girl became the bride of a Southern soldier. War and love were irretrievably mixed, though the courtship was carried on upon a scale of economy that would put the higher livers of to-day to blush. I have in mind two as pretty girls as ever trod the streets of Richmond. They were being wooed by two handsome Confederate officers from Louisiana. Their greatest treat was to go up to Pizzini's and look in the window at the cakes and other good things. With Confederate money worth two cents on the dollar in greenbacks, it took two years' pay of the average officer to buy a decent uniform. There was not much left for luxuries. I have often wondered how my godfather, a Confederate major, saved enough money to buy me a silver spoon and fork that had come from Tiffany's.

Mr. President, it is rather meet that I should be addressing a meeting to-night over which you preside, on this subject. It goes without saying that the Jews of Richmond were the hosts of nearly every soldier of that faith who at any time during the war was defending our devoted city, and first and last there were many of them. I say it in no spirit of boastfulness, but those who know of those days will bear me out that the Confederate soldier who came to Richmond counted his visit a failure if he had not been entertained by either Abraham Hutzler, your grandfather, or Jacob A. Levy, mine.

About a year ago, the Times-Dispatch of this city, in its column of "What was news fifty years ago," copied an article from an Atlanta paper of that time, which made mention of the fact that though there were many heartless speculators who raised the prices of the necessities of life to our starving people and soldiers, that never had a Jew been known to engage in this speculating. I went to see Mr. McKissick, who edited that column, and handed him a communication bearing on that matter. He very frankly admitted to me that he had published the item in question because he had always thought that the reverse was true and it was a revelation to him.

The little story that I carried him was this. When the hopes of the Confederacy were at the lowest and the price of food the highest, a Jewish citizen[†] of advanced age and large family went to Mr. Charles T. Palmer, a commission merchant of this city, and asked him how many barrels of flour he had on storage with him. About 200 barrels was the reply. He told Mr. Palmer to send all the flour, except 12 barrels, which he reserved for his family use, up to the commissary department. "Great God, ———" was the reply. "Do you know what the Government is allowing for flour?" "Yes," was the reply, "$12 per barrel." "Do you know what it is worth on the market?" "Yes, $200 per barrel. That's all right, Mr. Palmer, I am not living on the blood of starving soldiers." This same citizen had lost a son by death early in '63, and his wife was in a very nervous condition and wished to move into another house. This gentleman owned a handsome residence in the best part of the city. Its occupant was Mrs. Garnett, a Christian, and wife of the Director-General of the Surgical Department of the army. He went to Mrs. Garnett and told her she would have to move. "My goodness, Mr. ———, I haven't a dollar in the world; my husband is away with the army. How can I move?" The grasping Jew went to James M. Taylor, a leading real estate man of the city, purchased a house, put her in it, knowing all the while he would never get one cent rent.

In '62, '64, and '65 our armies for a good portion of the time lay very close to Richmond. While it was against orders, it was a very common and very venial offense for the soldiers to steal off and come to this city. In fact, the custom was almost universal. A tribute to the character of our Jewish young men was the fact that the provost guard made it a point to be at the synagogue on Friday evenings about dusk and took charge of the delinquents as they came out. Many a young man walked from his sweetheart into the arms of the guard, and the visions of a good Friday night supper melted into the stern reality of an enforced sojourn in the guardhouse.

It may have been the war, but personally I think the young men of that day had a sterner and better raising than we of later generations. As a rule more was expected of them, and in our present-day vernacular, they "delivered the goods." An old record-book of the Congregation Beth Shalome demonstrates this. In April, 1861, I happen to know, the secretary[*] of the Congregation went into the field. No reference whatever was made to that fact in the minutes. For four years he was re-elected. There were no whereases, or resolutions or silver loving-cups. All during that time the minutes are signed by the secretary pro tem. In May, 1865, the Secretary's name is again appended to the minutes and no word of reference is made to his absence. Devotion to duty was the rule and excited no comment.

While sorrow and grief were the order of the day, there was occasionally something that bordered on the humorous. In a fight near Winchester, the late Herman J. Myers, of this city, was badly wounded and thought to be killed. His family sat shiva for him and went into mourning. As a matter of fact, he had been picked up, and carried into the residence of a fine old Virginia family within the Federal lines, where the daughter of the house nursed him back to health and strength. Several months after, when he had recovered, he procured a pass through the lines and started for home. He spent the night in the Virginia Hotel, Staunton, enroute for Richmond. By the very nature of things he was rather excited, and got up pretty soon in the morning. He went down into the office just about daybreak and came face to face with his cousin, "Little" Herman Myers, afterwards mayor of Savannah. The weather was pretty cool and his folk had sent "Little" Herman after the body. Herman says Little Herman broke the record for the high jump, and it was some minutes before he could be persuaded that he was not "seeing things." The telegraph line was only open for government business, so no word could be sent the family, all of whom were down at the depot in deep mourning when the remains of his cousin arrived.

The Jews of Richmond broke the record in one particular. Mr. Myer Angle, the first reader of Congregation Beth Ahabah, had six sons in the Confederate Army—four coming from Virginia and two from the Old North State.

In December, 1863, a collection was taken in Richmond to make New Year presents to wounded soldiers. At the suggestion of Mr. Michelbacher, he and Mr. George Jacobs had committees appointed from their respective congregations, to the end that one fund should be raised by the Jews of Richmond for this purpose, which was strictly non-sectarian. The sum of $2,003 was realized.

The war saw some peculiar customs, though I agree with my friend, Mr. Charles Hutzler, that these were probably of the country from which the observants came, not Jewish. Two Jewish blockade runners were making their way through the lines. One killed the other, it is thought. The murdered man was buried in our cemetery here, and a knife was placed in his coffin. Had he been an Indian, I would say it was done that he might even up with his slayer when they met in the happy hunting grounds. A young girl died from cholera. A lock was put in her coffin and the key was thrown away. It was supposed that this locked the disease in her grave and prevented all danger of an epidemic.

It was not strange that, all Israel being brethren, or cousins, that the horror of the fratricidal strife was occasionally brought home forcibly to our people. One of two Jews born in Richmond that served in the Northern Army, so far as I know, came to this city shortly after it fell. He was excusable, for he left here when he was little more than a child and went North to live. He was no more to blame than that other who practically gave his flour to the government. He was born in New York, but had married a Richmond girl only thirteen years before the war came on. This young Federal[*] came to Richmond and called at his aunt's house. Her baby son, as it seemed to her, had been killed in front of Petersburg eight months before. The youth thought he was in love with one of his cousins, who incidentally was an awfully pretty girl. There was a whole houseful of sisters, none of whom would even so much as shake hands with him. How did they know but what he had fired the shot that killed their brother. As he was in the signal corps, which did not do much fighting, it was very probable that he had not. He begged his sweetheart for just one kiss, but it was no go. Finally, she agreed to allow him one little kiss, but she first made him remove his accoutrements. She did not marry him, she shortly after becoming the bride of the adjutant of the Washington artillery.

Mr. Herman Myers, to whom reference has been made, had two brothers in the army—Isadore in the Northern, and Marx, who was killed at Manassas, in the Southern. The first had left home when a lad, and living in the North, every sympathy naturally laid with that section. These incidents but go to prove that wherever the Jew settles he becomes a citizen in good faith.

It is the proper thing to talk of love and sweethearts, but what the women of the South suffered they alone know. The third floor of my father's home commanded a view of the James River for many miles. I have heard my mother say that many a day and night she stood at the window watching the flash of guns, and wondering if that shot had killed either of her brothers.

It was a Jewish citizen of Richmond[†] who engrossed the ordinance of Secession after its passage by the convention. And the same gentleman prepared the credentials of Mason and Slidell, whose seizure from an English vessel, the Trent, by the officers of the U. S. ship San Jacinto, very nearly precipitated a war between England and the United States, a consummation devoutly wished by us of the South.

Considering how few Jews, comparatively speaking, there were in the South, it will probably be a revelation to many, even of our own people, to learn how large a number of them were in the army. In the fall of '64, the late lamented Rev. M. J. Michelbacher and Mr. Joseph Goldsmith, both residents of Richmond, presented a petition to the Secretary of War, Mr. Seddon, asking that the Jewish soldiers in the army near Richmond be furloughed in a body, that they might attend Rosh Hashonah and Yom Kippur services. Mr. Seddon told them that he had no authority to grant such a request, but he approved it and told them to see Adjutant-General Cooper. They called on that official, who received them in a manner becoming their mission. He informed his visitors that he had a complete roster of the army in his office and, judging from the names, he had every reason to believe that there were between 10,000 to 12,000 Jewish soldiers. He explained that so large a number could not be excused from duty at one time. Every man was needed, and in many cases it would have meant a practical disintegration of commands. The petition was finally sent to General Lee, and his autograph letter approving it is now in the possession of members of Mr. Michelbacher's family.

And now the noblest Roman of them all, without whom no sketch of Richmond Jews in the Confederacy would be complete. The "Brains of the Confederacy," Mr. Davis called him, and, to prove the faith that was in him, had him in his cabinet continuously. There were only five portfolios in that body, and Judah P. Benjamin, first and last, held three of them acceptably. Attorney-General, February 25 to September 17, 1861; Secretary of War, September 17, 1861, to March 18, 1862; acting Secretary of War from March 18 to 23, 1862; Secretary of State, March 18, 1862, to the end of the war. As to his resignation from the Secretaryship of War, thereby hangs a tale. Early in '62, General Huger, in command of Roanoke Island, called for powder. It was not sent. A second and third call were likewise ignored. Roanoke Island fell and, in response to Huger's complaint, Congress had a committee to investigate. Benjamin, in a very few words, told why it was not sent—there wasn't any to send, it happening that there was a temporary shortage. The committee was about to rise, when Mr. Benjamin asked would it not have a terrible effect on the people if the true state of affairs was disclosed. The committee agreed that it would. Mr. Benjamin suggested that the committee submit a report censuring him for not sending the powder. This was done, and to keep up appearances he resigned, only to be appointed Secretary of State, to the intense disgust of many. The facts of the case were not made known until 1887. Colonel Charles Marshall, General Lee's military secretary, delivered the address upon the occasion of the laying of the cornerstone of the Lee Monument. It was raining, so the exercises were held in the Hall of the House of Delegates in the State Capitol.

Immediately overhead, not fifty feet away, a different tribute had been paid to the Jew, 24 years before, in the spring of '63, when the success of the Confederacy seemed probable. A resolution was pending in the Confederate Congress, with regard to the removal of the Capitol to Nashville, Tenn. Henry S. Foote, of that State, a fanatic, and possibly in the light of subsequent events, a traitor, remarked that so soon as the independence of the Confederacy was achieved, he was prepared to offer an amendment to the Constitution that no Jew be allowed within twelve miles of the capitol. Had the matter stopped there it would have been nothing, for Foote carried no great weight. But no sooner was the remark made than a round of applause from the Congressmen themselves swept the chamber. Colonel Marshall spake better than he knew.

Strange as it may seem, Foote was on extremely friendly terms with a Jewish citizen of Richmond, was frequently at his house and, for awhile boarded there. This puzzled me no little for some years, until one day this gentleman told me that he always had a good supply of apple jack in the house, a commodity of exceeding scarcity and great price, of which the gentleman from Tennesse was quite fond.

There be some who like to say that Mr. Benjamin was not a professing Jew. My friend, the late Ellis Bottigheimer, told me that he distinctly remembered seeing Mr. Benjamin at the Eleventh Street Synagogue, and that on more than one occasion he was "called up" to the reading of the Torah, as was the custom of that day. The Rev. Dr. Isaac M. Wise told me that Mr. Benjamin delivered an address in the Synagogue in San Francisco on Yom Kippur, 1860. Mr. Benjamin was West with reference to the Lower California land case, for which he received the biggest fee ever paid to a lawyer in this country up to that time.

Dr. Wise also told me of a "Confederate Jew" who has never been heard of as such. He said that on one occasion he was at a banquet, seated near Commodore Mathew F. Maury, the "pathfinder of the sea." Dr. Wise said that the Commodore remarked to him that he (Maury) had quite a bit of Jewish blood in his veins.

My friends, I have exhausted my subject and also, I fear, you. Confederate Jews are now becoming scarce. Most of them are resting quietly in our home of the dead. In that enclosure is contained what is probably the only Jewish martial cemetery in the world. In the midst of it is a slab of marble, the surface of which is unbroken by lettering of any kind. He who fills that unforgotten grave was a Confederate soldier. His name is "unknown," we do not even know where he hailed from. He was a Jew and a Confederate soldier. History will outlive neither.

---

[*] In 1863 Richmond was, nominally, in the Confederate States of America.

[†] My father, Napthtali Ezekiel.

[*] Captain E. J. Levy.

[*] Colonel Jacob E. Hyneman, Philadelphia.

[†] William Flegenheimer, Esq.

"NOVOE VREMYA" SOLD OUT TO JEWS.

According to a report published in the "Kievskaya Mysl," the notorious Russian anti-Semitic paper, the "Novoe Vremya" has become the property of a Jew, M. Rubenstein, who bought the larger portions of the shares of the company controlling it. It is also said that its editor, Menshikov, is about to resign, which means that the paper will assume an entirely different attitude to Jewish problems. The "Novoe Vremya" has, during the past fifteen years, acted as the most inveterate enemy of the Jewish people. It supported the Beilis accusation and the latest charges against Jewish disloyalty and treachery. The "Novoe Vremya" is one of the largest and most influential newspapers in Russia, and has been recognized as a semi-official organ of the government. Suvorin, its first editor, was an unscrupulous man, who supported the reactionary tactics of Alexander the Third, and thereby accumulated a large fortune. During the past year the paper has suffered much through the war, and its influence began to decline. This probably accounts for the changes that are about to take place.

A Call to the Colors---Israel's Golden Opportunity

By Harris Otis Sandberg

Essay delivered before District Grand Lodge No. 5, Norfolk, Va.

In one of his masterly works Alexander Pope gives expression to the thought that in Youth Wisdom is Seldom Found. Not very long ago, when I first encountered this sentence, I felt a bit resentful and remarked that the criticism was a harsh one. However, shortly after the privilege was conferred upon me of preparing for this occasion, I soon discovered that Pope was indeed quite right. But I can draw some consolation from the fact that Dr. Landau is to follow me as the orator of the evening, and that you will yet be treated to words of genuine wisdom from the lips of a learned man—one who by reason of his vocation and training has been brought into more intimate contact with the perplexing problems and vexatious questions that confront our people. And with the experience and judgment that crowns maturity, he can present his views with a feeling of deeper security which profound introspection and continued retrospection make possible.

But though my message may lack the stern austerity and religious solemnity of the pulpit preacher, I assure you that it is none the less the spontaneous expression of a deep emotion and a fervent concern for the vital problems before us Jewish people today, and especially as they touch our growing generation, our younger men. Many a time as different thoughts have passed through my mind in rapid succession, stirring the heart and firing the imagination, I have wished that I were gifted with the power to give concrete expression to them so that in moments of calm I might review them and cogitate upon them. But the spirit of youth is volatile and some of our fondest dreams must oft remain suppressed at heart. It is not for fear that one would not lend a sympathetic ear but rather the conviction that the realization of all hopes and ideals must depend upon the creation of a proper atmosphere, and upon the heart-whole co-operation of those upon whom devolves the sacred duty of creating this atmosphere and of offering co-operation. And this duty must, perforce, fall within the province of the individual home and upon the parents of the growing young—the young men and women who on the morrow will be called upon to take the places of leadership in our Jewish life.

But isn't it strange that our people will proceed with their daily task in that calm complacency and apparent unconcern of the more vital things of life until aroused by some impending peril? And is it not also singular that in this day when various nations and peoples are proudly boasting of their cultures, individualities and their respective contributions to the world's civilization, that the voice of the Jew is but faintly heard? Only when confronted by the stern reality of some cruel tragedy, flagrant injustice, horrible outrage, or indefensible lawlessness, is his soul stirred, is his spirit aroused. And then with that bold daring of our heroic ancestors does the Jew step forth and demand right and justice: then does he proclaim to the world the treasured heritage of his people and its priceless contribution to the civilization of the world. At such a period does the Jewish consciousness experience a revival, a reanimation, a revitalization, and once again the sun casts a hopeful ray upon the future of our people.

Thus it happens that in these momentous times we Jews of America are experiencing a wonderful renaissance, if I may be permitted to use that term. The paralyzing conflict that is raging on the European continent with all the brutality, with all the barbarity, and with all the savagery that a civilized world can conceive, may yet prove the talisman that will bring us a happy solution of our questions and problems. If the toll and the sacrifice were not so staggering in their proportions we might be tempted to see in this conflagration a silver lining. But though the grimness of it all is so distressing, yet we can not overlook the fact that the war has served to rekindle the fires of our Jewish [illegible], has quickened within us a deeper and truer appreciation of our sacred traditions, and has again united us in a common cause.

But why should we always await the occurrence of such exigencies before we [illegible] ourselves and before we refire the dormant embers of our faith and our [illegible]? Why can we not learn the lessons of the past and profit from the experience of centuries of trial and ordeal [illegible] the saddest story that has ever been chronicled by historians?

I know the question must present itself [illegible]—What is it that is expected of us? What would you have us embody [illegible] daily life and [illegible] in our [illegible] in the young? Tell me, are [illegible] or are we [illegible]. [illegible] this is neither time nor [illegible] dimensions of [illegible] pretty niceties. The fact stands out clearly that the Jewish race and the Jewish religion have been so fused, as it were, that none can correctly say just where the one begins and the other leaves off. Judaism has always been not only a part of every Jew's life, but of every event in it. It was an integral part of the thought, philosophy and education of those who came to this country in the pioneer days of years ago—that was before the anti-climax of modern Judaism. But the minds of these early immigrants were quickened with the new civilization and their eyes were opened to the new deliverance. They lost sight of the unparalleled idealism which had conserved their forebears through nearly three thousand years of endless wanderings, of oppression, of persecution and of debasement. In their emancipation they lost sight of the fact that Israel was chosen as a nation of priests to teach to all the nations that God is One, that His commandments make up the only true moral code, and that the highest virtue, and, therein, the greatest happiness, is only attainable through the worship of God and the observance of His statutes.

They forgot the story of Israel of old who, freed from bondage, was subjected to no small peril. The idolatrous spirit which again and again made them forsake their Creator had to be eliminated. In lieu of the cowardice natural to newly emanicpated slaves, they had to be invested with unflinching courage. But they had able and inspired teachers, and the prophets and the sages had devoted themselves to the tremendous task of education. In time this nation of slaves had become indeed a nation of priests fully equipped for the grandest mission ever imposed upon any people. Not in vain was Moses meek and Joshua bold; not in vain was Solomon wise and David eloquent with music whose cadence has not yet died away. By persuasion, conviction and force, with music, speech, fire and sword the education proceeded until throughout Israel there existed unwavering faith in God and unfaltering observance of His decrees. The Assyrians and the Persians, the Greeks and the Macedonians, the Carthaginians and Romans in turn ruled the world with a temporary power founded solely upon prowess in the field. But the Jew alone maintained the faith and practices upon which all true civilization is founded. The Roman arms leveled the walls of Jerusalem, the Roman legions desecrated the holy temple and scattered the nation of Israel, but the fugitive and hunted Jews even in their flight hugged to their starving bosoms the divine Torah, and clung to the ideal. Church, state and society combined in unceasing warfare on the Jew. He was allowed neither freedom of conscience, of thought, of property, or of person. This was his trial for centuries.

With such a history the Jew of generations back came to this country to begin life anew. His failures and successes, his set-backs and his achievements are matters of record and are too well known to need recounting. In this new life of bustle and activity, in the great race for fortune and fame, position and possession, time was too precious to devote to the ceremonies which play such a conspicuous role in our faith and are such vital factors in its perpetuation. Urging the lame plea of occidental adaptation of the faith, the essence of Judaism had been carelessly, ruthlessly, put aside. The home, the sacred and proud boast of Israel was lacking in spirituality. The child was groping in ignorance and darkness. Ever present was the pitiable spectacle of the Jew, the one more liberally endowed with worldly goods, protesting that his faith was now obsolete and impractical. In his endeavor to take on the color of his environment he had sought to lay it completely aside. But a faith as strong and as far reaching as Judaism can not be dropped out of a life in which it has been ingrained.

No wonder, then, that the leaders of Israel viewed with gloom the modern dispersion and shook their heads in doleful doubt for the future of Judaism. Little wonder, too, that the cry of Quo Vadis rang loud and clear in American Jewry. Whither are we drifting? And to what end?

At such a time our leaders of the not very distant past recalled with peculiar fitness the preachings of Hosea who, 2,700 years ago, uttered, My people are being destroyed for lack of knowledge of God. Surrounded on all sides by temptations and by a free and careless immorality and non-spirituality, the faith of Israel was not as then fraught with grave peril, but the virile and forceful character of these leaders stirred the souls and carried Israel safely over the dangerous reefs and shoals. And once again the faith and idealism of our ancestors were restored—a faith and idealism which we have no right to question and which we can not lose even if we will. For a people that have persisted through the titanic upheavals of a world history when nation upon nation was wiped off the face of the earth, and a faith that has proven adamant against the vicious attacks of bigotry and prejudice, were not to be swept away in the modern emancipation.

Then came the next generation and with it a new order of things. Jewish spirit was aroused and the heart was touched. Our people, like all peoples, desired companionship; we wanted communal life and we wanted things Jewish. We again reestablished the home with its sweetness and purity. The mothers of Israel brought their tender influence to bear upon the growing family. At the festive board, at the bedside of the sick, at births, and at marriages, at all events within our fold, we restored the beautiful sentiment characteristic of our people, and with the reverence known of old we united in that stirring cry of Shmai Yisroel—Hear, Oh Israel—and we again lived the faith that endureth forever and ever.

But that was not all. With this modern period a new school of leaders arose—new forces were created. These leaders view with buoyant optimism and hopeful exultation this revival and point with pride to the increasing number of our brethren who, risen to positions of eminence in the great country of ours, are nonetheless proud to associate themselves with their Jewish faith and Jewish heritage. And they view with enthusiasm the constantly growing number of Jewish societies and organizations, which so eloquently evidence the revival of Jewish life and Hebraic culture—forces so significant and prophetic of a new era.

If this progress is to continue, however, we must have numbers and we must have union. Captains without companies to lead are useless. We must have recruits and the recruits we want are the youth of American Jewry; the vigor, the flower, the hope of our people. We want you young men and women—nay, we need you. The clarion note has been sounded, and the colors have been unfurled to the breezes awaiting to take you under their inspiring folds. Ours is a noble work. And I know of no better opportunity for rendering service to the cause than the opportunity afforded by our own B'nai B'rith.

With ideals that are lofty, with leaders that are sincere and earnest, and with a mission that is making itself felt with impelling force, locally, nationally, and internationally, it today occupies a unique position of importance among the organizations of the world. B'nai B'rith recognizes nor rich nor poor; it holds no brief for Reform Judaism or Orthodox Judaism; it makes no distinction between Zionists and anti-Zionists, but in a broad and democratic freemasonry of fellowship it stands ready and willing to accept you, and to receive from you whatever you may contribute to the furtherance of benevolence, to the promotion of brotherly love, and to the uplift of humanity.

To you, young men, and to you men who think yourselves no longer young, what a glorious opportunity exists for us now to join forces and to present a solid phalanx to the world! We are living in a wonderful time. This year especially is an epochal one in the history of ages. Vital problems of transcendent importance are arising daily and these affect our people in no mean measure. Seldom before has there been such a remarkable period of history making. Reflect on the rich and brilliant pages of Jewish history of the past; consider the dark ages and the black pages of Jewish history that followed; and then meditate on the golden opportunity that is ours today—to write another chapter. But what shall this next story contain? Shall it be a chapter continuing the sad and tragic events of the past twenty-five centuries, or shall it be a triumphant chapter reflecting the high idealism of modern Jewry? What the historian in the next decade will chronicle depends upon every one of us assembled here tonight and upon every Jewish man and woman in the country. We are the makers of this history. We are splendidly equipped with all the paraphernalia; we have virile and courageous thinkers, wonderful organizers and an abundance of energy and enthusiasm. But we need you—you, young men and women.

And what an honor and a privilege it is to be allied in such work. What a feeling of intense pride must possess every man when he considers the contribution of his people to civilization. The Greeks gave us science, philosophy, history, art and literature. The Romans contributed a highly developed system of law and order. Honor in abundance has been paid to both these nations. But these alone were not enough. The world must have morality; it must have spirituality. Without these it would be barbarous. They are the essential bulwarks of civilization. And the Bible of our faith has supplied the morality which has made possible progress and enlightenment. As children of such a race, of such a people, of such a religion, and with the heritage of such a rich legacy, do we now sound the call to the colors.

Oh how I wish that I might take you in a body to our lodge room at the Capital City. There I would show you that which would thrill your heart and excite your admiration. In that lodge room you would see assembled young men, who in quality, in numbers, and in character, would astonish you. During the last three months we have augmented our ranks and strengthened our forces by over a hundred. And would it surprise you, Friends, if I told you that of this number nearly 75 per cent are college and professional men, and the other 25 per cent are representative business men of the city. And would it interest you if I also told you that the majority of these new members has been brought into the Order through the individual efforts of one member, Mr. Brand, who with all modesty remarks, "I am only a private in the rear rank, but B'nai B'rith is in the front rank of my heart."

And with that thought, kind friends, I would conclude. B'nai B'rith merits the front rank in the heart of all of us. May God continue to enlarge its breadth of vision and its steadfastness of purpose; may it successfully realize its fondest hopes and noble aspirations; and may the coming year witness its usefulness increased tenfold, its influence extended farther and farther, and its ranks reinforced by the Jewish youth here and everywhere, Amen!

THE UNHOLY ALLIANCE.

What matters it who first unsheathed the sword,
When all the others were sharpened long ago?
Why shame by sophistries some honest word
To champion one above the other foe?

Not all the well turned phrase of casuistry
Can wipe away the Muscovitic stain,
That dark revolting page of history,
That cries of massacres and innocents slain;

Atrocities of its peace—whose horrors exceed,
By unrule, war inferno's rule of rod—
Dealt to the people from whose very seed
Rose He they worship as their Lord and God!

That stronghold of intolerance, and its twin,
The self-willed anarchy of a superslave,
That holds enlightenment a heinous sin,
And strangles liberty in Siberia's grave;

Where the fanatic thrall of bigotry
Unto the weakling in the purple born,
To images bends his superstitious knee,
The inward brute in human lineaments borne!

That spirit of evil in the hierarchy
Of earthly rule, whose arch despotic ill
Eternally lowers on that true sovereignty,
The governing self rule of a people's will!

Not all mendacities hireling quills extract
Can tincture with an aureole of light
Of Gaul and Britain the degrading pact
With that time-stagnant fen of human blight.

Not all the blatant word-belligerance,
With all its hypocritical acclaim,
Can serve the sullied shield of those to cleanse
That shame, with czardom banded, liberty's name.

How low has fallen their cause that find it need,
With all their vaunts, to enlist such arms as these!
As if, in midst such human weeds, could seed
The flower of diviner destinies!

As if the spectres did not follow them
Of thousands slain in their tyrannical wars!
As clung not still the gore upon their hem
Of down-trod nations slaughtered in their course!

Compeers! so well assorted in these times!
How in the name of liberty they blaspheme!
And only add to their vast sum of crimes
Their latest cause humanity's to esteem!

Though all their servile scribes exhaust their scroll,
And pages with vaticinal wishes crowd,
Events, relentless marching to their goal,
Will crush the tarnished lies that still are loud.

—Simon Sultan.

Golden Anniversary Celebration

By

Rimmon Lodge No. 68 I. O. B. B., Richmond, Va.

The fiftieth anniversary celebration of Rimmon Lodge, No. 68, was held on the evening of October 20, 1915, at the Auditorium of the Jefferson Hotel, before a representative audience of about five hundred members of the Jewish community. There were present on that occasion Brother Philip Whitlock and Brother Charles Mitteldorfer, both of whom celebrated their fiftieth year as B'nai B'rith.

The following program was rendered and listened to with strict attention by the guests present. Bro. Sol. L. Bloomberg, chairman of the Program Committee, introduced the speakers:

Address—Alvin B. Hutzler, President Rimmon Lodge.
Soprano Solo—"O Don Fatale," from the opera "Don Carlo"..........Verdi
Miss Bettie Gellman.
Address—Harold C. Bloomberg, President District Grand Lodge, No. 5.
Contralto Solo—"Because I Love You" .... Hawley
Miss Corinne Samuels.
Address—Rabbi E. N. Calisch, Ph. D., Member Executive Committee, I. O. B. B.
Soprano Solo—"A Pastoral"......Carey
Miss Agnes May.
Soprano Solo—"Caprice-Viennois" ....Fritz Kreisler
Master Sam Shklar.
Solo—"I Am a Lonesome Melody"
Mr. Henry Schwartzschild.
Accompanist, Miss Carrie Clarke.

After the regular program was concluded, supper was served, and the floor cleared for dancing, which lasted until long past midnight.

The affair was voted a complete success by every one present, and many who were present asked the privilege of joining the Order, and expressed their pleasure at having this opportunity of learning something in reference to the principles of the B'nai B'rith Order.

Rimmon Lodge at the present time is the oldest lodge in District No. 5, all other lodges that were organized prior to Rimmon Lodge having gone out of existence or been merged with newer lodges. While the Jewish community in this city is large enough to entitle them to more than one lodge, they prefer to concentrate their attention on one central organization, and feel that they will be far more successful by following this course.

Address of President Hutzler.

Brethren of the Order, Ladies and Gentlemen. I am going to talk to you tonight about something that covers a period of fifty years. I wonder how many of you have given adequate thought to the meaning of those words—fifty years, or the one-half century from 1865 to 1915—for we are here tonight to celebrate the semi-centennial of Rimmon Lodge.

Recalling that 1865 was the year in which peace followed civil strife; that the bitterness engendered by war still prevailed; that a successful foe held rule in our city, not yet recovered from its desolation, we can readily comprehend how difficult must have been the task of those who, at that time conceived the formation of a fraternal band, taking as their material native and alien, and welding them into a fabric with unity of purpose destined to become the means of creating, in this community, an organization for the betterment, not only of the condition of those who gave fealty to it, but of all that portion of the human family which could be reached by its beneficent influence.

Let us stop a moment for another and different comparison. In 1865 the fastest train hardly covered thirty miles an hour, while we today travel in safety at the rate of sixty miles an hour. It was thought then that the marvels of horse-drawn street cars were luxuries, while today the electric car is no longer a novelty, and the jitney bus is the thing of the moment. How many of the organizers of Rimmon Lodge dreamt that for a nickel they could be carried from one end of the city to another in a motor vehicle, or that they would see men flying in the air like birds and with even more perfect control of the mechanical wings than has the bird itself. Aye, fifty years is a long time when we think of what has been accomplished, but it is all too short to those who look back upon it.

My brethren and friends, there are some things which never grow old. They are the verities of life which we call the virtues. Love and truth are in the foreground; faith and hope are not far behind. Therefore when the B'nai B'rith laid its foundation in Richmond in 1865 with brotherly love as its watchword, its foundation was laid in truth; its cornerstone was cemented in faith and its principles laden with hope; they prepared for us a heritage which we should take pride in possession, which should arouse in us every fraternal sense of responsibility, which causes men to feel that every human being has a claim upon his friendship, help and sympathy.

Rimmon Lodge was organized on October 23, 1865, as a part of District No. 3, which then had its headquarters in Philadelphia. And as Benjamin Lodge has since been merged with Rimmon Lodge, I may as well state that the two lodges were organized on the same day, just one hour apart, Rimmon Lodge being the elder. One of the charter members of Benjamin Lodge is our esteemed Brother Philip Whitlock, who has had the singular honor of presiding over both organizations. The organizers of Rimmon Lodge were Naphtali Ezekiel, William Fleishman, Isaac Guggenheimer, Jonas Heller, Sam Hirsch, N. H. Hirshberg, Isaac Hutzler, Moses Hutzler, William Lovenstein, David Mitteldorfer, Isaac Schriver, S. W. Sildner, Daniel Stern, Julius Straus, Julius Sycle and Jonas Weinberg. These names were all familiar to the generation of fifty years ago. Today we still have two of them who are amongst the living, viz.: our First Secretary, Brother Charles Mitteldorfer, who is with us tonight; and Sam Hirsh, who is no longer a resident of this city.

The initial meeting of Rimmon Lodge was held over the store of N. W. Nelson on the south side of Broad street, between Seventh and Eighth streets, with the Rev. M. J. Michelbacher, our former beloved minister and teacher, as its first president.

Rimmon Lodge in its early days was the center of social life in the Jewish community. The masked balls at Purim and other entertainments were given under the auspices of the lodge, the proceeds from which went to charity, but pleasure alone was never its sole object. When distress and sorrow visited a family the lodge was always present with a helping hand; and when the messenger with the unseen sword appeared in their midst it was generally under the auspices of Rimmon Lodge that the family was cared for and all expenses paid out of the lodge funds.

One of the most unique features of the organization and one that did valuable work in former days was the Peace Committee. It was their duty to adjust all differences between the members of the lodge, and I venture to say that the amicable and pleasant conditions prevailing today amongst the Jews of our city are largely the result of the splendid work achieved by this committee in their efforts to remove actual and impending disagreements.

Rimmon Lodge is justly proud of its history, for from its inception it was prominent in the affairs of the District, and it was not long before one of its members was advanced to the position of president of the District Grand Lodge and later occupied the position of president of the Constitution Grand Lodge Convention, which is the highest office known to the Order. Indeed Rimmon Lodge has held so well to its traditions that more of its members have held the office of president and the office of secretary of the Grand Lodge than any other lodge in the District. Therefore it is particularly fitting that on this fiftieth anniversary of Rimmon Lodge we have as president of District No. 5 one of our own members who so ably represents not only our lodge, but the entire District.

It was indeed unfortunate that when Rimmon Lodge was doing its greatest work that the question of private interests should have entered its folds and been the cause for dissension. The insurance feature has rarely proven successful in a fraternal organization, and it was many years before our lodge recovered from the bitterness engendered over the handling of this subject. Even today there are some former members of the Order, in their day active and ardent supporters of Rimmon Lodge, who, on account of differences of opinion in reference to the beneficial feature of the Order, withdrew from the ranks and have never been prevailed upon to again unite with us.

Today Rimmon Lodge is rejuvenated and, with an enrollment of two hundred members, expects to show this community what an organization with high ideals can and will accomplish. The B'nai B'rith Order has long since ceased to be an experiment. With its lofty ideals of justice to the oppressed and extending its fraternal influence from a central location to every point of the compass under our beloved flag, then reaching across the broad expanse of ocean and laying claim to a liberal membership in the western and central states of Europe, it has been enabled to impress those ideals with vigor of action, and constant expansion of influence. Indeed its influence has become so manifest that the treaty-making minds of America and of Europe have been forced to recognize its demands for righteousness, for fairness, for more liberal treatment and for the right of equality.

While philanthropy, patriotism and the broad spirit of humanity are not in the sole possession of the B'nai B'rith Order, yet they are the features which are inscribed upon its banner in glowing colors; and, receiving support from men whose wisdom, character, charity and deeds of loyalty entitle them to sympathetic consideration, the Order finds itself in a position where Loyalty will be sought, and Fraternal Love will prevail.

PLAN TO TEACH IMMIGRANTS AMERICANISM.

Recently, the Bureau of Naturalization, of the Department of Commerce has perfected plans, looking to the education of our immigrants in Civics and Citizenship, thereby helping to elevate the standards of citizenship.

The Bureau is animated by the proper spirit when it says: "The making of a citizen insofar as the requirements of the law are concerned is no difficult matter, but to make a citizen in spirit, sympathy and loyalty, is a vastly different matter."

In order to achieve this higher purpose, the Bureau is furnishing educational material to all aliens who contemplate becoming American citizens. As the declaration of intention is to be filed two years before the petition for final papers, and as the petition cannot be heard in less than ninety days after filing, there is a period of two years in which to work on one class of cases and of at least ninety days on the other class.

This work indicates a healthy social conception on the part of those who have undertaken it.

If the same sort of vision were applied to the handling of the immigrant on his arrival and the securing for him the blessings of a steady position in healthy sections of the country, then the cultural work could proceed more smoothly, having a sound basis on which to operate.

That American Jewry is also alive to the need for elevating the standards for citizenship, is indicated by the resolution adopted by the National Association of Jewish Social Workers held in Baltimore last May, providing:

"That a committee of five be appointed by the president of the National Association of Jewish Social Workers to devise plans for encouraging naturalization and citizenship among Jewish immigrants; to collect data as to whatever educational propaganda is being made toward this end; and, if necessary, to arrange for the collation and distribution of material which will be helpful in this work to the various communities throughout the country."

Is the Immigrant an Intruder?

From time to time learned articles have appeared from the pens of essayists and sociologists, calling attention to the social dangers of a large immigration, and to the probable effect of such immigration on Americanism. The latest contribution on this subject comes from Miss Agnes Repplier, a frequent contributor to the Atlantic Monthly. In the September issue of that publication she asserts that the immigrant is intrusive and obtrusive; that he assumes that the country is for him, and in the ensuing uproar of Greek, Servian, German, Hebrew, French, Italian and Polish, the swan song of the American is lost. "Where does the American come in?" she asks, "What place is reserved for him in the commonwealth which his heroic toil and heroic sacrifices moulded into what Washington proudly called 'a respectable nation'?" But that is not all. The indictment is a very long one. The author lists the mendacities of the Teuton, the condescension of the Frenchman, the masterfulness of the Jew which "affronts our sense of decency" because he has "received from us so much, and given us so little." Furthermore, she is pained, because little boys of a Socialistic turn of mind refuse to salute the flag, because it is a military emblem.

Mr. Herbert J. Seligman, writing in the New York Evening Post disposes of Miss Repplier's doubts in the following language:

"Is it possible that Miss Repplier's American is like those pretentious photographs newspapers sometimes publish—in this case a fuzz of noses, mouths, and eyes with the portrait of a Son or a Daughter of the Revolution emerging from the haze? And on the portrait of such a portrait are not writers and thinkers like Miss Repplier a bit proprietary about these United States? What of the historical sense which imputes to the early settlers only 'high courage and heroic labors' to which 'we owe law, liberty, and well-being?' What of indentured servants, deported criminals, ruined second sons, slave-trading New Englanders, and the others to whose high courage and heroic labors we owe so much?

"Interloper! Intruder! One can imagine a modern incarnation of an ancient spirit saying, let you that are not intruders, newcomers, or children of them, be the first to cast stone. The distinction between newcomers and natives is a finer one than is drawn either casually in Political Oratory or equally casually in magazines and newspapers. For to draw it you must first decide whether you mean by newcomer one of different race than the one you conceive to be original stock, or merely a late arrival; and whether modifications of the civilization of the supposed original stock are assaults upon an established system or contributions to an evolving social background. In what sense is the sentence true which Miss Repplier quotes from Mr. Horace Kallen's admirable article in the Nation: 'Only men who are alike in origin and spirit, and not abstractly, can be truly equal, and maintain that inward unanimity of action and outlook which makes a national life?' Does it mean that men of English ancestry founded the nation and that only men of that tradition and that background of civilization can maintain American national life? Miss Repplier says it is part of our sentimentalism that 'we see plainly what we owe to the Magyar and the Levantine, but we have no concern for the Virginian and the Pennsylvanian.' When does a Magyar cease to be a Magyar and become a Pennsylvanian? Or are descendants of English indentured servants and deported criminals more Pennsylvanians and Virginians than he?

"Are the descendants of criminals jail-delivered from Austria more Californians than a recently naturalized settler? Does it require three generations to make an American? Or is the taint of having immigrated after 1776 one that no tears can wash away?

"It is a proper time to take measure of our nationalism when nations, whose men and women have sought our soil, are seeking the light of their own destiny through a rain of blood: to ask whether Americanism is a fact or a creed to maintain against other creeds; whether our civilization is a thing so finished and our national ideas, our Kultur, are ultimate verity."—Distribution.

BANQUET AND CLASS INITIATION BY ESHCAL LODGE OF DAYTON, OHIO.

A banquet was arranged by Eshcal Lodge No. 55 of Dayton, Ohio, at the Ornus Groto Hall on Sunday, Oct. 24, 1915, in honor of the largest class of members ever initiated in the lodge. Preceding the banqeut a meeting of the lodge was held, at which time a class of 207 members was initiated by the degree team of the lodge in a most impressive manner. The occasion was honored by the presence of Karl M. Vetsburg of St. Louis, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge. At the banquet Mr. Sidney G. Kusworm acted as toastmaster, and the following program was carried out:

Toast Master—Bro. Sidney G. Kusworm.
Greeting—Bro. Joseph Kohn, President Eschol Lodge.
Aims and Objects of I. O. B. B. Bro. Karl M. Vetsburg, First Vice-President District No. 2.
Eschol Lodge of the Future. Bro. David Lefkowitz.
Why Every Jew Should be a Ben Brith. Bro. Samuel Burick.
Our Propaganda Work. Bro. A. W. Schulman.
My Impression of the I. O. B. B. New Members, selected by Toastmaster.

The wonderful result achieved by the lodge is mainly due to the membership campaign committee headed by Brother Sidney G. Kusworm, and his co-workers, who launched the campaign for members with an enthusiasm and a vigor that left no doubt as to the ultimate result.

JEW APPOINTED MINISTER OF MUNITIONS.

A great honor has been bestowed upon a member of the Jewish community of Auckland, Australia, in the appointment of Mr. A. M. Myers to the position of Minister of Munitions and Supplies. Mr. Myers held the office of mayor of his city during a term of four years, and also held the portfolios of defense, railways and finance in a previous cabinet which resigned in 1912. The appointment has been received with general approval throughout New Zealand.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

Published Monthly (except July and August)
under the auspices of the
INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Printed by Excelsior Printing Co., Chicago.

Editorial Office
1228 TRIBUNE BUILDING, CHICAGO.
All matter intended for publication should be addressed to the editor.

Subscriptions received through lodges only. Subscriptions, one dollar per annum.

No responsibility is assumed for articles published over the signatures of the writers thereof.

JEWISH CALENDAR

5676-1915

Rosh-Chodesh Kislev	Monday, Nov. 8
Chanukah (Feast of Dedication)	Thursday, Dec. 2
Rosh-Chodesh Tebeth	Wednesday, Dec. 8
Fast of Tebeth	Friday, Dec. 17

5676-1916

Rosh-Chodesch Shehbat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Rosh-Chodesch Adar	Saturday, Feb. 5
Second Adar	Monday, March 6
Purim (Feast of Esther)	Sunday, March 19
Rosh-Chodesch Nissan	Tuesday, April 4
Passover (Pesach)	Tuesday, April 18
Passover (Seventh Day)	Sunday, April 24
Rosh-Chodesch Iyar	Thursday, May 4
Lag-B'Omer	Sunday, May 21
Rosh-Chodesch Sivan	Friday, June 2
Shabuoth (Confirmation Day)	Wednesday, June 7
Rosh-Chodesch Shebat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Fast of Tammuz	Tuesday, July 18
Rosh-Chodesch Ab	Monday, July 31
Fast of Ab	Tuesday, Aug. 8
Rosh-Chodesch Ellul	Wednesday, Aug. 30

5677-1916

THE WRITTEN LAW.

The Jew has always been accused as a stickler to law, a legalist. Obedience to law is of course a virtue: it is the sum of good citizenship. There are admittedly bad laws upon the statute-books and some laws which represent the wish of a hasty majority and of the special interests behind it. Nevertheless until the law is repealed it stands written and must be obeyed. The individual who wilfully and consciously violates it must be prepared to pay the penalty. The Jew, his detractors said, has made of law a religion, whereas religion ought to be the free and spontaneous sentiment. It is interesting that the charge often comes from them who are themselves on the defense against this very same charge.

Never mind the question of religion. The theologians have been in the habit of censuring Judaism on another count. The Old Testament religion used to be made an object of reproach because it was centered in nationalism, because patriotism partook of a sacred, religious character, and the wars which the nation waged with its neighbors were known as the wars of the Lord. We fear that much of the same spirit reigns in Europe today. There is not much of the spirit of non-resistance to evil manifest anywhere along the multitudinous fronts. Everywhere it is the bedrock of elemental self-preservation. The supreme law is, Strike before the other man strikes you. Everybody reiterates that war is hell and the laws of war are invoked to make it doubly hellish. The laws of war are on the statute-books, written, codified. Courts-martial will quote chapter and verse, or rather tome and paragraph. And there the matter, it would appear, ends.

The law in the statute-book is one thing and the execution thereof by a human being upon another is another. We all have our rights which no one should be permitted to take away from us with impunity. But the gentleman does not insist upon his rights. The state and its constituted authorities must watch that the law is observed and that where it is infringed upon condign punishment according to law should strike the offender. But the state is not an inhuman monster nor is the letter of the law a fetish. The law must be humanized. Higher than all written law is the unwritten dictate of humanity.

The manner in which offenders are [illegible] marks off the civilized com[illegible] from the uncivilized or barbarous [illegible] law is abstract in its terms [illegible] spirit. When it comes to be applied to a concrete case, much that was unforseen comes into play. Circumstances alter cases. Motives must be taken into consideration. The more enlightened a community, the more it will create distinctions with reference to age and sex. Youthful offenders are sent to the reformatory. We have juvenile courts for minors. Ordinarily we recoil from inflicting the severity of the law upon a woman.

There is nothing heroic about the crimes which are daily happening in every community. But there is something heroic when the crime is committed in the name of patriotism however misguided. When a state is at war it must naturally defend itself and its army against the secret machinations and plots of ill-guided patriots. When a conquered population is held in subjection there will be naturally much friction and misunderstanding. It would be wise for the new subjects to refrain from violent resistance which must in the nature of the case only aggravate their condition and serve to make a difficult situation fraught with danger. It is unwisdom to plot in secret, it is a punishable political offense. It makes for provocation and invites repressive measures. Courts-martial do their duty when, after ferreting out the offender and proving his guilt frequently out of his own mouth, they proceed to execute the law. The law is on their side. But somehow humanity should mitigate the rigor of the written law. And sins against humanity have not been confined to one nation. Let there be therefore self-searching and a determination to have done with all that unnecessary slaughter that this monstrous war has caused in trench and city. Let there be a speedy return to peace before a repetition of all sorts of inhumanities is called for. There has been enough of carnage and of hatred. Let there come the reign of goodwill and of forbearance and of mutual respect and of human affection.

PAUPERIZING THE STUDENT.

It is the pride of our American system of education that so many men and women work their way through school, as the phrase goes. In Europe where each person is born into a caste it is much more difficult for the children of the poor to raise themselves unassisted and reach the highest rung of the ladder of education. For be it remembered that education confers a social status, a caste consciousness. In England indeed education means fitness from a social point of view, and the degree means not so much learnable matter acquired as a certain measure of polish befitting a gentleman or lady. On the continent they pay more attention to method and maturity of judgment, but even there the men in the professions occupy a higher social position. Now a gentleman is born, not made. Breeding and home associations go farther than scholastic lessons and tasks. It often, therefore, happens that the poor student abroad, no matter how proficient he may make himself, will lack those elements of success which go with right posture and address and the grace of manners. To that extent he is handicapped for life. In a democracy like ours no such demarcations arising from birth or social station can be allowed to take root. With us the schools are public, open to all. We consciously foster the levelling spirit. We put all on the same plane. There is no favoritism on account of station, social or otherwise. We honor the boy and girl who coming from a humble home rise to distinction, carry away the prizes. Education is costly in the higher stages. Books are expensive. Above all, the leisure which is requisite for a scholastic career takes the student away from industrial activity and makes the burden of bread-winning for the head of the family so much harder. In our colleges the rich and the poor rub elbows. None but a cad would look down upon a fellow-student because outside of the recitation room he waits on table or sells newspapers in the streets. Coaching or tutoring, of course, is more in line with the student's work. But such opportunities do not fall to everybody. And any honest work is honorable.

But no self-respecting student should be made to engage in degrading occupations. No work is degrading, but begging is. And so is all semblance of begging. The student who knocks at our door and solicits our subscription to this or that paper or combination of papers will, if he analyzes the situation, realize that he is putting himself in the place of so many canvassers who are but a species of beggars. If great publication concerns find it to their advantage to encourage this mode of earning a livelihood in the college student, they are pauperizing him. They tell him to approach his better-situated fellow-students. To refuse means to be niggardly, to graciously put your name down on the subscription-card means to be charitable. It is an act of charity, and the canvasser has been turned into a recipient of charity, of private charity. The student who sells newspapers on the corners of the streets is far better off, for his self-respect is preserved. He is not a pauper.

And let not this be forgotten. Working one's way through school is a necessity, not a virtue. At any rate certain occupations are bound to react unfavorably upon the student. A spirit of independence is indeed cultivated which is valuable. But some students tend to look upon their occupations which give them the means to support themselves as a business. They overdo it. Many students balance their accounts by the time they leave college and find that they have a surplus. Or they are forced to support not only themselves, but other members of the family likewise. All of which is very noble. But experience shows that it can be done only at a sacrifice to efficiency, and what is more important at a sacrifice to social fitness. And social fitness is an asset in the life of a student quite as much as learning. The student who sells papers on the street is of the street himself. He will talk slang. He will lack manners. He may take honors in English composition, but his speech betrays the uncultured person. There are some that nobly overcome all these handicaps. But they are the fewest. Especially noticeable are these subtle influences in the Jewish student who belongs to the second generation, whose home is in contrast to all that he strives to acquire in the college. In some universities the beneficent transformation of the student from the slums into a perfect American gentleman is a phenomenon inviting attention. But it can be achieved only by the college which is situated far away from the large city. In a city university the foreign student often leaves the institution with all the learning but without any of the graces which we sum up in the word American gentleman. Here is a field of activity for the Jewish student organization. Let there be a bureau established for all honest and honorable employment short of the degrading and pauperizing kind. And above all let those whose eyes and minds are open to social improvement exercise their influence upon the blind and crude and work as a leaven for ameliorating the condition of the son of the immigrant not only economically, but also socially. With us likewise the college graduate must be first and foremost a gentleman. All else is secondary. Regular meals and the daily bath are indeed a virtue. A well modulated voice wins respect. All slang should be tabooed, the college slang included. And to the extent that the Jewish student cultivates the habits of the American gentleman will he find that prejudice will melt away and that he will be met by his classmates on the plane of equality. The Jewish parent has always been self-sacrificing and squeamish about his children's occupations that they may be "bekoved." Theirs was always a dignified poverty. Let it not be degraded into pauperism.

SIMON WOLF CELEBRATES 79TH BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. Simon Wolf, familiarly known as the "grand old man" in American Jewry, celebrated his 79th birthday anniversary on Thursday, Oct. 28. He spent the day as usual in his office receiving callers, telegrams and letters from all over the world congratulating him upon his hale and hearty condition. The Board of Directors of the German Orphan Asylum visited him at his home the preceding evening, presenting him with a gift of 79 roses in addition to the collection of wild flowers gathered by the children of the home. The Directors of the Ruppert Home and other institutions in which Mr. Wolf has been deeply interested similarly honored him.

Sir Mosely Ezekiel, the American sculptor of the statue of religious liberty, wrote to Mr. Wolf from Rome in part as follows:

"It has pleased the Almighty to place you with a vigor of body and soul that will enable you and your friends for many years to come to congratulate you. * * * I give to you today, with feelings of deep reverence and offer to you my heartfelt congratulations and to wish you thus dear to me, the greatest joy and my greatest wishes."

The "B'nai B'rith News" rejoices with the great hosts of Mr. Wolf's friends and well wishers and hopes that he may be spared for many more years to come in full enjoyment of physical and mental vigor.

NAT STRAUSS.

On Nov. 2, Mr. Nat Strauss, of New Orleans, after a well spent life of more than eighty years devoted to relieving the distressed, was gathered to his fathers.

Mr. Strauss was born in Alsace and emigrated to the United States in 1852, locating in Jackson, Miss., and in the early fifties he moved to Clinton, La., where he joined a Confederate command. He was adjutant-general on the staffs of Generals Miller and Bragg, and throughout the war he proved himself a brave officer. In 1865 he located in Mobile and shortly afterwards moved to New Orleans, where he made his permanent home.

For forty years he was actively engaged in Jewish philanthropic work and was a member on the boards of the Touro Infirmary and the Jewish Widows' and Orphans' Home. For twenty-six years he was secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 7, and in recognition of his faithful service was, on the occasion of the celebration of his last birthday, presented with a testimonial by the Grand Lodge as a mark of love and esteem.

A brief private service was held at Mr. Strauss' residence, and in the afternoon the body lay in state in the Touro Synagogue. The funeral services were conducted by Rabbi Emanuel G. Leipziger. The Synagogue was crowded with friends and relatives and members of the various boards who gathered to honor his memory. He was buried in Gentilly Cemetery, where Mr. Leon Schwarz, of Mobile, read the B'nai B'rith service. This was followed with "taps" signaled by the buglers of the Army of Tennessee and Army of Northern Virginia.

District Grand Lodge No. 7 has lost in the demise of Brother Strauss a worker and an official who for the past twenty-six years has served the cause of humanity in a manner that reflects credit to his people.

SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT OF THE I. O. B. B.

Within the past few days Rev. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee entered upon his duties as Director of the Social Service Department of the I. O. B. B. The work is to be national in its scope, with headquarters in Chicago, where Doctor Coffee now resides.

On assuming charge of the office Doctor Coffee at once joined forces with the Big Brother Movement. This is a part of a city-wide undertaking by Catholics and Protestants as well as Jews, and had been deferred till his arrival. It is a fruitful field for fine constructive social service. It calls for earnest and sincere B'nai B'rith men to accept responsibility for some Jewish lad. In most instances the dereliction is caused by parents, reared in the ghettoes of Russia, being unable to understand their children who are American born. This unwillingness to obey parents has brought the boy before the law. The Big Brother stands between this boy and some reformatory. Guidance and a friendly hand may, and no doubt will, save him to become a useful citizen. Some of this activity had formerly been carried on by the Bureau of Personal Service, and this will now be amalgamated with the Social Service Department.

Another broad field of useful activity is prison work. Till now systematic handling and care of the Jewish prisoners has been very slightly touched. Doctor Coffee has already undertaken a survey of the prison correctional and insane institutions of the State. At present it is most difficult to secure employment for paroled and discharged prisoners. This necessary work will be undertaken by the new Department. Jews are not criminals by nature. The man who has fallen requires aid on his release, so that he can live an honest life.

This leads to the next step, employment. For many years past the Order has maintained a successful employment office in Chicago in conjunction with the Jewish Aid Society. Steps are now being taken to widen its usefulness by co-operation with nearby manufacturing centers.

On November 17, Doctor Coffee goes to St. Paul, where he will speak on "Judaism and Social Service" before Minnesota Lodge No. 157. On Sunday, December 5, he will address Joshua Lodge No. 23, in Philadelphia, on the occasion of its 60th anniversary.

The lodges and members of the Order that are interested in some phase of social service work are requested to communicate with the Director with reference to any suggestions they may wish to make.

FAREWELL DINNER AND RECEPTION TO DR. COFFEE.

Signal honor was paid Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee at the Testimonial Dinner and Farewell Reception held for him by the Young Men's Hebrew Association in the Fort Pitt Hotel on Oct. 14.

Evidencing the high esteem in which Dr. Coffee is held, glowing tributes were paid him by the speakers, some of whom had been associated with Dr. Coffee in various civic and charitable matters. H. J. Applestein, president of the Y. M. H. A., presided, and spoke with feeling of Dr. Coffee's connection with the Young Men's Hebrew Association, from the time of its inception in 1910. Dr. Coffee, he said, was the staunchest and truest friend of the Y. M. H. A.

Beautiful tributes were paid Dr. Coffee by J. Byron Deacon of the Associated Charities, Dr. John A. Brashear, Pennsylvania's most noted citizen, Morris Baer, Judge Josiah Cohen, Councilman Rauh, Jacob Seligsohn, Louis Brodie, Peter Glick, and Richard Rauh.

Councilman Rauh's tribute in part follows:

"Every hour of leisure that Dr. Coffee could spare has been given over with rare singleness of purpose to the religious, civic, industrial, economical, moral and philanthropic activities of our community.

"As a Jew his attitude has at all times been dignified and in keeping with the noblest and loftiest precepts and ethics of our Faith, and well has he fought the battles of the Jew wherever and whenever called upon to do so. Modest to a fault, he never sought newspaper notoriety, the newspaper always sought him. Coming here almost unknown to our non-Jewish community, he early made a name for himself by his splendid courage, his untiring activity and signal ability.

"In a word, he created for himself a niche in the hall of Pittsburgh's fame, for not only did he ally himself with the most influential bodies of the city, but likewise by his energetic service in and through these activities, his opinions and labors were quoted in publications, such as the 'Survey,' the 'Literary Digest,' and other national publications."

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE—MR. HARRIS WEINSTOCK COMMENDS ITS WORK.

Most of the Jewish papers that have made reference to the recent report of the Anti-Defamation League have realized the necessity for the existence of such an organization, at the same time deploring the growth of prejudice which has made it a necessary part of the B'nai B'rith organization. Only one of the papers has been so blind to events that are happening every day as to question the usefulness of the League. This paper admits that the League "has devoted itself to a high ideal—the consistent scientific and centralized combating of defamers of the Jew," but accuses the League of having more of the Don Quixote character in it than of the Sancho Panza. The following letter from Mr. Harris Weinstock, a member of the U. S. Commission on Industrial Relations, one of America's most prominent Jews, which reached the office of the League the same day as the editorial comment above referred to, would seem to indicate that those who are thoroughly conversant with the status of the Jew in this country believe the League has a function and is carrying it out in the proper manner.

San Francisco, Oct. 3, 1915.

Mr. Sigmund Livington.

Dear Sir: My attention has just been called to a letter written by you as chairman of the executive committee of the Anti-Defamation League addressed to Harrison Gray Otis, editor of the L. A. "Times," and published in the April, 1915, issue of the B'nai B'rith News.

I had previously read other communications written by you in protest of defamation of Jewish character and published in the B'nai B'rith News and in other publications, and I am prompted to drop you a line to express my appreciation of your commendable work.

I greatly admire the sane, temperate, generous and fair minded spirit in which your protests are written. Their very sanity and reasonableness cannot but command attention, and their sound logic cannot but carry conviction to all fair minds. As you well point out, much of the misconception regarding Jewish character is due to ignorance, and much of the race prejudice is likewise due to the tendency of many more Jews to permit the worst and the basest Jewish types to make in their minds a character for the race as a whole.

I know of no better way to fight these things than the admirable method pursued by your committee, and I congratulate your committee upon their wise choice of a chairman.

The Jew in this country is "making good" so rapidly and in so many walks of life that the time is not far distant, let us hope, when he will need no defenders and no one to enter protests in his behalf. But until that time does come, I hope you may be permitted to go on doing your splendid work toward hastening that day.

You feel, I take it, in common with myself, that the Jew in America always has been a valuable asset to the nation, and as he grows in education he is destined to become a still more useful asset to his country. He has the body and the brains and he is giving his fullest share of these, as he always has done, to "seeking the welfare of the nation wherein he dwells."

The American people believe in fair play, and where they are remiss in this, it is but necessary, as a rule, to bring the matter to their attention to have them make speedy correction.

With best wishes for the continued success of your work and with assurances of my best esteem, I am,

Very truly yours,
Harris Weinstock.

ACTIVITY OF I. O. B. B. EDUCATIONAL BOARD OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

A well attended meeting of the Educational Board of Allegheny County under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of District Grand Lodge No. 3, was recently held in Pittsburgh. The report of its superintendent, Brother R. Davidson, of Homestead, Pa., was submitted, giving in detail the statement of the condition of the children in the Warrandale and Oakdale institutions. The report showed the presence of twenty-two Jewish children in these two institutions.

This work is done by the eight lodges of Allegheny County, of which every lodge has appointed a committee of two to serve on the Board. The work is purely charitable, and its main object is to look after Jewish children that have been committed by the Juvenile Court to the various institutions, and while there, the Board sees to it that they receive proper Jewish education and after being let out from the institutions the Board looks after the welfare of the children so that they may not go astray again.

B'nai B'rith Campaign of Chicago For New Members.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council, of Chicago, representing the three local lodges, a campaign for membership was inaugurated on Oct. 11, with the ultimate view of securing one thousand men of high standing and character to be enrolled on the roster of the three lodges. A membership committee of one hundred was appointed, consisting of the following prominent co-religionists of the city:

Hon. Samuel Alschuler, Isidor Baumgartl, Dr. Carl Beck, S. Max Becker, Joseph Beifeld, Louis Benjamin, Dr. Max Biesenthal, Maurice Berkson, Rabbi S. S. Cohon, Israel Cowen, Abel Davis, Dr. H. I. Davis, James Davis, Nathan Deutsch, Samuel Deutsch, B. D. Eisendrath, Louis Eisendrath, Henry Elkan, Max Ellbogen, Hon. Samuel Ettelson, Hon. Martin Emerich, Max L. Falk, David B. Falter, Sig. Fish, Henry G. Foreman, Oscar G. Foreman, A. B. Friedman, Edward S. Glickauf, Moses E. Greenebaum, Julien J. Gusfield, Harry Hart, Max Hart, Milton R. Hart, Emil S. Hartman, Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, Dr. Abraham Hirschberg, Gus Hochstadter, Albert Hoefeld, Hon. Henry Horner, Bernard Horwich, Sam Karpen, Sol Kline, Maurice W. Kozminski, Adolf Kraus, Dr. Harry A. Kraus, Sol Kurz, Nathan F. Leopold, Dr. Gerson B. Levi, Dr. Felix A. Levy, Leon L. Lewis, Dr. David Lieberthal, Isaac B. Lipson, Jacob M. Loeb, Chas. Lederer, Hon. Julian W. Mack, Sidney Mandl, Albert F. Mecklenburger, Morton A. Mergentheim, Julius H. Meyer, Edward Menkin, Adolph Nathan, Jacob Newman, Hon. Hugo Pam, Adolph Pike, David M. Pfaelzer, A. J. Pflaum, Samuel Philipson, Dr. Julius Rappaport, Jacob Ringer, Maurice Rosenfield, Morris M. Rothschild, Toby Rubovits, Hon. A. J. Sabath, Hon. Joseph Sabath, Dr. Theodore B. Sachs, Benjamin J. Samuels, Dr. Tobias Schanfarber, Benjamin J. Schiff, Jacob Schuadig, A. B. Seelenfreund, Charles Shaffner, Israel Shrimski, Sigmund Silberman, Edward Sonnenschein, Hugo Sonnenschein, Adolph Stein, Ignatz Stein, Hon. Philip Stein, Dr. Joseph Stolz, Milton L. Strauss, Simeon Strauss, Abraham R. Stumer, Joseph Wedeles, Adolph D. Weiner, Joseph Weissenbach, Joseph M. Wile, William Wilhartz, Arnold Wolff, Leopold Wormser, Dr. A. B. Yudelson, Sigmund Zeisler.

Teams composed of ten active workers were appointed, with the following as captains having charge of their respective teams:

Dr. Harry A. Kraus, Adolph D. Weiner, Henry S. Blum, Edward S. Glickauf, Samuel J. Ascher, Julien J. Gusfield, Edward Menkin, Sig. Fish, Benjamin J. Samuels, Judge Joseph Sabath and A. B. Seelenfreund.

During the first two weeks of the campaign 536 applications were received, and the indications are that the original number of one thousand will be materially exceeded.

Arrangements have been perfected for a monster class initiation at the Hotel La Salle on Saturday evening, Dec. 18, 1915, for which occasion prominent out-of-town members have been invited to address the audience. Musical numbers, entertainment of various kinds and a supper are some of the features of the program.

A brief review of the Order's activities will no doubt be of interest to the general Jewish public and may be the means of inducing many who have not as yet enrolled themselves under the banner of the B'nai B'rith to become part of the large class now being secured.

The Order established and maintains hospitals, schools, orphan asylums, homes for the aged, libraries, free employment bureaus and other agencies for the relief of the distressed, in all parts of the United States, in many European countries and in the Orient.

In every great emergency, such as the Chicago fire, the Charlestown earthquake, the Galveston tidal wave, the Ohio flood, Constantinople fire, the earthquake in Turkey, the San Francisco conflagration and the present European war, the B'nai B'rith was the first in the field to render relief to our suffering co-religionists.

The Order induced our government to take action to prevent the further persecution of the Jews in Roumania.

It secured the intervention of the United States Government in support of the universal protest against the Kishineff massacre.

It caused to be made known to the Russian Government, through Count de Witte, the sentiments of the American people concerning the persecution of the Jews.

The Anti-Defamation League, which is active in combating injurious animadversions against the Jew, was established and is maintained by the Order.

The Order has created an Immigration Commission to study the entire subject of immigration and distribution and to recommend remedial measures.

The Order has created a Bureau directed by an expert to superintend extensive social service work throughout the country and to compile such statistical data as will enable it to devise ways and means for fully realizing Jewish social ideals.

The Order presented to the people of the United States the statue of Religious Liberty in Philadelphia.

It was the B'nai B'rith which inaugurated the movement against the white slave traffic, and which was responsible for legislation correcting the evil.

During the past five years the Order has expended for charitable, benevolent and educational purposes the sum of $2,265,379.71.

The Order was instrumental in bringing about the abrogation of the Russian Treaty.

The Order has been active in opposing immigration legislation which would operate to exclude, by means of the literacy and other tests, the victims of persecution.

The B'nai B'rith stands, not for selfish objects, but for Jewish thought and sentiment and Jewish influence for the betterment of mankind.

Requests for application cards and information may be directed to the B'nai B'rith headquarters, 1228 Tribune Bldg., Chicago.

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE POSTPONES CONFERENCE.

The Executive Committee of the American Jewish Committee, at its meeting held on Oct. 10, adopted the following resolution postponing the proposed Washington conference:

"Pending negotiations with various organizations and bodies, and in view of the approaching annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee, it is voted by the Executive Committee in accordance with the discretion granted to it by the general committee, at its meeting on June 20, that the Conference called for Oct. 24 be postponed, and that the organizations which have accepted invitations be notified to that effect."

THE FATE OF THE JEWISH EXILES.

The "Retch," a liberal paper, relates that the military authorities who supervise the transportation of the Jewish exiles are most cruel in their treatment of them. As an instance it quotes the fact that a train of Jewish wanderers arrived in a town, where they were met by a delegation of the Jews of the town, who brought with them some food and provisions for the famished exiles, but the authorities did not allow them to come near the train, nor would they permit the exiles to purchase food there.

The Russian police are making their own constructions on the circular issued by the Ministry allowing the Jews to settle anywhere in the Empire. In six provinces, Charkov, Smolensk, Nizhni Novgorod, Kazan, Saratov and Jaroslav, Jews are permitted to settle, but not to engage in any business nor to buy real estate. In the district of Vladivostock and in many towns in the district of Riazan no Jews were permitted to settle at all.

PROVINCE OF MOSCOW OPEN TO JEWS.

The privilege recently extended to Jews of residing in any part of the empire with the exception of the two capitals and the towns under the control of the Court Minister, has been interpreted by the Governor of Moscow as excluding the whole province under his jurisdiction from the Jews. A recent decree of the government, however, makes it clear that only the city of Moscow is excluded, but the other towns in the province should be open to Jews to settle there, as long as the special privilege is in force.

It was also ordered that all pending trials against Jews for conducting business in places where they had no right of domicile should be dropped for the present.

DR. GEORGE FOX HONORED.

Rabbi George Fox of Ft. Worth, Texas., one of the founders of the Texas State Conference of Charities and Corrections, was elected president of the Conference at its annual session held recently at Dallas.

PROMINENT BEN B'RITH HONORED.

The thirty-third degree (Hon.) was conferred upon Brother Ernest R. Bernstein, Ex-mayor of Shreveport, La., and first vice-president of District No. 7, at the session of the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry held in Washington on Oct. 19.

There is something so great in a single good action that the man who, in his whole life, has performed even one, can never be wholly despicable.

The Social Message of the Prophets

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

II.

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

Implacable foes as the prophets were of outward piety, their one-sidedness reveals itself likewise in their inability to comprehend that civilization with its inherent evils is better than no civilization. Boldly they demand a return to the primitive conditions of the desert. It is as if one grown to a man's estate with all the cares that the rearing of a family entails and all the disappointments that an intensive life brings would wish himself back into the days of innocent childhood. We also grumble about the inequalities and iniquities of civilization, but we recognize that only along the road of civilization may we hope to advance. Whence the hardships of civilization, whence the eating of our bread by the sweat of our face, asks the ancient myth; and the answer is, It is a curse incurred by the first man who through inobedience lost his paradise, and he lost it because he chose knowledge (of good and evil) even if he did forfeit immortality. There is an element of consolation in this that knowledge with trouble is preferable to ignorance with paradisiac comfort. Likewise the pessimism of the prophets is mitigated by their unshaken belief that the lost paradise shall be regained in the end of days. Nevertheless the long stretch of humanity's existence between the golden age in the back and the golden age ahead is marked by the impious attitude that man can achieve greatness. Great is only the holy God, man must lower himself into the dust. "The lofty looks of man shall be brought low, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. For the Lord of hosts hath a day upon all that is proud and haughty, and upon all that is lifted up; and it shall be brought low: and upon all the cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, and upon all the oaks of Bashan; and upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills that are lifted up; and upon every lofty tower, and upon every fenced wall; and upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant imagery." What would Isaiah have thought of our skyscrapers, the giant chimneys of our industrial plants, of our dreadnoughts and superdreadnoughts, aye, of our entire complex western civilization? What would Hosea have made of Europe's monarchs in their shining armor and with their halo of divine rights, he to whom the little kinglets of Israel seemed an affront to the King of the universe—for what can those human rulers do but spread vain words and make covenants and break them? The institution of the monarchy was an act of spurning God, who alone is King.

What is it, then, that they find lacking in the land? Justice and affection, uprightness and loyalty, faithfulness and truth. Nothing short of that will avail, all else is subterfuge when it means to substitute itself for that which is fundamental. Amos opens up his harangue of Israel by pointing to the corruptions of the courts of justice where the innocent are sold for silver and the poor lose their case because of a secret gift and the rich litigant walks off to the altar of God reclining upon clothes taken in pledge and in the house of God they feast upon the proceeds of judicial fines. Upon the mountains of Samaria there is great confusion—the anarchy of injustice—and in the midst thereof there is oppression; for they know not how to do right who store up robbery and violence in their palaces, in their winter [illegible] the metropolitan avenue and [illegible] their summer cottages with their [illegible] of ivory. The ladies of Samaria are likened by the herdsman of Tekoa, [illegible] no eye for the love-[illegible] robes to the [illegible] they who say unto [illegible] and let us drink," [illegible] the oppressed and the [illegible]. The gentlemen of [illegible] stretched out [illegible] upon fatted [illegible] to the play [illegible] taking thought of the [illegible] capital's [illegible] of the [illegible] of [illegible] traf-[illegible] small [illegible] [illegible] and the osten-[illegible] God's [illegible] forth [illegible] personal stream. To the logic of the shepherd of the steppes the thwarting of justice is as inconceivable as that horses shall run upon the rock and the sea be plowed with oxen.

While Hosea is more concerned with the evils of the impure worship and the political upheavals in the northern country, he laments the absence of truthfulness and loyalty in the land. They swear falsely and murder and steal and commit adultery. Israel is become untrue to the national genius building palaces and temples and multiplying fenced cities. He bids fair to be swallowed up among the nations. Ephraim is waxed rich and turned Canaanite. He must return to God, ride no more upon horses and rely no more upon the great powers. he must observe loyalty and justice which are more acceptable than sacrifices and constitute the sum of the knowledge of God, or as we should say, social morality makes up the better part of religion.

The stern Isaiah in the south takes up the message of Amos who preached in the north. He has a torah of his own, different from the priests'. Its purport is the upbuilding of social morality: that alone is worth while, all else is of no moment. "Wash you, make you clean; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek justice, relieve the oppressed, right the fatherless, plead for the widow." For the faithful city is become venal: she that had justice for her lodger, is a den of murderers. Her magistrates are companions of thieves; every one loveth bribes. The elders of the people have eaten up the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in their house. "What mean ye that ye crush My people, and grind the face of the poor?" Here is the gospel of the poor whose advocate is the Judge on high, whose tribune the prophet on earth. In the parable of the vineyard the prophet laments the perversion of justice. Then follow the woes against them that join house to house and field to field till there be no room and the land is in the hands of a few plutocrats who, as it were, are made to dwell alone in the midst of the land; that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink that tarry late into the night, till wine inflame them; and the harp and the lute, the tabret and the pipe, and wine, are in their feast; but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither have they considered the operation of His hands; woe to them that call evil good and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter—a transvaluation of values which marks the gulf that separates the prophetic vision from the humdrum preoccupations of the crowd; woe to them that justify the wicked for a reward, and take away the innocency of the innocent from him; woe to them that decree unrighteous decrees, and to the writers that write perverseness, to take away the right of the poor, God's people, that widows may be their spoil, and that they make the fatherless their prey. How different will things be when the ideal order is established, re-established, when the shoot out of the stock of Jesse shall come forth, the Hebrew type of Superman who endowed with the spirit shall judge the poor with righteousness and equity, smite the oppressor with the rod of his mouth, whose loins shall be girdled not with the sword of the mighty warrior, but with the righteousness of the just judge. Isaiah shares with Micah the vision concerning the cessation of warfare, when in obedience to Zion's law arbitration shall succeed to battles and swords shall be beaten into plowshares. And the end of days meant to the prophet not a far-off term, but one realizable speedily and in our own days; and when the prophets speak of a new heaven and a new earth, they mean a new order of things right here on earth. The Kingdom of God is indeed within all of us. It means a new heart, the heart of flesh of which the prophets speak, that the dead flesh of imperviousness to spiritual admonition be quickened and the new man be re born to take his estate as the son of God.

So does Isaiah's contemporary Micah turn away from the ignoble present to the brighter future. His torah is as brief as Isaiah's and makes the duty of man which is the whole of religion consist in doing justly, loving mercy, and walking humbly with God. The message is simple enough, easy of being rehearsed as a catechism; but is it so simple of execution? Outward piety which runs in conventional channels is a far easier religion; listening to sermons of devout pastors or to lectures of modern moralists requires but an effort of attention; but the doing of justice and the loving of mercy, the practice of social righteousness, means an effort of the will and a degree of introspection from which the majority of mankind recoils. We may even go farther and say that the prophets themselves underestimated the gravity of the task of training a nation in the way of righteousness. The impetus came from them, and therein lies their glory; but if their moralizing was to bear fruit, another functionary had to step in.

WHAT IS THE GREATEST SINGLF WORK OR INDIVIDUAL ACHIEVEMENT OF THE B'NAI B'RITH?

The "Modern View" of St. Louis recently obtained views at random from the members of the local lodges on the above subject. We publish herewith extracts of some of the replies received.

Jacob Furth.

The greatest single work of the Order is the consecration of its members to the great idea of service. Service to the cause of the Jew; service to the cause of humanity.

To harmonize the differences, to democratize Jewry, to bring together those who otherwise might have remained at perpetual distance; to consolidate true friendship and to find as far as possible the true worth and value of the individual Jew.

The highest interests of the Jew and of humanity are furthered by unselfish and altruistic efforts in behalf of the oppressed, the persecuted and the needy. To inculcate such altruism and to see it worked out in practice is a distinct achievement. This, the B'nai B'rith Order has done and is doing and will continue to do in the future.

Harry Simon.

With a glorious record of 75 years, it has come into its own; its one great single achievement, one rising far above all is this—to say to the son of Israel: "Jew, know thyself! The true mission is to promulgate and to establish a holy fellowship—spiritual democracy among all men."

Samuel Bowman.

The philanthropic and benevolent work of the Order in establishing real homes for the fatherless children, splendid homes for the aged and infirm, hospitals for the sick, poor and distressed, is the greatest of all its achievements.

Bernard Greensfelder.

The greatest single work or individual achievement of the B'nai B'rith is in the formation, development, accomplishment and maintenance of Jewish "get-together" movements, thereby affording the means of creating that spirit of Jewishness which binds us so closely together.

Abraham L. Levi.

Its greatest single work is the singularity and solidarity of its manifold operations along the lines of philanthropic, beneficent and charitable endeavors.

Joseph Stampfer.

Internationally, nationally and locally, the Order aims to simplify Jewish problems that arise from time to time, and is strictly an altruistic body of the intellectual Jews of the world.

Dr. Alex. S. Wolf.

From my personal experience and observation while in Europe the greatest work accomplished by the Order is the creation of Grand Lodges for Germany, Austria, Roumania, and the Near Orient, thus establishing a unifying band around the Jewish people of Central Europe and Turkey. The work of bringing into closer relations the Ashkinasim and Sephardim, is one of the glorious achievements and is written in golden letters in the annals of the Order. The Order deserves the deepest appreciation of every Jew who believes in unification and solidification of the Jewish people throughout the world.

Milton D. Mendle.

One of the reasons for the wonderful accomplishments of our Order has been the fact that the Order unites Jews of every country into one grand brotherhood, for the purpose of doing real philanthropic and charitable work.

Arnold Lowenstein.

The greatest achievement of the B'nai B'rith is the establishment of an organization where men of all nationalities and conditions in life may meet and mingle on an equal plane, and which brings those who would stray away from Judaism back to the faith of their fathers.

Isidor Glueck.

Its greatest achievement is its ability to offer that much needed common platform to all Jews of every nationality and manner of belief, without the sacrifice of their leanings for the purpose of protecting and assisting the distressed among our people; a platform founded on purely unselfish, charitable and idealistic principles.

THE JEWS OF RUSSIA.

(Des Moines, Ia., Tribune.)

By one of those queer turns of chance which arise from unusual circumstances the Russian government is represented in Turkey by an American Jew, who under Russian laws would not be permitted to enter the country whose interests he is engaged in safeguarding.

Henry Morgenthau, United States ambassador to Turkey, was born in Germany, came to this country as a boy, and made a fortune in New York City. He accepted the ambassadorship, he said, because of its educational value.

The injustice and cruelty of Russia's attitude toward the Jew is given additional emphasis by the accidental relationship of Mr. Morgenthau to the Russian government. He is proving, by his capable conduct of affairs at Constantinople, that Jews are worthy of any administrative post in the gift of Russia. If they were in charge of the munitioning and provisioning of the Russian armies, that task would not have been muddled as it has been by the Russians themselves. Instead, they are denied property rights and privileges of citizenship. They must serve in the army, but cannot become officers. Those incapable of military service have been driven from their homes and are now wandering, hungry and houseless, through Russia. Their treatment is one of the three great collateral crimes of the war. They are worse off than the Belgians, and they have not only suffered with the Poles, but have been mistreated even by that persecuted race.

The Jews of America are performing a great task in relieving the suffering of their European brethren, but they are handicapped by the difficulty of organizing an adequate relief force in the face of the hostility or indifference of the czar's government.

COLUMBUS DAY AND THE JEWS.

This is Columbus Day—Honor the Great Man—Incidentally Try to Get Over Some of Your Prejudice Against Jews, in View of the Fact that Columbus was of Jewish Blood.

This day is set apart to honor the man who discovered the United States and the rest of America.

It is lucky for all of us that he started out on that journey. He wasn't looking for this country, but for a short way to India.

Navigators, religious teachers and others assured him that if he traveled far enough on the ocean he would fall over the edge. But he didn't believe it.

He had in him, perhaps, the blood of the old Phoenicians, the Jews who first of all men navigated out of sight of land.

He "took a chance," as we moderns put it. Or, rather, he obeyed the impulse of courage and ambition. And so we are here.

As you honor Columbus, bear in mind the fact that in all probability three-quarters (if not all) of his blood was Jewish.

The man who financed his expedition chiefly—and who took back his money, but refused to take anv interest—was himself a Jew. No doubt about that, for two of his uncles were burned alive because they were Jews.

It wasn't very safe in those days in Spain to call yourself a Jew, Columbus knew that, and he called himself "a "Genoese navigator," without saying much about his origin.

But investigation shows that his mother came of a well-known Jewish family—the Ponte Rossi. And the name "Collon," which is the real name of Columbus, was that of a Jewish family.

Among those who went with him there were husky Christian sailors, much terrified by the ocean and the mysterious unknown, and doing what they could to frighten Columbus and make him turn back.

The chief navigator was a Jew. And the surgeon whom Columbus took along was a Jew. And his translator was a Jew—not that the translator did any good among the Indians, for nobody could translate their talk. Columbus took this Jewish translator and other Jews because he was bound for the East, as he thought going to land in Asia, and he wanted men with Oriental knowledge.

It doesn't matter in the least whether a man is a Jew, an Irishman, a German, a Catholic, Protestant, Christian Scientist, Mohammedan, or a Wall Street gentleman without any belief in anything whatever.

We are all brothers, all alike except for our miserable imperfections. And not one of us should brag.

But it is well enough on this day, devoted to Christopher Columbus, to remind the anti-Jewish bad citizen that without Christopher Columbus the real estate which he owns in the United States wouldn't have been discovered, and therefore wouldn't be worth much.—New York "Evening Journal."

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, Oct. 21, 1915.

Far from lessening in intensity the war is becoming hotter and hotter; national hate is increasing; even the area of hostilities has been extended. The Balkans are now the seething pot, and who shall say what the aspect of things will be there by the time these lines are in print? War horror is spreading over the world; it is revolutionizing men's outlook and men's habits; it is affecting their deepest thoughts. One or two things stand out at the present juncture and they deserve to be noted. In the first place, the national consciousness is being stirred everywhere. It is a curious fact that many Jews who before had no contact whatsoever with Judaism, whose children did not even know of the Day of Atonement, are giving evidence of a Jewish stirring within them. "We Jews are a people," said a lady of this type the other day in our hearing, "and a fine people, too!" It is almost incredible, but it is true. There are other signs and potents. A week or two ago a (Jewish) Fund for the relief of the Jewish victims of the war in Russia was opened. Of course the communal "leaders" were all on the General Committee. But several other names were in the list and their appearance is noteworthy. There was Lord Michelham, Sir Alfred Mond and Sir Sidney Lee. The three gentlemen we have named are certainly not Christians, but neither are they Jews in the ordinary connotation of the word. And yet they are Jews in a very special sense. A deeply stirring thing like the war brings out that. We should like to feel that the three gentlemen joined the Committee of the Fund not because it was a charity, but because it was charity for Jews. The thing is manifesting itself in other ways. too. The type of Jews referred to above subscribed to all sorts of institutions and charities and funds. But they always prided themselves on the fact that they sent their money to "general" funds, "general charities." Now these same people are supporting Jewish charities as well. Their wives and daughters now go down to work among the Jewish poor. It is the call of the blood.

* * *

There is only one regret in connection with it all: that it should have been necessary to have a war to teach us the lesson. Out of evil has come forth good, but evil remains evil and war is of the blackest sort. Yet it is comforting to find interest in Jewishness spreading. Even non-Jews are showing sympathy. Mr. Murray, one of our best known publishers. had brought under his notice a number of essays dealing with aspects of the Jewish national revival and he was so interested that he agreed to publish them in book form. The book, to be edited by Mr. Albert Hyamson, is to be called "Zionism and the Jewish Future." The little incident is significant.

* * *

The second fact we would draw attention to is the growing consciousness of the difference between Theology and Religion. Quite recently in this country the Bishop of Carlisle delivered an address in which he expressed the hope that the war would prove the complete and final bankruptcy of professional and hierarchical Christianity. The idea that the pre-war Christianity as an effective religious force is played out is indeed spreading. And what are right-minded people to think of a Christian clergyman who so far forgets the one he calls his Master as to boast of his cruel-heartedness? Yet such is the case. The gentleman in question is Herr Pfarrer Gottfried Traub, a Doctor of Theology, resident in Dortmund. In the well known "religious" paper "Die Hilfe" (No. 36), he describes a journey he took to Belgium, and more especially the day he spent in Liege. He tells how he had chocolates and fruit with him for distribution, but when Belgians begged for some he proudly states that he refused them. This is the confession of a clergyman. Is it any wonder that many people are disgusted with religion? Is it any wonder that the Bishop of Carlisle pleads for true religion, for the idea of the Fatherhood of God? "Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us?" How hollow these words of the ancient Hebrew prophet sound today. And yet they will possibly form the lesson learned in the trenches.

* * *

If only men would let the matter rest at that! But no, they must needs make appeals for sympathy. The Germans are doing this in America for all they are worth. And our Jewish brethren are following the stupid example of their compatriots. So are our Austrian brethren; they seem to forget that they have no monopoly of right. Then we get semi-poetic appeals to "America" by Rabbis. And now the French Jews make an appeal to the Jews of neutral countries to give their side their sympathy. At least they have left God out of it. But the whole business is futile and foolish. We Jews as Jews ought to have but one attitude to the war and that is to condemn it as an accursed thing. Our duty to our respective fatherlands we shall do—to the full. But in Heaven's name let us hold our peace while doing it: let us not whine for the sympathy of neutrals. One cannot help feeling that the attitude of English Jewry is the correct one in this business. English Jews are responding splendidly to the call of their country; of that there is not the faintest doubt. But there is no need to add a wordy warfare to the other; the less said now the less to regret hereafter.

* * *

Besides we shall have important work to do when the war ends. We shall have to strive our uttermost to establish an elementary principle of the rights of man: equal treatment of Jews with their fellow citizens in all the countries where that equality does not at present exist. And not because they are Jews but because they are men. In this we shall be striving for humanity, for social and political justice. A little incident was recorded in the German papers towards the end of September. The German casualty lists contained the name of Dr. Leo Muhlfelder, whose name was mentioned in the Reichstag in March, 1909, in connection with the question of the refusal of the powers that be to grant commissions to Jews. Muhlfelder applied twice; his application was long neglected; influence was brought to bear upon him to withdraw; in the end he did not achieve his aim. But after he had laid down his life for his country his captain wrote home in the very highest terms of him. Yet even to the last there were "difficulties" in the way of his becoming a commissioned officer. Jews will understand what those "difficulties" were. It is just such "difficulties" as these that will call for being removed, no matter where they exist. The Jew must claim equal rights of citizenship everywhere. That is why one rejoices to find this principle of equal rights for all sections and groups and peoples as the cardinal demand in the program of the private gathering of peace-lovers to be held at Berne this December, for the purpose of studying and discussing, not the war, but the peace conditions after it.

That, however, is not yet. The present calls for relief measures for war sufferers, and they are many, Jews being of the number. Every Jew by this time realizes the sad plight of our brethren in Poland and Russia. We will not speak of mental anguish and physical suffering. We will only mention their economic ruin. To help them in this direction two Funds have been opened in this country. One was started long ago by Christian clerics (mainly from Scotland), and the money is coming in from many sympathetic quarters. Be it remembered that general appeals are very numerous just now; the Red Cross Fund alone requires a very great deal of assistance. The other Relief Fund for Russian Jews has been started by the Jewish community and a good beginning has already been made. The best known and most honored names among English Jews are associated with the Fund, and here, too, there is little doubt that English Jews will do their duty.

* * *

Yet a third Jew has won the Victoria Cross. His name is Private Edward Keysor, of the Australian Imperial force, though he was born in London. The Victoria Cross is awarded for conspicuous bravery, and two other Jews have already received the distinction, Lieutenant De Pass and Sergeant Issy Smith. Records such as these will at any rate stop the mouths of anti-Semitic traducers who allege that Jews are incapable of bravery. But while every one cannot win the Victoria Cross every one may do his duty. Not only in the army have Jews done theirs, but also among the special constabulary, both in London and the provinces. The work these "specials" do is by no means light. After a day in the city or in an office they turn out for night duty several evenings a week. Non-Jews, to be sure, do the same. But that is just the point: the Jew shares all the duties of citizenship and demands all its rights.

There are indications that the position of the Jews in Russia promises to improve. Whether much can be done for them at present is questionable. But when the war ends it is possible. It would seem that representations have been made in the right quarters and that a sympathetic hearing has been granted. The Conjoint Committee of the Board of Deputies and the Anglo-Jewish Association has been in touch with M. Bark, the Russian Minister of Finance, when he was in London recently. Confidential information of a satisfactory nature were made to both bodies, and it is believed that a valuable piece of work for the Jews in Russia has been accomplished. It is a pity that the information cannot be scattered broadcast. At least something has been done and we believe it will not be left at that. But the time is not yet. The war must end first.

* * *

Meantime the war is taking toll from us. Many honored names are among the dead; many among the wounded. Among the former Herbert Davis, Edward Kahn, Leonard Stern, George Cohen, Harold Spielman and Walter Woolf were all young men of promise and the community mourns their loss. No doubt Austrian and German Jewish communities have similar losses to chronicle. Enlarge the view and you get England mourning her dead and Germany doing likewise. And yet they are distances apart still. Not a word of healing. Some people even go so far as to assert that the war is only just commencing. If one of the old Hebrew prophets were alive today how his sense of righteousness would bring forth flaming, burning words for the man or men who set the fire raging.

* * *

It is well to turn to works of peace. Our Manchester sister Lodge has been active in philanthropic endeavor. The Jewish Hospital in the northern city now has a bed subscribed for by the members and duly consecrated. It does them credit. They have also decided to devote half of the usual collections made at the lodge meetings to the Polish and Palestinian Relief Funds. As for ourselves in London, the Hostel for Jewish Refugees from Belgium has now been closed. The majority of the residents have found work and are self-supporting. Only a few students remain and these have been boarded out by the Lodge. It is a fitting end to the venture. Started for aiding the helpless it finishes up not with demoralizing them, but with giving them a measure of independence. And the amount of real good unselfish work devoted to the Shelter was the true expression of blessing. The Ladies' Committee spared no pains to make the Home a real home; and Miss Cohen cooked for the residents all through the period the home was in existence. Her devotion to duty merits the highest praise. But every one connected with the Shelter deserves to be congratulated. It was an undertaking of which the London Lodge may well be proud.

* * *

We have a visitor from Jerusalem in our midst: Miss Annie Landau, the famous head mistress of the Evelina School in the Holy City. (Miss Landau by the way may be claimed as a Sister: her brother is our own Brother Isaac Landau, whom we all hold in high esteem.) Miss Landau has moved several audiences by her most remarkable and vivid addresses of life in Jerusalem in general and details of her School in particular. We say her School: she certainly is the soul of the institution. When peace is restored we venture to suggest that Miss Landau should come once a year or oftener to London and New York to tell us all of the School's welfare. Let her become a great personal link between Western Jewry and "Erez Yisroel." It will do us good to hear her; it will for sure do her school good, too. Miss Landau exemplifies the old saying that personal effort moves the world. And more. We believe that many Jews would come to look at Palestine in a new light—not as a land of dreams—but as a centre of live activity with modern conditions, part and parcel of the modern world.

* * *

There is a stirring of our dead bones in London Jewry. We seem to want to know more about ourselves. Many of our young men and women are clamoring for an acquaintance with Jewish history and Jewish literature. A demand soon creates a supply. Opportunities for study are thus springing up in many directions, and whatever the true nature of their achievement, their very appearance is a token for good. Wise men will do well to welcome them; the London Lodge will undoubtedly give them its blessing. They are promising seedlings for the future of our community.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Jewish Publication Society of America,
Broad and Gerard avenue, Philadelphia,
Pa., Benjamin Alexander, Secretary.

Dear Sir:—Your announcement "of the first edition of the new bible" comes to me at this time with particular appreciation. During the recent holidays while in attendance at the Temple, the vitality of Judeaism presented itself keenly to me. I indulged in much reflection, and sought to learn why the Jewish people appear less responsive to their religion, and wherein lay the particular weakness in Judeaism.

The first and most graphic weakness appeared in that individual prayer—self prayer—was not indulged in. Prayer, to be spiritually effective, must be self-indulged, and no number of prayers read or recited by the Rabbi can ever hope or ever will arouse the same spiritual feeling in the individual as does the prayer for himself. To my mind, the lack of self-prayer robbed the service of its religious significance; practically, it seemed void of it.

Then, again, I observed the absence of the bible in the Temple. No prayer book ever devised by man can take the place of the bible. Whether one believes it divinely inspired or not matters little. its place in the Temple as well as in the Church can never be taken by any book of prayers knowingly written by human hands. The prayer book, from its very nature, has very little religious significance—still less spiritual elevation —when compared with the bible. I do not say that the prayer book should be eliminated from the service, but that the bible should be restored.

Unless you can replace the bible in the Temple, your work in bringing out the new edition will have availed but little.

Another weakness, to my mind, was the lack of ceremony: so barren and destitute was the service that one was reminded more of a lecture hall than of a place of worship. Too much ceremony is bad—too little ceremony is equally bad. It would appear as though we had refined our faith to such an extent that only a lecture remains.

So with the music. It is dull and oppressive, it lacks creative origin; there is no originality nor is there anything distinctive or spiritual about it. A creative music for Judeaism would be a valuable asset.

In reflecting on these subjects, I recalled the lamentations of the Rabbi—that the people are falling away and drifting into fads and fancies. But, on further reflection, it occurred to me that there is nothing wrong with the attitude of the people—they but reflect Judeaism as it is taught them. The great school of Judeaism is the Temple. Those who are providing and regulating the service in our Synagogues and Temples may well consider whether their work is well done. The Jewish people still have faith in the religion of their forefathers, but it must be given to them in such a manner as not to appear but a barren shell, and to be more significant than a lecture. In short, the service in the Temple needs some real religious significance; it needs a bible and the subordination of the prayer book; it needs the privilege and the requirement of the individual offering his own prayer to the Almighty—it needs a little tinge of ceremony to rob it of its barrenness—and it needs a little creative music—at least the old music needs a little modernization to make it cheerful and happy.

There is nothing wrong with the attitude of the people—the fault lies elsewhere.

Very respectfully submitted,
DAVID G. EINSTEIN.
Oct. 15, 1915.

JEWS IN THE RUSSIAN UNIVERSITIES.

The extent to which Jewish families are represented in the army can be judged from the numbers of relatives of Jewish soldiers who were enrolled at the Universities above the norm on the strength of their relationship to men at the front. At Petrograd sixty-eight Jews were admitted within the limits of the percentage norm, and five hundred and four gained admission above the norm. At Odessa the number of such Jews admitted to the University is three hundred, and the list is not yet closed.

Happy the man who can endure the highest and the lowest fortune. He who has endured such vicissitudes with equanimity has deprived misfortune of its power.—Seneca.

MONSTER CLASS INITIATION BY CLEVELAND LODGE

Address by Hon. Simon Wolf

Cleveland Lodge No. 16 gave a banquet at the Hotel Statler on Sunday evening, Oct. 24, 1915, which was attended by over 1,200 members. Preceding the banquet a class numbering nearly one thousand new members was initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

Mr. Max Meisel, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, presented to Brothers Benson and Klinger silver loving cups for having secured the highest number of new members.

At the banquet the guest of honor was Brother Simon Wolf of Washington, who delivered the following address:

Address of Mr. Wolf.

My dear Friends:

Sixty-seven years ago this very day, I came to Cleveland with my sainted grandparents, who are resting in the Jewish Cemetery of this city. The canvas of memory brings to the fore many dear faces, who at that time helped to constitute the best of Cleveland's citizenship. They are too numerous to mention, and but few of that old guard are left to commemorate the past. Two or three of them are with us tonight to testify that while age may have dimmed their vision, it has not hardened their hearts or weakened their intellect.

Cleveland, in 1848, gave evidence of that civic spirit, energy and intelligence which has not culminated yet, but is growing steadily, and affords an example to the other cities of the Union of what can be accomplished by unity of purpose and patriotism in action. It is with peculiar feeling that I address you here tonight. In 1850 my dear sainted parents came here. In 1857 I was married here, Rev. Dr. Fuld being the Rabbi. Two of my sisters were married in this city, and thus aside from the general good will I entertain, there are family ties that bind me to the past.

Here was started, under the leadership of Benjamin F. Peixotto, the first Young Men's Hebrew Association. Here at the Eagle Street Synagogue, when Sumter was fired on, there was raised the American flag, which Peixotto presented in the name of the Congregation, and I responded. It was a notable affair, and one that was spoken of all over the country, evidencing then, as we had prior thereto and ever since, our love of and for the Republic.

The Order of B'nai B'rith, through its presiding genius at that time, Brother Peixotto, presaged the wonderful work it has since accomplished, and Peixotto not only talked but he worked; gave five years of devoted activities as President to the sacrifice of his business and family to strengthen the ties between Jew and Jew, and to animate the non-Jew to a recognition of what the Jew stands for, and later on, he exemplified by word and deed in distant Roumania, that he recognized the highest ideals of humanity, strengthened the Order and wrested from the hands of oppression the wreath of victory. The Order supported him loyally, and the Lodges throughout the United States twice voted money in support of that Mission. There are other men in American Jewry who have done heroic work on and in behalf of their fellowmen, but I know of no one that deserves higher praise than Benjamin Franklin Peixotto.

Here in 1868 there was dedicated a monument to the humanities, the Cleveland Orphan Asylum, which has reflected the highest credit on the Order and on American Jewry. It has sent forth the men and women who have adorned American citizenship, and it is a source of the greatest gratification to me that I was present as one of the speakers, Peixotto and the great leader of American Reform Judaism, Dr. Isaac M. Wise, the others. Let us not forget that the Synagogue and Temple have been splendid adjuncts of the Order. Dr. Wise set the pace. He himself was an ardent Ben Brith and with his usual foresight and sagacity he took from the Cleveland Orphan Asylum young men to be trained at the Hebrew Union College who today are among the greatest leaders of American Jewry and while this great achievement must ever stand as a work of the great leader, let us not ignore or forget the leader of the foundation, who thank Heaven, is still with us, and whose training has become the synonym for the highest development of mental, moral and physical education, our dear Brother Doctor Wolfenstein.

It were "Carrying Coal to Newcastle," to rehearse the history of the Order—that is a twice-told tale. It has become part of the world's history and each and every [illegible] we are strengthening our [illegible] making the world feel and [illegible] what the Order has accom[illegible] its aims and objects are for the future. I can truthfully say that no other Jewish organization has contributed so much to the uplift, to the betterment, to altruism, than the Order. The cynic and pessimist may sneer at what has been done for the widows and the orphans, for the aged and infirm, for the sick and the crippled but nevertheless the monuments of our philanthropic efforts stand and are visible to the world, and give evidence of our disinterested labors. The Order is the only organization, whether Jewish or Christian, that has ever risen to the height, by giving to the United States, the monument to Religious Liberty, chiseled by an American Jew, a member of the Order, and which stands in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, the city where was first proclaimed on this continent the independence of the states and liberty for all men, irrespective of nationality or creed.

It was the Order that sent the Kishineff petition, which although ineffective, has had a lasting moral purpose, and struck a blow at autocracy in Russia from which it has not yet recovered. And now, under the inspiring genius and executive ability of Brother Adolf Kraus, we have leaped forward with giant stride, and the late convention endorsed his recommendation and grasp of ideals. The Social Service will prove that the Order is determined to winnow from the chaff of calumny, the truth, and vindicate by statistics that the Jew is less criminal and less diseased than others.

The Immigration Commission will, under the leadership of its Chairman, Brother Harry Cutler, a Russian of the Russians, be a source of helpfulness to the incoming American, and teach them what is absolutely necessary and essential, that when they land on American soil, they have reached the Jerusalem of the prophets, and they must leave behind them all those traits which tyranny and persecution made a necessity.

An emergency fund was created, so that in case of dire necessity, and which is not far distant when this fearful war shall be over, we can at once assist without waiting for the call. To prove by figures, which speak for themselves, what the Order has done in this great world conflict, that while we have an entire membership of forty thousand, we have per capita given $2.50, independent of what the individual members have done as citizens and Jews or as members of other organizations or other committees. While the great National Jewish Relief Committee, having two million and a half to draw on, has only shown a per capita of less than forty cents, which I admit the Committee is not to blame for, but the individuals who have so niggardly contributed; and one of the crowning acts of Brother Kraus has been to step in between the warring Jewish factions, to the end of harmonizing differences and to prevent disaster by having either a conference or a congress.

The Order is the only Jewish organization that is not only national but international. Today the great work that is being done in Germany, in Austria, and in the Orient, is largely done by and through the efforts of the Order, or by members of the Order, who are leaders in other organizations.

A grand thought that can not be relegated to the rear is the inspiring influence that the ritual of the Order brings home to each and every initiate. We are thoroughly Jewish; we have no division in our ranks; each and every Jew, no matter what his convictions may be on religious, secular, or political affairs, is welcome, thus a harmonious blending is created, which is helpful to Jewry and to the nation, and what an inspiring lesson there is taught during the initiation when the flag of the great Republic is made part of the symbolism, thus instilling patriotism and loyalty, which have been at all times, under all circumstances, and under all environments, the rallying cry of the Jew. We know more than any other class of men what it means to have a flag that protects us in our religious convictions, and, thank God, from the earliest days of the Republic up to the present moment, in peace and in war, we have proven that we are worthy of the great trust that American citizenship confers; and even in the lands across the sea, where persecution has reigned supreme for ages, the down-trodden Jew has borne the brunt of battle and fought heroically side by side with his Christian neighbors; and when the hour of peace shall strike, let us hope and trust that our great Government will, as it has promised, use its good offices to secure for our fellow co-religionists in other lands those rights and immunities which are inalienable and to which all men are so justly entitled. So-called Christian civilization is on trial. They have disregarded the ethics and equities of the Jew, and while for the time being gloom and disaster may reign supreme, the dawn of a better day is near, when the whole world will be a Republic of high ideals, and when men, irrespective of faith or nationality, will be bound together by those ties which will cement and not dissever.

Other speakers were Dr. S. Wolfenstein, Rabbi M. J. Gries, Rabbi Louis Wolsey, Martin A. Marks and S. J. Kornhauser, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2. The closing benediction was given by Rabbi Jacob Klein.

At the banquet announcement was made that plans are being completed for the erection or lease of a building to serve as a home for Jewish young men and headquarters for all Jewish fraternal societies and to be maintained and conducted under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge and to be known as the B'nai B'rith Club.

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE OF GERMAN GRAND LODGE.

A meeting of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 8 was held on Sept. 13, at Berlin. The meeting was opened by the President, Dr. Berthold Timendorfer, who congratulated the members upon the new year. He reported that greetings were received from various lodges and individual members and particularly expressed appreciation for the congratulatory telegram from Carmel Lodge of Sofia, Bulgaria.

Brother ex-President Staub, the directing surgeon of the B'nai B'rith hospital train, submitted a detailed report of its activities, emphasizing the fact that the services of the hospital train are in constant demand.

Brothers Kuznitzki and Katz submitted in writing a detailed report of the proceedings of the Constitution Grand Lodge and the same was laid over for further consideration until the next meeting.

A further appropriation was voted to the committee charged with the duty of collecting war statistics with reference to Jews.

In regard to the inquiry of the Verband der Deutschen Juden, as to the manner and extent to which the Grand Lodge might be willing to share in the work for the relief of the Jews in Alsace Lorraine, it was resolved that in view of the fact that the Grand Lodge has issued an appeal to the lodges of the District for contributions for this purpose it is not deemed advisable to join in another movement with the same object in view.

The Committee was informed that the President of the Order has communicated with Augustin Keller Lodge of Zurich advising that a conference of representatives of American Jewish organizations is to be held to consider action to be taken at the peace congress in the interests of the Jews of eastern Europe and Palestine; further that Augustin Keller Lodge inquired whether the Grand Lodge wishes that certain suggestions be laid before the American conference. It was resolved to inform Augustin Keller Lodge that the German Grand Lodge follows with the warmest sympathy the endeavors of the Swiss Jews to ameliorate the condition of the co-religionists in Europe, but that during the present war the Grand Lodge is not in position to take part in these efforts; but that at the conclusion of the war its hearty co-operation may be assured.

The following appropriations were ordered:

15,000 Marks for the purpose of general relief.
10,000 Marks to the general sick fund.
4,000 Marks to the Maternity Home.
1,000 Marks for incidentals.

A request for additional contributions from the society for gathering statistics relating to the Jews was denied for the reason that the Grand Lodge is contributing to the committee that has charge of the gathering of war statistics and that all other statistical compilations should be discontinued during the war.

Report was submitted from the Verband der Deutschen Juden that it considered the advisability of joining the national society for the relief of war cripples to represent Jewish interests in that organization and that it was of the unanimous opinion that such representation was outside of its proper sphere of action and that work of this character on behalf of the relief of war cripples should devolve upon and can best be accomplished by the German Grand Lodge and similar organizations. It was resolved that in the event the Grand Lodge is invited to participate in this work, it would be advisable to consider whether the employment bureaus of the Order scattered throughout the country would not be the most efficient means for the relief work contemplated.

In accordance with a proposition submitted by the committee on finance, the Grand Lodge decided to subscribe 20,000 Marks to the third German war loan.

CLASS INITIATION AND BANQUET BY THE ST. LOUIS B'NAI B'RITH LODGES.

Sunday Oct. 17, 1915, was a memorable day in the annals of the St. Louis B'nai B'rith.

Moolah Temple was filled with a representative gathering of Jews from all walks of life to witness the initiation of a class of 1,130 candidates secured as a result of an intense membership campaign. The degree work was conducted in a solemn and impressive manner by the team, composed of Messrs. M. Mendle, J. Glueck, K. M. Vetsburg and A. S. Levi. Cantor A. Newman rendered several Hebrew melodies and musical features were added by Messrs. Goldman and A. Davidson.

Mr. Jacob Furth, a member of the Executive Committee of the Order representing District No. 2, presided. In addressing the newly initiated members, he called attention to the fact that this was the largest class ever initiated into a B'nai B'rith lodge. He presented a telegram of congratulation from Mr. Adolf Kraus, President of the Order. Mr. Furth dwelt in his remarks upon the work of the earlier pioneers, who had laid the foundation of the Order upon which the present strong superstructure rests. Mr. Furth said that the Order emphasized primarily the principle of equality and that the lessons of the Order were of a three-fold character, developing Jewish patriotism and fraternity.

Responding on behalf of the class, Major Lowenstein, one of the captains, gave the assurance that this class of over one thousand new members meant just that many American patriots, earnest Jewish men and willing workers in the cause of humanity.

Mr. S. J. Kornhauser of Cleveland, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, paid a glowing tribute to the work of the St. Louis lodges, declaring that St. Louis had outdone itself and that no greater praise was possible.

Short talks were also indulged in by Brothers Karl Vetsburg, L. J. Borenstein and Dr. J. Wolfenstein.

The exercises were brought to a close with an address by Dr. Leon Harrison (published in full on the first page of this issue). After the close of Dr. Harrison's address, the meeting was formally adjourned.

After the meeting the entire assemblage sat down to a banquet. Fellowship songs were sung in a hearty spirit of jollity and good nature prevailed. Mr. Harry Simon acted as toastmaster. Toasts were responded to by many of the visitors, which included all the grand lodge officers coming from all parts of the District. The bountiful repast, the musical numbers, the spirit of good fellowship and the excellence of the talks made the event a glorious one, and the occasion will be remembered as unprecedented in the history of St. Louis Jewry.

CLASS INITIATION BY KANSAS CITY LODGE.

After the campaign of a few weeks under the general direction of Mr. Manny Strauss of Cincinnati, the teams of Kansas City Lodge No. 184, headed by Lewis H. Ehrlich, reported the successful close of the forward movement for new members.

On Thursday evening, Oct. 21, Kansas City Lodge initiated 360 candidates. The all inspiring sight of the formal initiation of so large a class was witnessed by more than two hundred of the members of the lodge and was an occasion that will not soon be forgotten. The principal speakers at the affair were Brothers Karl Vetsburg of St. Louis, Rabbi Louis Bernstein of St. Joseph, Mo., Rabbi Harry H. Mayer, Jacob L. Lorie, Leon Block and Rabbi Samuel Cohen of Kansas City. Preceding the initiation ceremoney, the candidates and members were served an elaborate dinner at the hotel. This event has set a new mark in the activities in B'nai B'rithdom of Kansas City, and now that it has been demonstrated what concerted efforts can do, it can safely be predicted that the members of Kansas City Lodge will continue to carry on the good work.

Thanks are due to the workers and to the leaders, for whose untiring efforts the lodge is indebted for the glorious success achieved.

HARRISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.

During the past two years much activity has been evidenced by Salem Lodge No. 26 of Harrisburg, Pa. Many new members have been added to the roster. Culmination of this renewed activity will be the early initation of a class of forty new members. It is fully planned to have a "Booster Banquet" in the near future, and the members of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge are to be invited guests. Much credit for the activity of the lodge is due to its secretary, Mr. L. Hirschler, and to Rabbi Chas. J. Freund.

B'NAI B'RITH OF BALTIMORE OBSERVE B'NAI B'RITH DAY.

Menorah Lodge No. 771, of Baltimore, Md., held a public meeting at Har Sinai Temple to commemorate the anniversary of the founding of the Order. The meeting was largely attended and many prominent out-of-town members of the Order graced the occasion with their presence, among them Brothers Simon Wolf, of Washington, and Dr. Edward N. Calisch, of Richmond, Va.

Solomon Mendles, President of the Lodge, presided and introduced the speakers.

Brother Simon Wolf made an eloquent address in which he enumerated the beneficent work accomplished by the Order. In his address he dwelt on the work of social service, of the emergency fund, the immigration commission, the contributions to the war fund, emphasizing the fact that no other Jewish organization is as competent and fit to handle national and international Jewish affairs as the Order. Referring to Russia and its treatment of the Jews, Mr. Wolf said that the American Government, as he confidently believed, would not make any treaty with Russia unless the Jews are granted their full rights. Concluding his address he told in a graphic and interesting manner of the influence the Order had exerted on the Jews everywhere, the great work it had accomplished since its inception, nearly 75 years ago, and the powerful good it exercised wherever an opportunity presented itself. He said the Order typified patriotism in its highest and purest light, and that its benefactions were broad and liberal.

Rev. Dr. Abram Simon of Washington in his address characterized the Order as the "Big Brother of Humanity" and spoke on those lines.

Dr. Calisch, in a beautiful address, went briefly over the history of the Order, telling of its growth from small beginning in 1843, to its present strength and size and international scope. He declared that while originally it was in the nature of a mutual benefit and charitable organization, it had greatly outgrown this phase of its work. Not that it ceased to be a charitable organization. On the contrary its philanthropic activities embrace three continents and many diverse nationalities.

The Order has kept pace with modern thought and has demonstrated that the latest developments in sociological and altruistic idealism are simply the modern expressions of ancient Jewish doctrine. Like modern medicine the Order in its philanthropic work seeks to prevent evil more than to cure evil after it has appeared.

It emphasizes the fact that charity is not the condescension or the patronage of the rich to the poor, but it is the duty of the rich and the right of the poor. It emphasizes the thought that the weak have a right to the protection of the strong, the orphan has a right to shelter and training, the widow has a right to aid and counsel, the needy sick have a right to care and cure, the aged have a right to protection and support. These elemental demands are simply social justice and the Order everywhere is teaching that to help one's fellowmen is a privilege.

The Order is in no manner political. Any member who seeks to use his Lodge membership or acquaintanceship for the purpose of furthering his own political ambitions, or those of any party with which he might be affiliated, is a traitor to his religion and to the Order. But the Order does busy itself with the civic, social, industrial and commercial condition of the Jews the world over. It seeks to secure for them, in those countries in which they are denied, the recognition of the fundamental rights of human dignity and manhood. It does not seek for tolerance but for justice. No more and no less.

In speaking of the objection that sometimes has been urged against the Order as being a secret organization, Dr. Calisch said that its secrecy was purely nominal. There was nothing which the Order wished to hide, nothing to which it was afraid to show the light of day. Like all organizations of a similar character started years ago, it doubtless made use of the mysterious for the value that it has as an appeal to the average man. But there is absolutely nothing either of its ritual or of its initiation which the Order desires to hide. Here Dr. Calisch explained and gave part of the ritual of the initiation to the audience at large, showing that its lessons were devoted to the most noble and altruistic of sentiments.

A man that hath no virtue in himself ever envieth virtue in others, for men's minds will either feed upon their own good or upon others' evil; and who wantest the one will prey upon the other.—Bacon.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH DAY OBSERVANCE.

With nearly 1,000 happy boys and girls reveling in a great Kiddies' Festival, B'nai B'rith Day was made a memorable occasion in San Francisco on Sunday, Oct. 17. The special guests of the day were the boys and girls of the Pacific Hebrew Orphan Asylum and the children of lodge members in San Francisco and Oakland.

The day's festivities were under the personal direction of Grand President Harry K. Wolff of District No. 4, who conceived the idea of entertaining the children in honor of the occasion. He was assisted by the Committee of Fifty of the ten San Francisco lodges.

Deviating from the usual custom of devoting B'nai B'rith Day to oratory and athletics, the pleasure of the children was made the order of the day, and no efforts were spared in giving them a round of fun that will not be forgotten in many a day.

The Kiddies' Festival took place in the stadium of Golden Gate Park, to which the orphan asylum children were conveyed in special cars. Games were played in the morning and toys of various kinds were distributed to the kiddies.

At noon they were given dainty lunches and served with milk and candy. In the afternoon athletics took place, valuable prizes being awarded to the winning boys and girls. More games followed, other prizes also being awarded.

One feature of the day was an aviation exhibition, which delighted the young folks. They remained playing together until evening drew near, leaving the scene of their fun with reluctance.

Many of the lodge members gathered to watch the day's festivities and were enthusiastic in the praise of the affair. Grand President Wolff has been the recipient of countless felicitations on the success of the festival, which he planned and directed.

JOSEPH LODGE, SAVANNAH, OBSERVES B'NAI B'RITH DAY.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly observed by Joseph Lodge No. 76 of Savannah, Ga., on Oct. 17, 1915, at the Temple, which was filled to its capacity.

Addresses were made concerning the work of the local lodge by its President, Mr. Morton H. Levy, who called attention to the fact that the meetings of the lodge had been held regularly and were enthusiastically attended throughout the year, and that it was necessary to hold special meetings each month for the purpose of initiating new members. The specific work of Joseph Lodge has been the maintenance of a night school, employing a corps of teachers for the newly arrived immigrants. With the completion of the new building of the Jewish Educational Alliance, it is proposed to enlarge the night school and broaden its scope so as to afford educational advantages to all who may desire to avail themselves of this splendid opportunity.

The oration of the evening was delivered by Rabbi David Marx of Atlanta, Ga., whose subject was "Union in Israel."

MAON LODGE, NORFOLK, VA.

B'nai B'rith Day, Oct. 17, 1915, was fittingly celebrated by Maon Lodge No. 172, at Norfolk, Va., by a special meeting which was largely attended.

Rabbi Louis D. Mendoza presided, and Mr. Harold S. Bloomberg, of Richmond, Va., President of D. G. L. No. 5, who attended the occasion was in charge of the initiation of twenty-five new members. The ceremonies were very impressive, and the address of Brother Bloomberg on the "Ideals and Humanitarian Activities of the Order" will be remembered by all who had the pleasure to hear it, for time to come.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

B'nai B'rtth Day was celebrated by Victoria Lodge No. 758 on Sunday evening, Oct. 17, and proved one of the finest affairs yet held in that city. A large audience listened attentively to the addresses of President I. Waxstock, Dr. S. M. Hartmann and J. B. Jaffe, who in their remarks outlined the origin and the work of the Order.

PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

Grand President Harry K. Wolff, of District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., has announced a prize essay contest open to the Jewish students of the University of California and the members of the Berkeley B'nai B'rith lodge.

The essays are to be written on a Jewish topic to be selected by a committee consisting of Otto Irving Wise, Prof. William Popper and Dr. B. A. Bernstein. This committee also will judge the essays.

Grand President Wolff has offered $50 in prizes of $25, $15 and $10 for the three best essays. His purpose is to stimulate interest in Jewish subjects.

Springfield Lodge, Springfield, Mass. Dedication of Lodge Club Rooms

By Henry B. Goodman

We're getting there. At the rate Springfield Lodge is increasing its membership it will soon have on its roll every worth-while Jew in the city. Sunday, October 17, the Degree Team initiated a class of thirty-nine candidates, and has another class of twenty-four for the next initiation. And what brought all this great activity about?

Last spring the lodge faced the problem of apathy on the part of many of the members. With the summer adjournment coming, the officers saw the need of some great stimulant for the fall season, and hit upon the happy plan of providing a permanent home for the lodge. With characteristic Springfield "go," the thought was speedily crystalized into action, with the result that a suite of rooms was engaged in the Hotel Cooley, and the B'nai B'rith Club thrown open to the members.

The formal dedication and opening took place on September 21, and was without exception the finest social event in the history of the Jewish community of Springfield. So pleased were the members and guests with the comfort and facilities of the rooms, that the lodge and its activities sprang into immediate favor with the public. President Adaskin was not slow to see the possibilities of this new interest, and immediately started a membership campaign with this stimulant: that if the membership were increased at the rate of a member a day for thirty-five days, he would donate to the club rooms a handsome $350 piano. He did. The lodge secured sixty new members in sixty days.

At the initiation on Oct. 17, the lodge was honored by the visit of President Herman Asher, of District No. 1, vice President Abraham K. Cohen; Charles M. Stern, and nearly the entire Board of Deputies of the District, besides a large delegation from Holyoke Lodge. After the exemplification of the ritual, which was rendered in magnificent style by the famous Degree Team of Springfield Lodge, the audience and new members were addressed by the visiting officers of the District Grand Lodge. President Asher spoke of the efforts being made throughout the District to increase the membership, and commended Springfield for its big achievement in this line.

Past President Stern, of Albany, praised the work of the Degree Team, and invited them to come to his city when they had made a little more progress in their membership campaign, and initiate the candidates they would secure. It is needless to say that the invitation was immediately accepted. This invitation was followed in a few days by an invitation from Holyoke Lodge, who evidently saw fit to emulate the good example of Springfield, and also gathered into its fold some twenty-five or more desirable Jewish residents of that bustling little city. The Springfield Degree Team will visit Holyoke on Monday, Nov. 1, and initiate into our fraternity more new material for spreading the doctrine of the Injunction to Abraham.

So thus Springfield Lodge is doing its share. Thus the principles of our Great Brotherhood are being inculcated into the minds of new-found brothers throughout District No. 1, by the Flying Squadron of Springfield Lodge. Our record now reads: New Haven, Worcester, Holyoke, New Britain, Pittsfield, New York City. Our tickets are bought for Albany, and we are listening intently to calls from other cities. When the call comes—we'll be there.

And now a word about our new club rooms. There are two large rooms and a reception hall, with the unlimited use of a good-sized meeting hall on the same floor. The rooms are very comfortably furnished (by the hotel). In addition the members have joined in providing extra comforts and conveniences, such as a library and bookcase, bulletin board, smoking sets, games, decorations, and a host of other things. A visitors' register, also donated, already bears the names of Jews famous for their public work, besides hundreds of other visitors.

The entire facilities of the hotel are at the disposal of the members. Were our quarters a $50,000 club house we could not have more comforts or greater facilities than at present.

To other lodges in the District we say: "Go thou and do likewise."

Headquarters of Springfield Lodge, No. 684, I. O. B. B. Cooley Hotel, Springfield, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS, Death has removed from our midst our beloved Brother, Daniel Harris, or, in the good old Jewish formula, he now sleeps with his fathers,

And Whereas, it has been our pleasure to know this young man and profit by his good example: Now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That in the untimely death of this young brother, Charlotte Lodge Number 733, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, of Charlotte, North Carolina, has sustained an irreparable loss; and

Resolved, That it is truth and not a mere formal eulogy to say that this beloved brother has left behind an example worthy to be followed by all young Hebrews in general and members of our worthy Order in particular; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to spread this resolution on the minutes, and to send copies of same to the B'nai B'rith News, and to his bereaved parents.

David B. Paul,
Sam Schwartz,
H. Miller, Sr.,
Committee.

He that is good is always great; but he that is great is not always good.

JEWISH HELP FOR TURKEY.

The German Jews sent a transport of two car loads of hospital material for the Turkish army. Dr. Alfred Nossig, who was the Jewish representative accompanying the train, was received by the Sultan, by the crown prince and several high officials, who expressed their thanks to him and assured him of Turkey's friendly attitude to the Jews.

A Mussulman-Israelite society was organized in Constantinople, whose object it is to strengthen the bonds of friendship and fellowship between the Jews and the Turks.

GERMAN IRON CROSS WON BY 4,000 JEWS.

Two hundred and eighty-six Jews in the German army have been promoted to be officers, and 4,000 Jewish soldiers in the army have been decorated with iron crosses, sixteen of them with the iron cross of the first class.

As bees breed no poison, though they suck the deadliest juices, so the noble mind, though forced to drink the cup of misery, can yield but generous thoughts and noble deeds.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ORIENTAL-HILLEL LODGE, CHICAGO.

Thursday, Oct. 28, was a gala evening for Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 of Chicago. The meeting was unusually well attended and among those present were a number of the most prominent co-religionists of the city and country, including United States Judges Julian W. Mack and Samuel Alschuler. Very little routine business was transacted, excepting that a large number of applications for membership, totaling almost two hundred, was presented and referred to various investigating committees. The entire evening was devoted to a feast of reason and a flow of soul.

The "talk fest" was launched with an address by Brother Abel Davis, who spoke on the needs of the Orthodox Federated Jewish Charities of Chicago, outlining its history, emphasizing the need of its existence, vividly portraying its manifold activities and concluding with an appeal to those present to rally to its support. His address had a marked effect upon the audience, and in recognition of the beneficent work accomplished by the Federation the lodge unanimously voted an appropriation of $100.00 to aid it in its work.

The principal feature of the meeting was the formal presentation to a Chicago B'nai B'rith audience of Brother Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, who addressed the audience on the subject: "Judaism and Social Service." His brief remarks contained a message of vital importance, not only to the members of the Order but to Jews throughout the land. He emphasized the absolute need of preventive work rather than of remedial work and that preventive work of the most effective character can only be accomplished through social service, which has always been one of the cardinal principles of Judaism and which can best be carried on by an agency like the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. In concluding his remarks he earnestly appealed to the members of the Order for active co-operation in the work of promoting Social Service.

The last number on the program was a discussion of the syllabus submitted by the Director of Intellectual Advancement of the District Grand Lodge, Brother Edward Menkin, on the subject, "Is It a Chillul Ha-Shem to Organize Jewish Political Clubs?" The discussion was led by Brothers Wm. J. Mack and Julius M. Kahn, after which the matter was submitted for general discussion, which was participated in by Brothers Dr. T. Schanfarber, Dr. Jos. Stolz, Judge Samuel Alschuler and Judge Julian W. Mack.

At the close of the program refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

INSTITUTION OF BEAVER VALLEY LODGE.

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 10, Beaver Valley Lodge, No. 777, composed of residents of Beaver Falls and vicinity, was instituted by Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, Pa., second vice-president of District No. 3, assisted by Joseph L. Kun, of Philadelphia, Pa., assistant Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and chairman of Propaganda Committee of District No. 3.

Thirty-eight candidates were initiated by the district degree team, in the presence of about 200 members from Pittsburgh, Butler, Braddock, New Kensington, New Castle and other surrounding cities where lodges are located. In addition to the above officers the following members of the General Committee were [illegible] to assist in the institution: Mr. [illegible] of Pittsburgh, Pa., who organized the lodge; Mr. Louis Sulzberger, [illegible], Pa.; Rabbi M. C. Currick, Erie, Pa.; Mr. Mark Alexander of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. Adolph Ello, former city treasurer of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. Frank [illegible] Kaplan, McKeesport, Pa.

[illegible] the [illegible] of the initiatory [illegible] the doors were opened for a public meeting. The audience was addressed by [illegible], Messrs. Kun and [illegible]. The meeting was one of the most successful ever held in [illegible] by the Jewish community.

[illegible] fair to [illegible] in the [illegible] part of the district in the work of our order [illegible] Mr. Abe Weil of Phila[illegible] new lodges have been [illegible] is expected that four more [illegible] will be instituted within the next [illegible]

NEW YORK-ISAIAH LODGE.

New York-Isaiah Lodge of New York City held a most interesting meeting on Wednesday evening, Oct. 27, 1915.

Nine applications for membership were presented.

The secretary of the District Grand Lodge, Brother B. M. Kaplan, made an official visit to the lodge, who, in addressing the lodge, said: "I bring you a message of good will and good cheer from the President of our District, Brother Herman Asher. I want to emphasize particularly his message of good cheer and hope. Everyone is commenting upon our President's 'Jewishness.' One of the elements of his 'Jewishness' is his wholesome optimism, which is so characteristic of our people as a race or a religious brotherhood, for were it not for our optimism our people could never survive these many centuries of indescribable hardship and oppression; but, notwithstanding the untoward conditions and circumstances under which our people had to live, or rather exist, these many centuries, they never lost faith either in themselves or their fellowmen. They went on hoping and hoping that the time will come when all will be right with the world. The great English poet, Browning, has said: 'God's in His heaven, all is right with the World.' At present all is not right with the world. The terrible wrong and injustice which have been perpetrated against our people bear irrefutable testimony to it. The present European war conflagration in which the supposedly most civilized nations of the earth are slaughtering one another, proves that all is not right with the world; but what our people do believe and have always taught is that God is in His heaven and all will be right with the world, even if all is not right yet. This is the Messianic Jewish ideal, always looking to the future with its golden possibilities and God's promise, as sublimely expressed by the Prophets. And the President of our District, impressed with the right Jewish spirit of optimism, feels that all will be right with our District. He sees a great future for it, teeming with great possibilities, both in increased membership and in greater activities. He does not waste time or energy on useless criticism or fault-finding, which usually operates as a hindrance to greater progress. If our brothers devoted half of the time on upbuilding which they spend on useless criticism our Order would be the biggest, the most powerful and the most influential Jewish organization in the world, which it ought to be. The severest critics are usually the poorest workers, in the same way that the keenest critics make the poorest authors. The one that turns critic within the ranks of B'nai B'rithdom, is one who has forgotten one of the noblest teachings of our Order, which is to develop and elevate, rather than to hinder and oppose.

A new era is dawning upon our District. It is an era of constructive work, of optimism, useful activity, cordiality and good fellowship. I ask you to help the President in his effort to increase our ranks. You say 'We want quality.' Very true, so we do. But we have a great many of quality who are not identified with our Order. We can have both quantity and quality. You are proud of your lodge, proud of its past. You have a right to be, but you should also see to it that the lodge is proud of you, so that in time to come as you now point to the earnest workers who have since gone to the Great Beyond, future generations may point with pride to you and receive new inspiration from your earnest efforts and your practical achievements."

RENO LODGE, RENO, NEV.

Under the auspices of the Lodge services were held during the recent holidays, and it is pleasing to report that there was much more activity and interest displayed in this matter than ever before. The attendance at these services were very satisfactory.

In reference to the call of aid for the war sufferers in Europe the Lodge collected through its committee the sum of $118.00.

BELLINGHAM, WASH.

A successful dance was given by the Ladies' Auxiliary to Bellingham Lodge on Oct. 10, 1915. An enjoyable evening was spent by the members of the Lodge and their friends.

In conjunction with the Ladies' Auxiliary, the regular semi-monthly meeting of Bellingham Lodge was held on which occasion Max Grossman of Vancouver addressed the members.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

A well attended meeting of Horeb Lodge on Sept. 26 at its new quarters marked the formal opening of the new lodge rooms. Everyone present expressed themselves pleased with the change and much favorable comment was made concerning the splendid facilities which the new quarters offer.

The speaker of the evening was Rev. Dr. Jos. Silverman of Temple Emanuel, New York City, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, who took for the subject of his discourse "Behold, How Good and How Pleasant It is for Brethren to Dwell Together in Unity." He showed clearly and convincingly that in every instance, unity made for progress and development, and that love was the force that bound men together. Just as in the family life when love disappears, the units are separated and misery, suffering and trouble follow as a result, so it is among all mankind. This is proven by the great war that is now devastating all Europe, making its effect felt in every part of the world. The principle of unity and love was preached by the Jewish prophets thousands of years ago, and their teachings are more necessary today than ever before.

The Independent Order B'nai B'rith has adopted as one of the cardinal and basic principles of its organization this doctrine, and each member is thoroughly impressed with its importance and urged to carry it on in his relationship with his fellow men in his daily life. The words of the speaker made a profound and deep impression upon all his hearers and the lesson will remain never to be forgotten.

The Horeb Lodge degree team initiated three new members. Their work was of high order and elicited much praise from those who had the privilege to be present and witness the excellent work.

The members then adjourned to the banquet room where refreshments were served.

The campaign to get new members is progressing excellently and promises to prove successful beyond all expectations. Immediately after the announcement that such a campaign had been started, a number of men, without being placed upon the recruiting team, immediately took up the work and handed in a number of applications at the last meeting. Everyone appears to be impressed with the great necessity of enlisting under the banner of the lodge all those who can contribute to the general welfare of the organization.

Another successful meeting of the lodge was held on Oct. 10, on which occasion several candidates were initiated. The feature of this meeting was the address by Mr. Myron Sulzberger of New York City, Vice-President of the Home at Yonkers, who gave an admirable description of the Home and spoke with glowing terms of the splendid work which that institution is doing.

On Oct. 24, at a well attended meeting, the lodge was honored by the presence of Mr. I. Irving Lipsitch of New York, manager of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America. Mr. Lipsitch addressed the lodge on the subject, "Immigration," illustrated with stereopticon views. His address was received with marked approval and the co-operation of the lodge and its members in the work of the Immigrant Society was pledged.

Horeb Lodge is planning an entertainment and dance at Harmony Hall for the members and their ladies. A good program of musical and vocal selections has been arranged for that occasion.

ABRAHAM LIPPMAN LODGE, PITTSBURGH, PA.

On Wednesday evening, Oct. 27, Abraham Lippman Lodge gave an entertainment at its lodge rooms which was largely attended. This was the first affair of the season. Beautiful prizes were presented to the successful contestants. Refreshments were served and the affair proved a great success.

The campaign for membership under the auspices of the lodge is now being made and the methods used are similar to those which have been practised in other districts. It is the intention of the lodge to secure every desirable Jew within the city not as yet connected with the Order.

The lodge also decided to give a testimonial banquet to the President of the District, Abe Weil of Philadelphia, and his cabinet during the month of November. It will be one of the gala events of the season and will take place at the Fort Pitt Hotel.

DAN LODGE NO. 593, CHARLESTON, S. C.

Dan Lodge's "Fall Opening" took place on the evening of Oct. 10. At that meeting its membership was increased by the addition of eight new members. Its present roll of members is the largest in the history of the lodge. Its large membership is noteworthy because it was attained during adverse conditions.

Its past year has been one of achivement and progress, but not unmixed with sorrow. The heavy hand of death has been laid on the lodge, and four members—two of them officers—have been summoned to the Great Beyond. And the greatest growth and prosperity attainable cannot recompense Dan Lodge for the toll exacted.

Sidney J. Cohen, appointed Guardian after the death of J. Flaum, was accidentally killed in the discharge of his duties as a reporter for a Charleston paper. His death grieved the entire city, and is one of the saddest blows ever suffered by Dan Lodge. Young, brilliant, refined, and popular, he was one whose membership incalculably enriched the lodge.

Dr. J. S. Raisin, the new Rabbi of the K. K. B. E. Synagogue, was gladly received as a member at the October meeting. Dr. Raisin is an ardent member of the Order, and his active participation in Dan Lodge's work is confidently expected to stimulate and help increase local interest in the work of the Order.

Dr. Raisin is the successor to Dr. I. E. Marcusson, who was not only a member of the lodge, but was the distinguished President of District No. 5. Dr. Marcusson left Charleston to assume duties as Rabbi at Terre Haute, Indiana. At his departure he was presented with a beautiful silver loving cup by his brother members.

Much of Dan Lodge's recent progress is due to the untiring efforts of its president, W. J. Bernstein, ably assisted by various committees.

OFFICIAL VISIT TO LODGES OF DISTRICT NO. 4.

Grand President Harry K. Wolff, of District Grand Lodge No. 4, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, has announced his itinerary for the southern lap of his official tour of the district, on which he will leave San Francisco November 7. He will be accompanied by Grand Secretary I. J. Aschheim.

The itinerary provides for visits at Bakersfield, Los Angeles, San Diego, San Bernardino and Stockton.

They will spend two days in Los Angeles and two days in San Diego.

Both the Grand President and Grand Secretary are eagerly awaiting their opportunity of meeting the brethren of the southern lodges and conferring with them on the activities of the Order.

The itinerary follows:

Sunday, November 7—Leave San Francisco by the valley route, arriving at Bakersfield November 7, for meeting on that day.

Monday, November 8—Leave Bakersfield, arriving in Los Angeles Tuesday, November 9, when lodge meets.

Thursday, November 11—Leave Los Angeles for San Diego, meeting Lasker Lodge that evening.

Remain in San Diego Friday and Saturday, visiting Panama-California Exposition.

Sunday, November 14—Leave San Diego for San Bernardino, arriving there in the evening to attend regular meeting of lodge.

Monday, November 15—Leave San Bernardino for Fresno, arriving there in the evening to attend lodge meeting.

Tuesday, November 16—Leave Fresno for Stockton, arriving there for regular meeting of lodge.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Worcester Lodge No. 600 began its Fall and Winter activities with a well attended meeting on Oct. 12, 1915. At the close of the meeting an entertainment was carried out.

The lodge anticipates an official visit by the District Deputies of the State on Nov. 28, at which time an open meeting will be held. The lodge has started a junior degree team and has appointed committees to arrange for the organization of a Ladies' Auxiliary. A new membership committee has been appointed to inaugurate a campaign to increase the membership of the lodge. During the last year, Worcester Lodge secured the first prize for having secured the largest increase in membership, namely, 80 per cent.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

DAVID FISH LODGE, CHICAGO.

On Oct. 18, 1915, David Fish Lodge No. 130 held a well attended meeting at which a large number of applications for membership were presented and ordered referred to various investigating committees. The lodge hopes to materially increase this membership before the close of the year, and from results so far achieved there is no doubt that its expectations will be realized.

The feature of the meeting was a discussion of the subject submitted by the Director of Intellectual Advancement of the District Grand Lodge, relating to the organization of Jewish Political Clubs. The discussion was led by Brother Benj. J. Samuels, President of the District, and was participated in by a number of members of the lodge.

At the close of the evening, the secretary of the District Grand Lodge made brief remarks dealing with the mode and manner of properly conducting the affairs of a B'nai B'rith lodge, emphasizing the need of cultivating a broad fellowship among its members, and the importance of interesting the members in the work of the Order and supporting its tenets and principles not only in the lodge room but in every day life.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE, WASH.

Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 held a well attended meeting on Oct. 7. After the general routine matters were disposed of a committee was appointed to co-operate with the local sister lodge, Rainier Lodge No. 627, in regard to the immigration question, with special reference to the Russian refugees who are continually arriving in Seattle.

Upon completion of all business matters a joint meeting was held with the Ladies Auxiliary, at which time Dr. J. Allen Smith, head of the Political Economy Department of the University of Washington, addressed the audience, taking for his subject "The Growth of the Democratic Idea in the Government from the Past to the Present." Musical and vocal numbers were on the program and at the close of the evening refreshments were served.

Hildesheimer Lodge celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of its institution on Oct. 21, 1915, with an excellent entertainment.

Rainier Lodge No. 627 of Seattle held its first meeting of the season on Oct. 15, on which occasion general business matters were discussed.

It was decided to hold a joint meeting with Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503, at which time President Suzallo of the University of Washington will deliver an address.

INSTITUTION OF TEXARKANA LODGE AT TEXARKANA, ARK.

On Sunday, Oct. 31, 1915, Texarkana Lodge No. 520 was instituted at Texarkana, Ark., with a charter membership of twenty-five prominent co-religionists of the city.

Brother Louis Cohen of Ft. Smith, Ark., a member of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7, accompanied by Brother Dan Daniels of Little Rock, Ark., were delegated to bring about the institution of the lodge and represented the Grand Lodge at the formal ceremonies, which were ushered in by the holding of services at the Temple in the morning, on which occasion the visiting Grand Lodge officers delivered addresses on the work of the Order to a large audience. In the afternoon the formal installation took place. Interesting addresses were made by the officers, which aroused much interest among the new members.

The Jewish community of Texarkana expressed their appreciation for the interest shown by the Order, and has pledged to demonstrate this in a practical measure by a steady increase of the membership of the lodge.

HOREB LODGE OF NEW HAVEN STARTS ACTIVE CAMPAIGN FOR NEW MEMBERS.

A special committee from Horeb Lodge, headed by Jos. H. Ullman, is arranging the preliminary work necessary for the proper launching of this campaign. The committee has appointed a number of subcommittees, to which various lists of prospective candidates have been referred to solicit from among them the new members for the lodge. It is the aim of the campaign committee to secure at least one candidate from every member of the lodge before the celebration of its sixtieth anniversary

PORTLAND B'NAI B'RITH.

A class of fifteen new members is awaiting initiation at the coming meeting of Portland Lodge.

One of the most enthusiastic meetings of the season was held on Oct. 12 by Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314. A class of eleven candidates was initiated by a uniformed degree team. Cigars and refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

The Daughters of the Covenant Auxiliary to the B'nai B'rith Lodges gave a card party and social for its members, which was enjoyed by all present.

Portland Lodge N.o 314, on Oct. 19, commenced a series of social activities which will engage the attention of their members and ladies the entire season. A successful "Bubble Party" was held, at which a prize whist and dance were the features. It was a most enjoyable affair. The next event is "Vaudeville Night," on Tuesday evening, Nov. 16. Dancing will follow. On Dec. 21 a character party will be given, which promises to be a gala affair. Ladies' Night will be a Leap Year affair.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

With the kiddies' festival now but a happy memory of a successful event, the Committee of Fifty has launched itself into active preparations for a minstrel show to be given Sunday evening, Nov. 28, at Scottish Rite Hall. Proceeds of the affair will be devoted to improving the new B'nai B'rith club rooms and to expanding other activities of the committee.

More than a score of members of the committee will participate in the affair. They will be assisted by other members of the Order and of the ladies' auxiliaries.

The committee's crack initiatory team will go to Stockton to conduct a class initiation.

Many candidates are being secured by the local lodges for the class initiation to be held Dec. 8, when the Committee of Fifty team will officiate.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

The September meeting of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 of Los Angeles, Calif., was one that will long be remembered by all those who were present.

An unexpected and very much appreciated surprise was the visit of Past Grand President Morris S. Schneider of Oakland, Calif. His address to the lodge on the subject of "The Aims and Objects of the Order" was of much interest to the members and was replete with instructive and entertaining matters.

In addition to this formal address a debate was participated in by members of the lodge on the question of the war loan.

MOSES GASTER LODGE. MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

The ceremony of dedicating a bed to the honor of the members of Dr. Moses Gaster Lodge No. 720, in consideration of their gift to the hospital took place on Sept. 26th, 1915. Dr. Chas. Dreyfus, J. P., presided. The proceedings commenced with the recital of a Psalm, followed by Mincha service.

Rabbi Dr. Salomon in addressing the gathering said that the gift of the endowment of a bed was the finest offering of humanity in endeavoring to alleviate pain and suffering. Mr. Jos. Hamwee, as president of the lodge, unveiled the tablet in commemoration of the gift. He expressed the pleasure it gave him to perform this function, and stated that as soon as the members of the lodge were approtched they readily put into practice the principle of brotherly love and humanity.

A letter was read from Dr. Moses Gaster, of London, regretting his inability to be present and expressing his good wishes for the success of the institution.

MINNEAPOLIS LODGE.

A well attended meeting of the lodge was held on Thursday evening, Nov. 4, 1915. The special feature was the address of Professor J. R. Kanter of the University of Minnesota on the subject, "Physiology and Its Relation to Every Day Life."

Nomination of officers for the ensuing year was also held.

The Propaganda Committee, with Brother David C. Jeffery as chairman, announced a plan for the launching of a membership campaign which met with the approval of the lodge.

HILDESHEIMER LODGE CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY.

One of the largest crowds that ever gathered at a Jewish social was present on Thursday evening, Oct. 21, at Seattle, Wash. The attendance was roughly estimated at over 500. The occasion was the celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the organization of Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503. Three worthy features stand out among the many achievements of the lodge for the past year. One is the organization of a social welfare committee, which works in conjunction with the committee of the Rainier Lodge for the purpose of solving the immigration problems that are arising in that city. Another is the attention directed to the Jewish Reformatory prisoners, the pardoning of many being due to the work of the B. B. lodges, who see to it that the unfortunate ones are started on the straight path. And last, but not least, is the organization of a ladies' auxiliary, which has done a great amount of good work this past year.

As usual, the entertainment furnished to the audience was a feature.

Among the speakers of the evening were: Abe Hurwitz, president of the lodge; Miss S. L. Kadushin, president of the Ladies' Auxiliary; J. Shaefer, monitor of the lodge, and Rabbi Samuel Koch.

RAMAH LODGE, CHICAGO.

A largely attended meeting of the lodge was held on Oct. 14, 1915. The remarkable incident of the meeting was the presentation of two hundred and thirty applications for membership, a partial result of the intense membership campaign now being waged in that city.

The special feature of the meeting was the discussion of the syllabus submitted by the Director of Intellectual Advancement of the District Grand Lodge on the subject, "Is It a Chillul Ha-Shem to Organize Jewish Political Clubs?" participated in by Brothers Otto G. Finkelstein Henry S. Blum, Judge Philip Stein, Jacob Gartenstein and Sidney Lyon.

JOSHUA LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Final plans are being made for the celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of Joshua Lodge No. 23, of Philadelphia, which will be held in December. The general committee, of which Mr. M. S. Meyerhoff is chairman, has been appointed and the anniversary will be held on Sunday evening, Dec. 5.

The celebration will take the form of a class initiation of new members and promises to be one of the largest initiations ever held in the history of the B'nai B'rith in Philadelphia. Following the initiation there is to be a large banquet to which men of national repute will be invited and will make addresses on the vital activities now being undertaken by the Order.

OFFICIAL VISIT BY THE PRESIDENT OF DISTRICT NO. 4.

Mr. Harry K. Wolff of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, is arranging for an official tour to begin the early part of November, and will be accompanied by Brother I. J. Aschheim, Secretary of the District Grand Lodge. They will visit Bakersfield, Los Angeles, San Diego and other cities.

In the various cities the officers will confer with the members of the Order on the various activities in which the District is particularly concerned. Special attention will be given to the campaign for an increase in membership.

ACTIVITY OF EMANUEL LODGE, MONTGOMERY, ALA.

The membership of the lodge numbers 141, composed almost entirely of the best element in the Jewish community.

The lodge has been active in raising funds for the Leo N. Levi Hospital and has been a constant contributor to this worthy institution. It has responded generously to the appeal for help from the war sufferers abroad and has also sent a liberal contribution to the sufferers of the recent Galveston tidal wave. It has liberally supported the Anti-Tuberculosis Association and the National Farm School and has taken active part in furthering the interests of the local Young Men's Hebrew Association.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

President Herman Asher, assisted by the Intellectual Advancement Committee, of which Brother Joseph Levenson is Chairman, is bending every effort to increase the membership of the District. He is meeting with considerable success, especially in the smaller communities, where our co-religionists, more or less, know one another and come more in personal contact. President Asher is making frequent visits to the lodges and his earnest words are always listened to with attention and respect. President Asher has been authorized by the General Committee to offer prizes for excellence in Degree Team work. The following lodges have already expressed their willingness to enter the contest: Washington, Henry Jones, Manhattan, Worcester, Springfield and Edward Everett.

Chananiah Lodge No. 165 mourns the demise of Mayer Goldschmidt Tyler of the lodge, who was much beloved by all brethren.

Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan of District No. 1, has organized a class in Degree Team work where attention will be given, not only to the proper rendition of the Ritual, but also to the historical, religious and ethical significance of the impressive Ritual of the Order.

Brother Myer L. Victorius has presented New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1 with a beautiful Menorah in memory of his late esteemed father, M. Victorius, who was a prominent and active member of that lodge.

Under the auspices of Amos Lodge No. 121 of Boston, Mass., a well attended public meeting was held on which occasion grand secretary Dr. B. M. Kaplan of New York delivered an address.

Washington, Edward Everett, Zion and Akiba Lodges of New York City held a joint meeting on Nov. 3. A large class of candidates was initiated on that occasion.

Services in memory of the late Jacob Cane, President of the Home for the Aged at Yonkers, was held on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 24, in the synagogue of the Home, which was filled to its capacity. There were representatives from a number of communities outside of New York. Among the out-of-town visitors were Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston, Henry Lasker and H. Adaskin of Springfield. Those who participated in the program were Herman Asher, President of the District, Myron Sulzberger, Judge Louis D. Gibbs and Dr. B. M. Kaplan.

Jordan Lodge No. 15, of New York City, is arranging for a testimonial banquet and dance to be tendered to Mr. Herman Asher, President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, which will be held at the Hotel Majestic, New York, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 24, 1915.

At a well attended meeting of Springfield Lodge No. 684 of Springfield, Mass., held on Oct. 17, 1915, a class of forty members was initiated by a uniformed degree team. The meeting was addressed by Judge A. K. Cohn, of Boston, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Colorado Springs Lodge No. 523, of Colorado Springs, increased its membership over 100 per cent during the last month. Its showing is remarkable in view of the fact that there is but a small Jewish population in the community. An increase of 21 members, more than double the former membership, is due to the efforts of the President of the Lodge, Mr. H. Sachs.

Denver Lodge No. 171, of Denver, Colo., has increased its membership by 253, and it is expected that at least 50 more applications will be received and the applicants initiated at the November meeting. The campaign for new members is under the charge of Brother Lieberman.

Eshcal Lodge No. 55 will soon initiate the largest class of candidates the lodge ever initiated at one time. Brother S. G. Kusworm who had charge of the membership campaign reports an increase of over 200 per cent.

As a result of propaganda efforts, Indianapolis Lodge No. 58, of Indianapolis, Ind., will double its membership before the campaign is over.

Beth Horon Lodge No. 599, of Kansas City, Kan., has thus far increased its membership by forty.

Gan Eden Lodge No. 110, of Terre Haute, Ind., has secured twenty-one new members as a result of its recent campaign.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

(Continued from page 15)

Cleveland Lodge No. 16, of Cleveland, Ohio, anticipates building a B'nai B'rith Club House for its members, which is also to be used as a meeting place. A committee has been appointed to make the preliminary arrangements and work out a plan for the raising of $100,000, necessary for this work.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

A delegation of twenty members of New Castle Lodge of New Castle, Pa., among them Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, second Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, attended the institution of the B'nai B'rith Lodge at Beaver Falls, Pa., on Oct. 10.

Joshua Lodge No. 23 of Philadelphia is planning to celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of its institution some time during the month of November.

The religious school conducted under the auspices of New Castle Lodge No. 609 of New Castle, Pa., has begun the term with an enrollment of over one hundred pupils. Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, Second-Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, is the superintendent.

New Castle Lodge No. 609, of New Castle, Pa., will hold an open meeting on Sunday, Nov. 28, on which occasion B'nai B'rith Day will be celebrated with appropriate exercises.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Under the auspices of Abraham Geiger Lodge No. 423 and Ida Blum Strauss Auxiliary, Spokane, Wash., a bazaar was held on the evening of Oct. 21. The members of both organizations donated useful articles, which were placed on sale, and a handsome sum was realized which will be used for charitable purposes.

Lasker Lodge No. 370 of San Diego, Calif., is planning for an entertainment to be held on the evening of Nov. 18.

Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Calif., will celebrate its 40th anniversary in November. Plans are now being formulated to commemorate the event.

Preparations are being made to entertain President Harry K. Wolff of San Francisco, accompanied by Mr. I. J. Aschheim, Secretary of the District Grand Lodge, on the contemplated visit to Lasker Lodge No. 370 of San Diego, Calif., on Nov. 11 and 12.

Due to the efforts of Victoria Lodge No. 758 and its Ladies Auxiliary of Victoria, B. C., the campaign of the Jewish Relief Society of that city for contributions to aid the war sufferers abroad met with much success.

On Oct. 26, Benj. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City, Utah, gave its first dancing party, which proved an enjoyable event to all who attended.

Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420 of Butte, Mont., gave an informal dancing party on Oct. 17.

"Kiddies Day" was the occasion for an enjoyable entertainment and dance under the auspices of Bellingham Lodge of Bellingham, Wash., on Oct. 17. Addresses were delivered by Brothers Wie[illegible] of Seattle and Rabbi Cohen and D. Tall. The musical program of various numbers was successfully carried out.

The entertainment was followed by a dance, and at the close of the evening refreshments were served by the ladies.

The entertainment committee of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City has given much consideration and study to the problem of making the meetings of the lodge more attractive from a social standpoint and also to promote a closer intimacy and friendliness among the members of the families of the [illegible]. For this purpose a series of [illegible] "get together" dances have been arranged for the present season.

An interesting and well attended meeting was held by the Daughters of the [illegible] Auxiliary to Samuel Lodge of [illegible], B. C., on Oct. 14. A class of [illegible] members were initiated and at the close of the meeting an interesting paper was read by [illegible] Franks on 'Judaism and the [illegible].' The meeting wound up with an informal dance.

Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Calif., is completing arrangements for the celebration of the [illegible] anniversary of the institution.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

At the last regular meeting of Maon Lodge No. 172 of Norfolk, Va., a class of [illegible] new members was initiated. These applications were secured through the efforts of [illegible] secretary, Mr. Adolph [illegible]. The lodge is contemplating securing a permanent home, and a committee of which Brother Benj. Margolins [illegible] has been appointed to make a preliminary investigation.

Reports from the lodges at Norfolk, Richmond, and Atlanta show considerable gains in the membership during the last sixty days.

A special meeting of Rimmon Lodge No. 68 of Richmond, Va., was held on Oct. 24, 1915, in the city of Petersburg, for the purpose of initiating a class of eighteen candidates. It is the intention of Rimmon Lodge to form a lodge in Petersburg as soon as a sufficient number of members have been initiated into the Order.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Saginaw Lodge No. 636 of Saginaw, Mich., has launched a propaganda campaign with a view of materially increasing its membership, and so far the efforts have been fairly successful. The lodge expects in the future to initiate a large class of candidates. The Grand Lodge has delegated representatives to visit the lodge on the occasion and to deliver addresses on the work of the Order.

As a result of the propaganda effort on the part of Brothers Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer, member of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, and Charles Silberman, of Des Moines, Ia., a petition for a charter for a new lodge, to be located in the city of Ottumwa, Ia., has been prepared for presentation to the Grand Lodge.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., is planning an extensive membership campaign. A committee with Brother A. B. Kapplin, secretary of the lodge, as chairman thereof, was appointed to carry out the instructions of the lodge.

Minnesota Lodge No. 157 of St. Paul is arranging for a banquet in honor of B'nai B'rith Day, which will be held on Nov. 16 next. The guest of honor on this occasion will be Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Mr. Louis Cohen of Ft. Smith, Ark., a member of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7, visited Texarkana with a view of reorganizing the B'nai B'rith lodge in that city.

The B'nai B'rith of Pine Bluff, Ark., lost a valued member in the death of David M. Blumenthal, who was an old member of the Order and who rendered much service to further its work.

The Building Committee of the B'nai B'rith Club of Vicksburg, Miss., is having plans and specifications prepared for the construction of a new club building.

Dallas Lodge No. 197 of Dallas, Texas, held its first meeting of the season on Oct. 20. A special committee was appointed to raise funds for the relief of Jews coming to this country from the various countries involved in the war.

Addresses on the work of the Order were delivered by Brothers Hexter, Miller and Eldridge.

The first Sunday in November has been designated by the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association as "Hospital Day." The first anniversary of the opening of the hospital will be celebrated at the institution on that day with appropriate exercises.

On Tuesday, Oct. 26, 1915, Isidor Strauss Lodge No. 519 of Ft. Worth, Texas, held an open meeting which was largely attended. Addresses were delivered by Brothers L. F. Shanblum, Rabbi George Fox and A. M. Simon. Musical and vocal numbers were also on the program.

A highly interesting meeting was held by Herzl Lodge No. 608 of Houston, Texas, on Nov. 3, which was in the form of a public meeting and was largely attended by the members and their families. Judge Henry J. Dannebaum delivered the principal address on that occasion.

Isidor Strauss Lodge No. 519 of Ft. Worth, Texas, is arranging for a social meeting on Nov. 19, on which occasion a literary and musical program will be rendered.

Beth Zur Lodge No. 84, I. O. B. B., of Mobile, Ala., held a special meeting on receipt of the news of the death of Nat Strauss, Secretary of the District Grand Lodge, and named Leon Schwarz, a Past President of the District, and Rabbi Alfred G. Moses, as special representatives to attend the funeral at New Orleans. Bro. Strauss was a charter member of the Mobile Lodge which was organized in 1866.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7 held a meeting at Vicksburg, Miss., which was attended by nearly all of its members and was presided over by its chairman, Rabbi George Fox, of Ft. Worth.

As a result of the efforts of Brothers L. Cohen and Dan Daniels, members of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 7, a new lodge was instituted at Texarkana, Ark.

DISTRICT NO. 8.

Friedens Lodge of Ratibor, Germany, donated the sum of five hundred marks for the care of invalids at bathing resorts and homes for convalescents.

Steinthal Lodge of Hamburg presented to twenty-nine local military hospitals, sets of books for their respective libraries.

GETTING GEORGIA RIGHT.

The lynching of Leo M. Frank was almost directly traceable and plainly attributable to inflammatory articles written by Thos. E. Watson, a man whose literary attainments in certain enterprises in the past have given him a deserved portion of fame—but he is an Ishmael for all of that.

Watson in purporting to discuss the evidence in the Frank case, presented a hodge-podge of stuff that was sure to disturb the reasons of those who read it—if they gave Watson any credit for accuracy. But this disturber has met his fate. His "revelations" have been proved to be the vaporings of a lunatic or the falsehoods of a pervert.

Watson has proved himself a small man, an ungenerous man, a vicious man, a dangerous man. He proceeds on the philosophy of a politician well known around these diggings who used to say, "Give 'em hell, they've got no friends." Watson has long been attempting to get a hold by assailing the Roman Catholics, for he knows that, except in cities, there are few Roman Catholics in the South, and "they've got no friends."

And then, having got a foothold, he turned upon Frank because the latter was a Jew and Watson wished to appeal to the anti-Semitic race hatred in the hearts of rural Georgians. It was easy to make himself a hero in their eyes by assailing a race because of the alleged crime of just one man.

We have had very little confidence in Watson's disingeniousness for we could see that his game was lacking in sincerity and he was writing to peddle his stuff. Unfortunately, there are thousands of persons who delight to read and to be taken in by such bosh as certain pariahs have been passing on to the gullible public.

But Watson has overreached himself in his tirades on the Frank lynching. There has arisen in Georgia a young man who has torn the smiling mask from the frightful visage of the man from Thompson, and has shown the horrid, grinning features of the ghoul.

Thos. W. Loyless, editor of the Augusta Chronicle, is the man who has exposed the falsehoods of Tom Watson, has shown Georgians that they are being duped by an unscrupulous politician, and it seems that a revulsion, a great reaction has begun to set in and that the people of Georgia are ready to repudiate Watson as being a representative of sane thought in Georgia. One who is so quick to condemn others should at least be consistent, and Loyless proves that Watson was not.

This was a brave thing in Mr. Loyless, for he measured swords with one who is a master; he exposed himself to gibes, ridicule and open assault and covert blow. And he has come out stronger for the contact of steel upon steel.

Day after day Loyless has gone on patiently without the use of harsh word or highly charged adjective bombs, and has gradually awakened the people of Georgia to a resentment against the reproach in which the State has been placed by the ravings of Tom Watson.

Georgia is a law-abiding State. The people of Georgia respect the law. The world is coming to know that the expression of violence in the Frank case does not represent the thought and heart of that State, but was an act of rebellion against what good men were led to believe was a wrong done to the law.—Columbia Record, Columbia, S. C.

ORDER HAS RAPID GROWTH.

During the past year the Order has grown with exceeding rapidity, in one city, St. Louis, one thousand members having been added during that time. Notable additions have also been made in Cleveland and Cincinnati. Some of these days, when the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith gets rid of its unnecessary and useless secrecy, it will become the largest and most influential society of Jewish laymen in the United States, as it is today the most useful and altruistic. American "Israelite."

God has riches for the soul today, more riches tomorrow, and riches without end as eternity goes on. The eternal reward is the only reward that can satisfy the immortal soul.

THE RABBI.

There is much compliment to the Rev. Dr. Leo M. Franklin that Temple Beth El has elected him for a 10-year term after 17 years of his ministry. There is also considerable service to the city in pledging to us the continued citizenship and civic neighborliness of Rabbi Franklin.

He came to Detroit as quite a young man, when his congregation was worshipping on the site of the present Y. W. C. A. He has further ripened and matured among us, and has found fields of useful labor where it is difficult to labor with diligence and with grace.

To mingle as the living representative of an ancient faith with many modern churches descended from that mother church; to join with all the worthy efforts of practical Christianity without either a pious aloofness or an impious compromise, required not merely a learned man, not merely a polite modernist. It required a man able to use tact with force and force with tact.

How well Dr. Franklin has succeeded can be judged by the unique position he holds in this community, as one of the longest-settled ministers and almost the longest-settled of any Jewish congregation. He is a part of our civic life, an agent in every broad charity, a co-operator in all educational and reform movements, a representative of an enlightened Judaism and an Americanism enriched by Hebrew ideals. In teaching faithfully his own people by his example, he has also taught Gentiles many things, and all Detroit calls him Rabbi.—Detroit "Journal."

JEW MONEY.

The Slaton article in the August Fra brought us a thousand garrulous letters: "You were bought with Jew Money," they read. "Jew Money" did not buy The Fra's opinion; it did not need to.

"Jew Money!" What a fine, fifteenth century swing there is to those two words! How quick we are to lift this noble sentiment out of the cruel and ignorant past for use in the land of the free and the home of the brave. Jews are not the wealthy people of the world and never have been! Yet "Jew Money" has prospered any nation that ever cultivated it. Contrariwise, history will convince you the country that has cast away its Jews, lost its "Jew Money," has floundered.

I'll tell you what "Jew Money" buys! Down through the centuries since Titus desecrated Jerusalem till Torquemada rewarded the Jews, who made Spain the glory of the Middle Ages with the Inquisition, till the Little Father in Russia arranged the Bloody Sunday celebration, "Jew Money" has bought off envy, jealousy, avarice, bigotry, injustice; by hook or crook it has secured an hour of calm from the oppressor, because it had no choice.

Unoppressed "Jew Money" is loyal money. "Jew Money" financed Columbus, without interest; helped finance Washington; saved Europe from Napoleon—took chances!

"Jew Money" has educated ambitious boys; it has encouraged young writers; it has appreciated unappreciated painters!"

"Jew Money" has supported universities, the opera, the theater, and it has bought books, books.

"Jew Money" saves thousands of babes each summer, providing pure milk and pure air; it builds tuberculosis hospitals; it cares for old age—"Jew Money" is active money!

"Jew Money" has created great commercial structures; it has discounted bills. "Jew Money" has opened up towns and states and countries to prosperity; it is largely responsible for the commercial dominance of this country.

For years I have known Jews intimately, as employers and employees, as friends, as associates, as playfellows. I tell you much of "Jew Money" is found in the pocket of him who is fair in his business dealings, keen, alert, generous to public enterprise, a high-minded, broad spirited citizen, respectable, intelligent, permanent; a responsive father, a kind husband, a faithful son, and a true friend.

"Jew Money!" Never, in all America, let us hear that odious phrase again!—Fra Magazine.

NOTICE.

Those who desire to send letters to Russian Poland, now in German hands, should place such in an envelope, writing the address of the receiver, then place the letter with envelope in another envelope, addressing the last:

An die Kaiserliche Deutsche Zivil Verwaltung Fuer Russisch Polen
Warschaw Polen.
Via Germany.

The letter must be registered.

76.05
BN

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS
BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY

Vol. VIII. DECEMBER, 1915 No. 4

Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

Bible Reading in the Public Schools and the Ethical and Religious Education of the American People

By RABBI SAMUEL SCHULMAN, D.D.

From time to time attempts have been made to introduce the reading of the Bible in the public schools. Recently, quite an agitation has simultaneously developed in many parts of the country on this subject. Strenuous efforts are being made to win back territory lost by judicial decisions, and to conquer new territory for the doctrine that our schools are Godless unless the Bible is read in them. Naturally, the attitude of this body has been that of opposition to all such attempts, and therefore, members of this Conference have used their efforts to defeat them. These attempts, we must realize, are the expression of dissatisfaction with the present methods of instruction in the public schools, as far as, it is claimed, they lack ethical and religious influence upon the children.

The Effort to Christianize the Public Schools.

There are three causes for the present dissatisfaction. In the first place, there has always been a desire to make the public school, in some manner, an agency for the introduction of Christian teaching. Ever since the organization of the government, and the inculcation of the principle of the separation of Church and State, there has always been a desire on the part of a number of people, in some way, to bring religion into the public schools and thus defeat this principle. It is quite true that those who advocate the introduction of religious teaching in the public school, claim that they mean only non-sectarian teaching. But non-sectarianism for them is identical and synonymous with Christianity. Non-sectarianism really means for them non-denominationalism. This is again and again proved, and especially brought out, in all its naivete, by a Supreme Court decision of Kentucky in the year 1905, when the non-sectarianism of the religious teaching is proved by the reference to the fact that only the Lord's Prayer was used. To say "we ask this for Christ's sake" is regarded by many as a purely non-sectarian prayer.

Now, we understand this Christian attitude. For it, non-denominationalism means the expression of the broad truths of Christianity. But we hold that Christianity itself, if taught in the public schools, would be sectarianism, and would violate the spirit of the separation of Church and State as affecting Jews or other non-Christian bodies. Take, for instance, the example of the Lord's Prayer. It is quite true that every phrase in the Lord's Prayer can be traced to a Rabbinical source. But the whole prayer, and especially its name, has become the symbol of Christianity. And strictly speaking, a Jew conscious of his faith should not be asked to participate in it. And especially to the mind of a child, it is the means by which its imagination is easily impressed with the Christian religion. I say this despite the fact that some so-called liberal Rabbis have not hesitated to give their endorsement to the Lord's Prayer as non-sectarian. Their liberalism, their desire for fellowship, has for the moment, betrayed them into thoughtlessness. A non-sectarian prayer would be a purely theistic prayer, without any historical associations that could stamp it as either Jewish or Christian. We see, therefore, immediately, the difficulty in making our Christian fellow citizens understand our objections in the matter, even while we respect their earnestness and their desire to do what is right.

Insufficient Religious and Ethical Instruction in Our Land.

A second cause of dissatisfaction with the present educational equipment of the schools has been the feeling that there is not sufficient religious and ethical instruction in the land. It has come to be recognized that Sunday Schools have proved inefficient. It is true that it is only very recently that, in Christian Sunday Schools, tendencies have become marked in the direction of making the teacher's staff more proficient and expert, and the methods more pedagogical. Jewish religious education has always been based on methods more expert than those dependent exclusively on the spirit of zeal and devotion. But with all that, the feeling has been growing, and justly so, that even in a perfect Sunday School, the time is altogether too short for the proper ethical and religious instruction of the children, and that more time in the week should be devoted to it.

It is for this reason that many in the land have felt that the public school should be used as an agency for such instruction. They are well aware that, owing to the character of our institutions, and the democracy of our public schools, of which we are proud, it is difficult to introduce European methods and bring the various denominations into the public schools, yet the unrest has caused agitation, and in some manner, efforts have been made to provide for some kind of ethical and religious instruction in the public school. It is also recognized that great masses of the American people are unchurched, and that, therefore, the school should in some manner reach the children of parents who do not provide adequately for their moral and religious instruction.

Ignorance of the Bible.

A third cause of dissatisfaction is a purely intellectual one. No one can help being impressed with the growing ignorance of the Bible in our country. It seems deplorable that in an English-speaking country, with the splendid traditions of the influence of the Bible upon our thought and our speech, there should be this growing indifference to and ignorance of it, as history and literature. We all know the facetious stories told illustrating the ignorance of the Bible displayed by the average freshman on entering college. We certainly can understand and share the dissatisfaction with such a state of affairs. We certainly feel that a knowledge of Isaiah ought to be as important for culture as a knowledge of the speeches of the Roman lawyer Cicero. And it would be a sad thing for the American people if through ignorance, the great Biblical literature would cease to exert influence on American thought, on American taste and style of expression.

The Rights of Religious Minorities.

With the first cause of dissatisfaction, we cannot possibly be in sympathy. We must be jealously watchful of our rights as a religious minority. We must be uncompromising in our opposition to any movement which would impair the principle of the separation of Church and State, and which would use our public schools in any way that would do violence to the rights of conscience of any child. We must look out lest the public school, which today is the unifying force in American democracy of all races and of all creeds, be undermined by the permission of the intrusion of things which tend to emphasize differences amongst the children. We must oppose any method which would seek to use the schools as a subtle agency in doing missionary work on behalf of the Christian religion. If the Bible is read in the public schools, and Jewish children are made to listen to New Testament stories, and to the glorification of its central hero, they are unduly influenced in their impressionable age, and it is a violation of the spirit of our institutions. There have been many splendid decisions by the courts, which have received their climax in a recent decision by the Supreme Court of Louisiana which, sweeping aside all technicalities and all discussions of versions, goes to the heart of the matter and asserts that if the Bible were read it would mean that the New Testament would be read to Jewish children and that would be naturally a violation of the rights of the religious minority. There can be no compromise on this subject. Our consistent attitude should be to oppose the introduction of the reading of the Bible in the schools, even without comment, at the assembly hour. The act of the Bible reading is devotional. It is not correct to say that the Bible is great literature and therefore it could be read on that ground. The Bible is not merely great literature. It is the authoritative source of great religions. You cannot, at this late day, change its character. And unless the American people is frankly to depart from its hitherto accepted principle of the separation of Church and State and is to adopt the policy of teaching religion in the public schools, where all denominations, as, for instance, in German schools, might be represented, it seems to me there is nothing left but to keep the Bible out of the schools in order to respect the rights of conscience.

With the second and third causes, we must show more sympathy. And we should not content ourselves with a purely negative and critical attitude, which thus far has been the policy of this body. We should take a step forward. Wherever possible, we should be helpful, constructive, and we should be ready to co-operate with other churches for the improvement of the ethical and religious education of the nation. We are not a body of secularists; we are a body of Jews, deeply interested in religion, holding that life cannot be lived well and worthily without faith in God, and we glory in our sacred heritage the Bible.

Our Attitude as Jews.

It is necessary to become clear in thought as to just what is our attitude towards the religious life of the American people, of which we are a part. We must continue to be jealous of our rights as a religious minority. But that does not mean indifference on our part, to the welfare of the larger majority of the American people, to which we belong. Owing to our being a minority religion and therefore jealously watchful of our rights, we may in matters of Sunday observance and religious instruction of the nation, easily and thoughtlessly, drift into a purely secular and indifferent position. This would be both contrary to the genius of Israel and to the American spirit. It is a difficult and delicate problem and it is about time that we supplement our negative attitude with some positive contribution towards a possible solution of it.

Our business as Jews is to have a positive message, urging the growth of religious education in the land. And as Americans, we must not forget that the American people has always been profoundly religious. The principle of the separation of Church and State is not the positive one of the secularization of life on behalf of infidelity, agnosticism or ethical culture, indifference to Theism or any historic religion. The principle of the separation of Church and State is the negative one, which aims at preventing the infringement upon the rights of conscience. The State, according to it, is not to do anything which will force the conscience of any individual. But where possible, the State does show appreciation and respect for religion and courtesy to its representatives. For example, the public sessions of our Legislature are opened with prayer. It is the custom in the country that impressive public meetings are opened with prayer. Chaplains are appointed in our army and navy to meet the various religious needs of soldiers and sailors. Religion is recognized as indispensable for the moral education of men and therefore as making for good citizenship. The State shows courtesy to religion by recognizing a religious marriage as of civil validity. In other words, the real meaning of the principle of the separation of Church and State as developed in this country, is to create a strong religious life in a free State by making that religious life dependent upon individual initiative and effort.

Our purpose, therefore, as Jews, should be to encourage the religious life of all churches, and at the same time, jealously to be on our guard, lest the spirit of sectarianism encroach upon government or the schools, to the detriment of our rights as a minority. Our ideal would be for the American people to observe one day of rest in seven, and at the same time, for a conscientious Jew to be allowed to observe his own Sabbath without his being forced to rest on two days, which for the overwhelming majority, is an economic impossibility. And with respect to the ethical and religious education, our purpose as Jews should be, not merely the negative one of opposing the introduction of Bible reading in the public schools, because it is a piece of sectarianism, but the efficiently active and positive one of utilizing whatever methods are offered with which we can sympathize which aim at improving the knowledge of the Bible and the general ethical and religious culture of the American nation.

Various Remedies.

Various remedies have been offered and these can be generalized under three heads. There is the suggestion to introduce some kind of formal ethical instruction in the public schools, without any reference to religion. There is what is known as the Dakota and Colorado plan intended to meet and do away with the ignorance of the Bible as history and literature. And there is lastly what has come to be known as the Gary plan, because first introduced as part of new methods of education first tried out in Gary, Ind. With respect to the attempt to introduce formal ethical instruction, I would say that it is good to realize the limitation of the value of the formal teaching of ethics. It is to a great extent exaggerated.

The present methods in the public schools offer great possibilities for the inculcation of moral truths and above all, for the creation of moral habits and character. The schools are by no means unmoral agencies because neither formal ethical instruction or religion is given in most of them. Any efficient school system makes for the vitues of punctuality, diligence, industry, truthfulness, courtesy, consideration for the rights of the fellow pupil, respect for authority and obedience of law. This is by no means a cluster of virtues to be despised. It is true that much improvement might be made. In general, the nation is ready for a new stage in its development. For the last one hundred years the emphasis has been laid upon rights. It is about time that we supplement this necessary and indispensable gospel of human rights with the equally necessary ideal of human duties.

Every child of the American people has a keen sense of its rights. It is no unjust indictment of America to say that a proportionate sense of duty is not present. Respect for authority and for law is not as prevalent as is necessary for the healthy development of individual character and national virtue and welfare. Our pedagogues might well devise means by which these deficiencies might be met. And it seems to me that even within the present system, opportunity could be found for this improvement. It would also be a good thing to utilize certain subjects for the incidental imparting of ethical instruction. In the hands of a good teacher, of a noble and inspiring personality, almost any subject may be made to be a factor in the child's moral growth. But it would be a good thing especially to make history and biography luminous with ethical suggestion. In them we have the revelation of the character and conduct of personalities. And their attractiveness or their repulsiveness can very well be brought out in such a way as to kindle enthusiasm for the right and aversion to the wrong. In general, it may be said that our educational authorities, in the selection of teachers and in the prescribed methods for presenting subjects, might make the moral influence and ethical purpose in teaching, a dominant idea. The introduction of vocational teaching as supplementary to the regular cultural subjects might also be utilized ethically.

The Futility of Formal Ethical Instruction.

With respect to formal ethical instruction itself there are difficulties which have not been met by any plan thus far proposed—although it is good to keep an open mind on the subject. The plan suggested some years ago in Washington, D. C., that "God" and "morality" be taught in the public schools, shows on the one hand a correct insight into the truth that you can not, in formal instruction, separate morality from God, from religion, which is its sanction. But I consider this plan for that very reason dangerous. In the first place, those parents who are not even theists might be perfectly justified in objecting to the use of school funds for the contribution of which they are taxed, for the purpose of inculcating a belief to which they do not assent. And in a school where the spirit of American institutions is consistently carried out, such compulsion of children against the wishes of their parents should not be permitted. But practically it would be found, given the personnel of our teachers, that a pure theism without any denominational coloring would be impossible. Sectarian teaching would soon creep in. There is, therefore, left the suggestion that formal instruction be given in ethics without any reference to a religious sanction. This seems innocent and harmless. It is said, cannot we teach children to be honest, truthful, just, kind, law abiding, without the introduction of religion? Yes, we can do all these things, as already pointed out, as incidents of a good educational system. But by formal ethical instruction we understand an analysis not only of the meaning of virtue, but its grounds, its basis, the authority for it. To enthrone ethical instruction in the public schools wthout any reference to religion would practically mean to enthrone ethical culture as the religion of the American people.

The greatest influence on the nation's mind and character is the public school. The imagination of the child is impressed by what the public school provides. At present the children of the nation are made to feel that the righteous life and faith in God go together. The very separation of ethical and religious instruction from the schools, and the relation of it to the various churches, impresses the mind of the child with the intimate connection between morality and religion. But if the whole subject matter of ethics, of the laws and duties of right living, is to be given in the public schools wthout any reference to a religious sanction, the effect can only be to impress upon the child's mind the relative superfluity, abstractness and other-worldliness of religion. The impression would be that you could very well do without it since the nation, in its schools, does without it. At best it is a spiritual luxury. We who believe in the dissoluble connection between morality and religion—and I assume that all Christians agree with us in this—cannot for one moment grant that the proper way to teach ethics is without making any reference to religion. Therefore, what at first blush seemed innocent enough, the imparting of ethical theory without religious ideas, reveals itself on closer observation to do away with religion in the national life and substitute ethics for it.

There are other plans, such as one recently prepared by Mr. Beggs of New York, which provide for the teaching of ethics as a system of abstract virtues. This plan, as far as I have seen the sketch of it, congratulates itself upon dissociating ethics from all personality. It would seem that it is contrary to sound ethical pedagogics. The motive, of course, is to eliminate any possibility of discussing religious heroes as great personalities. As I have seen only the sketch, and the book based on this sketch is not yet written, it would be best to refrain from a decisive opinion. At present it seems that no plan for formal ethical instruction has been suggested which is satisfactory.

The Colorado and Dakota Plan.

The so-called Colorado and Dakota plan emanated from an altogether different motive. It was felt that the growing ignorance of the Bible as history and literature was deplorable and at the same time it was equally felt that it was impossible in accordance with the spirit of our institutions to introduce the study of the Bible in the public schools. Therefore the following plan has been worked out. For High School grades the study of Biblical history and literature is to be made optional. The study is to be carried on outside of the school by the teachers of Sunday Schools or other bodies. The educational authorities [illegible] syllabi covering Old Testament and New Testament history and literature. They prescribe what is to be known. The examination questions as well as the syllabi are to have reference only to the historical and literary matter in the Bible. While taught in the Sunday Schools, it is true the teacher may give whatever additional incidental religious instruction is found desirable. But the syllabi and examination papers are to have nothing to do with that incidental instruction if given. In other words, a pupil that wants to earn "counts" for knowledge of the Bible as history and literature, gives it as a subject just the same as Latin or Greek history or American history. Thus the subject is not taught in the school itself so as to avoid possible embarrassments, and at the same time knowledge of the Bible is encouraged by the recognition of that knowledge as a valuable element of human culture, and therefore as justified in receiving credit.

The plan has very much to commend it. I certainly sympathize with the motive behind it. I would encourage it as much as possible. But from my examination of the syllabi and questions I would say that at present it is not satisfactory to Jews, but can easily be perfected. In the first place it should be recognized that just as the educational authorities provide in addition to the Protestant version, for the recognition of the Catholic version of the Scriptures, if a pupil says the preparation has been made according to that version, so recognition should be given to the Jewish English version of the Scriptures. We have just completed in this country a new English translation of the Scriptures for the use of the Synagogue. A Jewish boy and girl should have the same right to have Jewish Scripture recognized as boys and girls of other denominations. Secondly, in the preparation of syllabi and questions, Rabbis and Jewish pedagogues should be consulted with respect to the Old Testament material. And lastly, there should be eliminated from the syllabi such questions which I find contradict the principles laid down in the Colorado and Dakota plan. If the Bible is to be studied purely as history and literature, questions bearing on the Old Testament should not be so arranged as to show cross reference to the New Testament. Syllabi and questions so arranged introduce sectarian interpretation of the Old Testament into what is supposed to be purely a literary and historical study based on modern scientific methods. If in a Christian Sunday School such relation between Old Testament and New Testament must naturally be pointed out and emphasized, it does not follow that, if the Dakota plan is to be consistently carried out, such emphasis should be reproduced in the syllabi and questions. A pupil coming with his material of knowledge of Old Testament history and literature for an examination, should be asked only such questions as bear upon that history and literature, taken by themselves.

I do not think that it would be difficult to improve the present plan, so as to make it possible for Jews to co-operate with it. I refer to it here, because I desire to emphasize our duty, wherever possible, to do what we can to further the knowledge of the Bible, its history and literature. As the subject is made an elective, no child is forced to take it. The school, therefore, as the representative of the State, is not compelling the conscience of anyone. At the same time the school is recognizing that it is important to know something about a literature which has influenced the world more profoundly than any other.

The Gary Plan.

The best plan which offers the greatest promise, and which I permit myself to greet most enthusiastically, is the Gary plan, because it seems to me to meet most effectively all the circumstances of our unique American situation. The Gary plan, as is well known, is a large, general plan for increasing the length of the school day. The school day for the child is to cover not only study, but work and play. All possible aspects of the child life are in some way to be reached by the school, stimulated, watched over and accounted for. Within this large scheme, opportunity is to be offered to such children, whose parents desire them to obtain religious instruction, to take the hours in the day necessary for such instruction. The instruction is not to be given in the school. It is not to be paid for by school authorities. It is not even to be credited in school grading. All that the school is to do in connection with it is to obtain records from the teachers that impart religious instruction, of the presence of the children for that purpose. And thus a record is kept of the time in which the child is absent from the school. In other words, the child uses an hour that might be given, say, to amusement, for the purpose of receiving moral and religious instruction. Its absence is accounted for and it cannot be considered a truant.

The great value of this plan consists in a number of things. In the first place, it meets all objections of those who hold that it is not the business of the school, supported by the taxes of all citizens, to impart religious instruction. It does not emphasize religious differences amongst the children within the school building, as would be the case if the school were divided for religious instruction amongst various denominational teachers. The school remains secular. At the same time the school, representing the nation, gives its moral support to religious instruction, in the sense that it considers the time spent on it well spent and necessary for the child's welfare. The imagination of the child will be impressed with the fact that religion is a serious matter, that it is as important for life as any other subject in the school and that three and four days in the week ought to be given to it. At present, the mere relegation of religious instruction to one day in the week tends to make the child regard it as less important than arithmetic or geography or languages. And, indeed, I hold that for effective instruction in religion we should have more time than what is now given to it.

The Gary system would make religious instruction an integral part of the education of the child, would give it a dignity, because of its connection with the educational scheme, which it now lacks, would co-ordinate it more with the national life, and at the same time would bring no pressure to bear upon any child in the direction of sectarian instruction, would do nothing insidious and would not force the conscience of any parent which had strong convictions against religious instruction. Not the least advantage of the Gary plan is that it is a splendid challenge to the churches themselves. We Jews ought to welcome this plan. It ought to be a stimulus to our earnestness and energy. We, too, ought, wherever possible, to make arrangements for the religious instruction of our children more than once a week. We, too, ought to provide for the religious education of the masses of Jewish children, by co-operating with this plan.

The Need for Constructive Work.

I have attempted to cover a large field within the time allotted to me. I have been compelled to be necessarily condensed in statement. I have had the right to assume that you are as well acquainted with many features of the question I have been discussing, as I am myself. My purpose is to bring home clearly to your minds and through you, to the Jews of this country, the necessity for our taking a step forward in our discussion of the relation of ethical and religious instruction to the life of the American people. The classic attitude of the Jewish minority in this country has been to be jealous of its own rights. That attitude should be maintained with all consistency and without compromise. We should continue to oppose the introduction of Bible reading and sectarianism, in however attenuated a form, into our public schools. We should, indeed, be ever on the alert. This negative attitude, however, is, in my opinion, not only not sufficient, but if we persist in it without doing anything else, we shall eventually provoke a natural resentment of a large number of well-meaning men and women who are interested, and justly interested in the moral and religious education of the American nation, of which we are part. Some peculiar things sometimes happen because of this extreme uncompromising negative attitude, which seems to make us the mere ally of secularists, who have no interest in religion.

In a recent discussion of this whole question in New York, a rabbi burst forth with the statement that the writings of Ingersoll had as much right in the public schools as the Bible. This was certainly a very foolish thing to say and came with very poor grace from a rabbi. There are many brilliant and noble passages in the writings of the late Colonel Ingersoll, but it is absurd to say that for the education of the child such writings would have as much place as the Bible, the source and authority of three great world religions and the inspiration of the highest ethical ideals of mankind. But can you not imagine the natural resentment of Christian sentiment against such a bald statement? We must not encourage such frivolous partisanship. We can very well appreciate our Christian fellow citizens' reverence for the Bible and their belief that the study of it is indispensable for the right and complete education of a child—though because of our Americanism and our Judaism, we must oppose them in their efforts to introduce the reading and study of it in the public schools. We therefore can only justify the negative attitude, which we must assume as a minority, by supplementing it with a positive attitude, which will impel us, wherever possible, to work together with our Christian fellow citizens in constructive work.

A Step Forward.

It is time for this conference to take a step forward in this matter. It is not enough to keep harping on the principle of the separation of church and state and think we have done our duty. But wherever we can do anything to further the interests of religion for the masses of our fellow citizens, wherever we can increase the knowledge of the Bible, wherever we can do something in combination with churches and educational authorities for improving the moral education of the nation, we must do so. That is why I expressed my sympathy mith the Colorado plan, my enthusiastic endorsement of the possibilities of the Gary plan. I plead for a deliberate and determined resolve on our part to cease to be merely negative and critical and to seek opportunities where we can become helpful in a positive direction and co-operate with others.

We are interested in the religious life of the American people. We are aware that this religious life is broken up in the form of various sects and denominations. We will unremittingly guard the rights of religious minorities, and we will not allow sectarianism to encroach upon our government or upon the schools. But at the same time we must realize that the positive work is a much larger, grander thing than our negative critical watchfulness. Let us feel that we are a part of the American nation, which has great ethical and spiritual traditions. And as part of the American people, let us, wherever possible, encourage the moral and spiritual education of American children. And by serving the nation, we will, at the same time, serve the interests of Judaism.

CONFERENCE OF CANADIAN JEWS.

The first Canadian Jewish Conference was held at Montreal, Can., at the Gayety Theater on Sunday afternoon, November 14.

The Conference attracted delegates from all parts of the Dominion, who listened to powerful adddresses by Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, Mr. Jacob de Haas of Boston, Dr. Schmarya Levin of New York, Aldermen Boyd and Rubenstein of the City of Montreal, and the representative of the Canadian Government in the person of Hon. Arthur Meighen, Solicitor-General.

After the singing of the "Hatikvah," a welcoming address was delivered by Mr. Clarence I. de Sola, who stated that the Conference had been called to evolve a plan of action whereby at the coming peace conference of the nations the Jews would be given the privilege to be heard with a view of securing for their brethren in all countries the rights and privileges which are at the present time denied to them.

Various resolutions were adopted, among them the following:

"That this conference, recognizing the benefits and full rights of citizenship enjoyed by our brethren, together with all people under the flag of British Empire, voices the prayer that the time may not be far distant when our co-religionists in every land, wherever they may be, shall be accorded the same rights of liberty and justice which are the prerogatives of mankind.

"That, inasmuch as the Jews of certain countries affected by the present war are deprived of the political, religious and civil rights accorded to others, that this conference asks that when peace terms are being drawn up at the close of the war, provision will be made for the complete removal of the disabilities burdening Jews and other peoples at present suffering from the denial of such rights.

"That this assembly elect a committee to endeavor to give effect to the resolutions passed at this conference."

NO JEWISH OFFICERS IN RUSSIAN ARMY.

According to the Russian military law, university students may be promoted to the rank of officer even though they did not attend a military school, provided they have shown special aptitude and bravery. At the time the war broke out the report was circulated that no discrimination will be practiced by the Russian government as far as Jews are concerned, and on the strength of such report many Jewish students joined the army as volunteers in the hope of receiving promotion. The Russian government recently made an official declaration to the students in various universities, advising Jewish students not to join the colors with the hope of attaining to the rank of officer. This new declaration of the government is being severely censured, even by Christian students.

The B'nai B'rith Its World Mission

Address by Hon. Tracy R. Bangs, Ex-U. S. Attorney for North Dakota

Delivered before Dacotah Lodge

If one should attempt to compile a list of the fraternal societies that have been organized in the United States during the past seventy-five years, he would find himself lost in a wilderness of sounding names, and, while some would be recognized, the great majority would not even rouse a forgotten memory.

But, if one should compile a list of the fraternal societies that have been organized within the past seventy-five years and have survived the test and become recognized associations of nation-wide importance, he could use as his record a very small paper.

Among the societies thus organized and lost to memory would undoubtedly be found many, organized by earnest enthusiastic men and with declarations of principles just as noble as those adopted by the founders of the B'nai B'rith, but, it requires more than nobleness of mind, earnestness of purpose, and beneficent action, to bring success to a fraternal and benevolent organization. There must be, not only those attributes attaching to the moving spirits of the organization, but there must be as well, a field in which such a society may sow and reap. I suppose that in this country hundreds of organizations spring into being each year, having for their purpose the general advancement of man, the doing of kind and worthy deeds, and the extending of charity to the unfortunate, whose influence never extends beyond the realm of localism. So that—when we find a society that has developed not only into a national association, but which has become world wide in its influence, we are interested to learn the reason for its success.

In considering your society, what it has done, and what we expect it to do, we must take into account not only its membership, but as well its field of operations.

Its activities are directly connected with the people of the Jewish faith. Its principles are those of the religion and laws of the Jews. Its accomplishments must be measured primarily by the result of its work among the people of that faith, and so, not with the hope that I will advance any idea or speak of any fact not now familiar to even the most casual student of Jewish history, but, for the purpose of marshalling some of the historical as well as the presently existing facts as the background for a picture of this society's activities, I will refer very briefly to some of the conditions that make the work of your society desirable, if not absolutely necessary.

In almost every book or article that one may read, dealing in any way with the Jewish people, whether written by Gentile or by Jew, one finds frequent reference to the characteristics of the Jewish people, but with, what has seemed to me, a regrettable absence of any explanation as to the whys and wherefores of these characteristics.

To one, who, without prejudice or bias, with normal mind not confused by too much learning or scientific research but with a considerable life time acquaintance with the people of that faith in a social, political and business way. looks upon the men of Jewish faith the same as upon other men and notes their progress from that viewpoint, it must appear that many of the marked characteristics of this people are the result of thousands of years of struggle in defense of home and loved ones, in fact, for their very existence, and that the habits and modes of life that are most criticised have been forced upon them by their oppressors.

We will omit any mention of the marvelous history of this great people prior to the time of the fall of Jerusalem, when its inhabitants were carried captive to Babylonia.

Beginning there, we find that for the full space of man's life, three score and ten, the Judeans were held as slaves by their Babylonian captors.

True, at the end of that time they were released, and permitted to return to the Temple City, and to the land rich in the memory of the great men of former ages, and hallowed by the mingling of the dust of Jewish heroes and prophets with Mother Earth. But they were not permitted to long enjoy the quiet and peaceful home life, that has ever appealed to the people of Judah. They were almost constantly beset by envious and warring neighbors and forced to fiercely battle for their homes and lives until the second desolation of Jerusalem and second destroying of the Temple, when the Jewish nation, as a governmental entity was finally dissolved and those who survived the siege were carried captive by the Roman hordes.

From the second burning of the Temple and the Dispersion of the Jews, down to the present day, the people of this faith have suffered greater hardships, greater persecutions and have resisted more ingenious methods pursued in an effort to annihilate the race than has ever fallen to the lot of any other race or group of human beings, and one of the marvels of the world is, that they have come through it all, one people, with a religion unchanged, an Everlasting King unforsaken, with allegiance unabated, and undivided, and with mind and heart moved to religious activity by the worship of one God—the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob.

With a power of will and force of character unparalleled in history, this people, whether struggling for existence either before the Dispersion or since; whether held captive by the Babylonians or the Romans; whether suffering persecutions under civil rulers or the Christian Church; whether staggering under oppression, or recovering from the desolating effect of brutal massacres; whether gathering their scattered members after unjust banishment or whether scourged by the more recent atrocities of the Russians, have with a sublime faith in the greatness and goodness of God and the ultimate triumph of right and justice remained steadfast in the faith, undaunted in the face of threatened and inflicted acts of degradation, oppression and torture too horrible to relate.

If we were now moved to look only upon one side of the picture and tickle the national vanity by a contemplation of the great achievements of members of your faith, closing our minds to all else, we might devote much time to a glowing panegyric on the accomplishments of the Jew, particularly in this country, beginning with the fact that a Jewish citizen of the Province of Aragon was the man who furnished the money that enabled Columbus to make his tour of discovery.

We could dwell upon the fact that in that perilous undertaking Columbus was accompanied by several Jews, and that with Columbus, it was a Jew who first set foot on what is now American soil. We could recite much of historical interest showing that the Jews had an established trade with this continent before the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers.

We might exhaust a great deal of time in reciting the names of men of your faith, who have achieved fame in their chosen lines, be it science, art, the learned professions or politics, but I do not believe that this is a time for the contemplation of extremes.

This society is not carrying forward its work in the interest of these men, who, because of favored conditions and great ability have made world famed names, but is laboring to hasten the time when all Jewry shall enjoy such rights and liberties that each and every member may have the opportunity to do the same that these distinguished men have done.

In other words, to establish a condition of equality, under the laws of equal freedom of thought and action, not only as regards each with the other, but as regards all of the faith with the rest of mankind.

This work has to do with what is now estimated at about twelve millions of people, approximately one-half of whom live in Russia (where even the slightest attempt at cultural or other development is frowned upon and made the excuse for bloody massacres); approximately one-sixth of whom are resident in the United States, where they encounter no different restrictions in the eyes of the law than other citizens, and one-third of whom are scattered throughout the other countries of the earth, where they enjoy varying gradations of fettered liberties.

The treatment that has been for so many years accorded the Jewish people, the hardships and privations through which they have passed, by force of law of nature, has had a restraining effect upon the physical development of these people, and has likewise held them back from the mental and cultural development to which their abilities and ambitions entitled them. It has, however, had another effect, it has bound them together as a nation, though without a national home—and, each recurring wrong heaped upon them has welded them closer and closer together, as the children of one faith and forced them farther and farther from the great mass of non-Jews. It has developed an attitude of suspician toward the world outside of Jewry, and cultivated a feeling of intra-dependence within their own circle.

Besides this, it has developed an intensity of feeling, an acuteness of mind, and a power of concentration of thought that enables the average Jew, when given an even show, to far outstrip his average non-Jew competitor in any of the various business, professional and scientific activities of life.

Why these people have been so persecuted is a question that may be answered by various persons each according to his particular viewpoint. Such consideration as I have given the subject has rather impelled me to the theory that a mistaken belief as to the religious claim of the Jewish faith, has had much to do with the life of persecution that the people of that faith have been forced to bear.

Isaiah said, the Lord "shall set up an ensign for the nations and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." And by interpretation it has been claimed that it was ordained that the time would come when the Jews would assume actual control of all world affairs. These thoughts have been given voice by some of the writers and thinkers of your faith, who in the enthusiasm of national pride have given utterance to sentiments, expressing not only belief in the moral and mental superiority of the Jewish people and the final acceptance of your religion, but as well, a belief in the ultimate domination of the world by that race.

In Ben Hur, the author, in recounting a conversation between a Jewish mother and her son, puts into her mouth these words:

"There never has been a people who did not think themselves at least equal to any power; never a great nation that did not believe itself the very superior. * * * There is no law by which to determine the superiority of nations; hence the vanity of the claim and the idleness of disputes about it."

We, who live in a land, the inhabitants whereof come from the very four corners of the earth, are familiar with these expressions of claimed superiority on the part of members of the different races and nationalities, but, no one seriously objects to the comfort and satisfaction that comes from indulgence in that innocent conceit. However, when one nation attempts to set itself up as a dominant power, when one nation assumes the right, by reason of its superiority, to dictate the course of the world's affairs, we find a very different state of mind possessing the others. This mental attitude is made more apparent than ever in discussions of the war now raging in Europe, and we find that the great powers engaged in that war, conscious of the effect upon the balance of mankind, of any such claim of the right to world domination are each endeavoring to make the rest of the world believe that the other is striving for that end.

We are not, however, obliged to look to national affairs or warlike times for corroboration of the point made. It is true, in social, in business and political affairs, that every individual or group of individuals assuming superior qualities and dominating prerogatives invites the opposition of all others.

Such claim, therefore, made in behalf of the Jewish people or even believed to be made, must necessarily have inspired their surrounding neighbors to even greater opposition in days gone by than now.

With oppression once begun, no matter what the cause, there would of necessity be forced upon the Jewish people certain defensive measures, certain habits and customs justifiable on the theory of defense. But, with the establishment of each of these habits and customs, the opponents of the Jewish people would loudly complain, professing to see in these defensive measures offensive efforts on the part of these people.

One special instance that I now have in mind is the claim that the Jewish people were indifferent to the municipal conditions of the country in which they were domiciled, that they were not land owners, and though possessing wealth, held it as it were in the hollow of their hands, and evinced no civic pride. These complainants apparently overlooking the fact that the centuries of persecution, the numerous acts of banishment, and the life into which they have been forced, where their tenure was uncertain, had of necessity built up in the minds of these people a desire for a form of wealth that might be kept in quickly convertible, readily concealed and easily moved assets, for the oppression to which they were always subject made it imperative that they should be at all times prepared to move, and, at the behest of hostile hordes seeking not only their banishment, but likewise seeking the gain that might come from a division of their property. The fact that in this country the Jewish people are large land owners, and very active in all civic affairs, seems to support my position that any apparent or real absence of this spirit has been brought about by conditions not of their making.

Another injustice done the Jewish people, and one that unquestionably has had much to do with the light in which they have been regarded in modern times is the portrayal of Shylock, in "The Merchant of Venice." A portrayal that was unfair, because the character there given Shylock, is and always has been foreign to the natural bent of mind of the Jew, and contrary to the teachings of the faith, and then again, the incident on which Shakespeare probably based his character occurred in Rome, where a Christian and a Jew each wagered a pound of flesh and the Jew losing, the Christian it was who endeavored to enforce the penalty.

There is born in every person, a spirit of envy, and it is but natural that the Jewish people, meeting with success in whatever pursuit they undertake, should arouse that spirit in those of lesser energy and ambition, and particularly when the two classes are divided by a traditional bar. It is also natural that those in whom such envy is aroused should seek for some excuse which might be used as justification for an attempt to relieve themselves from the sharp competition of their more successful competitors, and so these things to which I have referred, and others that are from time to time resurrected and made use of—are talked and taught and a racial antipathy and enmity is induced and fostered, with the result, all too well known.

This condition does not exist to any considerable extent in this country, but makes itself manifest in those countries where the government is farthest from the people, and, the more autocratic the government, the more intense the feeling. The reason for this seems plain.

The religion and the law of the Jew teaches fundamentally the principles of Democracy. The Jews, who are true to the faith, cannot believe in the Divine Right of Kings, or in the right of any one to govern or control the multitude. They recognize but one Supreme Being, and believe that all worldly affairs, all governmental affairs, should be controlled by the people under God, and according to the laws that have been handed down by the King of all.

We can easily understand how such a doctrine would rouse the ire of those in authority and all favored ones in a country governed by hereditary monarchs.

The last half of the nineteenth century was a period of rapid improvement along the line of individual liberty, and the beginning of the twentieth century gives promise of even greater development. This development is not apparent to any considerable extent among those people, who by virtue of birth assume to control the greater portion of the world, but is apparent among the common people who are being controlled. And, while it may take a long time and many fierce struggles to bring about a universal acceptance of these principles, yet we know from the occurrences of the past that the people, once aroused are not easily appeased until they secure the rights for which they seek, and, if in the general re-adjustment of the conditions of all the people, the Jewish people can become a factor and take their part in building up the new system then may we expect the time to come when there will be no difference in the yes of the law, in any civilized country as between a Jew and a non-Jew. In order that they may be in position to do their part in this great work there must be removed from the mind of the Jewish people much of the prejudice and feeling of resentment as against the non-Jew that has been engendered by so many years of unjust treatment, and, there must likewise be removed from the mind of the non-Jew all feeling of prejudice that has been engendered by so many years of unfair teaching as regards the Jewish people.

All these various notions, and erroneous ideas that have become so thoroughly fixed in the minds of each with regard to the other must be eradicated, and the Jew must recognize the Gentile for what he is, speaking collectively, a man imbued with a love for his fellow man, with a sense of justice and a desire that it should be done, preferring of course that it be done in accordance with his rule, but willing to concede the right of religious belief according to each man's light, and the Gentile must be made to see the Jew, as he is, a man of intense religious nature, a firm believer in the Brotherhood of Man, a scrupulous observer of the law, and thoroughly wedded to the principles of

(Continued on page 7)

Rabbi Jehudah Halevy, the Philosopher-Poet

An address delivered by Dr. George Rubenstein, of Theodore Herzl Lodge, No. 314, I. O. B. B. at Portland, Ore.

To approach the character of Rabbi Jehudah Halevy is almost the same as to come within the presence of the Holy-Ark, in which reposed the tablets of the Law, and over which were spread out the golden wings of the Cherubim. Only such high priests of the world's literature as a Goethe, or a Heine, had the full right to offer up their praises, and to express their opinion over their immortal colleague who had reached to the highest art of poesy.

The most that one can do is to speak of Jehudah Halevy as the National Poet, the intensely loyal son of a poor and unfortunate people.

Great men live in great periods, and so, too. the period in which Halevy lived and worked was one of the most important in Jewish, as well as in general, history of the world. In order to fully understand the person of this poet-philosopher, it is necessary that we know something of his time. his environments, his contemporaries, the people among whom he lived and worked, and that I shall attempt to do as briefly as possible.

The end of the eleventh century began with one of the bloodiest chapters in human history, and necessarily so, for the Jews, for, then as now, whenever the nations of the world lost their reason and commenced fighting among themselves, the Jew was always the scape-goat, and always suffered the most. I am referring now to that blot on Christianity—the Crusades.

This bloody war between Christians and Mohammedans began on account of Jerusalem, the Holy City, with her historic graves, and nearly for two hundred years Europe was drenched in blood. But my purpose for touching at all on the subject of the Crusades is for comparison only, to compare the conditions of our brethren in Germany and in France, with the material, as well as intellectual condition of our people in the Spanish peninsula. I shall not attempt to portray the horrible sufferings of our people, the countless martyrdoms endured rather than to forsake the faith of their fathers, the many communities, where men, women and children were massacred, gentle and cultivated women who preferred to die by their own hands rather than to fall into the hands of their violators. I shall not dwell on these horrible details, for fear lest it would make you feel too bad, and that is not my purpose.

In contrast with Northern and Western Europe, the conditions of our people in Spain was very good. In fact, the period of which I now speak is known as the golden period of Jewish achievement along every line of knowledge. For the Spain of the tenth and eleventh centuries was not yet the Spain of Torquamada, nor the days of the Inquisition. The Christian Church was then not fully established, and the reigning princes were mostly Moslems, who truly loved and cultivated the arts and sciences. In nearly every home of the Arabic rulers there were always to be found Jewish physicians, and Jewish statesmen, through whose influences the Jewish communities had obtained many privileges and grants. Under the Saracen rulers the Jews became distinguished for their wealth and for their learning; they founded schools, hospitals and colleges, their mercantile interests led them to travel all over the world; they particularly studied the science of medicine. Throughout the middle ages the Jews were the leading intellects of the world. Of all men they saw the course of human events from the most elevated point of [illegible]. Among the special sciences, they became proficient in mathematics and astronomy. They were always to be found in the courts of princes as physicians or as treasurers, managing the public finances. Such was the condition of our people in Spain during the century preceding the birth of Jehudah Halery, and although Spain was then rich in many Jewish geniuses, scientists in every branch of learning, still, the world was then not yet prepared to receive the great [illegible] of Halery; the Jewish savants of that day had much to learn, they had a very great deal to accomplish yet until the time was ripe for the greatest Jewish poet since the diaspora. Jehudah Halevy, as the most perfect spirit, had to be born in a land where the study of the law as well as secular knowledge had reached a very high degree of development, and were [illegible] in the hearts of the Jewish people. Only then, when thus prepared, [illegible] Jehudah Ben Samuel Halery, and [illegible] everything into his great [illegible]l, and gave back to Jews and [illegible] the very highest, the most perfect expression with his incomparable masterpieces. It was under such favorable conditions, when the very atmosphere was still permeated with the noble songs of a Solomon Iben-Gebirol, of a Al-Charizi, Moses Iben-Ezra that Jehudah Ben Samuel Halevy was born in the year 1086 C. E., in Toledo, which was Christian Spain.

In his early youth, he was sent to Lucena, there to study the Talmud in the College of Rabbi Alfasi, for there were no desirable schools at that time in Southern Spain. Like his illustrious predecessor, Iben-Gebirol, the muse seems to have wakened him early in life, and handed him her golden harp, for at the age of 20 he was already famed far and wide for his mastery, not only in the studies of his day, but particularly for his singular beauty of expression in Hebrew, which language he passionately loved. He not only mastered the Hebrew tongue in the artistic forms of the Neo-Hebraic poetry of his day, but he was also a great Talmudist.

The national poetry of Halery is of a higher value, since he was not only the perfect poet, he was also the brilliant thinker. Poetry and philosophy were intimately united within him, that he certainly proved by his remarkable book the "Cuzari," in which book, written in Arabic, he established philosophically the truth of Rabbinic Judaism against the attacks of Moslem and Christian theologians.

Fortunately, too, for posterity, Halevy was not dependent upon poetry to give him a living. He did not make use of his divine gifts for personal gain, for he was also a celebrated physician. He returned after his studies were completed to his birthplace where he established himself in his chosen calling, that of physician.

Characteristic of this doctor-poet is a letter written to a friend about the year 1130, which reads somewhat as follows:

"I occupy myself in the hours which belong neither to the day nor the night, with the vanity of the medical science though I am unable to heal; the city in which I dwell is large, the inhabitants are giants, but they are cruel rulers. I cry to God that He may quickly send deliverance unto me, and give me rest that I may enjoy freedom, that I may repair to some place of living knowledge —to the fountain of wisdom."

This is the keynote of nearly all his poems, the great burning desire to remove to some place of learning, in fact, it was Jerusalem that he always longed to see.

The most important of Jehudah Halevy as a poet lies in those poems that breathe a national religious spirit. In these his ideas burst forth from the very depths of his heart, his whole being rises in ecstacy. And when he sings of Zion, of its past and future glory, when he veils his head in mourning over its present slavery, we find the true spirit of his poetry. Nothing is artificial, nothing is simulated, but all pervaded by very strong feelings and highest emotions. In all Neo-Hebraic poetry, Jehudah Halevy's songs may best be compared with the Psalms of David, when he is breathing forth his laments for Zion's widowhood or dreaming of her future splendor, and depicts how she will again be united to her God and her children, we fancy we are listening to one of the sons of Korach. He was a natural poet, and hence it is that his songs seize upon the heart of the reader with irresistible force.

Of the events of the poet's career, but little is known. Of one fact we are certain, he left no male issue. He had an only daughter, to whom he was passionately devoted. Of this charming daughter we hear later in the account given by a Jewish tourist, Rabbi Petachya, of Ratisbon. who speaks of "Bath Halery" who was extraordinary well read in the Bible and in the Talmud and famous for her beauty. She lectured on the Talmud to large numbers of students, sitting behind a curtain, that the attention of her inquisitive pupils might not be distracted by sight of her, that she might be heard but not seen.

When Jehudah Halevy had passed his 50th year, he left his native city, his home his family, his friends and many disciples to make a pilgrimage to Palestine, wherein his heart dwelt. His itinerary was more like one grand triumphal march, for every place he reached, he was received with the greatest honors and affections, while in Egypt entire communities vied with each other to do him honor, and to importune him to give up his journey to Jerusalem and to remain in Egypt as teacher. To all of these entreaties he turned a deaf ear, and after a long and most tedious journey he finally reached the Holy Land. But here, complete silence falls upon the singer, and nothing more is heard from him. Legend has it, that upon entering the gates of Jerusalem, and seeing the desolation of his beloved Zion, he fell to the ground with such utter despair, that a Saracen rider happening to pass by on his horse at the time, and witnessing the lamentations of this true patriot over his beloved land. being ruled now by the Arabs, ran his sword through his breast and killed him right on the spot, for nothing more is ever heard from him, nor does any one know of his resting place to this day.

A modern poet, in fact Germany's greatest lyric singer of the eighteenth century, says of Halevy in his "Romancero":

"Ay, he was a master singer,
Brilliant pole star of his age,
Light and beacon to his people!
Wondrous mighty was his singing—
Verily a fiery pillar
Moving on 'fore Israel's legions,
Restless caravan of sorrow,
Through the exile's desert plain."

ENGLAND AND RUSSIAN JEWS

The Russian paper, "Gazett Kopeika," publishes an interview with Lord Rob Cecil, under secretary of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, in which it is reported that in the course of a conversation the question of the position of the Jews in Russia was brought up for discussion. The newspaper reports that Lord Cecil said that while the English government deeply sympathizes with the Russian Jews it is unable to do anything in their behalf, that the Allies respect each other's views and policies and must leave each power to settle its own affairs in such manner as it sees fit.

ANTI-SEMITIC LECTURE PROHIBITED.

A fortnight ago an announcement was made in the town of Rostock (Mecklenburg), that Pastor von Harling (of Leipzig), would deliver a lecture on "The War and the Jews." As it was anticipated that the lecture would be of an anti-Semitic character, the executive of the local Jewish community sent a written petition, and the Rabbinical Council of the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg sent a telegram to the Commander of the Ninth Army Corps, who immediately replied by a telegram prohibiting the lecture.

The Extension of the Order

By Mr. Martin A. Marks

It has occurred to me that a few suggestions regarding the extension of the Order might not be amiss and would help to solve two great problems that confront our organization—(1) extension of the Order and (2) the reduction of suspensions.

There has been a wonderful revival taking place which I think originated with the splendid work done in Cincinnati through that excellent organizer, Mr. Manny Straus, which has put new life into the Order.

After witnessing that wonderful gathering which occurred at Hotel Statler of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, Sunday evening, October 24th, and seeing so many hundred faces of young people listening with rapt attention to the Grand Old Man of the Order, Hon. Simon Wolf, of Washington, giving them probably the first intimation they had as to what the Order has accomplished and what it stands for, it made me think why an extension effort should not be made in addition to these campaigns which may prove of great benefit.

When a new Lodge is organized, of course, most, if not all, the charter members reside in that city. From time to time others seeking admission become members of the organization, but as time rolls on, some of the members move to other cities and I doubt today if there is a single Lodge of the Order, which has been in existence for five years which does not have a portion of its membership living in different cities from which their Lodge is located. In a majority of cases, no Lodge exists where these outside members reside.

I believe each Lodge should use its influence to have its members who live outside organize a Lodge in the towns where they reside. Two objects will be obtained if this is done.

(1) Establishment of a new Lodge.

(2) Retaining in the Order the member who lives in the outside town.

A very large percentage of the members who are suspended each six months, are members who reside outside of the town or in towns or cities where no Lodge exists. They move away from their home town for business reasons to a town which contains no Lodge. In a year or two, sometimes a longer period, they pay their dues, or for some reason they fail to send in their dues to the Lodge, then a member gets careless and says: "I am living where there is no Lodge and am not receiving any benefits from the Order, social or otherwise, and I believe I will drop out." It is not only true of our Order, but also true of similar organizations.

I therefore ask, why not avail ourselves of these unusual conditions and instead inaugurate a movement by which the Order can be extended?

If every Lodge in the United States would direct a committee from the Lodge to write a letter to these members living outside of the city, asking him to organize a Lodge where he resides, if there is none there, the Order would receive an extension impetus gerater than the most sanguine enthusiast could provide.

While I do not for one moment contend that every outside member would undertake organization of a Lodge, certainly a goodly per cent of them would assist and Lodges thus organized would be instituted along right lines because the member would use his best efforts to see that the personnel of the membership was along proper lines.

If this plan is successful, each Lodge should report to the Secretary of the District Grand Lodge the names of the members residing in other cities where there is no Lodge and supply the local member with literature and charter petition blanks and the Propaganda Committee should use its best influence to enthuse the member by stimulating him to effort to organize this Lodge. A Lodge thus organized would in all probability be a permanent one.

Where a member is living in a city where there is a Lodge or Lodges, a communication should be sent to this Lodge advising them that such a member belonging to their Lodge, resides in that city and a committee from the Lodge should call upon him and invite him to attend the Lodge. In this way it would keep up his interest and would be the means of having this member feel the influence of the Order.

It would make both the stranger and the member of the Lodge feel that the Order was interested in the individual members which today is an opinion that is not prevalent among the membership. I believe the plan I suggested elaborated in accordance with conditions would greatly benefit the Order and its members.

I also submit a suggestion that we should be in some way arrange to make 1916 a Jubilee year with a determined effort all over the country to get back all the immense number of former members who have discontinued their membership. To do this, each District Grand Lodge should pass a law especially for this Jubilee year, permitting even the suspended members who were suspended for non-payment of dues during the Jubilee year, to return without assuming any obligation as far as old dues, but start them in as new members. I believe it is worth an effort and while committees are devising means to get material to make new members, have some of the older members look over the records and secure the names of such members who have been dropped from the rolls of the Lodge and get them back into the Order. At no time, in my opinion, in the history of Israel is it more important than now to get a large and influential body united by its loyal devotion, without any materialistic object to use the influence for the best that is within us to face problems that will be even greater when the war in Europe ceases.

Let us unite for the many purposes for which the Order stands and with the trouble that is prevailing abroad, if for no other purpose, let us be potent factors to alleviate and may we hope to aid in preventing more misery.

I hope these suggestions may be of some service and I will gladly co-operate in any movement that would secure other suggestions that may be a potent factor in placing the Order in the position that no one can help but respect, not only for its influence, but for its membership.

RUSSIAN IMMIGRANTS ARRIVE AT PACIFIC PORTS.

During the week ending Nov. 13. thirty-six Russian immigrants arrived at the Port of Seattle from Russia by way of Japan. From different statements gathered from these immigrants, it appears that there are many who are anxious to leave Russia at the present time but find great difficulty in getting away.

THE KEHILLAH, XVIII

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

When the aristocratic Landrabbiner, Bernhard Eskeles, the ancestor of barons, counts, and generals, died, his successor stepped right into his place. This successor, Moses Ben Aaron Lwow, or as he was officially called, Moses Aaron Lemberger, had a remarkable history, and the fragments that we know about it, make us yearn for that inside information which usually our official sources deny us. We hear first of him in Berlin, where upon the strict order of King Frederick William I, he was appointed rabbi, or as the official title had it, "Oberlandesrabbiner," of the Mark Brandenburg, in 1729. He seems to have been at that time rabbi of Leipnik in Moravia. The congregation of Berlin objected. They most submissively pointed to the youth of the new rabbi, and wished to be informed first as to his qualification, but Frederick William I, the father of Frederick the Great, as we knew him, never brooked any opposition, and least of all from Jews. He had no particular love for them, a sentiment which he transmitted to his brilliant son, otherwise so totally different from the father. In his last will, in which, according to Hohenzollern tradition, he laid down his experiences in government for the benefit of his successor, he said, "Jews are a plague, and it would be best to do without them, but inasmuch as we have to have them, it is good policy to keep a limited number, that in case you want a few thousand Thalers for some pleasure, when the treasury is depleted, you can always fall back on the Jews, and squeeze it out of them." It is in full harmony with these principles that he acted on one occasion, when a poor man died in Berlin, leaving a large family of little children. The congregation petitioned the king to remit the taxes which the deceased owed. For the explanation it is necessary to remember that the congregation was corporately responsible for the taxes of every individual. The elders claimed that inasmuch as the deceased had left no estate, and the family would have to be supported by the congregation, it would be just that the taxes be remitted in his case. The king, however, replied that the body could not be buried until the taxes shall have been paid, else the hangman "will wheel him out on his wheel-barrow and bury him under the gallows."

This example shows that if Frederick William I had made up his mind who was to be rabbi, there was no gainsaying and the congregation could do nothing else but elect him. Moses Aaron succeeded Rabbi Michel Hasid, who had died in 1728. These were the days in which Cabbala had a strong hold on the Jewish people even in Western Europe, though not as strong as was the case in Italy, Poland and the Orient, and Rabbi Michel was a noted Cabbalist. His son Lipman, however, who lived in Nikolsburg, became a convert to Christianity, taking his two infant sons over into his new religion. He adopted the name of Alois Wiener, and was subsequently ennobled as Herr von Sonnenfels. As a favorite of the bigoted Empress Maria Theresa, he was given an official position as translator and censor, and in the former capacity, translated the constitution of the Moravian "Judenschaft" from Yiddish into Hebrew. This job has also its history. During the second Silesian war (1744-1745), which ended for Austria so disastrously, some scapegoat had to be found, just as is the case now in Russia, and the Jews were accused of having served as spies to the Prussian army, and having furnished it with provisions. Maria Theresa, never much in love with the Jews, issued a decree that "for grave causes" the Jews of the kingdom of Bohemia, which means the provinces of Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia, would have to leave the country within six months. Diplomatic intervention of foreign powers, and still more the plea of the "states" of Bohemia, finally induced the Empress to repeal, or as she put it, to suspend, the operation of the edict of expulsion, and having in this way shown an inconsistency, she felt that she owed it to her dignity, to issue a new regulation for the Jews of these provinces. For this purpose the "Polizey Ordnung" (Constitution) of the "Judenschaft" of the Markgravedom of Moravia was to be translated. This constitution consisted of three hundred and eleven sections, written in the official Yiddish, which is largely interspersed with Hebrew, and containing the resolutions, passed at the various conventions (Vaad), held since the seventeenth century. A fragment of this constitution is in my possession, beautifully written by the clerk (Land-sofer), most probably originally in the possession of the grandfather of my great grandfather, Joseph Deutsch, who died in 1723, and whose signature appears as one of the elders, under the resolutions passed in1720. Most of these resolutions are concerned with the mode of assessing the individual congregations for the taxes, for which the Landesjudenschaft was corporately responsible. Others deal with provisions for the instruction of the youth, and the support of the poor. It is highly instructive to learn that. when Alois Wiener was commissioned to translate these by-laws, he asked to be advanced some money so that he could get out of the prison, where he was held for non-payment of his debts. This fact throws some light on his change of heart in matters of religion. Of the two sons of the Neo-Christian, Joseph von Sonnenfels, subsequently raised to the baronetcy, became a noted political writer, and is said to have been largely responsible for the abolition of the torture in Austrian legal proceedure. He died in 1817, eighty-five years old. His younger brother, Franz Anton von Sonnenfels, who died in 1806, left to the city of Nikolsburg considerable legacies; and an artistic monument over his grave says that his original name was Schmeyr Perlin, that as Christian he was named Franz Anton Wiener, subsequently ennobled as Herr von Sonnenfels. The peculiar Jewish name is a false transliteration of Shemaiah Berlin, his father's name having been as a Jew, Lipmann Berlin, according to the custom of those days to name a man for the place from which he had come. The name Shemaiah he had from his grandfather's grandfather, Shemaiah, who died as rabbi of Berlin in 1709.

As an interesting specimen of how errors originate, the following may be stated. The Jewish Encyclopedia (Vol. 11, p. 468), speak of the elder Sonnenfels as "Perlin Lipmann Sonnenfels, the son of Wurzbach Lipmann, chief rabbi of Brandenburg." About that Perlin Lipmann the explanation was already given, and the most remarkable, almost American, name of Wurzbach Lipmann, who is said to have been that of a chief rabbi of Brandenburg, I can only venture the opinion that he owes his existence to a misunderstanding of the translator of this article, which probably was written originally in German, and contained the statement that Lipmann was, according to Wurzbach's "biographical dictionary of the Austrian empire," the son of the chief rabbi of Brandenburg.

We have to come back to our Moses Aaron Lemberger. The authority of the king could compel his election, but was not strong enough to hold him in his office. He had many enemies, who constantly brought complaints against him, chief among whom was Hayim, the son of Ephraim, then Parnas of the Berlin congregation, father of the afterwards so influential Zeitel Heine Ephraim, whose financial ability assisted Frederick the Great considerably in his war operations, and who is the ancestor of the famous Egytologist and novelist, Georg Ebers. The king finally yielded and Moses Aaron was relieved of his duties as rabbi of Berlin, retiring to Frankfurt an der Oder, where he remained as Landrabbiner. This city had very important fairs, where Jews from great distances assembled, and as owing to the legislation then existing, all civil law cases had to be brought before the rabbi, the latter occupied a prominent position. How long Moses Aaron remained in Frankfurt we do not know, but sometime before the death of Bernard Eskeles, he took up his residence in Nikolsburg, probably because the Jews of Moravia, dissatisfied with the Landrabbiner who actually was a banker, and resided in Vienna, brought frequent complaints against Eskeles, so that the latter appointed an acting Landrabbiner with his seat in Nikolsburg. After Eskeles' death, Moses Aaron at once obtained from the government his appointment as successor. The congregation objected, but evidently Moses Aaron had strong backers in Vienna, just as he had had them in Berlin. What these influences were, is not known. I may, however, offer a hypothesis. Lemberger's wife was a granddaughter of Gabriel Eskeles, the former Landrabbiner, and therefore, a niece of Bernhard Eskeles. This family, connected with the leading banking house of Vienna, easily secured powerful support in government circles. If intimate history could be written, we would find the influences of matrimonial relations a strong factor in the rabbinical office, and we might trace them to our own day. The Talmud (Baba Kamma 104, a) tells us that the father-in-law of the great teacher, Mar Samuel, who presided over the famous school of Nahardea in Babylonia in the third century, was such an influential man. In Poland and Hungary up to this day rabbinical positions go by inheritance to the son or to the son-in-law of the late rabbi. I even saw in the Hebrew daily' "Hazefirah," of Warsaw, an advertisement offering a position to a young rabbi who would be willing to marry the daughter of the late incumbent of the office. Moses Aaron did his best to show his gratitude to the government. In 1756, when the War of Seven Year broke out, he pronounced in the strongest terms of the rabbinical dictionary an excommunication against any Jew who would in any way assist the enemy. He might have done it even, if he did not owe his position to the favor of the officials, for Rabbi Ezekiel Landau of Prague, elected just a year previously, did the same. The Jew in those days could not have the courage to express his resentment of the insinuation that he was a traitor. Even in the nineteenth century the rabbis of Wilna, obeying the command of the Czar, pronounced a similar excommunication under solemn ceremonics in the synagogue against all smugglers.

Moses Aaron's experiences in Nikolsburg were the same as in Berlin. The congregation would not have him, and, claiming that the office of the local rabbi need not be combined with that of Landrabbiner, elected as its own rabbi Gerson Pulitz. The name points to a little town in Moravia, and is the origin of the family name of Politzer, found still in my own time in Nikolsburg very likely among the descendants of the rabbi, among whom our newspaper magnate, the late Joseph Pulitzer, of the New York "World," may be counted. I have, of course, no authority for this assumption, except that Jews from Moravia and Bohemia often emigrated to Hungary, where the restrictive laws against the Jews were not as severe as they were in their old home. Down to my time there existed an old bachelor named Selig Gershon Politzer, of whose peculiarities, and especially of his aversion to the word "Luft" I have given speciments in a previous article.

Rivalry between rabbis is not confined to this country where the personal ability of a rabbi means so much for the congregation. It existed in Talmudic times for we read in the Talmud (Baba Batra, 75, a), a complaint against the scholars who are "singed by the halo of their colleagues." It was only natural that the two rabbis in the same place had their quarrels, especially on the honors which are due to the rabbis in the synagogue. Nickolsburg had several synagogues, but evidently both, the local rabbi and the Landrabbiner, claimed the honors due to the rabbi in the "Altschul," the cathedral synagogue. Even in my time dim traditions still survived. Moses Aaron died in the prime of manhood, December 28, 1757, and was succeeded by his rival, Gerson Pulitz, who now combined both offices, and kept them until his death in 1772. His second wife, Hendel—the old Yiddish names of women are similar to those customary in America, and Hendel would have to be translated "chicky," just as Voegele is the equivalent of "Birdie"—was the daughter of his rival, and her tombstone says that she was a granddaughter of Gabriel Eskeles. This suggested to me the idea that Moses Aaron Lemberger was the brother-in-law of Bernhard Eskeles, and that he owed his position to the strong backing, which owing to his family relations, he possessed in the Jewish high finance which then, as now, was internationally related.

Of Rabbi Pulitz I know nothing else. and therefore, as an interesting piece of history, belonging to that time, I wish to include an incident which occurred in the town of Pulitz, from which he derived his name in 1764. A so-called "Bestandmann" (one who possessed the privilege of distilling), Isaac Landesmann, was, as all people of his class, on good terms with the local lord whose tenant he was. Landesmann had three young boys, and the governess of the noble who owned the estate in the place, was in the habit of calling at his house. Upon her death the rumor spread that she had confessed to have baptized one of the children in a sickness fearing that the child might die and go to hell. Landesmann knew what such a rumor meant, and before the court could take any action he sent all his children to Breslau, the home of his wife, so that they were out of the jurisdiction of Austrian courts.

He was arrested and ordered to produce his children. This he refused to do, claiming that he didn't know where his children were at this moment, which very likely was a fact, because as a conscientious Jew, not wishing to commit perjury, he probably had directed his family not to inform him of the place where his children were kept. For the crime of keeping a Christian from the church to which he belonged, Landesmann was put in irons and sent to the county jail in Znaim. There he was kept for eight months, and as nothing could be done with him, the case was finally dismissed on the ground that the fact of baptism could not be sufficiently proven. Landesmann was discharged, and asked to be allowed to take the iron with which he was chained along as a souvenir. It was still in the possession of the family in Vienna fifty years ago. The incident was the cause of a renewal by Maria Theresa of the law that children, not having reached "the age of discretion" should not be baptized without the consent of their parents, a law which. as we know from the case of Mortara. was not observed, even a century afterwards. For the explanation of this incident, it may be added that the Catholic church does not countenance compulsory baptism, but claims anyone legally baptized, even if this baptism should have been performed contrary to the will of the baptized person. The history of such cases would fill volumes. Protestantism has in this respect a more liberal view, but is not free from equally bigoted tendencies. For the illustration of this statement one fact of the same time may be quoted. Solom Guntzenhausen, of Heusenstamm, Hesse, was convicted of pickpocketing, and according to the cruel laws of these days, was executed January 18, 1765. Before his execution, the chaplain of the penitentiary tried to convert him, promising that, if his baptism should not bring the convict to heaven. he, the chaplain, would be willing to suffer the pain of hell fire in his place. The Jew had humor enough at this critical moment to reply. that he did not know enough about the legal procedure in the hereafter to sue the chaplain for living up to the contract. He was hanged, and Count Schoenborn. the lord of the estate, issued a warning to the Jews under his jurisdiction that in case they should take down the body of the criminal from the gallows, they would all be expelled from his estate. It does not seem necessary to go to old Talmudic sources for evidences of inhumanity to those of different faith.

JEWS HONORED.

In various parts of the country many honors have been conferred on our coreligionists in various departments ,of the state, city and county.

Mr. Samuel A. Ettelson was appointed corporation counsel of Chicago. Bernard Horwich was made a member of the Board of Election Commissioners of Cook County, Illinois. Dr. Theo. B. Sachs was reappointed superintendent of the Municipal Tuberculosis Sanitarium of Chicago. Max Loeb was named a member of the Chicago School Board.

In Cleveland Samuel E. Kramer, Maurice Bernstein and Samuel H. Silbert were elected municipal judges recently and Alex. Bernstein was elected a member of the City Council.

In Philadelphia Henry E. Wessel was elected Judge of the Common Pleas Court No. 2.

In Columbus, Ohio, Rabbi Jos. S. Kornfeld was elected a member of the Board of Education of that city.

In Massachusetts David Mancovitz, Samuel Silverman and Simon Swig, all of Boston, were elected members of the legislature.

At the recent election held in New York the following were the successful Jewish candidates: Supreme Court, Justice Samuel Greenbaum was re-elected. Edgar J. Lauer was chosen a Municipal Court Justice of Manhattan and Mitchell May defeated his opponent for the Kings County Judgeship. Edward Riegelman was the successful candidate for Sheriff of Kings County. Twelve candidates were elected as members of the Assembly; they are M. M. Fertig, N. D. Shapiro, I. Mendelsohn, A. J. Shiplacoff, H. S. Schimmel, N. D. Perlman, A. Goodman, Leon Bleecker, A. Ellenbogen, F. Arnow, M. Bloch, Meyer Levy, and Jacob Goldstern. The Board of Aldermen include the following: E. I. Silverstein, Maurice Tock, A. M. Weiss, Isaac Gutman, S. Friedlander, C. J. Palitz, Harry Heyman and Alexander D. Drescher.

PERU REMOVES CREED BARS.

At the session of Congress, held on November 11th, a law was promulgated dealing with religious tolerance. Under Article 4 of the Constitution the exercise of a religious belief other than Roman Catholic was prohibited, and the new law promulgated amends the Constitution by abolishing that restriction.

RACE AND JUDAISM

By Dr. Felix Goldman, Oppeln, Germany

"After some little reflection Hieronymous declared: The sermon consists of two parts; the one part no one can comprehend, but the other part can be understood."

This old saying of the candidate, Job, might readily apply to the new publication by Kautsky, but in inverse order. The title of that work is "Race and Judaism." What he says about race and race theories is clear, concise, deserving of consideration and sure to meet with approval. On the other hand, his remarks about Judaism are the part which really remains "beyond understanding." This is most astonishing in view of the customary thorough methods of the learned and scholarly author and his well known aversion to all superficiality.

In the preface Kautsky states very correctly, that in these war times a treatise on the race theory must prove of general interest. He handles that subject in a masterly manner and from the only proper viewpoint. Kautsky treats the matter in a style all his own, full of derision and at times rising to biting sarcasm. The facts established by the war, the grouping of the several warring powers, must have sufficed to prove that certain modern race theorists and their pet dogmas cannot be treated otherwise than as fit subjects for the jokes of the humorous press. If some in other respects serious and earnest minded people have tried to attribute the causes of the present war to race enmity and antipathy, while its true origin, economical rivalry and the hunger for increased political domination and power, is so plainly discernible, then it surely becomes amusing to watch the antics to which the supporters of that theory have to resort in order to twist the facts or to furnish them a new interpretation so as to make them fit into their old pet theories, which they had claimed to be firmly established and of standard authority. The fact remains, however, and cannot be controverted, that the political alliances brought about through this war prove the bloodiest irony to all race theories. This has been shown in concise but caustic manner by Kautsky. The rebuff administered to Sombart, who still continues to find admirers in some Jewish circles, is most effective and the irony employed in dismissing the apostle of Teutonism is exceedingly delicate. If Kautsky finally asserts and satisfactorily establishes, that now-a-days much jugglery is being practiced with the conception of the word "race" without any one being sure what "race" really is; when he calls it the "modern fate," equally incomprehensible and immutable as that of the ancient heathen world conception, he surely tells of nothing new. At the same time he has found a most suitable and fitting form for the presentation of these and other contentions and facts. When, in his final deductions, he maintains, "that of the natural race characteristics nothing remains except what the records of the registrar's offices disclose," he furnishes by that sarcasm the most fitting censure of those theories, that try to gauge the merits of a man solely by his race and blood and refuse to recognize any and all individual merit.

The second part of that publication, however, "no one can understand." When Kautsky turns to Judaism and to Zionism he departs from his scientific caution his reserve and his diligent application. As he does not consider Judaism as a living organism, but treats it as dead substance shoved hither and thither without own volition, his judgments are bound to be warped and biased. He cannot be accused of lacking the quality of correct observation. He has the proper conception of the innermost association of ideas which led from the modern race theories to the development of the Jewish National ideals. His judgment is equally sound when he derides all attempts to establish the bodily characteristics of the Jewish race and when he denies the existence of any specifically concrete Jewish intellectual traits. In the critical, judicious intellect of the Jews he correctly sees nothing more than the logical result of their literary history.

Kautsky, however, is inconsistent inasmuch as he admits in theory the influences exerted upon individual groups of men in the development of common traits and national characteristics by the geographical and economical surroundings and then refuses to allow the application of that theory to the Jews. Even if it has been fully established that there is no Jewish race with distinct, readily recognizable specific bodily or mental traits, such as are claimed to exist by the race theorists, it cannot be denied that there are some fundamental [illegible] of intellectual life, even if [illegible] only of a formal nature, that are common to all Jews, and which can be traced throughout all times and independent of the economic and other conditions in any locality. This alone will account for the fact that the Jews were and are the people of religiosity, even if it be but natural that the outward forms of the religious thoughts and sentiments and still more the religious activities and ceremonies were influenced into changes according to the local conditions and by the various ages, thereby assuming different forms. Neither can it be questioned that the far greater majority of the Jews in Central Europe during the past several centuries formed a fairly uniform body and that they thus, through the influences of the living conditions common to all, have developed uniform and common traits, that in no way can be attributed to racial characteristics, but which exist all the same. It is these special traits which have always been confounded by the race theorists as racial peculiarities, although these traits might change form or even entirely disappear under differing geographical, social and economic surroundings and conditions. Their existence, however, cannot be denied.

Kautsky is altogether unjust to Zionism in basing its existence and its continuance upon the maintenance of the race theory. In truth, the latter has influenced the form of that movement, while its essence is due to entirely different factors; it seems strange, that the champion of the historical materialism is unable to comprehend the social and economic causes of the Jewish National movement. Indeed, he treats that movement, according to his view based upon and produced by the race theory, from the viewpoint of the historical materialism and his criticism is in keeping therewith. But this does not in any way make the error less glaring, for the historical materialism, while being less absurd as the explanatory principle of historical events, is equally one-sided and biased, and hence erroneous as is the justly derided race theory. He, who wishes to judge of Jewish matters, without studying and considering the living forces and the intellectual strength of the Jewish community, had better keep hands off such difficult task. The Jewish history with its martyrs, its great heroes and intellectual leaders cannot be dissected and explained according to the dead rules and formulas of historical materialism, for the very idealism peculiar to the people of the prophets has at all times influenced and decided its fate at the decisive moments. The struggle for ideals has been materialized and has become an embodied truth in the Jewish history and a careful, intense study of its development and results might be the best means to expose the errors of construction in the historical materialism in general.

Hence it is not to be wondered that Kautsky has succeeded in deriding in a masterly manner the weakness of Zionism from the purely economical features, its outward form, even if he has failed to comprehend its true essence. He endorses the opinion, so often expressed by the opposition to Zionism within Jewish circles, and correctly so, that the foundation of the entire Palestinian endeavor must prove a failure as it would demand the shifting and redistribution of all vocational lines among the Jews as a pre-requisite. Neither does Kautsky misjudge the labor question and the difficulties it involves when he points out, that the dependence upon the Jemenite Jews for labor proves the failure in the most important feature of the project, as thereby the capitalistic tendencies of the Jewish colonization scheme are admitted to be unsurmountable, while on the other hand this fact would go far to establish the claim that it is utterly impossible to turn the emigrant Western Jew into a satisfactory farm hand. Kautsky also does full justice to the financial dependence upon the West by the Zionistic enterprise, but for all that he still fails to comprehend the true essence of Zionism. To him it is only a movement originating from the race theory, which has assumed economical and social form, but he does not recognize the impelling forces and the purposes of that movement. No matter what one may think about Zionism, it cannot be denied that Zionism has an idealistic tendency, which, according to its fervent adherents, is to result in a liberating movement wherein the material interests will be but of minor importance. It might just as well be claimed that the life work of a Moses and the deliverance of the people of Israel from Egyptian bondage were devoid of all idealistic merit and character.

However, nothing else could be expected from Kautsky, as he is completely estranged from the true essence of Judaism. The religious meaning and importance, the religious power of Judaism, its hopes and aspirations surely do not fit into the system of Kautsky. At the same time it seems a rather unsophisticated notion, that he expects Judaism to entirely disappear by the intermixing of races, the more so, as he shortly before has submitted scientific proof, that the Jews have long ago become a mixed race. It is really astonishing and to be deplored, that an erudite scholar like Kautsky knows so little of the real life of Judaism, of its tenacity, of its unimpaired strength, of its intellectual movements, of its internal strifes, which have lasted all throughout the nineteenth century and which furnish the best proof for its hopes for the future. It is still more to be wondered at that Kautsky so subordinates all facts to the explanatory materialistic principles and denies the power of the religious idealism in Judaism, when it be remembered that a few years ago in his "Genesis of Christianity" he so fully appreciated that very religious influence of Judaism as a most potent factor.

The continued existence or the total extinction of Judaism depend solely and alone upon the strength and power of the religious ideals. Everything else is immaterial, be such matters of economical conditions, national forms or even historical events. Whatever Kautsky may have shown in detail or what other critics of Zionism may have argued on the various points involved, they never have fully understood that subject. A criticism of Zionism must take into account its position towards the religious thought, an effective criticism must admit the fact that Zionism means to furnish the solution of the questions affecting the welfare of the Jews but not of Judaism. From the truly Jewish viewpoint Zionism is of only relative value—no more value than possesses its apparent opposite, the defiant or proud Judaism (Trotzjudentum). The latter's Jewish interests exhaust themselves in the struggle for equal rights. Both are children of the times; Zionism is born from economic and psychical needs; the defiant Judaism from injustice and political oppression. But were absolute and positive equality to be conferred upon the Jewish world both of these factions would immediately cease to exist; the defiant Judaism would cease theoretically as its aim would have been accomplished. Zionism would do so practically as there would be no further need for it. For this reason alone, if for no other, a complete legal equality of the Jews would seem highly desirable, as thereby all relative or qualified Judaism would disappear. Even if it should lose in numbers it would gain in strength when it would again appear as what it originally was and always meant to be—as a religion. Publications such as have been herein mentioned would lose all importance and significance, which certainly would prove of general benefit and advantage to all.

At the same time Kautsky's book remains an interesting document of contemporaneous thought. A dangerous one, it is true, because the correctness of the general part may mislead many a reader to draw erroneous conclusions as to the warped judgments on Zionism and Judaism. The opponents of the Jewish National idea should not overlook this. Were they to use that book as a weapon against Zionism they might readily experience that this dangerous weapon would turn upon themselves.

ANTI-SEMITIC NEWSPAPER FINED.

Despite the enormous sacrifices Jews are making in the common cause of the fatherland, the anti-Semites are still at their work. Ten months ago the most notorious anti-Semitic paper in Berlin, the "Staatsburger Zeitung," was suppressed as a disturber of the peace by the military authorities. The editor, nevertheless, recently issued to some of his subscribers a circular setting forth the program that the newspaper would pursue in times of peace. As this was a violation of the military order, it was reported by the "Central Association of German Citizens of Jewish Faith" to the local military headquarters, with the result that the manager of the paper was sentenced to a fine of 100 marks. The latter appealed against this in a Berlin court, which reduced the sentence to 15 marks or 3 days' imprisonment.

The Reichstag deputies belonging to the anti-Semitic Economic Union (Wirtschaftliche Vereinigung), have addressed a petition to the German Imperial Chancellor to the effect that the Peace Treaty should secure the closing of the present frontiers of the German Empire to Jewish immigration.

NEW JEWISH PUBLICATIONS.

Seminary Addresses and Other Papers, by S. Schechter, M. A. Litt. D., President of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. (Ark Publishing Co., Cincinnati, 1915.)

On perusing the preface to these twenty-two addresses and papers of Professor Solomon Schechter, the reader will at first be somewhat disappointed. Professor Schechter is known in the world of Jewish letters as a profound Jewish scholar, as a master of the science of Judaism. The reader will, therefore, naturally expect to find this volume to be in line with the "Genizah" work of the author, or something similar to his "Studies in Judaism." But in perusing the preface the reader will find at the very beginning the modest confession of the author in the following words:

"These papers lay no claim to the attainments of rhetoric, which are unfortunately beyond my powers, nor will the reader find in them any indulgence in abtruse learning which, even if it were within my reach, would be out of place in popular addresses like these."

But the disappointment of the reader will not last very long. It is true that nowhere in this book will the reader find any artificial and affected rhetoric or obtuse learning, but he is sure to meet on every page with brilliant thoughts expressed in forceful words—thoughts that are born of conviction and words that come from the heart. The author speaks of the burden of those addresses "as a plea for traditional Judaism" and he remains true to this declaration, his plea for the faith of our fathers is singularly strong and wonderfully warm.

Professor Schechter is by no means too timid to express his full mind, and he often ventures to flash his shining sword of criticism in bold and sharp attack. In his first address, "The Emancipation of Jewish Science," he, for instance, gives expression to the following sentence: "The frequent appeals to prophetic Judaism are largely verbiage: you cannot live on oxygen alone," or in his second address, "The Charter of the Seminary," he makes use of the following striking words: "Spirit without letter belongs to the species known to the mystics as 'nude souls' (nishmatin artila-in), wandering about in the universe without balance and without consistency, the play of all possible currents and changes in the atmosphere."

The book fairly teems with such quickening sentences which are very characteristic of the author.

Our ancient teachers wisely said that even the plain, everyday talk of the scholar should be studied. Professor Schechter's addresses make highly interesting reading, even if they do not lay claim to deep learning.

The Jews of Russia and Poland, by Israel Friedlaender, Ph. D., Professor at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York, 1915.)

The author is indeed justified in claiming that his is a timely book. The book will surely be welcomed by many on account of the light which it turns upon the history of the life and development of an important part of the Jewish people. It is a timely book because the terrible world war which is now raging in Europe with ever increasing fury has placed such a crushing burden of sorrow and suffering upon the shoulders of the Jews of Russia and Poland, that makes humanity shudder. The fate of these poor unfortunate Jews, which has never been any too rosy, is growing darker every day, and their co-religionists all over the world, especially in America, are being urged to hasten to their aid and save them from utter annihilation.

The world in general knows very little about the Jews of Russia and Poland. Even the Jews themselves, those who have been born and raised in countries outside of these two, have never learned very much about their co-religionists of Russia and Poland. They all have always been especially ignorant of their communal life, of their charitable institutions and of their struggles for education. They all, therefore, constantly misjudge them and undervalue their significance and standing. Such books as Dr. Friedlaender brings, spread light, advance truth and foster justice, and the world owes a great debt of gratitude to such authors.

JEW MEMBER OF CIVIL ADMINISTRATION OF WARSAW.

Dr. Ludwig Haas, of Karlsruhe, who is a member of the German Reichstag, and who joined the German Army as a volunteer and was recently promoted as officer and received the Iron Cross, First Class, has received a call to the civil administration of Warsaw.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR

By Dr. Max Nordau in Menorah Journal

We are the people of the Messiah. We feel, we think Messianic. In all situations of life, and particularly in the critical ones, we hope for a miraculous event which will fulfill all our yearnings and in this hope we feel delivered of the manly duty to work for the realization of our ideals, to prepare our salvation by our own efforts.

At this moment a large portion of Israel dreams once more a particularly lively Messianic dream. Hundreds of thousands, millions of Jews, indeed, have abandoned themselves to the expectation that at the conclusion of the peace which will put a stop to the world's war, the destiny of the Jewish people must take a miraculous turn. The Plenipotentiaries of the belligerent powers will assemble in conference or a congress to treat of the conditions of peace. The conquerors will exact of the vanquished the price of their sacrifices and return home with their booty in the shape of territorial acquisitions and indemnities. And in the course of these transactions the miracle will happen that a share will be apportioned to the Jewish people, too. Palestine will be offered them, either as an area for colonization or, still better, as a full property under the protectorate of a great power. They will be accorded also entire equality of rights in Russia and Rumania.

The Basis of Jewish Hopes.

(1) The Self-Interest of the Powers.

We may plead reasons or excuses for indulging in this dream. Utterances of leading personalities of the big nations which will necessarily be represented at the peace conference have become publicly known which permit the conclusion without intentional self-beguiling, that some governments at least, if not all of them, are occupying themselves earnestly with the Jewish problem and examining the question whether it might not be worth trying to settle the Jews in search of a homestead in Palestine, under international and local legal conditions vouchasafing them full freedom of economic, intellectual and moral development.

On the other hand, there is no doubt that the situation of the six millions of Russian Jews occupies a certain place in the thoughts and cares of the governments. Several countries have an interest in turning away from their frontiers the ever more violently swelling stream of Jewish emigration, and doing so otherwise than with the brutal method of locking up their boundaries and posting a police watch before them. Others have the well-being of Russia at heart; they understand that the sufferings and the despair of her six millions of Jews are a source of dire evils and that the emancipation of this hard-working and highly gifted population will bring about the material prosperity, the general progress, and the powerful strengthening of Russia. Other countries again, the statesmen of which are more far-seeing than the average and have been able to rise to the conception of a political world hygiene, are aware that the systematic crushing of six millions of intellectual and strong-feeling people, driven to despair must create a hotbed of the most dangerous anarchic and revolutionary epidemics, the spreading of which cannot easily be limited to the spot of their origin. Lastly, even the most irreclaimable pessimist will admit at least the possibility that governments may not be entirely inaccessible to purely humane sentiments of pity and justice, and may regard the treatment of the Jews of Russia and Rumania as an indictment against the civilization and ruling religion of white mankind.

(2) The Precedent of 1878.

The hope of the peace conference resulting in great achievements for the Jewish people, moreover, can evoke an historical precedent. The Berlin Congress of 1878 which brought the Russo-Turkish war to an end, created the Bulgarian State, raised Rumania to the rank of an independent kingdom, and gave Bosnia and Herzegovnia to Austria-Hungary, found time to occupy itself with a Jewish matter and to introduce into the treaty condensing its decisions the well-known article obliging the new kingdom of Rumania to bestow on her Jews equality of civil franchises. It is not the fault of the Berlin Congress that this article has remained to this day a dead letter. The case, at any rate, is of a nature to encourage Jewish optimism against those skeptics who sneer: "A diplomatic conference distributes no presents; complacency and liberality play no part there; there are only such interests enforced which are backed by a victorious army or at least by an army which still inspires some fears." Well, in 1878, too, the Jewish people had no country, no army, no government, no accredited ambassador, and yet two of the most influential members of the Berlin Congress, the representative of Great Britain, Earl Beaconsfield, and that of France, Waddington, were ready to step forward as advocates of the Jewish cause, and the President of the Congress, Prince Bismarck, evidently favored their action.

But We Ignore a Valuable Lesson.

I have produced everything capable of justifying the expectations with which many Jews look forward to the future peace congress. But I do not notice that the Jewish people keep in view the lessons taught by the historic example of 1878. Beaconsfield and Waddington did not plead for the Rumanian Jews at the Berlin Congress from impulses of their own or in consequence of a sudden inspiration from on high. The Paris Alliance Israelite Universelle, the London Anglo-Jewish Association, the Berlin Verband der deutschen Juden, had done serious and efficient preparatory work, memorialized their several governments, informed them of the facts, solicited their intervention. It was due to their efforts that the position of the Rumanian Jews came up for consideration at the Berlin Congress. They showed the way the Jewish people must follow if they wished to obtain anything of government in congress. What are the Jewish people waiting for in order to act now as their fathers acted thirty-seven years ago?

The war is raging, in a hundred battlefields uncounted brave men shed their blood for the future of their nation, Jewish soldiers fight and fall side by side with their non-Jewish countrymen and comrades, but their heroic sacrifices are utterly useless for their own people. In every country, even in Russia, the military excellence, the patriotism, the contempt of danger, and death of the Jewish soldiers, will be rewarded more or less lavishly and liberally with distinctions and preferment, but experience teaches us that their glorious conduct is forgotten very soon after the war by everybody but themselves and their brethren, and that it certainly does not change in the least the status of the Jewish people among the nations. At any rate the consideration of the merits and military virtues of the Jewish soldiers will not by itself stimulate to action the diplomatists at the peace congress, unless they are insistently recalled to their memory. All this requires preparation and arrangement, of which as yet there is scarcely any trace to be seen.

Who Would Accept Palestine for the Jews?

There is another point to which attention must be drawn. Let us admit the most favorable case: the congress will really open up Palestine to the Jewish people for colonization with self-government and autonomous local institutions. To whom will it be in a position to make such a concession? To whom will it deliver Palestine? The Jewish people is a concept, but it is not a political and administrative individuality, it is not a body with a head and vital organs. There is actually not one man who could present himself to the governments assembled in congress, receive Palestine from their hands, and offer them the guarantee that he will lead into the land of their ancestors those Jews that yearn for a new home and national life on an historic soil, and that he will undertake the implanting of modern culture, the maintaining of order, and the economic development of the country. An offer of the congress would fall flat, nobody having the moral right and the material capacity to accept it in the name and in behalf of the Jewish people.

Let Dreaming Give Way to Organizing! The Task for American Jewry.

All this points to the necessity of an adequate preparation for coming events. The Messianic dream does not suffice. Mere wishes and hopes are vain. We must work. We must organize ourselves without further loss of time. We must create a body with men of authority at its head, and the living forces of the Jewish people, or at least a considerable portion of them at its back. The forces and the men do exist. They have only to be gathered, united and grouped.

Who is to do this organizing work? My reply is unhesitating: American Jewry. I should be happy to say: here is a task for the Zionists' organization which exists, which lives, which is prepared for work of this kind, and which has to consider its carrying out as its natural functions; but I shrink from giving this near-lying answer. Many pre-eminent and influential Jews whose good Jewish sentiments no one has a right to doubt, persist in considering Zionism as a party tendency against which they raise objections. Now the representations of the Jewish people before the governments must not be a party affair, but ought to be the cause of the entire people and must embrace all its parts. The invitation must therefore be issued by personalities who repel nobody at the outset by their pronounced party color. Moreover, these personalities must necessarily belong to a neutral country, so as to leave no room for the argument that according to the political definition of the hour they are enemies and to co-operate with them would mean disloyalty to one's own country. Only in the case, which I hope will not be realized, of the United States also precipitating itself into the whirlpool of the war, would they be bound to transfer their initiative to the Swiss or the Dutch Jewry. The first labor of the initiators should consist in inviting the existing Jewish organizations of all countries to have themselves represented by a delegation on a permanent board or committee. It would be a matter of regret if they refused, but this ought by no means to be a reason for discouragement nor for discontinuing further endeavors. In this case the initiators would simply have to do fundamental work and try to fall back on elements that at present stand outside, or intentionally keep aloof from existing organizations. It would be the business of the permanent board to secure financial co-operation that could be called upon under given circumstances, and to cause Jews of standing in every great country to approach their government, to submit to it in time the aspirations of the Jewish people, and to secure its approval and sympathy for them.

"Not an Instant to Lose If We Wish to Prepare."

Out of the peace which must follow the present horrible war, a new Europe, a new world will be born. It depends on us whether in this new world there is to be a place, "a place in the sun," for the Jewish people. We have not an instant to lose if we wish to prepare for the grand opportunity. Should we miss this occasion, we would have to resign all our national hopes, I am afraid, for a very long time, if not forever. We may, of course, continue to dream our Messianic dream, but this will then ever remain a dream till the dreamer disappears and his dream with him.

The B'nai B'rith—Its World Mission

(Continued from page 3)

equal justice to all. True, he would prefer to have the affairs of life, as well as the preparations for the hereafter conducted according to his own views, but he does not deny to those of other faiths a right to salvation.

To bring about such a condition is the great world mission of your society. The exalted station attained by very many of your faith, the contemplation of the greatness of those of your co-religionists who have been so situated that they were permitted to develop their faculties without restraint, and a comparison of their accomplishments with the conditions of your people in most parts of the world, is but proof of the injustice of their oppression and of the necessity fof a different course of action toward them, not only for their benefit, but that the world at large may profit by the unrestrained cultural development of this wonderful people.

One of the first conclusions that must be fixed in the minds of all in bringing about this improved condition is that religious discussion, or any form of proselyting must be absolutely barred. The world must recognize Judaism as a religion, and the believer in Judaism must occupy no other or different position as compared with the professors of Christianity than do the adherents of Unitarianism.

I say this as applicable particularly to those of the Christian faith, because, as was said by Dr. Harris, in speaking of the Jewish people:

"We do not seek converts, because one of the doctrines of our faith is that salvation is not exclusively limited to its followers and because Judaism has been a common fount whence many religions have drawn."

And then again—we must remember that the Jewish religion is the oldest, the most authentic and is in fact, the corner stone upon which is builded every other religious belief.

And it is difficult to conceive of any substantial reason why a people who have for thousands of years lived contentedly in the main building of religious existence, based upon the foundation of God Himself, should be urged to desert it for one of the more recent additions built upon a foundation which to their minds is of insufficient strength.

In the tenacity with which the members of your faith cling to their religion, maintaining their faith in all its pristine beauty and glory, notwithstanding the baleful effect of repression, and then again in the marvelous results attained by those who have been aided in development or even permitted free rein for self development, I am reminded of the characteristics of the flower that has been designated by our legislature as the floral emblem of North Dakota—the Wild Prairie Rose. It is essentially a pioneer flower, of a hardy nature, requiring no special soil or climate, but apparently prepared to thrive and bloom anywhere on the face of the earth where permitted to grow unmolested, and capable of great development by cultivation.

You have all seen it, dotting the prairies of North Dakota, and no doubt every one has noted the wonderful hold it has on life. Though the bush may be destroyed by fire, or trampled and bruised by range animals, the germ of life that God has planted in the deep seated root develops another bush or other branches and while it may be stunted and twisted until the bush itself is almost unrecognizable, yet, its bloom is always that of the rose, and ever and anon we find a bush or little clump of bushes growing in some protected spot where in beauty of form and bloom it does so much to brighten and make radiant the face of the earth o'er topping in strength and beauty the others of its kind that have been stunted and repressed. And, though we may realize the beauty of the rose even in its struggling efforts, and more in its unhindered development, yet its full strength and beauty is only shown when transplanted to the garden or lawn where it receives the benefit of cultivation, when it grows to such height and gives forth such magnificent bloom that it is difficult to recognize it as a member of the same family with the stunted bushes of the prairie, and could not be recognized except that its flower—its mental process, as it were—is always the prairie rose. And so it seems the Jewish people have been repressed, held back, by destructive agencies as potent in their desolating effect upon this people as the fires of the prairie upon the rose, until we find the great mass of these people, particularly in some European countries, pushed and held down below the level of their Gentile neighbors.

But, no matter how they are crushed, broken or burned, they still struggle on and on, never changing in their mental, moral or religious characteristics, while here and there, in some secluded spot, where they have been allowed to develop without hindrance they have grown to full strength and have given to the world the benefit of that development. While particularly in this country of ours, where they have been as one with all of the people of the country, and have received the same cultivation that the Gentile has received, by even a casual reference to the roll of distinguished and honored men in every line of activity, education, law, medicine and other sciences, in drama, in music, and in all avenues of business we find the Jewish people standing in the very front ranks.

(To be concluded in next issue)

CHICAGO RABBINICAL ASSOCIATION ENDORSES B'NAI B'RITH SOCIAL WORK.

Chicago, November 15, 1915.

Mr. A. B. Seelenfreund,
Secretary, I. O. B. B.

Dear Sir:—I take great pleasure in informing you that at the last meeting of the Chicago Rabbinical Association the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

1. The Chicago Rabbinical Association endorses the activity of the I. O. B. B. in entering upon the work of social service among our co-religionists.
2. It congratulates the I. O. B. B. on its choice of director.
3. It welcomes the opportunity given to co-operate with Dr. Coffee in the promotion of his work.
4. For mutual help a standing committee on social service shall be appointed from the Association, of which committee the director of the I. O. B. B. social service department shall be a member.

With best wishes for success and hoping that our respective bodies will be able to contribute to a solution of the problems with which it is hoped to cop

I remain, Sincerely yours,

FELIX A. LEVY,
Secretary.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

Published Monthly (except July and August) under the auspices of the INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Printed by Excelsior Printing Co., Chicago.

Editorial Office
1228 TRIBUNE BUILDING, CHICAGO.
All matter intended for publication should be addressed to the editor.

Subscriptions received through lodges only. Subscriptions, one dollar per annum.

No responsibility is assumed for articles published over the signatures of the writers thereof.

JEWISH CALENDAR

5676-1915

Rosh-Chodesh Tebeth	Wednesday, Dec. 8
Fast of Tebeth	Friday, Dec. 17

5676-1916

Rosh-Chodesch Shehbat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Rosh-Chodesch Adar	Saturday, Feb. 5
Second Adar	Monday, March 6
Purim (Feast of Esther)	Sunday, March 19
Rosh-Chodesch Nissan	Tuesday, April 4
Passover (Pesach)	Tuesday, April 18
Passover (Seventh Day)	Sunday, April 24
Rosh-Chodesch Iyar	Thursday, May 4
Lag-B'Omer	Sunday, May 21
Rosh-Chodesch Sivan	Friday, June 2
Shabuoth (Confirmation Day)	Wednesday, June 7
Rosh-Chodesch Shebat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Fast of Tammuz	Tuesday, July 18
Rosh-Chodesch Ab	Monday, July 31
Fast of Ab	Tuesday, Aug. 8
Rosh-Chodesch Ellul	Wednesday, Aug. 30

5677-1916

PACIFISM AND PREPAREDNESS.

So much has been said and written about these two subjects, and yet we are not done with them. Talking and writing of course may be the pacifist's metier, surely the men of the word and of the pen are singularly out of place when it comes to prepare this country and make it aggression-proof. For here deeds are required, and speedy action at that. Yet the framers of our laws will indulge in a lot of orating before the thing is done which is so obviously needful.

As a matter of fact we see no contradiction between pacifism and preparedness. We regard the contention as unproven that a nation prepared is necessarily a menace, that armies are restless for action, and that officers clamor for the day. The army and navy are branches of our government service. They are not the whole machinery. Even in times of war the diplomat is at work and many battles are fought and won or lost in the arena of pourparlers. The admiral of the navy may counsel one thing which may be required from his angle of vision, but he often finds himself checked by the wiser counsels of the foreign secretary who has a larger vantage ground. That the war came because there were ready armies is a superficial view. Far deeper causes were operative, motives which the most adroit statesman could but curb, but not suppress. What unpreparedness means, has come home to many a nation. And if the central powers knew themselves subject to attack, it was their bounden duty to prepare, and prepare they did. The cause of peace is served by a wise policy of unprovocative preparedness. We are all pacifists. We all wish the abolition of warfare. We Jews are heirs to the message uttered by a Jewish prophet that war must cease and make room for arbitration. But that is of the future. Much must be done to speed that day. Religion will play a great factor in hastening it. But we should be recreant to our duty as citizens were we idly to sit by and in the midst of a world in arms resign ourselves to a state of unpreparedness inviting the aggressor. An equilibrium of military power is in the present state of things a far surer check upon aggression.

The pacifism which would make of us idle onlookers and an easy prey for the stronger must be combated by every true patriot. What is it that we have [illegible] to guard? Surely not our [illegible] of wealth, our factories and [illegible]. Not they alone. For while [illegible] at our honest labor, they are but the substratum whereon rest far weightier things. They are but the physical aspect of our civilization. And let it not be forgotten that though man lives not by bread alone, the means of sustenance and of a certain measure of comfort are the prerequisites of progress along the lines of the higher culture of the mind. In the last analysis, that which is nearest and dearest to us is made up of things spiritual. We on this continent have been proud of our democratic institutions. These have been reared by sagacious statesmen of bygone generations, and much blood has been shed in the maintaining of our liberties and of high principles of morals. We have a distinct American civilization. What the fathers set into motion the children have carried to fruition. We should wish to go on perfecting our democracy undisturbed by untoward accidents that might swerve us from our course. There was a time when we knew ourselves free from entanglements and where the storms of Europe were far away from our horizon. We are finding out that no great nation can for all time isolate itself. Heaven be thanked that for the present we have been onlookers of the great struggle that has involved almost every continent and every nation of the world. Barring the Dominion of Canada, America, both North and South, has escaped being drawn into the maelstrom of European jealousies and antipathies. Our neutrality, as was to be foreseen, has imposed upon ourselves delicate tasks, and had it not been for our forbearance, the forbearance worthy of a great and independent nation, we might have found ourselves perilously near the brink. We have probably offended both sides, as a good neutral always will. Animosities are never forgotten. The day may come, as we hope it will never come, when a pretext will be found to pick a quarrel with us. If we fold our arms in our bosom now, the quarrel is sure to come off. If we prepare ourselves betimes and make no bones about doing so, they will think twice over there before the ocean, be it the eastern or the western, is crossed by a hostile fleet, ready to fall upon our shores and bring us to terms. By unpreparedness we invite the invader, by being prepared we hold him at home.

What forms and dimensions our preparation should assume is not for us to determine. Let the expert brain be engaged by our government to evolve the surest scheme. Ours is merely the duty to spur our legislators and executive to action. The citizen may have to give of his substance and of his time. It will be cheerfully given. The sooner it is given, the less will be required. The youth of the country must be trained in arms. Our arsenals must be brimful even as must our granaries. We must fortify our exposed shore. Our navy must be properly manned. We need a large supply of officers. In short, we must be prepared in military sense. And prepared we shall be for defensive purposes only. We are full satisfied with our place in the sun. We have no surplus population to send abroad. We rather welcome the immigrants, such as are thrifty and willing to share in our task of building up a true democracy. As these days have proved, we have plenty of labor for the stranger who, as experience has shown, in the briefest time ceases to be a stranger. We are a prosperous and generous nation. We toil for civilization and for the highest goods that come to man upon this earth. We cherish the heritage of the fathers. We shall do our utmost to live in peace with the nations of the world. But we say to them that we will not brook interference or aggression. We shall not imitate the military camps of Europe; our conditions simply do not require them. But we have the machinery, the resources, and the will to stand prepared as one man in defense of our homes, in defense of our liberties, in defense of American civilization.

SOLOMON SCHECHTER.

The passing away of the far-famed head of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, which occurred on Friday, November 19, was so sudden that his vast number of friends have scarcely had time to recover from the shock. Stricken in a class room where he had been doing duty for a sick colleague, he was taken to his residence; he rallied for a while, and then expired, his lips sealed by a divine kiss. Thus he entered upon the Sabbath of spiritual bliss to join those great men of the past whom he so dearly loved and whose deeds he so vividly related with his matchless pen. In the realm of the spirits there must have been joy; but here on earth we stood aghast, griefladen, sharing with his bereaved family the sense of orphaned loneliness.

Solomon Schechter was not a man who appealed to the masses. Had he possessed the gift of public speaking, his innate modesty would have recoiled from stooping to the devices of cheap oratory. Yet he repeatedly appeared before the public, and only recently there issued from the press a volume of addresses and short speeches, all of which were illumined by that inimitable lighter vein and that touch of humor for which he was famous. It is true, the finer points were a sealed book except to the few, but these few who were wont to gather on the occasions he graced by his presence enjoyed a rare intellectual treat. He shunned the irksome task of appearing to lead. He suffered others to do the rough work of conducting a meeting. Where the men with whom he worked seemed on the surface to guide and direct him, he in truth led them. He possessed the rare gift of the knowledge of human nature. He disdained the cheap popularity of the communal worker who counts success by the number of meetings he attends and the number of speeches he delivers. Nevertheless even the community in which he resided felt the force of his silent leadership. He was impatient of the tactics of the professional leader; yet none had a kindlier heart and a truer spirit of conciliation. By the sheer weight of intellectual superiority he won men over to his views. He had a far-sighted vision and with the sure tact of the statesman he forebore playing the politician.

His scholarly achievements placed him in the foremost ranks of that body of toilers in the republic of letters who enjoy world-fame. Like the typical Jewish scholar, he came from the East. A small village in Roumania was his birthplace. In Vienna and Berlin he pursued University studies. His great powers were developed in England, and when he first visited America some twenty years ago, his renown had been well established. A well-known picture shows him at work in the Cambridge Library poring over a mass of scraps of parchment which his wonderful sagacity had brought to light out of the darkness and oblivion of an Oriental synagogue. At home in all the branches of the great literature of his people, the discovery and identification of lost literary treasures ascended into biblical times came to him with ease. He was singularly prepared for his find. What he found, he had labored for. By far the greatest of his discoveries was in connection with the long lost Hebrew original of a book which the rabbis in a moment of forgetfulness included among the Scriptures. A whole literature grew up about this find, and there is no book or brochure treating of Ben Sira that fails to do honor to its first discoverer and editor. The Scriptures naturally command a wider interest. Here the Christian scholar has a concern equally with his Jewish colleague. In the stricter domain of Jewish literature of post-biblical times, in Talmud and Midrash, in history and theology he achieved successes which easily made of him the first spokesman in all the domains of Jewish lore. He died when his mind was occupied with a mass of publications which would have staggered a younger man.

He believed that true scholarship manifested itself in the study of ancient texts. How he mercilessly held up to scorn the labors of the mere compiler, or reporter, as he called him, the man who snugly makes use of the toil of others to dress it up in the garb of a popular book, with or without illustrations. Yet he was a master of English style and he will be remembered as the great Jewish theologian of our generation who knew how to present the spiritual content of Judaism in modern diction. None knew rabbinic theology better than he, none gave it so lasting a place in English literature as he. Whether we turn to his great book on the subject or to his minor studies and essays, everywhere is revealed a master mind, steeped in the knowledge of the past, abreast of the tendencies of the day.

Jewish scholarship has lost in him its prince, a giant of the Torah, Judaism its veritable rock in these days of whimsical changefulness. From his Epistles to the Jews of England through his Inaugural Address to his last utterance there breathes that love for Judaism, the Judaism that he knew so well, the Judaism that its own sons were ready to barter away for the vagaries of the hour, the Judaism that the outsider vilified and maligned with brazen impudence. His point of view was unequivocally Jewish. He warned and plead- and reasoned. He stood above the ed, he chided and scorned, he argued parties. He constituted himself the apostle of Catholic Israel, by which he meant a Judaism united, self-conscious, ready to weather all the storms of onslaught from without, a Judaism undivided within, insisting upon the essentials that bind the conflicting elements together. Some will nevertheless style him a conservative, the man of the middle party, who gave quarter neither to the right nor to the left. But his conservatism was of a stamp different from what ordinarily goes by that name. Suspected by the ultra-orthodox he was loved by the reformer whom he was least guilty of flattering. His work of cementing Judaism in America had scarcely begun when he was taken away. But the spark he ignited will continue to illumine our future on this continent. His influence will still work potently with us. Such a many-sided personality like his cannot be replaced. Many will toil where he alone with a happy epigram would have swayed the minds. He leave a void that cannot be filled.

Alive to the dangers of a chloroformed Judaism, a Judaism without God and the Word of God, he centered his efforts in the re-claiming of the Scriptures for the Jew. As a member of the Board of Bible Editors he did valuable service which his colleagues alone are in a position to treasure as a sacred memory, and it is safe to say that the new Translation will bear in many a passage the impress of his wonderful sense into the Jewish meaning of the Bible. Nearer his heart lay the project of an English commentary on the Bible done by Jewish scholars for the Jewish people. Let there be, he said, a Jewish liberalism, it will be something else than the Christion variety which is permeated with a contempt for all things Jewish. One volume has appeared, the rest will follow, and when they do follow, the merit belongs to Solomon Schechter. At the moment of his death he was busy corresponding with scholars to call into being the series of Jewish Classics made possible by the princely gift of the man who next to the family was the chief mourner at the bier of his friend. When that series shall have been launched, the name of Solomon Schechter will be associated with it. He planned it, he started it, he gave it direction and impetus. And many a younger man in the realm of letters will gratefully remember his keen fatherly interest and guidance. In all those achievements he built unto himself a monument more lasting than stone.

And yet he was farthest from the thought that he was erecting a monument for himself. What he did, he did for the sake of Israel. The Jewish people may well weep over the passing away of a defender of its rights and a believer in its destinies. And likewise will he be remembered as a noble citizen of his adopted country which he loved dearly and whose truly great men he was fond of cherishing. Peace be to this choice spirit, the gift of God in a generation, that almost forgot Him. Peace be to the restless scholar, peace to the truly human leader in Israel. Peace be to this great American Jew. Our heartfelt sympathies go out to his bereaved family. May solace come to them in the knowledge that their grief is shared by the whole household of Israel. His name will be linked with a chapter in the history of American Israel which has just but opened and the consummation of which will mark an era never to be forgotten.

DAVID M. PFAELZER.

On November 24, Mr. David M. Pfaelzer, of Chicago, assessor for Cook County, died at the age of sixty-three. Mr. Pfaelzer was a member of the school board for a number of years and three years ago he was elected to the board of assessors. Despite his many duties, he found time and much pleasure in devoting himself to Jewish matters and was particularly active in congregational work as well as in the work of the Order, of which he was an enthusiastic member.

SAMUEL HIRSCH CENTENARY.

Impressive services in honor of the centenary of the Rev. Dr. Samuel Hirsch, rabbi of Temple Keneseth Israel from 1866 to 1887, were held Sunday morning, November 7th, in Keneseth Israel Temple, Philadelphia, Pa. The Rev. Dr. Joseph Krauskopf delivered an introductory address and introduced the speakers. The oration was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Emil G. Hirsch and an address delivered by Rev. Dr. Gerson B. Levi, of Chicago.

GALICIAN JEWISH HOSTAGES IN RUSSIA.

The Russian government has appointed a commission to consider the advisability of releasing the hostages taken last year at Lemberg. It is stated on reliable authority that the question of their release will be decided in the affirmative. The same commission will have to consider the petitions of about a thousand Galician Jews transported to Nijni Novgorod and Perm, who are praying for their release and repatriation.

AMERICAN JEWISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The twenty-fourth annual meeting of the American Jewish Historical Society will be held in the City of Philadelphia, on Feb. 20 and 21, 1916. All persons intending to present papers at this meeting are requested to send the exact titles thereof to Mr. Albert M. Friedenberg, 38 Park Row, New York, N. Y., corresponding secretary, not later than Jan. 15th, 1916. Particular attention is directed to the fact that papers are not limited in treatment and subject-matter to American Jewish History, but that the object of the society includes the promotion of the study of Jewish History in general.

FRANK KAPLAN.

Mr. Frank Kaplan, one of the most public spirited of the younger Jewish men in McKeesport, was recently elected member of the Board of Education by a majority of over 2,000, he being the first member of the Jewish community to be thus honored by the electorate of the whole city.

Mr. Kaplan is active in congregational matters, having been president of Congregation B'nai Israel and was instrumental in organizing and maintaining the Sabbath School. In the B'nai B'rith he showed much interest and activity as a result of which he was elected and is a member of the General Committee of the Grand Lodge and has brought to this office the same enthusiasm which characterizes him in all Jewish service.

SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT OF THE I. O. B. B.

By Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee.

During the month the Social Service Department has devoted special attention to the problem of paroled and released prisoners. Unless provided with work, they will surely drift back into evil ways. But who will employ these men? Twenty-one business houses were visited last week before an employer could be found to take one on trial. Why should we be so unwilling to help? They are not all criminals. A prominent attorney estimates that 25 per cent of the men in Illinois prisons were convicted because of incompetent lawyers. Others are victims of circumstance. Yet, when a man leaves prison he receives slight encouragement from society to live a clean life. This is un-Jewish, and unworthy of the twentieth century. The average Jew is no criminal, and common sense urges to encourage men, who have fallen once, that they live honorable lives in the future.

The crux of this problem is to secure them employment. To accomplish this, a committee of B'nai B'rith men near every penitentiary in the country will be formed, to secure employment whenever a Jew completes his term or is paroled. In several parts of this country, Jewish agencies are already performing such a labor of love, and with them the I. O. B. B. will gladly work in co-operation. But the undertaking should be nation wide, that every Jew now in prison may be cheered at the prospect of another chance in life. The task of reforming them is not easy. We must expect many men to backslide, but re-establishing a man on his feet is so glorious an achievement that we must tax our energies to prosper this work.

The Big Brother movement has been successfully organized in Chicago with the following temporary officers: Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, president; Mr. William J. Mack, vice-president, and Mr. Benjamin Gordon, secretary-treasurer. A number of I. O. B. B. men have already signified their willingness to take younger Brothers and proper arrangements are now being made in co-operation with the Bureau of Personal Service of Chicago, which will furnish the boys in need of Big Brothers. A boy of fourteen, who ran away from a home of shame and improper surroundings in October would today be in a reform school had not a Big Brother volunteered his services. The lad now dwells in a private home, is the ranking pupil in his public school class and makes almost enough money from a paper route after school to defray his living expenses. Big Brothers will greatly lessen juvenile delinquency and save many Jewish boys to lives of future usefulness and honor.

INTERVIEW OF MINISTER M. BARK IN LONDON.

The correspondent of the "Jewish Chronicle," of London, reports that M. Bark's published utterances in London on the Jewish question have aroused keen interest in Russia. The anti-Semitic press has not derived much pleasure from his statements. The important Petrograd reactionary organ, the "Goloss Russi," made a strong attack on M. Bark, characterized the interview granted to Mr. Appleton as an insult to Russia, and declared that M. Bark spoke for himself and not for the government or the country. In its opinion, the alliance with "Democratic England" and "Republican France" imposed no obligations on Russia as far as the internal affairs of the country were concerned. The Progressive and Jewish organs took a different view. They insisted that the government was responsible for the statements made by M. Bark, but they complained that so far little had been achieved in improving the position of the Jews.

MAURICE HIRSCH.

Mr. Maurice Hirsch, of Houston, Texas, was named by Mayor Campbell to succeed Henry J. Dannenbaum who was recently appointed District Court Judge, as a member and chairman of the Civil Service Commission of that city. Mr. Hirsch is an active Ben B'rith and president of the Young Lawyers' Association.

M. J. LEWIS.

Mr. M. J. Lewis, secretary of the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was honored by re-election as alderman of his city. In view of the fact that the ward from which Brother Lewis was re-elected has only thirty-five Jewish voters and that he was elected by a vote of 510, to 125 for his opponent, is evidence of the high standing of Brother Lewis in his community.

THE JEWISH QUESTION IN POLAND.

Views Expressed by the President of the Supreme Polish National Committee.

The "Dziennik Narodowy," a paper issued at Petrikau, recently published an article by the President of the Supreme Polish National Committee, knight v. Jaworski, giving his views on the Jewish question in Poland. The writer of that article deems the proper solution of that question to be one of the most important problems for the regulation of the internal conditions of the country. The Russian government had intentionally accentuated the Jewish question in Poland by the compulsory settlement, on a large scale, of great numbers of foreign Russian Jews. Mr. Jaworski writes:

"If we are to undertake the regulation of the Polish-Jewish relations, now very much strained on the one hand by abnormal political and economic conditions and on the other hand by demagogic-nationalistic agitation, we must insist and maintain that such regulation cannot be made otherwise than along the lines of the generally accepted European basic principles. We must adhere to the old Polish traditions in relation to the Jewish question, to the tradition of the Czacki's and the Wielopolski's; we must devote our best energies to the assimilation of the Jewish population and gaining the good will of that population in the interest of our common country. This aim can only be attained if the Jews are granted absolute and complete legal equality, if conditions are created for the normal economic existence of the Jewish people and if they be offered the possibility of extricating themselves from their present desperate economic situation, mainly by permitting them to share and take part in all civic employment and work. The anti-Semitic solution of that question, no matter in what form it be proposed, can only endanger the common interests of the country. It is only by a clear and distinct assurance that the reborn and rejuvenated Poland will not tolerate any anti-Semitic policy and will hold itself aloof from all and every chicanery and oppression can we be enabled to lay a solid foundation for the assimilation of the Jewish masses."

In the conclusion Mr. Jaworski states: "On the other hand we must firmly insist that the Jews become loyal citizens of the state, that they devote themselves to the welfare and the best interests of the country. This, however, cannot be expected of them unless access to all sources of culture and prosperity be freely and unconditionally opened up to them."

A CHANUKAH APPEAL FOR PALESTINE.

When you celebrate the Chanukah Festival, and remember the deeds of the Maccabees, think of the land for which the Maccabees fought and died; think of Palestine!

This land—the land of Israel—is now in great distress. The Jewish settlement there, with its colonies, schools and Yeshibahs, with its cities and institutions, is threatened with destruction. Cut off from the rest of the world, with commerce paralyzed and industry at a standstill, eighty thousand Jews in Palestine face starvation—unless we help them.

The Palestinian Jews went to the land of Israel not for themselves. They strove to create a Jewish center in the old land of which all Jews would be proud. They built schools, colonies, roads, redeemed the waste places, revived the Hebrew language not for their own personal welfare, but in order that the Jewish people might possess a home. They were building a home for the Jewish people when the war came and cut the ground from under their feet.

They are now in want. They cannot appeal to the Jews of Europe, who have distress of their own to relieve. Unless you relieve them, they will starve and this fine Jewish center will be destroyed.

The Provisional Zionist Committee, of which Louis D. Brandeis is chairman, succeeded, with the help of the Jews of America, in maintaining the Jewish settlement in Palestine during the first year of the war. We are now facing another year of war.

What are you going to do to carry Palestine Jewry through the winter? Are you going to give generously to the PALESTINE Emergency Fund of the Provisional Committee?

The treasurer of the Provisional Committee is Mr. E. W. Lewin-Epstein, 44 East 23rd Street, New York.

Draw your check today to his order for a substantial sum, which will be sent to Palestine to save the Jewish Settlement in the old land of Israel.

PROVISIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE FOR GENERAL ZIONIST AFFAIRS,
LOUIS D. BRANDEIS,
Chairman.

November 24, 1915.

TESTIMONIAL DINNER TO PRESIDENT HERMAN ASHER OF DISTRICT NO. 1.

The most important social event in B'nai B'rith circles of the Metropolitan District was the dinner tendered to President Herman Asher of District Grand Lodge No. 1 by Jordan Lodge No. 15, of which the distinguished brother is a member. The banquet was held at the Hotel Majestic on Thanksgiving eve, and was largely attended. While the dinner was primarily given by Jordan Lodge, it proved in the end to be a District affair, as the dinner was attended by the leading members of the lodges generally. The affair was taken cognizance of by the Order in the form of a most gracious telegram received from the head of the Order, President Adolf Kraus. The President's telegram, which was loudly applauded and sincerely appreciated by the large gathering present, read as follows:

Herman Asher,
Hotel Majestic, New York.

The unselfish interest you take in the Order is such that I envy those who are so fortunate as to be able to attend the affair given in you honor this evening. I extend to you my best wishes and congratulations on the esteem in which you are held by those who know you best.
Adolf Kraus.

Other Districts sent greetings, while Brother Julius I. Peyser, past president of District No. 5, represented his District in person, and in an eloquent address referred to his meeting President Asher for the first time at the White House when Brother Asher came from New York to join the B'nai B'rith delegation to protest against the un-American discriminatory immigration legislation.

After the sumptuous banquet marked by a flow of good-fellowship and a feast of reason, toastmaster David Kraus presented to President Asher in the name of Jordan Lodge a beautiful gold watch as a token of affection and esteem in which he is held by his colleagues and friends. The toasts of the evening were highly eulogistic of President Asher's earnest, unselfish devotion to B'nai B'rith ideals and loyalty to the cause of Israel and humanity generally. The order of speakers on the program was as follows:

David Kraus, toastmaster.

Sandford J. Friedlander, president Jordan Lodge No. 15.

Joseph Rosenzweig, second vice-president District No. 1.

Joseph Levenson, chairman Intellectual Advancement Committee, District No. 1.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, past president District No. 1.

Joseph Ullmann, past president District No. 1.

Charles Hartman, member Executive Committee.

Maurice P. Davidson, chairman Committee on Law, District No. 1.

Grace by Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, secretary District No. 1.

President Asher responded in a very earnest and eloquent manner. Among other things, he said: "I have often met men who asked me, 'What do you get out of the B'nai B'rith? What return do you get for the time and energy you give to its work?' Perhaps my answer has not often satisfied my inquirers, but to me it has always seemed sufficient, and deep down in my heart I have ever felt repaid, overpaid. The precious friendships I have made; the honors which have been lavished upon me; the realization that I have been a factor, however insignificant, in this holy cause, and that I have been privileged to do a share, however small, in its great work, have seemed to me to be a more than adequate recompense for the little I have done. To you, Brother Kraus and your associates who have done so much to make this occasion successful, and to you, Ladies and Gentlement, who have honored me with your presence, it seems a weak and feeble thing to merely say, I thank you, but my thanks, while the least, are yet the most that I can offer, and I ask you to accept them with the deep and earnest assurance that they spring from a heart overflowing with appreciation and in the innermost corner of which your kindness and this occasion will be treasured for many and many a year."

The banquet was followed by dancing and the large, brilliant gathering did not disperse till the wee hours in the morning.

THE RUSSIAN SYNOD AND JEWISH OFFICERS.

The Ministry of War has requested the Holy Synod to pronounce its opinion on the question of the promotion of Jewish soldiers to the rank of commissioned officers. The Missionary Council decided to inform the Ministry that such promotion was undesirable, as the attendance of officers at church parades was indispensable, and Jews could not participate in these services.

From Philo to Akiba

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

III.

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

The first two centuries of the current era meant for the Jewish people a struggle for its very existence. The kingdom of the Greeks, the fourth beast in the vision of Daniel, had itself fallen before the new colossus of Rome. There had appeared those mighty dictators who trod down the great and the petty nations of the slumbering East. Egypt and Syria and the far-away Parthians felt the power of their terrible, irresistible onslaught. Palestine once more as again and again in the past and again and again in the succeeding periods down to our own day became the battle-ground of East and West, and it was a far-gone conclusion that the victory would be with the West. Rome, the proud conqueror of Greece, had itself internally and spiritually been vanquished by the schools of Athens, and in the East even under Roman government Hellenic culture was paramount. Palestine had at one time risen in revolt against the Greek spirit and in Jerusalem the Lord's altar had replaced the high-place of Zeus. But in the times of Gamaliel and of course much earlier Greek wisdom held sway in the aristocratic circles of Judea. The conflict of cultures was on again. It brought on the war which ended disastrously for Jewish independence under Vespasian and Titus; the flames burst out again later under Trajan and Hadrian. Still acuter was the struggle in the diaspora. The bloody riots were of minor consideration. Of far greater consequence and import were the spiritual clashes which well-nigh submerged the Jewish identity in the lands of dispersion. At the center Judaism was strong to offer mighty resistance, and it emerged triumphant. In the periphery it was naturally weaker, and were it not for the new impulses that originated in Palestine it might have succumbed there.

In tracing the history of this momentous struggle it is well to select a few outstanding Jewish types embodying in themselves the currents and the cross-currents of the times. The oldest of them all is Philo. The Egyptian community of which he was the towering figure had at an early time become detached from the mother country. Intercourse with it had grown rarer. The upper classes of Jewry had become Hellenized. They lived in an atmosphere of their own. The Hebrew tongue was understood by the fewest. The Scriptures were read in Greek. For lack of the watchful eye of the central authority, fresh writings, a great many composed from the start in the idiom of Hellas, were incorporated in the body of Holy Writ. The philosophic schools dominated the Alexandrian intellectuals of Jewry. Those on the top were lax in their observances. Philo remonstrated against this laxity. He himself kept up the ceremonies. He conformed; but spiritually he had emancipated himself from observances which to him meant nothing in themselves. He honestly persuaded himself that the teachings of the divine Plato had been anticipated by the divine law-giver. Maimonides long after him toiled to square Aristotle with Moses. Both boldly operated with the sacred texts to effect a harmony which could be but seeming. Maimonides, however, was prevented from the final plunge by his deep Jewish consciousness proceeding from his great learning in that vast literature that had grown up since the canon was sealed. Philo was a Greek first and a Jew in the second place. He divested the Scriptures of their plain sense. He made the sacred writers speak a language which was foreign to them. He grafted upon Judaism strange theories which long after had a fascination for Jewish mystics. He played with ideas, innocent in themselves disastrous in their effect. Notions, abstract in character, were raised to the dignity of concrete personalities. He put God so far away that to bring Him back he needed all sorts of go-betweens. And when the worshippers of the Nazarene were in need of a formula they reverted to the Alexandrian Jew. The Church cherished his writings; he became almost their first Church-father. Yet he had suffered himself to be taken away from his contemplative solitude to head a legation on behalf of the Jewish community. Little did the Roman emperor suspect that the teachings of this humble Jew [illegible] in an altered garb be preached in [illegible] city by those who became [illegible] to the Roman pontiffs. For [illegible] Judaism Philo in spite of [illegible] proved a snare. For us he [illegible] detached limb.

The Jew of the Egyptian diaspora was outdone by another from the Asiatic corner of the dispersion. Saul, or Paul, of Tarsus claimed to have sat at the feet of Gamaliel. What he absorbed was Jewish dialects by means of which he proceeded to reason himself out of Judaism. His home training and associations proved the stronger ingredient. He, no less than Philo, was a great religious personality, but the Jewish consciousness was still weaker in him. He knew less of the wisdom of the philosophers; but he knew the people better. He saw around him all sorts of Western mysteries and Oriental cults. He found a civilization in dissolution. The Hellenism he was acquainted with was permeated with Oriental systems of crude beliefs. The crucified Nazarine appealed to his imagination. He made use of the nascent schism and transformed it into a new religion. He was sure the fall of the Jewish state meant the absorption of the Jew. Nationalism meant nothing to him. The religion of his people, he thought, might be saved for the world. Radical that he was, he cast overboard the distinctive ceremonies of Judaism, that which he called law. He linked himself to the prophets. He believed to go to the core of Judaism when he emphasized its ethical teachings. He succeeded too well on the periphery. He traveled far and wide to win Jews and Gentiles to his view and to fuse them in the new Church. What has become of his creation we know. With the ascendency of the Church he founded, Judaism was reduced to great straits. The era of Christian persecutions for the Jew set in which, alas, is not yet over.

Josephus was neither a Philo nor a Paul. Religion with him was a matter he dealt lightly with. He probably was honest enough in his convictions about the futility of making war upon Rome. He assumed leadership in Galilee and betrayed his people's cause. He accepted a stipend from his people's conqueror and tormentor. He basked in the sunshine of the imperial court. Comfort was to him a necessity. He believed that the Jew might accept his destiny and make peace with Rome. He was and remained, however, a race Jew, the prototype of many a renegade who after deserting his brethren becomes their apologete before the world. His services as a defender of his people shall not be forgotten. He did strive zealously to set Jew and Judaism in a good light. At best he was our friend at a distance, and Heaven guard us against such friends who espouse our cause but refuse to be of us. Such men, as for example, Disraeli, in the nineteenth century, will prove useful to us. But we should prefer to have them with us.

Johanan ben Zakkai was prelate. He also sought to make peace with Rome. His leadership of Palestine Jewry, bereft of nationhood and Temple, it must be accorded, proved beneficial to the cause of Judaism. There were problems of adjustment to new conditions that had to be met. He met them resolutely. He it is who laid the foundations of the Judaism that survived the fall of the state. Jabneh and the house of study were saved. The Torah proved the bulwark of the Jew. It made for a Jewish consciousness, for distinctiveness. In his Judaism there was a happy mixture of national segregation and of spiritual loftiness. Judaism became under his hands a heritage, a thing of the past that by resolute means was to be perpetuated as it stood. Like Daniel of old, he was satisfied to look for salvation from the clouds. The end would come, but it would not be of the Jew's own making. Live in the present as you lived in the past, and the future will take care of itself. Jewish national consciousness and the hope of restoration were transferred to the Prayer Book. There Jewish yearnings were permitted free expression, and there only. The people might for centuries to come sigh and groan, but the old prophecies were kept fresh in its memory to offer solace, and the comforting preachers never failed to sustain and to counsel patience. Here we have the type of Jew of the center, and with him was the victory. The chief rabbis of today are his spiritual successors. His spirit is still with us.

Akiba was a schoolman like Johanan, but no prelate. Here we have the type of the Jewish scholar who refuses communal office. His work was to gather disciples and to build up the study of Jewish lore. Upon his efforts rests that great Jewish literature elaborated in the schools of Galilee and Babylon, of France and Spain, of Germany and Poland. He witnessed the rise of Christianity. He saw the dangers of submersion. The Greek language could not be banished, much as Rabbi Judah the Pious, later on battled against it. He gave the Greek Jews a new translation of the Scriptures prepared under his supervision. He came of the people and rose to distinction slowly and by dint of hard privation. And he remained deeply attached to his people. Where others counseled submission to conditions, he acknowledged the Messiahship of Simeon of Cozeba. The Hadrianic war, which proved the dividing point between Judaism and Christianity, was largely of his making. The patriots remained within and fought and died, the lukewarm ethicals stepped out. In the end he suffered martyrdom himself. His was a Judaism harmonious and one, without reservation and without division, and his soul expired in ecstacies of joy that it came to him to show by deed his profession of the One God.

This meagre sketch I hope to elaborate some day in full. But I have sufficiently indicated the point of view. The types are still with us today. Which type will prevail the future will tell.

JEWS IN THE SERVICE OF GREAT BRITAIN.

The London "Jewish World" estimates from best available sources the number of Jews who are serving in the English forces and the proportion they hold to the number of Jewish subjects at home and abroad.

Jewish population in British Isles	245,500
Jewish population in India........	21,000
Jewish population in So. Africa...	46,000
Jewish population in East Africa..	50
Jewish population in Canada......	77,000
Jewish population in Australasia..	20,000
Jewish population in other British possessions	2,000
Total Jewish subjects of the Empire	411,550

From this total, in estimating the number available out of which soldiers and sailors can be enlisted, we have to deduct the foreign-born who are not accepted for the forces. These are natives mainly of Russia and Russo-Poland, with a considerable number from Galicia and other parts of Austria, and a lesser number from Germany, chiefly from Prussian Poland. These aggregate, it is computed to 200,000, so that the number of the Jewish population of the Empire from which soldiers and sailors can be enlisted is approximatelcy 211,550.

The estimated number of Jews serving in H. M. forces is upward of 17,000, although for reasons into which we need not enter many have joined without recording themselves as Jews. The estimate, however, is based upon figures available to the Jewish chaplains' office and upon the number actually recorded in the "Jewish Chronicle" honor lists. This would give a return (roughly) of 8 per cent serving of the total available population. Assuming these estimates to be correct, or anywhere near correct, they show that the percentage of the available Jewish population that is serving is much higher than that of the general population of the empire. If, however, the percentage derived is for any of many possible reasons placed too high there is still room for a very wide margin of correction which would yet show that the Jewish subjects of the Crown are amply doing their bit. It will be seen that upon the basis of these figures Jews constitute about a 240th part of H. M. forces, and it is interesting to observe that this "contemptible little army" has produced three "V. C.'s" ten "D. C. M.'s" three "D. S. O.'s" three Military Crosses, and has contributed to the casualty lists some 300 killed and 700 wounded.

HEBREW POLITICAL CLUBS.

The "Hebrew political club" seems to be growing and thriving, much to the disgust of respectable Jews. The chief rabbi of London is investigating a case in which a synagogue prayer on Yom Kippur for the success of British arms was turned into a hip, hip, hurrah demonstration.

In a Newark, N. J., synagogue, a candidate for alderman was "endorsed."

In Cleveland, before election, the secretary of a fraternal lodge sent out notices to the members, inviting them to "come and hear our candidate for mayor." The secretary took it upon himself, without even consulting the other members, to turn over the entire lodge to "our candidate for mayor."

Jews are not in the habit of being led or driven.

The "Hebrew political club" is an abomination, a nuisance, worse than the "Hebrew comedian," and it is the duty of every respectable Jew to fight it to a standstill.—Jewish Independent.

COMMUNICATED.

Green Bay, Wis., Oct. 23, 1915.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:

I read a couple of articles of late in the News wherein the authors are endeavoring to find new functions for the B'nai B'rith to perform, and, of course, each one likes to infuse his ideal in the organization, to give new life to it.

It seems a little restlessness is creeping into our camp—we are not satisfied with the results of our labor—and when we read the reports of our officers and heads of committees and sum same up and find that it takes all the time and energy our great leaders can get together and all the money our rich men are willing to contribute to our cause to just merely bandage the wounds. which were inflicted upon us in some parts of the world, or at best to avoid repetitions of such calamities in other parts of the globe and that this is repeated every year and we are no nearer accomplishing anything permanently than we were ten or twenty years ago, we cannot help but feel uneasy and ask ourselves the question, "Can we ever expect to accomplish anything that will be permanent and that will be universal?"

Of course, the Order does a great deal of philanthropic work in a most scientific manner, but other orders are doing equally as good work along those lines. An order composed of Israel's best sons and with perfect organization it possesses, we would expect considerable more. It seems that instead of bringing in new functions for this order to perform, as the authors suggest, let us develop it upon its own plans. Since this order is made up from the better class of Jews from every community, its relation to Jewish affairs ought to be the same as philosophy is to science.

Whenever an idea is advanced for the betterment of a large portion of the Jews, regardless of which part of the globe it originated in, or how the originators think on other subjects, not pertaining to the idea itself, the B'nai B'rith should investigate, and if found reasonable foster and develop same.

One of these opportunities now knocks at our door and that is the Zionist movement. It looks good upon the face of it. Really, why should our organization every two years or so impose on our good-natured friends with petitions to keep the doors of this country open for our persecuted brethren, when it is possible (by real hard work, of course)—but it is possible—to get a land of our own where we can invite them to a home of their own? Does it not appear to be the duty of the Great Jewish Organization to investigate this idea and investigate it impartially like the philosopher would, and not be satisfied with half-hearted sayings that we can never get it or we are further away from it now than we ever were?

By joint concentrated efforts a great deal can be accomplished nor would the philosopher take into consideration the fear of some of us that our neighbors would not think us loyal citizens if we put some of our energy in working for another land, as long as we harm no one and do the right thing for our brethren, they will only admire us for it.

Our God calls us a nation, but some of our modern prophets renounce us as such. At any rate the philosopher would not take this into consideration, but investigate it from all its angles thoroughly and scientifically and if found worthy to give its support to the idea and work for it.

Our Talmudists say that "since the destruction of our Temple the prophecy is given to the simpleton," etc. Well, I want to be the prophet long enough to say that we will live to see the day when the "Independent Order of B'nai Brith" will form an important part of our dreamer, Dr. Herzl's Society of Jews, as there is not another Jewish order more fit and better equipped to perform the function than our beloved order, "The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. WM. SAUBER.

RUSSIAN JEWS BECOME TURKISH SUBJECTS.

The Jewish correspondent of the "Frankfurter Zeitung" reports that 20,000 Russian Jews have become Turkish subjects since the war broke out and that the Turkish government has absolved them from all taxes incident upon their naturalization.

FLIGHT OF BESSARABIAN JEWS.

A large number of Bessarabian Jews have suffered greatly by expulsion from their homes and cities. They sought refuge in Rumania but were denied admission. In Bulgaria they met with a similar reception. Finally the Bulgarian Jews succeeded in obtaining from the government permission for these unfortunates to settle in particular places in Bulgaria upon condition that they should not become a burden to the state.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, Nov. 22, 1915.

The hand of death has been heavy upon us. It has removed from the land of the living four men who, each in his own way, are known to their fellows as men of repute. The world is the poorer for their loss. Two were soldiers and the war cut them off in their prime; two were scholars and our mourning for them is only less keen. In the case of one we or the First Lodge of England are specially concerned, for he was one of our fellowship, Brother Ellis Paiba, in the beautiful words of the old Hebrew prayer, has gone to his eternal rest. Only thirty-six years of age he had a career of usefulness that was above the average. His principal interest was in our youth of Whitechapel, and ever since the Hutcheson House Club was started he was its heart and soul. And the boys loved him, for he had a part of that rare gift—a sunny temperament. We were particularly glad to have him in the lodge, and well do we remember the last occasion he was with us. He had just been commissioned lieutenant, and before joining his regiment in the country he was able to attend a lodge meeting. We had a house-supper that night and the chief Rabbi of Serbia was our guest of the evening. He spoke to us of the Jews in Serbia, speaking first in Hebrew and then in German. But before using the latter tongue he jocularly apologized to the Brother in the King's uniform for using an enemy language and as jocularly Ellis Paiba saluted in token of pardon readily granted. We shall not see him more; he fell in Gallipoli after only two weeks in the trenches. We mourn his loss as an unselfish character who gave of his best to others; we mourn his loss particularly as a brother, one of the younger brethren who would normally have carried on the tradition of our Order.

* * *

Likewise in Gallipoli another well-known Jew met his death—Captain Robert Sebag-Montefiore. He was wounded and taken to hospital and there succumbed to his wounds. The shock of the news was all the more keen inasmuch as it was first announced that the hurt was not serious. But though he was not of our band of brethren, he was a brother Jew whose record likewise was exceedingly honorable. Everybody has heard of the Sebag-Montefiores, one of our oldest and best-known families. Their country seat at Ramsgate is the house of their kinsman, Sir Moses Montefiore; and the traditions of that grand old man have been honorably maintained by his successors. Robert was educated at Balliol College in Oxford, and there had the reputation of a quiet student who though coming of a wealthy family had no "side" about him. There was no need for him to choose a career; so he was called to the bar and devoted himself to public work. He began with the London County Council, to which he was elected in the Conservative interest after a hard electioneering struggle. He has shown his capabilities in admirable fashion, especially in connection with the educational work of the Council. Be it remembered that the London County Council looks after the education of this vast metropolis, and Robert Sebag-Montefiore won golden opinions for his ability. Perhaps he had a natural liking for children, a liking which he shared with his brother Charles, whose fund of sympathy for boys is proverbial all over our East End. Everybody there knows Mr. "Charlie" Sebag-Montefiore (the diminutive is significant), and not a few knew "Bob" too. He was always proud of his Jewish origin. On one occasion during the last parliamentary election, he was a candidate at Hull, and his opponent attempted to make capital out of the fact that Sebag-Montefiore was a Jew. But the reply "brought down the house," and though Sebag-Montefiore was not elected that time, it was foretold that he would get in for Hull on some subsequent occasion. He has been nursing that constituency ever since, but alas! his place will know him no more. He was one of the most promising and influential of our younger communal "leaders" and his death is a sad loss to Anglo-Jewry.

* * *

Philosophers are bound to make the best of it all. But will the world learn the horror, the utter wickedness of war? But for the war these two promising lives might have reached their normal span to the advantage of mankind. There are many more like them. There are others, too, in what we technically term enemy countries. * * * And what for? We recall Southey's poem which ought to be circulated all over Europe just now. "What they fought each other for I could not well make out." * * * One cannot help harboring thoughts of this kind as one dwells on the cutting off of men like Ellis Paiba and Charles Sebag-Montefiore.

Death is always awe-inspiring; at any rate in the present conditions it is possible to draw a distinction between natural death and death in the war. A natural death was the lot of one of our foremost scientists in England who was also a Jew. Professor Raphael Meldola died quite suddenly last Tuesday at the age of sixty-six. His stock was Sephardi; his grandfather indeed was the famous Haham (or Chief Rabbi) Dr. Raphael Meldola. Since 1885 he was Professor of Chemistry at the Finsbury Technical College, one of the constituent colleges of the University of London. His speciality was coal tar products and dyes. "Meldola's Blue" is well known in the world of science and technology. In communal affairs he took no prominent part; nevertheless he was always a silent observer with no little sympathy. In 1911 he became president of the Maccabeans, and has held that office ever since.. He too was one of those Jews who, distinguished in the great world, were always proud of their race.

These three were ours—Anglo-Jewry's sons. But there is still another loss to mourn, and here we join with our American brethren. It was with keen sorrow that we read this morning of the death of Solomon Schechter. That great man was certainly yours, but we gave him to you. Wherever Jewish scholarship is valued and appreciated, there the death of Solomon Schechter will come like the ringing of funeral bells. Scholars are fairly numerous in Jewry; one could mention a score offhand, but scholars who are also men of genius are rare; and Schechter was one of these. His very personal idiosyncracies stamped him as original, but when you went to his books you were assured of it. We believe his first volume of "Studies in Judaism" will long remain a classic. The second, though good, of course, did not come up to the first. The latter was his first-born; it contains expressions of his many-sided genius—his scholarship, his humor, his sympathy, his capacity for fine writing. One cannot think of his equal. And that is why the grief at his loss is so poignant. We can only wish the Jewish Theological Seminary of America a worthy successor.

* * *

As far as our own community is concerned it will be one of the greatest blunders recorded in its history that Schechter was ever allowed to leave it. If sufficient good-will had been shown he might never have gone from England. Not that we grudge him to America. But it does seem significant that some of our best men we have allowed to go from us—a Schechter, a Joseph Jacobs, a Harry Lewis, a Moses Hyamson; and those we have imported do not seem to have turned out the success that we expected. Perhaps it is the atmosphere of England. It may be, though that reason hardly appears conclusive. We must have been unfortunate in our choice. Or perhaps it is both reasons combined. Our lay "leaders" (save the mark!), are English born and bred; some among them are very capable men, intelligent, far-sighted, wise. But they do not seem to be able to grasp Jewish questions in a broad way. It is the evil tradition of the last era; let us call it the Adler era. The personalities of that age, rich in interest, not without scholarship or charm, are no more; but the atmosphere of the epoch still continues among our lay leaders. Our religious leaders are foreign bred. That is no criticism. But the point is that two standpoints come into conflict not always without a jarring note. The struggle has become acute ine one of our institutions, in one moreover, where it ought by rights to be least expected—in our Theological Training College. Jews' College has a long, dull history behind it. It has been what its founders intended it should be. It has turned out average ministers, who, measured by the standard of first-rate Jewish theological colleges, did not quite come up to the mark. Some have continued their studies after they left the college and their achievements only show how much the college neglected to make the most of them. Some again who were above the average in gifts would not consent to remain in the calling for which the college was supposed to prepare them. They left and are now, many of them, adorning other professions. But be that as it may, when a few years ago it was necessary to fill the office of Principal, an honest attempt was made to start a new regime. It was then that Schechter should have been kept; then that his modern epistles to the Hebrews should have been listened to; then that the leaders of Anglo-Jewry should have shown their wisdom, if wisdom was with them. But, no; nothing of all this happened. Schechter went; his message with its "Lord, forgive them, for they know nothing!" was treated as a passing theme, and feelers were sent out in all directions to pave the way for a noble future for Jews' College. Negotiations dragged on; at length, Dr. Adolph Buchler, of Vienna, was appointed, and all the world waited. The world had reason to wait. Dr. Buchler was renowned as a ripe and gifted scholar everywhere; one almost expected an annual treatise from his pen. It was something to look forward to; for whatever he touched he adorned. He was moreover a man of pronounced views and not one of those who faltered in championing what he considered right. In a word, a strong man, a man who might have made Jews' College worthy of its sister institutions. He came and almost at once a change crept over the atmosphere of the college. There certainly was a great deal to make good, and Dr. Buchler appeared to be determined to succeed. Yet somehow the college authorities did not seem to show much understanding of the needs of the moment. Who ever heard of a college principal being kept occupied with all manner of petty things that a moderately paid secretary could well have seen to? Yet such was the case. Dr. Buchler had no time left for research; the college authorities, so it appears to the observer, seemed to regard their Principal as a kind of superior "dominee." Before long, too, cantankerousness entered into the board room meetings. A new Chief Rabbi came to England and some of us hoped that he would be able to pour oil on the troubled waters. The oil he did pour out was of the kind that made the fire blaze up still more fiercely. All tact, all forbearance, all patience, all desire to give and take appeared to have vanished. Today if you mention Jews' College, people shrug their shoulders significantly. And the worst of it is that every one seems to have forgotten the business of the college. The end in view is to train ministers worthy of the Anglo-Jewish community; the college authorities appear to give the impression of being busily occupied defending their honor, or quixotically consolidating an English point of view. In fine, just as Nero fiddled while Rome burned, so in London it would seem the Jews' College authorities wrangle while their college goes to rack and ruin. It is a curious fact, but the history of this institution in the last few years records every species of error and wrong-headedness. An excellent principal was available; the staff was reported strong; students were beginning to come in and the future was rosy. Well might we of Anglo-Jewry have said as did our ancient prophet: "What could have been done more to my Vineyard. that I have not done in it? Wherefore when I locked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?"

* * *

The truth is that the present in Anglo-Jewry is the Twilight of the Gods—"Goetterdaemmerung." The old traditions are dying; the old points of view are sinking out of sight. A new generation has arisen, knocking loudly at the door, demanding admission. Younger men are now matured; they want to guide the destinies of the community. But as always the old and the new are at grips, and while the struggle goes on the world gets out of joint. So it is now in Anglo-Jewry. That is one reason why the London Lodge should be specially alert. Even if it does not actually obtain some of the reins of power it will at least be able to influence public opinion in the sense of the Order's motto. The war, as it will be a dividing line in the lives of individuals, will also make a landmark in the history of communities. Anglo-Jewry after the war will hardly be quite the same as before. One can only hope that it will be a stronger, more effective, hardier Anglo-Jewry than in the pre-bellum period. Brotherly love and harmony may even yet be found at Jews' College; and the men we have we shall retain, recognizing their abilities, paying deference to their worth, giving encouragement to the best within them. The death of Schechter, of America's Schechter, should lead to healthy reflection.

* * *

Meanwhile the old is still with us, and part of that old is Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, who celebrated his seventieth birthday today. The Rothschilds are and have been a tower of strength. Their only fault is that they are of a past generation. Yet that is but in the nature of things. Nevertheless everybody's good wishes will go out to "Mr. Leopold," who is literally a "prince of benefactors." Many men have done charitably, it may be said of him, but thou excellest them all. The "Jewish Chronicle" has put into execution a tactful scheme for making a presentation to Mr. de Rothschild. It is organizing a collection to hand over to him on his birthday for him to do as he thinks best with. Perhaps he will devote it to the fund that is being raised for the wretched Jewish sufferers in the Russian war zone. Here the appeal is on a large scale; on opening the German papers one finds a similarly large appeal for the same object. The "Berliner Tageblatt" has a half-page advertisement signed by representative Jewish bodies, including the Grossloge fuer Deutschland, asking for funds for the Russian Jews. The irony of it is the common bond on the one hand and the political separation on the other. Truly we are a wonderful people.

* * *

Certainly recruiting is proceeding apace and Jews are not in any wise behind. This is the message that the Chief Rabbi sent to the "Times" Recruiting Supplement, a general message: "None can now be so blind as not to see that our existence as an Empire—our presence on this planet as a force for liberty, justice and humanity—is today in deadly peril. And I envy not the man, able-bodied and free, who hesitates to range himself against his country's mighty foe. Be of good courage and let us play the men for our people and once more we shall see that, 'whatever may be the adventures of war, England is always certain to win one battle—the last.'" And this was his message specially intended for Jews: "In this solemn crisis of our nation's life when our beloved country is calling upon her children to fight her righteous cause, all my Jewish brethren will, I am sure, fully realize the supreme duty of the hour. Once more we will prove that the old Maccabean spirit is still alive among us. We will offer our lives to defend Great Britain's ideals of justice and humanity. In ever larger numbers we will continue to join the Army of our King." It is being satisfactorily answered.

There are two corrections I should like to add in this place. Our friend and Brother, Dr. Joseph Hochman, has not yet enlisted, though report has it that his intention is to do so. He has at present entered himself as a law student. The second rectification refers to the lack of Jewish military chaplains. The best authorities are agreed that while Austria has always made provision for Jewish Chaplains to the military forces, Germany has not. The other day, however, we came across a reference to a "Feldrabbiner." This looks as though the authorities in Germany are mending their ways. It may be, of course, part of a policy of general conciliation. If it is, it is devoutly to be hoped that it will last even beyond the war. It does seem strange that the German authorities should appoint Jews to Chairs at the Warsaw University, while refusing to appoint them to Chairs in Germany itself. It is to be hoped that this disability will vanish when the war is over. It is to be hoped that the authorities will recognize the self-sacrifice of German Jews, will appreciate such gifts as the I. O. B. B. Hospital Train, not only by the distribution of titles and orders, but by the true and full emancipation of German Jewry as a body. Let them throw open all offices and all careers to Jews and Gentiles alike. Let merit and character alone tell. And let it be said that not only in the United States and the British Dominions can a Jew become a Cabinet Minister, a Lord Chief Justice, a Governor of a State, a University Professor, even a High School teacher, but in Germany too. Some people assert that there is very good reason for believing that Russia, because of her alliance with England, will mend her ways and mete out more humane treatment to her Jewish citizens. It may be so; certainly it is worth hoping for. But in the same way, let us hope that Germany, because of her alliance with Turkey, will learn a lesson from the Ottoman Empire and grant full, ample and unrestricted rights to her Jews.

Julius Houseman Lodge, Grand Rapids, Mich. Celebrates B'nai B'rith Day

Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238 observed B'nai B'rith Day on November 1st. The entertainment committee, consisting of Brothers Henry Ely, Louis Wegusen and Herman Stern prepared an elaborate repast and furnished an enjoyable entertainment.

Splendid musical numbers were rendered by Stein's Orchestra, vocal selections by Brothers Glemby and Greenfield. Brother Greenfield, who came from Muskegon to attend the celebration, contributed much to the evening's entertainment.

Brother Herman Stern, chairman, announced that the principal speaker for the evening failed for some reason to put in his appearance and Brother U. S. Silbar did the honors impromptu creditably to the event and himself.

The next part on the program was an address delivered by the youngest member of the lodge, Bro. Julius Houseman Amberg, the son of Brother D. M. Amberg, an earnest Ben B'rith, who has held high and responsible offices in the Grand Lodge. Brother Amberg spoke on "College Life and College Experience."

His address was well received, as was evidenced by liberal applause.

Brother Theo. Collat read the following letters:

National Allied Relief Committee.
Fifth Avenue Building, New York.
October 18, 1915.

Mr. Theo. Collat,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Sir: Your sympathy with the great-hearted part America has played in the war—relieving the pitiful suffering brought upon defenseless women and children by the greed of Prussianized Germany—has helped to make possible the faithful performance of America's duty. Until the Allies have accomplished their part, have saved Europe from Prussian militarism, America must not falter. We need your continued help, and we shall continue to discharge faithfully the trust you place in us.

Sincerely yours.
(Signed) HENRY W. TAFT.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 29, 1915.

Mr. Henry W. Taft, Vice-President,
National Allied Relief Committee,
Fifth Avenue Bldg., New York, N. Y.

Esteemed Sir: In your letter of October 18, 1915, you state: "The greed of Prussianized Germany has brought about the present pitiful suffering of defenseless women and children, and until the ALLIES have saved Europe from Prussian militarism, America must not falter."

This ex-cathedra pronunciamento is a "slap in the face" to those American citizens who have like sympathy to your supporters, but dissent from your judgment. The idea of a termination of suffering by PEACE seems not to have entered your mind. Sympathy is kindled in every human breast, with an earnest desire to proffer succor to any individual or people whom misfortune has overtaken. Our citizens of Grand Rapids (and I am proud to be classed as one) have quickly and readily responded and liberally donated to the call for Belgian Relief and others. It was a general call and general sympathy was at once awakened to action.

Your call under date of October 18, 1915, addressed to me, failed in its purpose because of the language used. This letter contains language unbecoming an American, and is in direct violation of the Neutrality Proclamation issued by our esteemed President, Woodrow T. Wilson. William H. Taft, our worthy ex-President, upholds our administration, as should every American, whereas you, Mr. Henry W. Taft, and your co-workers: John Wanamaker, Gifford Pinchot, Hon. Myron T. Herrick, Norman Hapgood, Howard Elliott, Charles W. Eliot and August Belmont, representative men of books, business and finance, have so basely forgotten yourselves as to mingle expressions of ill-will and hate with a [illegible] sympathy call for help.

All societies organized to alleviate distress are commendable, but the true American spirit must be the single one of righteousness with a true ring of sympathy for all suffering humanity, without flying any color except "Old Glory," the emblem of JUSTICE and EQUALITY, the Stars and the Stripes.

A call clothed in such a mantle will appeal to every American, and not pro- [illegible] and hatred.

Very respectfully,
THEO. COLLAT.

[illegible] reading the correspondence, [illegible] Collat spoke in part as follows: [illegible] forget this letter overflows [illegible]etic appeal—for the Allies.

The letter so impressed me, that after due deliberation I concluded to reply to it. However, before reading the answer, let it be clear in the mind of every brother present, that I received the letter as an American Citizen and my stand in the answer is neither pro-German nor anti-Ally, but strictly and purely "American."

I made sure that the answer be impartial, inoffensive and within bounds of legality.

Who, I ask you, is protesting against the outrages now occurring in Armenia? Who is clamoring that Germany should put a stop to the Armenian massacres? THE ALLIES.

Who, I ask you, is taking up the cause of our suffering defenseless old men, women and children? The answer you KNOW.

But who, amongst all the warring nations, has raised a voice against the Russian brutalities and inhuman treatment perpetrated upon our defenseless old men, women and children, the outrages upon innocent girls.

If there exists any sympathy in the hearts of the French and English leaders, they would at least protest, aye, they would exert their right to demand of their ally to abstain from committing such crimes.

A word to the wise would be sufficient.

For Russia—darkest Russia, with her Siberia and the Yellow Ticket—could not continue her warfare without England's financial aid.

Alas! England has no Disraeli, that splendid type of Jew; and if anyone doubts Disraeli's staunch adherence to our glorious faith, we but refer him to his "Coningsby." Disraeli's Jewish heart would have gone out to his suffering co-religionists.

Whither, then, will the eyes be cast for sympathy and support? To the peoples of the world? Nay.

In the promised land will be heard their pitiful appeal for Emancipation. "Talk not to me of Universalism or the Common Brotherhood of Man!"

We shall hear and heed the call of our oppressed and distressed co-religionists as no other ears will.

We will endeavor to put forth our best efforts to obtain for them that cherished treasure, "Liberty."

We should call into service all liberty-loving peoples, to put out the fires of that unnatural caldron, and humanize the Russian heart.

How quickly would the schools and universities be filled by those who yearn for learning, the opportunities for which have heretofore been denied them. . . . And soon after there would arise from a dormant state—master minds and geniuses, such as we have had and now have in other lands—a Mendelssohn, Ehrlich and Israel; a Spinoza; a Cremieux, Baron de Hirsch and Bergson; a Disraeli, Sir Moses Montefiore and Sir Isaacs.

When such a time arrives and with good true Jews as leaders, THEN shall we be entitled to say that we have fulfilled another great part of our mission, that the Lord charged our forefathers with.

The awakening of interest in large work and attendance at meetings was eloquently expressed by impromptu remarks of Brother S. Clarence Weil. No man is too rich or too big to attend to his duties as a member of our Order, said he. He pointed with pride to the big men and rich men that took untiring interest in the work of the Order.

Brother Jos. Hart was pleased to see that the younger members are taking responsibilities upon themselves to care for the duties of the lodge, and though not a regular attendant emphatically declared that he is vitally interested in the work of the Order and is ever ready to promote its progress.

Brother Morris Levy, one of the oldest and most esteemed members whose activities in the lodge in the past were always of the kind to make the lodge better and broader, proved by his remarks that the fire of youth still keeps him close to the aim and purpose of our institution.

Reviewing the work of Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238 since 1875, Brother D. M. Amberg pointed out to the younger members the possibilities and opportunities of rising to higher offices in the Order.

The closing remarks of the evening were made by Brother Ely, who appealed to the members to manifest their interest in the Order and Judaism by doing concrete work on behalf of the needy and oppressed by rendering personal service in its truest meaning. He laid it to the hearts of every member that they should watch and work, work and watch and honors will come to them.

B'nai B'rith Day Observance by Minnesota Lodge of St. Paul, Minn.

Thursday, November 18, must go down in the annals of Minnesota Lodge as the banner day in its history. It was the occasion of the observance of B'nai B'rith Day with Brother Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of Social Service Department of the Order, as guest of honor. His attendance was noteworthy in that it was the first visit to another city undertaken by Dr. Coffee since the Social Service Department was organized.

On arriving in St. Paul in the morning, he consulted with Brothers Sylvan E. Hess, Chairman of the Social Service Committee for District No. 6, Gustavus Loevinger, Hiram D. Frankel and Milton D. Firestone, the committee in charge. At noon a well attended luncheon brought Dr. Coffee in personal touch with many members and lodge workers. At 1 o'clock, in the large room of the Commercial Club, he delivered an address on "Religion Tomorrow," referring to Dr. E. L. Trudeau and Booker T. Washington, as two great Americans who had just passed away. The speaker emphasized the common point in both lives. Each man unselfishly devoted himself to the service of his brother. The one, given up by physicians as hopelessly incurable with tuberculosis, not only lived on for 40 years, but became the leading figure in a campaign for fresh air, for proper ventilation and for conquering the ravages of consumption. Washington, born a slave, not only worked his way up, but became the leader in a national movement which seeks to put the colored man on his feet. Trudeau stands for the new vision which fights to prevent disease. Washington stands for the new thought which aims to abolish prejudice and race hate, substituting instead the religion of love and universal brotherhood. Judaism has always emphasized these two cardinal thoughts—clean living and catholic thinking. If we maintain that the golden rule of the world, as first taught by Judaism, is yet to come, all the more reason for us to hasten this epoch as did these two worthy men. The world is steadily growing better. Let our proud boast be that we are greatly contributing to this onward march." The address was heard by a large number of prominent St. Paul men and women who showed their hearty approval of the theme.

Dr. Coffee then went into a special conference with Rabbis, Social Service Workers and B'nai B'rith Leaders, mapping out, along general lines, how the Order could help and benefit the local philanthropies through the Big Brother movement, aiding released prisoners and finding work for the unemployed. A beautiful spirit of harmony and co-operation was felt throughout the session, and pledges of mutual good-will were expressed on all sides. The remainder of the afternoon was devoted to visiting sections of the city where the Jewish population preponderates, and this tour furnished Dr. Coffee with much material for his address at the banquet.

Promptly at 7 o'clock, the ladies and gentlemen sat down to the banquet in the Commercial Club. Few more representative bodies of Jewish people ever assembled in St. Paul. It is said to have been among the largest banquets of its kind ever held in the city. The toastmaster of the evening was Mr. Gustavus Loevinger, whose humorous introductions greatly enlivened the proceedings. The speeches were interspersed with musical selections. Dr. Coffee delivered the principal address, choosing as his theme, "Judaism and Social Service." He said in part: "There is a well-known proverb that charity begins at home. May I amend that by saying that Social Service for Minnesota Lodge No. 157 begins in St. Paul? This afternoon I visited the district where many of our co-religionists dwell, and was deeply pained to learn that the plan to have a new public school in that district has failed. Your duty is to interest the community to provide proper school facilities for the children, in waging a campaign for adequate playgrounds and doing all within your power to make this district as healthy as any other one in the city.

"This new department, let it be clearly understood, is not a charitable undertaking. Its aim is to enter social service. As you know, charity in the sense of alms-giving was not of Jewish origin. The Christian Church borrowed this from Greece, and it has come down into modern times as a most unfortunate survival. 'What a man wants is not charity, but opportunity. He desires a chance to make a living. This department realizes the need of charitable organizations for the weak, the helpless and those who have fallen by the wayside in the strenuous battle for life. For such people you have your very well equipped organizations in the Twin Cities. The aim of this department is to prevent people from requiring aid and assistance. When the Juvenile Court has a Jewish boy who needs a Big Brother, the I. O. B. B. will come forward and furnish one of its members to aid and direct the boy. This Big Brother will give to the boy, not money, but advice; not his purse, but his personality. Whenever a Jewish prisoner is paroled or released from jail, it is the hope of this Order to have some member step forward and give this person another chance in life by providing him with employment. Such work is not only constructive, but it at the same time affords opportunity for B'nai B'rith men to do active work in the field of Social Service."

Other speakers were Mr. Hiram D. Frankel, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee, who felt sure that the visit of Dr. Coffee to the poorer section of the city would result in positive improvements. Brother Sylvan E. Hess, Past President, pledged his loyal spirit to the new work. Dr. Myron Sherper said he felt much enthusiasm had already been aroused because of this visit to St. Paul, and Milton D. Firestone, President of the Lodge, assured Dr. Coffee that St. Paul appreciated the honor of paying his first official visit to its midst. St. Paul would show this appreciation through an increased membership and helpful communal work.

The concluding speaker of the evening was Rev. Dr. I. L. Rypins, for many years the honored spiritual head of St. Paul. His happy and felicitous words brought the banquet to its conclusion.

ACTIVITIES OF HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., is in the midst of a membership campaign. Brother Joseph H. Ullman, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 1 is head of the campaign committee and therefore there is no reason to doubt the results as he entered into the work with his usual earnestness and zeal and has the support of his entire committee. New Haven has a large Jewish population and it is the object of this campaign to secure at least five hundred additional members so as to double the strength of the lodge.

Under the auspices of the lodge, the New Haven B'nai B'rith News, a monthly publication, is called into life. Its first issue, dated November, 1915, is replete with interesting articles, and the entire publication is imbued with the B'nai B'rith spirit.

Horeb Lodge No. 25 initiated over sixty-five members at its last meeting. Brother Charles Hartman and Brother Joseph H. Ullman represented the District on this eventful occasion, President Asher having been absent on a trip to Chicago in company of Brother Samuel Fleischman, to attend a meeting of the Advisory Committee of the Order.

Mr. I. Irving Lipsitch, manager of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, gave an illustrated talk on the work of the Hebrew Sheltering and Aid Immigrant Society before the lodge at one of its recent meetings.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

A joint meeting of the Birmingham lodges was held on Nov. 21, which was largely attended. Addresses were made by Brothers I. Shapiro, B. Gross, M. M. Ullman and Dr. Swedlow on the subject "The Stage Jew." Before the addresses, initiation of candidates was held and a class of four was enrolled as members of the Lodge.

Bro. Shapiro in his remarks illustrated that Jewish character being ridiculed on the stage is the individual of the minority and he urged the Jewish theatrical managers and producers to correct the evil.

Bro. Gross dwelt upon the development of the present dramatic productions down from the age of the miracle shows. Drawing a parallel between the Shakespeare and Milos Jew, he showed that the more familiar the producers were with the Jew the better is the light in which the Jew is pictured. A supposition was evident that Shakespeare had no personal acquaintance with any Jew, as in his day there were no Jews in England who acknowledged their faith.

Bro. Ullman in a very forcible talk suggested that education will eliminate the ridicule of one another including the "Hebrew comedian."

Bro. Swedlow emphasized the importance of the individual calling it to the attention of the manager of a theater whenever an objectionable performance is presented.

MOTHERS' AND CHILDRENS' HOME OF THE WOMEN'S SOCIETY OF THE BERLIN LODGES OF THE I. O. B. B.

The Women's Society of the Berlin Lodges (President Mrs. Minna Schwarz), whose activities during the past fifteen years have been exclusively devoted to the maintenance of the maternity hospital for poor Jewish women, extended the field of its labors by adding about five years ago, a maternity home to the Jewish invalid home, "Adath Israel."

The endeavors of the society were directed to the accomplishment of still larger benevolent undertakings. With the assistance of its large membership (some 3,300 active members), it has now acquired a home of its own at Brunnen Str., No. 41, wherein it has established a home for Jewish mothers with their infants. Poor expectant mothers are received in this institution where they get the best of care from six to eight weeks before their confinement is due. For the actual confinement they are transferred to the maternity hospital and are later on brought back with their infants to the home for mothers where they are nursed back to health and to the strength needed to again take up their vocations.

In order to meet all hygienic demands for the care of infants a new building exclusively devoted to this purpose was erected in the gardens adjoining the main building in Brunnen Str., No. 41, during the early spring of 1914.

The extraordinary demands made upon the services of the society by the outbreak of the war compelled the society to hurry the completion of the new addition, which was opened on November 15, 1914. The home furnishes accommodations for twenty-five mothers with their infants and in addition for ten expectant mothers, making no distinction between married and unmarried women.

The large number of fugitives from Eastern Prussia, Galicia and Belgium has imposed additional work on the society. It had to care for many women who not only were bereft of their husbands and support by this cruel war, but who also lacked the most necessary comforts for the hour of their trial. They arrived here destitute of all means and met with the most kind reception and treatment in the well equipped maternity home.

The facilities of the home already prove too restricted to meet all the demands made upon the society. It is hoped and expected. that, through the aid and assistance of the large numbers of patrons who are greatly interested in the work of this institution, it will soon be feasible to undertake the planning of another and larger addition permitting of a material increase of its capacity.

The home is open for inspection to all interested.

ACTIVITY OF DENVER LODGE.

Denver Lodge No. 171 of Denver, Colo., is recognized as one of the best and most influential lodges of District No. 2. The record of tne lodge since its institution is a good one. No appeal to alleviate unfortunates has ever been made to it in vain. The largest single contribution by the lodge was $1,500.00 at the time the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives located in Denver was organized.

In all communal affairs Denver Lodge has been an important factor. It has encouraged every Jewish movement which stood for the welfare of the people in the community. The activities of the lodge are manifold. It co-operated in the movement to distribute immigrants so as to relieve the congested seaboard cities, and the lodge has been instrumental in locating hundreds of families in neighboring cities.

The employment committee of the lodge has been active in assisting deserving co-religionists in securing work.

Another agency for good work has been its anti-defamation committee, which has carried on a quiet but effective campaign against the caricaturing of the Jew on the stage and in the press.

From an intellectual standpoint, the lodge has gained much of an educational value through the monthly lectures by prominent members and educators.

Socially the lodge has endeavored to bring its members together in closer fellowship, and for this purpose has arranged social affairs which have proven very successful.

One of the latest activities of the lodge is that of social service. The standing committee is interesting itself in unfortunate inmates of institutions and this work promises to become of considerable importance.

With the addition of the large class of candidates, the membership of the lodge is nearing the seven hundred mark, and is composed of the best element of all divisions of Jewry. The forum has been made for discussion of Jewish questions.

CLASS INITIATION BY DENVER LODGE.

An important event in the history of Denver Lodge No. 171 of Denver, Colo., took place on Sunday, November 14, at El Jebel Temple, where 258 candidates were initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

The initiation exercises were presided over by Mr. Jacob J. Lieberman, vice-president of the lodge, who acted as president in the absence of President Sidney J. Rinds. Messrs. Samuel R. Zwetow, Arthur Friedman, J. E. Olcovitch and Simon J. Heller assisted in the ceremonies, while Mr. David E. Harlem beautiful ritual and the exposition of acted as master of ceremonies. The the high ideals of the Order made a distinct impression upon the initiates and refreshed anew the allegiance of the older members to the Order and its international works of benevolence. One could not but be struck with the high purpose of the B'nai B'rith as he heard the ritual recited in the effective and impressive manner by those officiating in the ceremonies.

Mr. Samuel J. Kornhauser of Cleveland, president of District No. 2 of the Grand Lodge, was the principal speaker of the evening. In a forceful address on the work and aims of the Order, he urged that the lodges throughout the district begin the campaign for a B'nai B'rith building in each large community. Mr. Kornhauser recounted the various ills at present besetting Israel and made a plea for harmony in Jewish circles and a united Israel in body and spirit.

Judge Ira Rothgerber made the response for the class of initiates in a short address in which he expressed the hope that the new members might be imbued with the spirit of the lodge and that they might be a credit to the Order of B'nai B'rith.

When the class of initiates were declared duly initiated the 500 B'nai B'rith retired for refreshments. The lodge hall presented an imposing appearance with the large class of initiates seated in the center, the members in the balconies, and the presiding officers and all past-presidents of the Order seated on the rostrum.

With 650 members of the Denver Jewry, representing all walks of life, banded together in a common purpose dedicated to the highest principles of brotherhood and welfare in Israel, Denver Lodge No. 171 is in position to take the helm of Jewish affairs in Denver and to add to the wonderful history of the international Order a greater contribution of achievement and aspiration than ever before.

B'NAI B'RITH ORPHANAGE, ERIE, PA.

The first quarterly meeting of the fourth year of the B'nai Brith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3, Erie, Pa., was held on November 7th, 1915. Among the out-of-town governors in attendance were Mr. Joseph H. Reuben, McKeesport, Pa., and Mr. Louis Samler, Lancaster, Pa. The reports of the standing committees giving the activities of their variour committee work during the quarter were very interesting. Many important matters for the welfare of th Home were considered, among them the schooling of the children, the election of a superintendent, applications for admission and discharge and the building indebtedness. The Home is now sheltering twenty-nine children.

B'NAI B'RITH PROPAGANDA IN DISTRICT NO. 5.

At a recent convention of the District Grand Lodge, held in Norfolk, Va., a resolution recommending the employment of a field secretary was adopted and in pursuance therewith Mr. Adolph Brand, of Washington, was appointed to that office. In less than four months more than 450 members were added to the membership of District No. 5 through the efforts of Mr. Brand. As a result of his efforts Argo Lodge No. 413 of Washington, Rimmon Lodge No. 68 of Richmond, Va., Maon Lodge No. 172 of Norfolk, and other lodges throughout the District materially increased their membership. Gate City Lodge of Atlanta was particularly fortunate in having the benefit of the work of Mr. Brand, as more than 150 candidates were secured for the lodge through his efforts.

WORCESTER, MASS.

A big public propaganda meeting took place last Sunday which was largely attended. The meeting was addressed by President Herman Asher and Judge Gibbs of New York, Col. Harry Cutler of Providence, Hon. Charles M. Stern of Albany, Judge Abraham K. Cohen of Boston, President Maurice Katz of Worcester Lodge and several other prominent in B'nai B'rith activities.

STANDARD CLUB BUILDING NOW THE HOME OF CLEVELAND LODGE.

For years Cleveland Lodge No. 16 of Cleveland, Ohio, has discussed the possibility of being the possessor of a B'nai B'rith building. At last its dream has come true. The former stately Standard Club Building, located on Euclid Avenue and E Seventy-first Street, is now the home of Cleveland Lodge and it will also house the Jewish Men's Association. The building, including all its contents, furniture, equipment—in fact, everything hitherto owned by the Standard Club—has come into possession of the lodge.

The meeting of Cleveland Lodge, the first in the new building, was held on November 9 and before adjournment a sum approximating $20,000 had been subscribed by the members present. In the early part of the meeting a class of 200 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge, after which the meeting was closed and the doors were thrown open to the public. At the open meeting Mr. A. A. Benesch, president of the lodge, presided. A large number of the members of the Jewish Men's Association availed themselves of the privilege to attend the meeting.

The acquirement of a club building was the principal topic of discussion. Mr. A. Leventhal addressed the meeting, outlining a plan whereby the building may be secured and maintained on a proper standard. He informed the lodge that the Standard Club members were willing to make sacrifices and favor the lodge so that it might become the possessor of the building at a much lower figure than offered by others.

On behalf of the Young Men's Association, its president, Raymond Weil, expressed himself in favor of affiliation and outlined a plan whereby this might be put into practice.

Mr. Martin A. Marks was the last speaker and his convincing arguments soon brought the matter to a close. He emphasized the necessity of not letting the present opportunity go by and urged the acceptance of the offer without any hesitation. After he concluded subscriptions were called for and, as already stated, more than $20,000 was subscribed within a very short time.

The shares will be owned by the members of the lodge and the holders will constitute the Fraternal Building Company, which will rent the entire premises to the lodge for its purposes.

It is intended to have a formal opening of the building with a banquet and a ball in the very near future.

LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL CELEBRATES FIRST ANNIVERSARY.

Under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith lodges District No. 7, the first anniversary celebration of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital was held at Hot Springs, Ark., November 7th. Following an introduction by Gus Strauss, chairman of the board of managers, the principal address was made by Nathan Cohn, a prominent attorney of Nashville, Tenn., and president of District Grand Lodge No. 7, I. O. B. B. In reviewing the past year's work of the hospital, Mr. Cohn laid great stress on what it is doing for suffering humanity. Other speakers were: Rabbi Louis Witt of Little Rock, Chas. J. Haase, of Memphis, president of the Levi Memorial Hospital Association, Rabbi A. B. Rhine of Hot Springs, and U. S. Senator Joe T. Robinson of Arkansas. The service was a pronounced success in every respect. Dr. M. L. Lautman recently arrived from New York City to take charge of the hospital. He is to be assisted in the near future by J. M. Lipschitz, Technician of Beth Hospital, New York, who will engage in research work.

CONSOLIDATION OF ASARIAH AND MISHAEL LODGES, NEW YORK.

Asariah and Mishael Lodges were consolidated under the name of Asariah Lodge No. 164 on November 15. The amalgamation ceremony participated in by a number of prominent leaders in the District, was most impressive. The ceremony was followed by an elaborate banquet. Those who participated in the ceremonies were Bro. Edward Rosenfeld, Dr. Leo Schnepp, who is now the president of the united lodges, Bro. S. Marks, Bro. Isidor Simon, president of the District, Bro. Herman Asher, Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee, Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, second vice-president of the District, District Secretary Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, Bro. Mo. Minzesheiner, Bro. Myron Sulzberger, vice-president of the Home at Yonkers, Bro. Joseph Levenson, chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, Bro. Sol. Sulzberger, the venerable treasurer of the District, and Bro. Henry Meyers, representing Washington Lodge.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

What promises to be the most systematic and fruitful campaign for membership is being inaugurated by Theo. Herzl Lodge, No. 314. Ten committees of three each have been appointed and will compete for honors and a windup banquet is scheduled for the last meeting in December. The lodge has placed a class of 150 as the goal and the compaign will be conducted under the leadership of Brother David N. Mosessohn, chairman of the membership committee.

One of the finest meetings of the year was held by Theo. Herzl Lodge, No. 314, on Nov. 9. Thirteen new members were initiated. At the meeting the lodge decided to take active interest in the unemployed question and it was resolved to appoint a committee of seven to help secure employment for worthy cases.

The feature of the evening was a well-prepared paper on "Jehuda Halevi," by Dr. George Rubensein, which was both interesting and entertaining.

At the next meeting of the lodge, the members were the guests of the Daughters of the Covenant at a basket luncheon.

At a meeting of the Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314, held on Nov. 9, 1915, Dr. George Rubenstein delivered an address on "Rabbi Jehuda Halevi, Philosopher-Poet."

The Country Fair held on the evenings of November 3 and 4, in the B'nai B'rith Building, under the auspices of the combined B'nai B'nai Lodges of Portland, was a brilliant financial and social success. Hundreds of people took the opportunity of visiting the building and taking part in the amusements. Between $500 and $600 was realized and will be turned over to the building. Everyone taking part in the affair put his heart and soul into it with the result that it was an event of unalloyed pleasure.

Theo. Herzl Lodge, No. 314, appointed a committee to aid in securing positions for the unemployed, with Brother Dr. A. Tilzer as chairman of the committee.

Portland Lodge, No. 416, gave an enjoyable vaudeville evening at the B'nai B'rith Building on November 16. The program consisted of singing, monologue numbers and recitations. Dancing closed the evening's program.

Theo. Herzl Lodge, No. 314, is now arranging the details in connection with the initiation of a large class of candidates to be held at the last meeting of the lodge in December. It is expected that two hundred candidates will be initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

GAN EDEN LODGE, TERRE HAUTE, IND.

Gan Eden Lodge No. 110 performed its part in the great membership campaign which has commemorated this year in District No. 2 by initiating eighteen new members at a meeting which in enthusiasm suited the occasion.

B'nai B'rith Day was suitably celebrated on November 7th by a banquet at which 100 men were seated. For this special occasion the Phoenix Club rooms were rented, and the regular monthly lodge meeting was held in the dance hall, after which the initiatory ceremony was ably performed by the regular degree team, composed of Brothers Luis. Brown. Goldstine, Elias Berkowitz. Abe N. Levin, Benjamin Blumberg, Joseph Blumenstein. Chester Abelowitz presided at the piano.

After the initiatory ceremony a splendid banquet was served in the dining room, at which Rabbi Marcuson, formerly President of District No. 5, presided as toastmaster. Stirring and eloquent speeches were delivered by Vice-President of the District Louis Bornstein, and Past Grand President Ralph Bamberger and Harry Schloss. Brother Feibelman, of Indianapolis, made an effective address on what can and should be done by the "High Private" in the rear rank. He was followed by Brother Sudransky of Greencastle, Ind., and Brothers A. Herz and Leo Joseph, of Terre Haute, who welcomed the delegation from Indianapolis and pledged active lodge endeavors for the coming years.

ATLANTA, GA.

An inspiring scene was presented on the occasion of the initiation of a class of fifty candidates at a well attended meeting of Gate City Lodge No. 144 of Atlanta, Ga., held in the vestry rooms of Temple B'nai Israel on October 31st. A special degree team was drilled for the occasion. At the conclusion of the initiatory ceremonies addresses were deliverde by Rabbi Dr. David Marx, Brothers Leonard Haas and M. Lichtenstein. In behalf of the new members Mr. Jos. Lazear made a happy response. At the conclusion of the program refreshments were served and an informal evening was enjoyed. Another initiation of nearly 100 candidates is expected to be held in the near future.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

RAMAH LODGE, CHICAGO.

An unusually well attended meeting of the Lodge was held on Nov. 11, 1915, on the occasion of a visit of Brother Victor Abraham of Cincinnati, President of the Court of Appeals of the Order.

Upon arrival in the city Brother Abraham was met by a committee of the Lodge and was escorted to the Hotel La Salle where an informal dinner was tendered him, which was participated in by the following:

Adolf Kraus, president of the Order; Judge Philip Stein, a member of the Executive Committee of the Order; Benj. J. Samuels, president of District Grand Lodge No. 6; Adolph D. Weiner, Wm. Wilhartz, Maurice Berkson and Julius M. Kahn, past presidents of the District Grand Lodge; H. I. Davis, first vice-president of the District Grand Lodge; Edward Sonnenschein, second vice-president of the District Grand Lodge; Judges Samuel Alschuler and Hugo Pam, members of the General Committee; Dr. H. A. Kraus, J. J. Gusfield, Edward Menkin, Director of Intellectual Advancement; Dr. R. I. Coffee, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order; L. L. Lewis, secretary of the Anti-Defamation League; S. J. Ascher, president, and J. Alter, vice-president of Ramah Lodge, and A. B. Seelenfreund.

At the meeting of the Lodge held subsequently, more than two hundred and fifty candidates were proposed for membership. The special order of business included a discussion on "Would Assimilation of the Jew be an Antidote for Anti-Semitism?" and was participated in by Brothers Rabbi Jos. Hevesh and Mark D. Goodman. The special features of the meeting was an address by Mr. Victor Abraham on "B'nai B'rith and American Israel." Brother Abraham's address was well received and at its conclusion the members present tendered him quite an ovation. At the close of the meeting refreshments and cigars were served.

The next meeting of the Lodge will be the annual meeting and will be held on Dec. 19, on which occasion election of officers for the ensuing year and delegates for the next convention of the District Grand Lodge will take place. The special feature of the meeting will be an address by Rabbi Isaac E. Marcusson of Terre Haute, Ind., on the subject "The Ark of the Covenant."

DAUGHTERS OF THE B'NAI B'RITH, CHAPTER NO. 1, NEW YORK.

One of the most interesting affairs of the season was the opening entertainment and dance, given by the Daughters of the B'nai B'rith, which was held at the West End, New York City, on October 19, 1915.

About five hundred (500) people were present, among them being Bernard M. Kaplan, Secretary of District No. 1, members of Maccabee Lodge No. 71 and many others.

The following participated in the entertainment:

Mr. Sidney Meths, accompanied by Juliette Joseph, sang popular songs.

Isabella Richter, a young girl, sang and played the piano.

Muriel Richter and Pauline Laurie, young children, gave exhibition dances.

Miss Ada Joseph, accompanied on piano by Juliette Joseph, sang some popular songs.

One of the Maccabee Lodge members also sang some popular songs.

The affair was pronounced a great success and everyone spent a pleasant evening.

This dance was the initial entertainment of a series to be given during the winter season by the Daughters of the B'nai B'rith.

The affair was instrumental in procuring many new members for this growing organization as well as for the B'nai B'rith Lodges.

The Daughters of the B'nai B'rith are endeavoring to organize a "Penny Lunch" movement in the public schools in the Hebrew districts of the City of New York. Numerous cases of starving children have been found in the public schools, where the parents of the children cannot afford to give them lunch, and where the distance is too great for them to walk home for lunch. The fulfillment of this movement will [illegible] the situation.

[illegible] are also doing a great deal of [illegible] service and settlement work. A [illegible] of Chapters of the Order will be [illegible] throughout the Eastern States.

WASHINGTON LODGE, WASHINGTON, PA.

Washington Lodge No. 576 may justly lay claim to the proud distinction of being one of the liveliest lodges in the District. Organized just eleven years ago in a small Jewish community—Washington in Pennsylvania never had over fifty Jewish families—the Lodge has a membership of about forty active, earnest men, almost every worthy Israelite within reach being enrolled under its banner.

The attendance at the regular meetings of the Lodge seldom falls below thirty—75 per cent of the entire membership. And this is easily accounted for, as Secretary Hanau says: "There is always something doing. Papers on interesting subjects are read by the members, addresses are made and discussions on some of the important questions of the day are engaged in. Everybody who can hastens to the lodge room, because he expects to be enlightened and entertained."

At the first regular meeting in September, opening the fall and winter campaign, the officers were installed by past president Bro. Rabbi Jacob Goldfarb. Incidentally this rounded out Bro. Hanau's tenth year of continuous service as secretary of the Lodge, and in recognition and appreciation of his untiring and disinterested devotion to the best interests of the Lodge, the brethren tendered him, after the routine business was disposed of, a banquet, at which toasts were proposed, speeches were made in laudation of Bro. Hanau's good work in behalf of the Lodge, and as a token of their esteem they presented him with a fine fountain pen.

The Lodge has established a Bible School and is represented at each session by a committee from its membership. They have organized a Vigilance Committee which succeeded in banning all objectionable matter, caricaturing and defaming Jewish life and Jewish character from the stage and from the screen. According to their means the members make very liberal voluntary contributions to a number of charitable institutions, and the Lodge has just sent a voluntary contribution to the Building Fund of the Children's Home at Erie, Pa.

Washington Lodge No. 576 is still growing in strength and in usefulness and will be often heard from in the future.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF JOSHUA LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

A well-attended meeting of Joshua Lodge No. 23 was held on November 9, and final plans were made for the sixtieth anniversary celebration to be held December 5. The ball room of the Majestic has been reserved, and prominent men from out of town have accepted invitations to be present. The Committee on Speakers, composed of the Hon. Jacob Singer and J. Solis-Cohen, Jr., reported that invitations had been sent to and acceptances received from Sigmund Livingston, of Chicago, who is chairman of the Anti-defamation League; Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, formerly of Pittsburgh, now of Chicago, who is director of the Social Service Department of the B'nai B'rith, and Col. Harry Cutler, of Providence, R. I., who is chairman of the Immigration Commission of the B'nai B'rith.

It has been many years since the B'nai B'rith has had such a splendid array of oratorical talent assembled for one of their meetings. Preceding the sixtieth anniversary dinner there will be a class initiation, and efforts are being made by the members of the lodge to secure at least one hundred candidates.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.

Under the auspices of Dacotah Lodge No. 731 of Grand Forks, N. D., an intellectual and social meeting was held on November 14, 1915. Hon. Tracy R. Bangs, one of the leading attorneys of the state, was the principal speaker. The following program was carried out:

1. Dispatch Deputy Grand Master Sigmund Wolff to escort Hon. Tracy R. Bangs.
2. Welcome to Hon. T. R. Bangs in behalf of B'nai B'rith.
   By President Max Rabinovich.
3. Vocal Solo.........Mrs. J. J. Issaccs
   Piano accompaniment, Miss Anna Rabinovich.
4. Response.........Hon. J. B. Wineman
5. Address...... .Hon. Tracy R. Bangs

DAVID FISH LODGE, CHICAGO.

A well attended meeting of the Lodge took place on Nov. 15. Excepting the presentation of a large number of petitions for membership which were acted upon, the regular order of business was dispensed with so as to afford ample time for the carrying out of the intellectual program. The meeting was formally closed and the doors thrown open to the public. A feature of the evening was a discussion of the subject "Would Assimilation of the Jew be an Antidote for Anti-Semitism?" Peter Sissman, a prominent attorney, delivered a very able discussion on that subject and the discussion was continued by members of the Lodge.

The special feature of the evening was an address by Rabbi Samuel S. Cohon on "After Nineteen Centuries of Christianity." Brother Cohon gave a delightful address and proved himself master of the subject. His brief review of Christianity since its inception to present date was keenly followed by all those present who were very much benefited by the instructive as well as the entertaining features of Brother Cohon's address.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a general good time was indulged in.

HOLYOKE, MASS.

A class of 15 candidates were initiated by Holyoke Lodge No. 728 at a meeting in the Hotel Nonotuck on November 6th. The gathering took place in the small banquet room and there were many distinguished guests from out of town.

The degree team of Springfield Lodge worked the initiation, and there were a number of interesting addresses by the visiting officers.

The principal guests of honor were Herman Asher of New York, president of District Grand Lodge No. 1; Charles M. Stern of Albany, a past president and deputy attorney general of New York; Henry Lasker of Springfield, member of the general committee of District No. 1; Paul Kramer of Springfield, district deputy president; Herman Adaskin of Springfield, president of Springfield Lodge; Rabbi Samuel Price of Springfield, monitor of the Springfield degree team. The officers of the Springfield degree team are: President, Frederick Rabinovitz; march director, Dr. Myron Wessler; president of the degree club, Henry Goodman.

There were many guests present from Springfield, Pittsfield, Worcester, Hartford and New Haven, and a buffet luncheon was served at the close of lodge exercises.

MINNEAPOLIS LODGE, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The annual meeting of Minneapolis Lodge No. 27 of Minneapolis, Minn., was held on Dec. 2, 1915. Election of officers took place at this meeting, as well as the election of delegates to the coming District Grand Lodge convention.

In keeping with the spirit of Chanukah, the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the lodge had arranged a Chanukah Festival, the principal part of which was an illustrated lecture by Mr. E. Avin, principal of the Talmud Torah.

The question of establishing a Jewish hospital and home for the aged as a joint effort of the Twin Cities was also discussed at the meeting.

At the monthly meeting of Minneapolis Lodge No. 271, held on November 4, officers for the ensuing term were nominated.

At the conclusion of the regular order of business, Rabbi C. D. Matt, chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the lodge, introduced Mr. J. R. Kantor of the Department of Philosophy of the University of Minnesota, who read a paper on "Philosophy and Its Relation to Everyday Life."

TACOMA LODGE, TACOMA, WASH.

The fall activities of the lodge are now in full swing. The meetings are well attended and the lodge is now engaged in a membership campaign, which promises much success.

The Sabbath School, adopted under the auspices of the lodge, has resumed its course again with a large attendance.

The last meeting of the lodge took the shape of an interesting social, for which the Intellectual Advancement Committee arranged a pleasing program. Cards and refreshments were the closing numbers.

AMOS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

A very enthusiastic and well attended meeting of the Lodge was held on Sunday, Nov. 14, at its rooms in the Intercolonial Hall. Several prominent young men in the community were initiated and about a dozen applications for membership were considered.

Much interest was shown in the preparations for B'nai B'rith Night, on Friday evening, Oct. 10, next, at the Temple Ohabei Shalom; and in the report of the committee of arrangements for the coming convention of the Grand Lodge of this District, next February, at Hotel Somerset.

At this convention there are to be about 125 delegates, representing about fifty lodges of this District, located in the principal cities of the State of New York and New England.

The exercises are to begin on Saturday evening with a reception to the delegates and their ladies, and concluded on the Monday night following by a grand ball in honor of the visitors.

The lady visitors will be in constant charge of a special committee who will endeavor to make their sojourn one of comfort, interest and enjoyment.

The official business of the convention is to be conducted by sessions during two or three days, but the evening of the first day, Sunday, will be devoted to a banquet in honor of the delegates.

RIMMON LODGE, RICHMOND, VA.

A regular meeting of Rimmon Lodge No. 68, I. O. B. B., was held in the vestry rooms of Temple Beth Ahabah on Sunday evening, November 21st, at which time six candidates were initiated, the work being conducted by the officers of the lodge, assisted by Bro. Harold S. Bloomberg, president of District No. 5.

Report was made to the lodge concerning the meeting held in Petersburg on Sunday, November 14th, at which time ten candidates were initiated in the city of Petersburg and addresses made by Bros. Henry S. Hutzler, past president of District No. 5; Joseph L. Levy, Charles Hutzler, A. Gellman, David S. Meyers and others.

The reception accorded the lodge in Petersburg was enthusiastic and every hospitality was extended to the visiting brethren. It is hoped that within six months there will be a sufficient number of members in Petersburg to warrant the formation of a lodge in that city.

ORIENTAL-HILLEL LODGE, CHICAGO.

On Nov. 22, the Lodge held its monthly meeting which was attended by more than two hundred members. Action upon the large number of candidates proposed at the previous meeting was taken and an additional large list of new petitions for membership was presented. After the conclusion of the regular order of business, the doors of the lodge room were thrown open to the public. Addresses by Miss Minnie F. Low, Francis Taussig and Ethel Kawin, social workers in various departments of the Associated Jewish Charities of Chicago, addressed the audience on their respective departments and the work accomplished by them. Their addresses were both instructive and entertaining and met with a hearty reception.

Light refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

CLEVELAND LODGE, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 was held on November 9th at the Standard Club Building. There were more than 700 members present. A class of fifty new members was initiated, bringing the membership of the lodge to more than 1,300.

The proposition of amalgamating the Jewish Men's Association with the lodge received further consideration. In case of favorable action, the membership of the lodge would be increased to 1,500.

The special feature of the meeting was the action taken in the matter of securing a permanent home and club rooms for the lodge. It was resolved to take over the Standard Club Building and the amount required to cover the present indebtedness on the building was readily subscribed by those present.

Among the speakers who addressed the lodge were Brothers Alfred A. Benesch, A. Lowenthal, Martin A. Marks, Raymond Weil and S. J. Kornhauser, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

PRESIDENT ASHER TENDERS DINNER TO CO-WORKERS.

President Asher tendered a dinner to the leaders of the Membership Campaign on Nov. 7. Much enthusiasm prevailed. The guests offered their services to President Asher in his great campaign to increase the membership. There were some eloquent addresses on the occasion. President Herman Asher, Julius Levy of Lebanon, Joseph Levenson of Henry Jones, William Klapp of Rehoboth, Sanford J. Friedlander of Jordan, Samuel M. Roeder of Maccabee, and William Silk of Akiba were particularly happy in their remarks. Those who will be especially active in the campaign are: Myer L. Victorius of New York Isaiah, Julius Levy of Edward Everett, Henry Gutenstein, S. Moss, Alfred Weil, B. Frankenfelder, I. Blum, I. Oppenheimer and Dr. J. L. Blumenthal of Manhattan, Nelson A. Bartow of Hebron, George Rosenstein and Sam Tuchman of Maccabee, Dr. Leo Schnepp and Ed. Rosenfeld of Asariah, Henry Deill, Emanuel Stern and S. Gallinger of Chananiah, Dr. Max H. Hazay and William Silk of Akiba, Maurice P. Davidson and Clarence G. Bachrach of Flatbush, Joseph Rosenzweig and Sanford J. Friedlander of Jordan, Sol. Sulzberger, Myron Sulzberger and Charles Hartman of Zion, Joseph Levenson, Ely Rosenberg, Israel B. Scheiber and Abr. Anhalt of Henry Jones, Dr. M. M. Stark and Henry Meyers of Washington, Julius Levy of Lebanon, Philip Cohn of Canaan, J. Levin and Wm. Klapp of Rehoboth.

TWIN CITY B'NAI B'RITH COUNCIL.

The Twin City B'nai B'rith Council has been holding meetings regularly and is doing much work of benefit to the community. The B'nai B'rith library at the University is being added to from time to time and from reports from the librarian is being much used by the students.

Entertainments are again to be given this year for the Sunday School children at the holiday season.

Another undertaking of the council this year is assistance in organizing night schools for immigrants in St. Paul, as the public schools in St. Paul do not provide night schools for foreigners as they do in Minneapolis.

The council also intends to encourage the children of the various Sunday schools and Talmud Torahs by offering prizes to the best students.

INSTITUTION OF NAT STRAUSS LODGE, BRISTOL, TENN.

On Sunday, November 21, Nat Strauss Lodge No. 779 was instituted at Bristol, Tenn. Rabbi Miller and Mr. Goodman, of Chattanooga, Tenn., represented the District Grand Lodge and officiated at the institution ceremonies.

Thirty-two members, residents of Johnson City and Bristol, Tenn., and Bristol, Va. (this city is situated half in Tennessee and the other half in Virginia). In the afternoon Rabbi Miller delivered an address at the public meeting held at the Columbia Theatre, which was attended by a large number of people of all denominations and it was the first appearance of a Jewish rabbi before a public audience in that community. His address was received with marked approval and particularly so his appeal to the co-religionists to rally to the support of the Order, which has as one of its objects the maintenance of Judaism.

The lodge was named Nat Strauss Lodge in respect and remembrance of the late secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 7.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., celebrated its eleventh anniversary at Temple Emanuel on Friday evening, December 10. The occasion was also used for the annual observance of B'nai B'rith Day.

The principal address of the evening was delivered by Mr. Hiram D. Frankel, of St. Paul, who chose for his subject, "The Other Fellow's Brother." His address was much appreciated by the large audience present. A musical program, appropriate to the occasion, was rendered by the Temple Choir.

The exercises were open to the public and at the close of the program an informal reception was held in honor of the visiting Grand Lodge officer.

OFFICIAL VISIT OF PRESIDENT OF DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 4.

Enthusiastic receptions were accorded to Brothers Harry K. Wolff and I. J. Aschheim of San Francisco, President and Secretary of the District Grand Lodge No. 4, respectively, on their official tour visiting the lodges of the District in Southern California.

Bakersfield.

In Bakersfield the visiting Grand Lodge officers addressed the children of the Sabbath School on Sunday morning, November 7, and in the afternoon spoke before the members of Bakersfield Lodge, following the initiation of a class of candidates. In the evening they were honored guests at a banquet which was largely attended. The officers were accorded a hearty welcome, and had many conferences with the leading members of the Lodge relative to the work of the Order.

Los Angeles.

From Bakersfield the officers went to Los Angeles where they addressed a meeting of more than five hundred members, following the initiation of sixteen candidates.

Stockton.

On November 16th Hope Lodge No. 126 of Stockton, Cal., was visited. A public reception was tendered the officers at Temple Israel, which was largely attended by the members of the Order and the general Jewish community. On the following day, November 17th, a meeting of the lodge was held which was attended by practically every member and at which a class of thirteen candidates were initiated by the degree team of the lodge. In the evening a banquet was tendered to the distinguished Grand Lodge officers and incidentally during the serving of the courses, a collection was taken up for the benefit of the war sufferers.

Brother Harry K. Wolff delivered an address at the public reception in which he detailed the work accomplished by the Order, emphasizing its main purpose, that of securing a square deal for the Jew wherever he may dwell. Mr. Wolff recited the work accomplished by the Order through its Anti-Defamation League, whose aim is to prevent the unjust caricature of the Jew. He also touched briefly upon the charitable work undertaken and carried out by the Order. Regarding the attempt by the legislature to restrict immigration, Mr. Wolff declared that the B'nai B'rith stands for the open door and that it desires to make of the United States a land of opportunity for the oppressed.

Following Mr. Wolff, Grand Secretary I. J. Ascheim addressed the audience. He praised Stockton Lodge in the highest terms for its work and loyalty to the Order. Mr. Aschheim dwelt upon the new work undertaken on the Pacific Coast by the Order in the establishment of an immigration society to assist Jewish immigrants upon their arrival.

At the banquet table the following evening many addresses were delivered by members of the lodge in addition to those of the visiting Grand Lodge officers.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly observed by Charlotte Lodge No. 733 of Charlotte, N. C., on Nov. 14, 1915. About 200 members and their friends attended the celebration, which proved a great success, and as a result, the membership committee was enabled to secure a number of applications. The following program was carried out, at the close of which refreshments were served:

Programme.

Opening Prayer.

1. Musical Duet.....................
   Misses Hattie and Gertrude Smith
2. Our Sunday School...............
   ....M. B. Smith, Supt.
3. Solo.........Miss Rebecca Goldstein
4. Recitation...........Mrs. Joe Miller
5. God is in His Holy Temple......
   ....Sunday School Choir
6. The New Temple........Dr. S. Levy
7. Solo..........Miss Anna Goldstein
8. Dialogue.......................
   ..W. J. Paul and N. E. Weinstein
9. The American Jew...M. Kirschbaum
10. America.......Sunday School Choir
11. Solo............Miss Gertrude Smith
12. Opportunities of the Young American..................J. Goldstein
13. Solo..................Mrs. S. Miller
14. Good and Welfare of the Order....
    ....D. B. Paul

Misses Mollie Miller and Hattie Smith,
Pianists.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Louisville Lodge No. 14 of Louisville, Ky., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day at the Auditorium of the new Y. M. H. A. Building, on Sunday evening, Nov. 21, 1915. There were about eight hundred persons in attendance and the celebration was one of the most successful in the way of attendance and enthusiasm ever given by the lodge.

The following program was carried out:

Opening remarks...Rabbi Joseph Rauch
Piano Solo.
Impromptu in A Flat Minor..........
......................Franz Schubert
Idyll in the Forest......A. Braumgardt
Miss Siddy Stein.
Violin Solo.
Fantasie of Oriental Lullaby...Tonoroff
Prof. S. Lipkin.
Address.
What Constitutes the Strength of Our Nation?
Rabbi Samuel Sale, of St. Louis, Mo.
Vocal Solo.
The Loreley..........................Liszt
Mrs. Lewis W. Cohn.
Accompanist, Mrs. Sidney Meyers.
Piano Solo.
Salut a Peste.................Kowolski
Variations ....
Miss LaRue Rosenthal.
Informal Talk..........Benj. S. Washer
Vocal Solo.
Prologue from Pagliacci...Leoncavello
Two Grenadiers (by special request)....
N. Simon.
Accompanist, Mrs. Sidney Meyers.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

On Thursday evening, Oct. 28, the first smoker of the season was given by Samuel Lodge, No. 668, of Vancouver, B. C., on which occasion the new club rooms of the lodge were dedicated. A program of musical, vocal and instrumental numbers was carried out and there were also short addresses by members. The lodge intends to have a literary evening combined with entertainment once a month.

The Daughters of the Covenant, Auxiliary to Samuel Lodge, met at the B'nai B'rith Club rooms on the 27th, and enjoyed a very congenial time.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty representing the San Francisco lodges, a minstrel show was given on Nov. 28, at the Scottish Rite Hall, which was a great success. The purpose of the entertainment was to raise funds with which to improve the club rooms in the B'nai B'rith Building. More than fifty members of the local lodges and their ladies' auxiliaries took part in the program, which was full of catchy songs, novelty acts and surprise features. The evening's entertainment was closed with dancing.

The Committee of Fifty is active in the matter of securing new members for the class initiation on Dec. 8, which will be conducted by the crack degree team who appeared before the Constitution Grand Lodge at its meeting last Spring in San Francisco.

TOLEDO LODGE, TOLEDO, OHIO.

Toledo Lodge No. 183 observed B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday evening, Nov. 21, 1915. This was the most successful B'nai B'rith Day celebration the lodge ever held.

An audience of nearly six hundred were present and enjoyed the splendid address delivered by Brother Henry Levinson, who outlined the activities of the Order here as well as abroad, also an address on "Peace" by Congressman Isaac Sherrwood, and by the speaker of the evening, Rabbi David Lefkovits, of Dayton, Ohio, on the work of the Order. Brother Sol H. Calisch presided and introduced the speakers.

A splendid musical program was also carried out.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE, WASH.

Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 held its nomination of officers for the ensuing year at the regular meeting of the lodge on November 4.

Hildesheimer Auxiliary, the Daughters of the Covenant, met at the same time and after the adjournment of the two meetings, both organizations met and it was decided that a ball be given under the joint auspices on December 8.

On November 18 an entertainment was held under the auspices of Hildesheimer Lodge and its auxiliary.

WHEELING, W. VA.

B'nai B'rith Day was observed with a public meeting at the Loff St. Temple at Wheeling, W. Va., by Wheeling Lodge No. 615, on Sunday evening, November 28, 1915.

The following was the program of exercises:

Organ Solo—Herbstnacht (Frysinger)
.......................Miss Lena Kraft
Opening Prayer..Bro. Rabbi A. H. Silver
Address of Welcome................
......Bro. Vice-President E. M. Baer
Violin Solo—Salut D'Amour (Elgar)..
..................Mr. David Daniels
Reading (Selected).......Bro. Leo Wolf
Organ Solo—Toccata-D'Edry.........
.................Miss Jessie A. Wolfe
Introduction........Bro. Leon B. Stein
Address—"The Next Generation"....
..Bro. Rabbi M. C. Currick, Erie, Pa.
Vocal Solo—With Verdure Clad—(Creation) Haydn.......................
............Mrs. Elsa Gundling Duga
Benediction.....Bro. Rabbi A. H. Silver

KANSAS CITY LODGE, KANSAS CITY, MO.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly observed by Kansas City Lodge No. 184 on Nov. 24, 1915, in the auditorium of Temple B'nai Jehudah. A large audience was present and appreciated an instructive address of Mr. S. J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, who was the guest of honor. His address was followed with a talk by Miss Jeannette Miriam Goldberg, secretary of the Jewish Chautauqua Society.

The program was interspersed with several well rendered musical selections.

WM. McKINLEY LODGE, OMAHA, NEB.

At the November meeting of Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521 of Omaha, Neb., the lodge celebrated what was known as "The Past Presidents' Night." In conjunction with the Ladies' Auxiliary, there was an attendance of more than one hundred, and fifteen past presidents of the lodge were also present. There were many novel features of an entertaining nature enjoyed at the meeting which made it a most enthusiastic and interesting meeting.

The lodge appointed recently a campaign committee which is now actively engaged in securing new members. The committee has secured the use of fifteen automobiles, which will be divided among the campaign committee members to make a canvass of the city in an organized way. The prospects for a large increase for Wm. McKinley Lodge is very bright.

ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

Gilhon Lodge No. 195 of Zanesville Ohio, initiated a class of twenty-six candidates on Sunday, Nov. 28, 1915. Its membership now numbers fifty-three. Much credit for this splendid result is due to the efforts of the president of the lodge, Mr. Morris Resler, and his committee, particularly so in view of the fact that the Jewish population in the community is rather small. Four Grand Lodge officers of District No. 2 honored the occasion with their presence, and assisted in the work of initiation.

In the evening a banquet was served in the Temple dining room under the auspices of the ladies of the members and at which a full attendance of the entire membership of the lodge was recorded.

Addresses were made by Brothers Alfred M. Cohen, Victor Abraham, Max Friedman and M. Hurtig, all of Cincinnati, visiting Grand Lodge officers, besides some of the local members.

The affair was in all respects a great success.

ERIE LODGE, ERIE, PA.

Erie Lodge No. 620 of Erie, Pa., observed B'nai B'rith Day in a fitting manner at the West Eighth Street Temple on Sunday evening, Nov. 28, 1915. A musical program of various numbers was the feature of the evening's exercises. The president of the lodge, Jacob Schaffner, presided.

The speaker of the evening was Mr. Max E. Meisel of Cleveland, Ohio, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 2. In his address he outlined the mission of the Order, stating that its primary object was not to erect monuments to benevolence and charity, but to endeavor to check the growth of Anti-Semitism in this country. The large audience listened with attention to the eloquent address of Brother Meisel, and at the close of the program a reception was held to enable all those present to greet the guest of honor.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

(Continued from page 15)

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Maccabee Lodge will celebrate its Golden Jubilee in February. It expects to celebrate its 50th anniversary with a class of 50 candidates. Maccabee Lodge will more than realize its expectations if all the brothers of that estimable Lodge will co-operate with its worthy President, Bro. Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein, and Bro. Samuel M. Roeder, the energetic leaders of the two Maccabee Membership Teams, in true Maccabeean spirit.

President Herman Asher has visited and addressed the following lodges during the past month: Jordan, Henry Jones and Hebron Lodges in New York City; Abraham and Harmony in Bridgeport, accompanied by Executive Secretary A. B. Seelenfreund and Charles Hartman, member of the General Committee, and Springfield Lodge, accompanied by First Vice-President Judge Cohen and Past President Charles M. Stern.

District Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan visited and addressed during the past month the following lodges: Maccabee, Flatbush, New York Isaiah, Akiba, Washington, Edmond Everett. Hebron, Zion, Patchogue and Amos of Boston. Maccabee. Flatbush, New York, Isaiah, and especially Amos, were well attended and the meetings were very enthusiastic, auguring well for the future.

In accordance with the time-honored Hebrew custom of celebrating the feast of Channukah with games and enjoyable pastimes, Henry Jones Lodge is arranging a series of chess matches and tournaments to begin Channukah evening, Dec. 2, 1915.

All those who wish to enter the individual tournament, and such lodges as desire to challenge Henry Jones Lodge for the chess championship of the District, will please communicate with Israel Ben Scheiber, of 63 Park Row, New York City.

A joint meeting of the four lodges, Edward Everett, Washington, Zion and Akiba Lodges, was held on November 10, at the rooms of Edward Everett Lodge. A number of candidates were initiated and addresses on the occasion were delivered by President Herman Asher, District Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan, Vice-President Joseph Rosenzweig, Treasurer Solomon Sulzberger, Vice-President of the Home Myron Sulzberger; Mr. Maurice P. Davidson, Mr. M. S. Weeker and President Julius Levy of Edward Everett Lodge. Among the prominent members initiated were Dr. Max Girsdansky and Dr. I. Radin.

Chananiah Lodge held a memorial service in memory of its departed brothers on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 7, 1915, at Harlem Masonic Temple. The service was well attended, the following participating in the program: President Herman Asher, District Secretary Rev. Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, President Henry Weiss of Chananiah Lodge, ex-President Emanuel Stern, Mr. Victor Freitag and Secretary Joseph Kraus. The musical program was in charge of Miss Ada Samptor.

New York Isaiah Lodge, which is the oldest lodge in the Order, initiated a large class of candidates on Wednesday evening, Nov. 10. The Lodge was addressed by President Herman Asher of the District, Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan and Mr. Max Stein, a distinguished visitor from Germany, brother-in-law of the well-known Maximilian Stein and brother of Prof. Stein of Berlin.

Flatbush Lodge of Brooklyn held a large public meeting on Wednesday, November 10, which was addressed by Rev. Dr. Krass, District Secretary Dr. B. M. Kaplan, Mr. Maurice P. Davidson, Clarence G. Bacharach and Bro. Morris Adler, past president of the District, and others.

District Grand Lodge No. 1, comprising New England States and the State of New York, will meet in annual convention at the Hotel Sommerset, Boston, Mass., the early part of February next.

A special committee has been appointed by the general committee to inquire into the Gary school system. The committee consists of Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, chairman, and Bros. Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, Solomon Sulzberger, Joseph Levinson and M. P. Davidson.

A large public meeting, under the auspices of Jehuda Halevi Lodge No. 710 was held in New Britain, Conn., and was addressed by President Morris D. Saxe of Jehuda Halevi Lodge, Brothers Maurice P. Davidson and Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan of New York, Joseph Shapiro of Bridgeport and George L. Rapport of [illegible].

A meeting of Springfield Lodge No. [illegible] of Springfield, Mass., at which forty [illegible] were initiated by the able Springfield Degree Team, was addressed by [illegible] President Herman Asher, Judge A. K. Cohen, Charles M. Stern of Albany and several others prominent in B'nai B'rith activities.

Henry Jones Lodge No. 79, of which Brother Abraham Anhalt is president, initiated a large class at its last meeting, which was addressed by Brothers Joseph Levenson, Israel Ben Scheiber, Hon. E. Z. Medalie, Hon. Louis Fabricant, assistant district attorneys, and Brother Bernard M. Kaplan, secretary of the District.

The Thanksgiving service at the Home at Yonkers was particularly interesting and impressive this year. The addresses of Brothers Herman Asher, Henry Meyers and Maurice P. Davidson were very much enjoyed by the large gathering present.

Maccabee Lodge No. 71 and Washington Lodge No. 19 held a joint meeting which was largely attended. A feature of the meeting was a paper read by Brother Prof. Michael Sharlitt on the Gary School System.

Manhattan Lodge No. 156, through its chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Brother Isidor Blum, is arranging a concert and dance to take place at Hotel Marseille, Dec. 18, 1915. The affair promises to be a great social success, as are usually all affairs given by the lodge. Brother Henry Gutenstein, chairman of the Propaganda Committee, and leader in the District membership campaign, is bending every effort to add to the already big membership of Manhattan Lodge. At the last meeting of the lodge several propositions were presented and the meeting was very enthusiastic. An interesting address on the occasion was made by Brother D. Coenca of Constantinople, Turkey.

The Metropolitan Lodges of New York will hold a grand initiation at Hotel Astor, Wednesday evening, December 29, at which a very large class of candidates will be initiated. Brother Dr. Edward N. Calisch, of Richmond, will be the orator on the occasion.

Brother Bernard M. Kaplan, secretary of the District, addressed a public meeting under the auspices of Patchogue LodgeNo. 759 at Unique Theatre, Patchogue, N. Y. As a result of the meeting steps have been taken to organize a Hebrew school, in addition to the excellent Sabbath school, conducted by a number of noble women, who have volunteered their services as a labor of love in the cause of Judaism.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

On Sunday, Dec. 5, 1915, Louisville Lodge, No. 14, of Louisville, Ky., initiated a class of fifty candidates. The degree team of the lodge conducted the ceremonies. Recently the lodge initiated a class of sixty-eight candidates and with the initiation at the meeting on Dec. 5, the membership of the lodge has exceeded the four hundred mark.

Propaganda efforts are being made with a view of establishing lodges in Steubenville and East Liverpool, Ohio. A new lodge has been organized at Bellaire, O. All this work is being conducted under the supervision of Brother Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh. His energetic work in this respect is so much more to be commended as the new lodges will not be located in the District of which Brother Hemple is a member.

At the meeting of Gihon Lodge, No. 195, of Zanesville, Ohio, held on Sunday, Nov. 28, 1915, a class of twenty-five new members was initiated. Brother Victor Abraham, of Cincinnati, secretary of the District Grand Lodge, attended the meeting and delivered an address.

On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 28, 1915, a class of thirty-two candidates was initiated by Kansas City Lodge No. 184 of Kansas City, Mo., in the presence of two hundred and seventy-five members.

Following the ceremonies, luncheon was served to all in the vestry rooms of the Temple.

The lodge has put into use at class initiations a song written by one of the workers of the lodge, Lewis Haar, and set to music written by Jack Sight.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

At the meeting of Rodef Sholem Lodge, No. 139, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., held on Nov. 7, 1915, a class of six candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Through the efforts of Brother Edward C. Kahn, president of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, a very pleasing and satisfactory meeting of the lodge was held on Tuesday, Nov. 16, 1915. Brother Wm. Rice delivered the first of a series of talks on one of the vital Jewish problems. At the conclusion of the address, refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

Victoria Lodge No. 748, of Victoria, B. C., held a very interesting meeting on November 16, at which several candidates were elected to membership. At the following meeting held on Nov. 23, initiation was conducted, after which a social program was carried out.

Bellingham Lodge No. 756, of Bellingham, Wash., was honored by a visit of Rabbi Samuel Koch, of Seattle, at the meeting of the Lodge held on Sunday, Nov. 14, 1915. After the meetings of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Lodge, and the lodge were concluded, they met jointly in order to listen to Dr. Koch's address.

A series of talks on vital Jewish problems has been inaugurated by B. F. Peixotto, Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, Utah, with Rabbi Wm. Rice as the speaker.

Arrangements are being made by Los Angeles Lodge, No. 487, of Los Angeles, Calif., to organize a Ladies' Auxiliary. At this time forty-five women have signed a petition for a charter.

B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, gave a mammoth masquerade and dance at the B'nai B'rith hall on Tuesday, Nov. 30, 1915. Those who participated appeared in costumes impersonating and depicting famous characters in history.

The committee that had charge of the affair made elaborate arrangements for the entertainment and comfort of the guests and suitable prizes were awarded.

Through the generosity of Mr. Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco, President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, $50.00 has been donated to Berkeley Lodge, No. 765, to be distributed as prizes for the best essays upon Jewish subjects.

Plans are now under way for the organization of a Students' Employment Bureau to be formed by Berkeley Lodge, No. 765, of Berkeley, Cal. It is the purpose of the lodge to assist Jewish students at the University of California to enable them to work their way through college.

DISTRICT No. 5.

As a result of extensive propaganda work in the District, 117 candidates were secured for Gate City Lodge, No. 144, of Atlanta. A large number of candidates were secured also for Rimmon Lodge at Richmond and Maon Lodge at Norfolk, Va.

A representative number of officers and members of Rimmon Lodge, No. 68, of Richmond, Va., gathered at Petersburg on Sunday, Nov. 14, where a meeting of the lodge was held for the purpose of initiating a class of ten candidates. Addresses were made by various visiting members of the Order.

The Propaganda Committee of the District is actively engaged in organizing new lodges. On Dec. 6 one was instituted at Danville, Va., and on Dec. 12 another lodge will be instituted at Newport News, Va.

District No. 5 is showing an unprecedented increase in its membership and the credit for this result is due entirely to the efforts of Brother Adolph Brand, field secretary of the District.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

At the last meeting of Dacotah Lodge, No. 731, of Grand Forks, N. D., held on Nov. 14, 1915, a propaganda campaign was inaugurated.

A movement has been started by Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer, of Des Moines, looking to the organization of a B'nai B'rith lodge in the city of Ottumwa, Ia. It is expected that the new lodge will be organized at the beginning of the coming year.

Des Moines Lodge, No. 330, of Des Moines, Ia., has suffered a loss in the demise of Brother Moritz Riegelman, who was a charter member of the lodge and who during his long life was active in behalf of Judaism.

John Hay Lodge, No. 634, of Fargo, N. D., held the first of a series of public meetings for Intellectual Advancement on Sunday evening, Nov. 21. The speaker was Professor Wallace N. Stearns, D. D., of Fargo College, who gave a stereopticon lecture on Palestine. A piano solo by Miss Sachs, and recitation, "The Old Man," by David Kopelman, which had won for him the State championship in a high school contest, preceded the lecture. The meeting was well attended.

Bay City Lodge No. 178, of Bay City, Mich., gave a ball and entertainment and appropriated the net proceeds of same for the relief of the Jewish war sufferers abroad.

Saginaw Lodge, No. 636, of Saginaw, Mich., is arranging to observe B'nai B'rith Day on Dec. 19, on which occasion a class of twelve candidates will be initiated. Brother Israel Cowen, of Chicago, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, has been delegated to pay an official visit to the lodge on this occasion and to deliver an address.

King David Lodge, No. 641, of Madison, Wis., observed B'nai B'rith Day on Dec. 5. 1915, with a class initiation. Brother H. D. Frankel, of St. Paul, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District, the guest of honor.

B'nai B'rith Day will be fittingly observed by Lake Cities Lodge, No. 696, of Ft. William, Canada, on Dec. 19.

Under the auspices of Pisgah Lodge, No. 34, of Detroit, Mich., a lecture with stereopticon views, "Glimpses of the Holy Land," was given by Brother David E. Heineman on Monday evening, Nov. 8, at the K. P. Temple. The lecture was followed by a dance. This was the first of a series of entertainments prepared under the auspices of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the lodge.

Calumet Lodge No. 502 of Houghton. Mich., held a well attended meeting in the Temple vestry rooms on Sunday, Dec. 5, at which the election of officers was held and the annual reports of the lodge were submitted. At the close of the meeting a smoker was held.

The lodge is arranging for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day on the evening of Dec. 25, and Rabbi Jos. H. Stolz, of Chicago, has been delegated to attend the celebration and deliver an address.

Reciprocating the successful program arranged for Minneapolis Lodge by the Intellectual Advancement Committee of Minnesota Lodge of St. Paul, the former lodge, through its Intellectual Advancement Committee, has arranged a program for the meeting of Minnesota Lodge, to be held on Dec. 13, 1915. The program consists of musical and vocal numbers, and a symposium—"Jewish Interests, How Best to Promote Them"—discussed from the standpoints of religiows by Rabbis Deinard and Matt; educational, Prof. Slobin; philanthropic and social, Mr. Weil and Miss Fensenthal.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Brother Julien Miller, of Chattanooga, Tenn., is now engaged in an effort to establish a lodge at Knoxville, Tenn. Brothers Simon and Fox have recently organized a lodge at Wichita Falls, Texas.

Isador Strauss Lodge, No. 519, of Ft. Worth, Texas, held a well attended business meeting on Nov. 2, at the Hebrew Institute. The next meeting of the lodge was held on Nov. 16, at which a literary and musical program was rendered for the benefit of the families and friends of the members.

Mr. Myron M. Goldman, of New Orleans, has been appointed secretary of the Grand Lodge to fill out the unexpired term of the late Nat Strauss.

Nat Strauss Lodge, No. 779, of Bristol. Tenn., was recently organized with thirty members, and has been named in honor and in memory of the late Brother Nat Strauss, secretary of District Grand Lodge. No. 7.

Ft. Smith Lodge, No. 306, of Ft. Smith. Ark., lost an earnest and sincere worker in the death of Brother Simon Joel.

Dr. W. H. Fineshriber addressed an audience at the Poplar Avenue Temple in Memphis, Tenn., on Friday evening. Nov. 5, 1915. on the subject, "What the International Brotherhood, the B'nai B'rith Has Accomplished During the War."

The joint meeting of Ezra Lodge No. 134, of Natchez, Miss., with the Sisterhood Lodge, provided a very enjoyable evening. Previous to the joint meeting a business meeting of the Lodge was held and twelve new members were initiated. At the conclusion of the business meeting both organizations listened to a very able address by Rabbi Sternheim of Baton Rouge, La., and also enjoyed a Heine program given by the members of the Sisterhood.

Herzl Lodge No. 608 of Houston, Texas, will give its annual Hanukkah Ball on December 5, next, at the Beach Auditorium.

Nashville, Tenn., mourns the loss by death of Mr. Morris Block, who for the past ten years made his home in that city. Half a century prior to coming to Nashville he was a resident of Baton Rouge, La., and was a charter member of Abr. Geiger Lodge of that city. During the yellow fever epidemic that affected New Orleans and the surrounding country, Mr. Block was exceedingly active in the relief of the plague stricken people.

Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 has named the following Intellectual Culture Committee, to serve during the coming season: Leo M. Brown, chairman; Dr. A. G. Moses. H. U. Feibleman, V. T. Loewenstein, Moses M. Schwarz, Arnold Block, Sol Kahn and Mendel Goldstein.

The Lodge has also named the following brethren to serve as a local Leo N. Levi Hospital Board: Brothers Henry Hess, Leon Schwarz and A. G. Moses.

The German Jewish student fraternities, who number about 1,000 members, have 778 serving in the army, of whom 300 joined as volunteers. Six hundred and twenty-five are in active field service, while the others are assigned either to hospital or are in training. Thirty-six were killed in action and 127 were wounded or invalided home; 147 won the iron cross and 21 have been raised to commissioned rank.

96.05
BN

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY

Vol. VIII. JANUARY, 1916 No. 5

Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

Meeting of Executive Committee

Jewish Situation Considered

PLAN OF ACTION ADOPTED

The Executive Committee of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith held its annual meeting in Chicago during the second week in January. Considerable time was devoted to the consideration of the proposition to hold a Jewish Congress in New York City and the status of Russian and Rumanian Jews, as well as Armenian Christians. It was decided that the President of the Order cable to Dr. ———, a leading citizen of one of the neutral countries, to visit without delay the capitals of the leading nations now at war for the purpose of ascertaining the most acceptable means of having presented to the Peace Conference, when it meets, the question of securing equal civil and religious rights to all inhabitants of European lands, and after securing such information to proceed to this country for a conference with the Advisory Committee of the Order. The Advisory Committee was instructed to consider at such conference plans for bringing to bear, at the proper time, through a national commission or otherwise, the moral weight of the people of the United States, without distinction as to creed, in support of the demand for equality of civil and religious rights for all the inhabitants of those countries where such equality is at present denied.

As to participation in the proposed Jewish Congress, attention was called to the resolution adopted on June 17, 1906, which reads as follows:

"Be it resolved, that the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, while rigidly maintaining its separate identity in the fulfillment of the tasks it has undertaken, nevertheless, stands ready to co-operate temporarily in all critical emergencies with other recognized Jewish organizations for the achievement of immediate results in matters affecting the Jewish cause. At the same time, this Executive Committee deems it antagonistic to the principles of the Order and subversive of its mission to enter into any permanent alliance or federation with other institutions limited in their scope and lacking the universality which has ever characterized the B'nai B'rith."

In view of said resolution it was not deemed advisable to participate in the deliberations of the proposed congress, but it was decided that the Order co-operate as a unit with the Jewish Congress in its efforts to secure human rights to Jews in certain countries if in the opinion of the Advisory Committee of the Order the plan and method which will be adopted at such Congress, if held, shall be deemed practical and feasible.

A lengthy report of the deplorable condition of the Rumanian Jews was read and considered, also a favorable report from Denmark as to steps already taken to properly present the Jewish question to the Peace Conference.

Routine business was disposed of, some money was appropriated to various institutions in the Orient, complaint was read bearing date November 17 from Safed against the manner of the distribution of supplies and funds sent from America by the Steamer Vulcan. Ordered that the complaint be referred to the American Jewish Relief Committee.

President Kraus reported that during the month of December he received communications from District Grand Lodge No. 11, Constantinople, and from Brother Henry Morgenthau, American Ambassador, requesting financial aid for the purchase of food for the sufferers in the Orient. Mr. Kraus stated that he cabled twenty thousand marks. Action was approved.

:-: SITUATION OF JEWS IN THE ORIENT :-:

Appeal from American Ambassador and B'nai B'rith Grand Lodge. Report of Relief Commission.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Constantinople.

November 3, 1915.

Executive Committee of Grand Lodge of Bene Berith, 1248 Tribune Building, Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:—I enclose herewith an appeal from the Grand Lodge of District XI of the Bene Berith, and I desire to add that they have in no respect overstated the necessities of the poor Jews in this district, due to the facts that so many heads of families have been called to serve in the army, and few, if any, have left their families any savings whatever. These people all live from hand to mouth; they are, therefore, absolutely in need of assistance, and anything that the lodge could do, would help to prevent the starvation which many of them are facing.

With my brotherly greetings to the members of the Committee.

Yours sincerely,
H. MORGENTHAU.

DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 11, I. O. B. B.

Constantinople, Nov. 1, 1915.

To the Executive Committee, I. O. B. B., Chicago., Most Worthy President, Honored Brother:

We take the liberty to submit to you the enclosed appeal with the request to comply with it in the manner which you deem most proper. The rules of the official censor, alas, do not permit us to give you a complete detailed report, but in order that you shall be able to gain some clearer conception of the situation, we also submit to you within a report of the Dardanelles Committee, which we have called into life, and an account of the expended relief funds which you sent us.

Besides being addressed to you, our appeal has also been sent to other Jewish organizations. But we are convinced that our Order will be the first one to grant our request, because it is not only a question of human benevolence concerning Jews at large, but because this time it is a Grand Lodge of your Order itself that is appealing to the entire Jewry.

Among the signers of the appeal are to be found the Vice-President of the Grand Rabbinate and the representatives of the Ica and of the Hilsverein.

We believe that the appeal as well as the report of the Dardanelles Committee are fit to be published in the B. B. News.

With hearty greetings in B. B. L. & H.,
J. NIEGO,
President.
DR. ISRAEL AUERBACH,
Secretary,

APPEAL.

The fearful world-drama, which has been played for more than a year, has not only hit hard the Jews of the Empire of the Czar and of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, but also those of the Balkan lands, and first of all the Jews of the Osmanic empire.

The wounds which former catastrophies, like earthquakes, cholera, many conflagrations, the Italian war and the Balkan wars, have inflicted, were not yet healed up when the new war evil fell over them with the fury of destruction.

The defense of the fatherland demanded heavy sacrifices in blood and in property—they gladly took them upon themselves. Communities were ruined and dwelling places had to be vacated in the war territory—in resignation they bore the unavoidable and started their wandering.

But the geographic political situation of Turkey has made their already very grievous condition still harder by adding to it a durable and insufferable severity. The closing of the Dardanelles, the tying up of all communication on the high seas on the one side, the shutting off of the important railroad line which connected the country over Servia with Europe on the other side, and the lasting tensions among the Balkan states finally had the serious consequence that commercial and financial traffic have almost become completely prostrated, opportunities for work failed and our Osmanic co-religionists lost very many sources of support.

Lately neighboring Bulgaria was also seized by the world-conflagration; and every day brings nearer the possibility that the rest of the Balkan nations—Roumania and Greece—may also be dragged into the whirlpool. When this happens then the dreadfulness of the economic catastrophe which threatens the Osmanic Jews can not be imagined. In addition to all this the winter is nearing which considerably increases the most common necessities of life, especially among the poorest classes.

The Turkish Jewry faces this dangerous condition helplessly. The tremendous sufferings of our brethren in Galicia and Poland have till now completely claimed the saving and relief activity of the entire Jewish community, so that the distress of the Osmanic Jews disappeared behind it and was forgotten. Up to the present day the Turkish Jews paid regard to the greater urgency for help which existed in the lands of the north, they permitted their own sufferings and needs to fall behind, they waited and were silent. All imaginable means of self-help have in the meantime been employed. Thousands of native Jews and numerous ones who were held back in Turkey by the war, mostly shelterless and breadless Jews, subjects of foreign countries, have been in this way scantily kept alive until now. The funds which flowed to us sparingly from abroad were administered with the utmost and strictest frugality.

But now, however, we have come to the end of our powers.

Our cry for help can no longer be kept back.

It is absolutely necessary that relief money is transmitted to us quickly and amply if great masses of the Osmanic Jews are not to be abandoned to despair and their economic distress is not to degenerate into irremediable ruin.

We address the hearty petition to the Jewish organizations and private individuals to consider the Turkish Jews in their relief work and to grant them their brotherly aid as quickly as possible.

The Grand Lodge of the Orient I. O. B. B. No. 11.

J. Niego, President,
Dr. Israel Auerbach, Secretary,
Em Carrasso, Deputy,
Bohor Eskenazi, Senator,
Dr. Markus, Chief Rabbi.

REPORT OF DARDANELLES COMMISSION.

Constantinople, Sept. 22, 1915.

Mr. President of the B'nai B'rith Society, City:

Six months have elapsed since on account of the events which are known to you the Jews of the Dardanelles, just like all the population of that place, found themselves obliged to abandon their homes and seek refuge in a certain number of neighboring places, such as Lapsaki, Gallipoli, Bigha, Constantinople and the villages of the Dardanelles.

Our co-religionists who mostly live from hand to mouth thus suddenly saw themselves deprived of all resources and without shelter. To increase their misfortune the feast of the Passover was very near, a feast which all Jews try to observe scrupulously. As the community of the Dardanelles had no time to prepare the unleavened bread which they needed, the rich as well as the poor risked being compelled to eat ordinary bread during the entire duration of the feast. Desperate appeals, all on behalf of the poor, were at that time addressed to the Chief Rabbi of Turkey and to the B'nai B'rith, who did not fail to give them consideration and to give the necessary assistance to these unfortunate families. The community of the Dardanelles disposed of some of their household things which brought about sixty Turkish pounds which were distributed among nearly all the poor and as equitably as the scantiness of the resources and the need of help to obtain unleavened bread would permit.

The festival passed, the condition of these families did not improve much. Their number, which kept on increasing, made things worse, as those who had some resources, were drained a little more each day and they augmented the number of the needy. It was impossible to abandon these unfortunates and leave them to themselves. It was absolutely necessary to provide them with their daily bread, although we knew that it would have to be done for a long time.

While the Chief Rabbi, with the members of the B'nai B'rith Society and the prominent parties of the Dardanelles, who were in the capital, endeavored to find the best means of bringing efficient help to these unfortunates, it was learned that their number has been doubled, perhaps tripled, the families of Gallipolis were also forced to abandon their homes, to lose their means of subsistance and to seek a place of refuge elsewhere. Some went as far as Rodosto, Tchardag and Lapsaki.

In consequence of the pressing dispatches and letters which arrived from all parts to the Chief Rabbi and the B'nai B'rith Society they voted 100 Turkish pounds as new aid, at the same time a special committee composed of the prominent people of the Dardanelles was formed under the auspices of said society and was instructed to gather information concerning the needy families, to collect donations and to make a judicious distribution among the different localities.

As soon as constituted the committee went to work to extend the most urgent help. It also addressed itself to the community of the Dardanelles and to the benevolent society of that place and decided to turn over to it all sums which are to be distributed there.

The Chief Rabbi interceded in behalf of two unfortunate communities with the United States ambassador, who did not fail to telegraph to a benevolent society in his country and to remit to us shortly after 2,500 dollars, which is in the neighborhood of 590 Turkish pounds.

This liberality permitted us to respond to all demands which we received. Every time the number of those in need of help was raised we had to force ourselves to greater economy if we did not wish our work to become useless.

We consequently decided not to grant more than 40 paras a day per person to families composed at the utmost of three members and 30 paras per person to families of more than three members.

Thanks to these precautions, we were enabled to extend aid to 1,764 persons during more than three months.

These unfortunates were scattered in the following twenty-one places:

	Persons
Mairamich	60
Bigha	44
Birgas	25
Bilinkeny	2
Dardanelles	23
Eusbec	120
Iapildag	76
Gallipoli	45
Isine	13
Kara-Djoglou	13
Kauguerli	48
Kemel	47
Kourchourlou	40
Icheclar	5
Lapsaki	200
Loussakeny	15
Pandemra	35
Sari-beyli	15
Suledje	30
Rodosto	708
Tchardag	200
	1,764

The relief funds were distributed by sub-committees presided over in Rodosto by the Director of the Alliance School of that city, in Lapsaki by the Director of the Alliance School of the Dardanelles and in Paderma by the Director of the School of Gallipoli.

Several persons of Lapsaki went in their good will to the neighboring villages of the Dardanelles and distributed the relief funds.

Although in the beginning only 30 to 40 paras per person were distributed, on considering the needs of each family it was, in fact, found necessary to raise or diminish this sum according to the ability of a family to procure other resources.

We are persuaded to think that we have performed a useful work, not only by assuring their daily bread to 1,700 unfortunates during more than three months, but especially by having helped a great number of heads of families to tide over the critical moments of the first weeks, of their arrival into the villages, so that they were able to resume little by little their usual employment, which was so suddenly interrupted.

It is not without sincere pleasure that we have learned that several of these heads of families without giving up hope and permitting themselves to sink down entirely have again put forth their endeavors and no longer depend exclusively upon our help for existence.

Thus our aim has been attained.

We credit the merit to the Chief Rabbi, who interested himself in these unfortunates, who encouraged us to form our committee and has not ceased giving us his wonderful and judicious advice; to his excellency, the American Ambassador, whose solicitude is for all unfortunates and for all deeds of humanity, who procured for us the material means for carrying on well our endeavors; and finally to the Order of B'nai B'rith, which our co-religionists consider more and more, and with good reason, as the good providence, which had taken the initiative to form our committee, furnished us the first funds, encouraged us with its counsels, made us profit by its experience, which did not cease to interest itself in our work and to stimulate our zeal. In the name of our two communities, as well as the unfortunates whom we have helped, we express our deep gratitude to all those who have assisted us in this great work of charity.

Today our funds are exhausted, although our aims and endeavors are unfortunately not yet finished. If some families are no longer in need of our help, there still are a great many widows, orphans and families of soldiers who have been deprived of all resources and [illegible] for our help just as our an[illegible] waited in the desert for the provi[illegible] Manna. What will become of [illegible] unfortunates during the time when we withdraw our help from them? What will become of them tomorrow when the great frosts will begin and who will provide them with their daily bread and procure for them fuel, clothing and a sanitary habitation?

Today many families live in barns or camp out in the field. Shall they rot during the rainy season, in the snow and in the wind? They will be forced to begin again their wandering, to start again on the way of exile, to go again into the unknown regions where other families more experienced than they find themselves utterly useless outside of the state. Is it not our duty not to abandon them in these critical moments and to occupy ourselves with their needs, to alleviate their sufferings as much as possible?

Must we not intensify our work today?

To the reasons stated above we should perhaps add that a military order was issued to the authorities to again send away the population from the places in the neighborhood of the theater of war. Those who have recommenced to earn their livelihood are again plunged into misery and will no doubt be forced to appeal to us. Are we to remain deaf to their demands?

We need greater sums than we had in the past.

We are convinced that the societies and the good individuals who have helped us until now will continue to lend us their co-operation.

Israel never had a better opportunity to prove his sentiments of solidarity and fraternity, for never was the misery so great among the disinherited by destiny.

This it is which leads us to renew our appeal to you, we count upon the charity of all our co-religionists for the purpose of bringing our difficult aim to a good end.

S. M. LEVY,
President.

M. CAUSSIE,
Secretary.

THE JEWS IN TURKEY.

Organization of an Ottoman-Jewish Union.

The Jewish congregations in Germany, as a testimony of their sympathies, have furnished the Turkish armies several carloads of sanitary supplies. Dr. Alfred Nossig, who superintended the shipment and accompanied it to destination, was given a hearty welcome by the Sultan, the heir apparent, Jussuf Izzedin, Enver Pasha, Talaat Bey and Halil Bey. The representatives of the government expressed their grateful appreciation of the loyalty of the Jewish population and assured Dr. Nossig of the continuation of the government's good will towards the Jews.

Dr. Nossig and Councillor of Commerce Simon, were favored by the bestowal upon them of the Medschidije Order.

During Dr. Nossig's stay in Constantinople a number of prominent and distinguished Jews, with the consent and full approval of the government, organized "the Ottoman-Jewish Union". The purpose of that society, whereof the representative Carasso is president, is, to secure a closer adhesion of the Jews with the other groups of population within the Turkish dominion. Furthermore the Union intends to devote its best energies to secure civil and economic betterment in the conditions of the Oriental Jews at the time opportune for international settlements at the termination of the war.

In relation to this subject an exchange of views has taken place between the Ottoman government and the German embassy and an understanding has been arrived at, according to which the Turkish government as well as the German and the Austrian-Hungarian governments are in accord and fully agreed to support with their best efforts all endeavors to obtain a betterment of condition of the Oriental Jews.

JEWS ALLOWED TO TRADE IN NON-PALE TOWNS.

After many months of resistance on the part of Governors and police officials outside the Pale, as well as of the subordinates of the Ministry of Finance, the official Government organ, the Pravitelstvenni Vestnick, has published a communication from the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Finance, and the State Controller, informing the Senate of their decision to allow Jews to trade without restrictions in all non-Pale towns which were thrown open to them by Prince Tcherbatoff.

WARSAW UNIVERSITY HAS MANY JEWS.

The University of Warsaw, which was recently opened under German auspices, has an enrollment of 900 students. Jewish students form 34 per cent of the total enrollment. Nearly half of the total number have enrolled in the department of medicine.

The Next Generation

Address delivered before

WHEELING LODGE 615

on B'nai B'rith Day, November 28, 1915

By Rabbi MAX C. CURRICK, of Erie, Pa.

We live not for this, but for the next, generation. Strive as we may for ourselves and our selfish purposes, the time eventually arrives when we understand that we must relinquish all to those who are waiting to take our places. The miser leaves his hoard to be used or squandered by his heirs. He who has laid up a treasure of the spirit bequeaths to posterity something that has injured no one in the getting, but which helps to make the next generation better than this one. So whether we are stupidly living all of our life in and for today only, or whether we are conscious of our part in the cumulative preparation for the day that follows our night, each of us is daily and hourly helping to make or to mar the world of tomorrow. For after all, if we analyze the motive of all our education, all our labor, we see that it is but to make this generation better than the last and the next generation better than this. As history records the progress of humanity it testifies to the success of this effort; as it writes down human retrogression and decline it points its failure. True, there are those whose habit it is to bewail the degeneracy of these times and to exalt the excellence of the day that was. We are too much in the world to know whether they have the right perspective or not; but it is not the way of Judaism to look backward disconsolately to the perfection and the glory of the happy past; its retrospect of the glories that were is ever connected with the hopeful prospect of the better days to come in the upward march of humanity.

It is well to maintain this point of view even in spite of the dire happenings in the present world catastrophe. This war, frightful and savage beyond human experience, appears as naught but a frenzy of destruction both of human life and of human achievement. But it is only just to concede that the orgy of barbarism is, after all, only a perverted expression of the same human desire to make the world a better place in which to live, to pave an advantageous path for the next generation. The weaklings and degenerates with whom Europe will abound for generations to come will be living witnesses of the folly of a day that wrought such havoc in its sincere desire to assure itself that its descendants would have room and reason to grow strong physically and morally, but who will say that it is entirely vain?

We Jews have not needed to wait for modern science to teach us our duty to posterity. We require no new ethics to stress the importance of self-education for the enrichment of the legacy we have received and which we are to hand down. In Israel life has ever been an uninterrupted educational course. Life and Torah balanced each other in the equations of the rabbis. The Torah was continuously to be studied, taught and lived by the sons of the covenant of Israel. Abraham was chosen because God knew that he would command his children and his house after him that they should keep the way of the Lord. The injunction recited twice daily by observant Israelites commands us to teach diligently the words of God's truth unto our children. Israel, probably more than any other people of the world, has had a feeling of high responsibility and tender solicitude for its children. Its glory it understood as the reward of its faithfulness in this duty and its sorrow and downfall it interpreted as the swift punishment for its neglect of its children. Especially of the children of the poor has Israel been mindful. From them, more than from the children of the rich, went forth the Torah.

We, of the B'nai B'rith, have been told time and again of the debt we owe to the generation that has gone before us. We are the heirs of a yesterday that was loyal to the house of Israel. Strong in their faith in the God of Israel and in the place of Israel in the world, the men of that day joined hands that they might be fit to play well their part in the new environments in which they found themselves. The difficulties they had encountered they would save the next generation. And we, their successors, have reaped the benefits of their devotion. We see about us the fruits of their labors. From year to year we are called upon to celebrate their fame and recount their praise.

In no more effective way can we sound their praise, however, than by continuing their work and increasing their enterprises. It was they who in many instances awoke the Jewish people of the land to the duty and crying need for means of caring for unfortunate Jewish children. Children who had languished in want and neglect found homes in which love was lavished upon them and in which they received the benefits of a wholesome Jewish life and Jewish education.

Now that District No. 3 has established its home for orphan and friendless children, we may confess that up to this we have been remiss in this important work. It may be some solace that our tardiness has enabled us to gather the benefit of the experience of other districts, to profit by their splendid example and also from some of their unavoidable errors. The spirit of our time is running against institutionalism in philanthropy. We find no pride in great barracks that house hundreds, sometimes a thousand or more children. Ours the desire to place the orphaned and friendless child in a true home, amid normal family surroundings, where it may develop its individuality and grow physically, mentally and morally, with the same freedom and the same opportunities as its more fortunate comrades. The ideal method is then to find such a home for each child who is the unfortunate victim of harsh fate. Our district, not finding it feasible to conduct a home finding society, but realizing its duty to provide for unfortunate children outside of the larger Jewish centers which have their own asylums, has built two cottages on the hill outside of the city of Erie. We call this our home, our pledge to the neglected and forsaken Jewish children of our district that they are not utterly forlorn, that the Father of the orphans has not forgotten them.

Need I appeal to you, and to whomever in this district my feeble words may come, to stand loyally by our home, to support it in Jewish piety and generosity? Surely I may, without offense, urge upon you the personal duty of every Jew in this district to keep in mind our thirty children, who are now in very truth our children, for we stand for them in the place of father and mother. The cottages on the slope outside of Erie are testimony of our desire and determination to supply a truly Jewish home, not merely in the semblance, but also in the spirit. The life in the home will not estrange our little ones from the life of the parent or relative they may have remaining. That is why the regimen is kasher. In aiding our children we shall not hurt their elders by violating a code which is still held sacred by the majority of Jewry.

No finer buildings for residence stand in the entire county of Erie outside of the city. But we cannot honestly call them our own until we have paid for them. And I am therefore bold to remind you that upon you, too, with the rest of the district, it devolves to liquidate the debt of from $40.000 to $50,000 which rests on these buildings. I know of the endless calls which these stressful days make upon all of us, but the generation that fails to hear the cry of its forlorn children increases its own sorrow and earns the reproach of the next generation. Let, then, not another B'nai B'rith Day go by without your adding your portion to the funds that will lift the burden of debt from our children's home, that will lessen the heavy cost of carrying that debt. On occasions of joy or of sorrow, when devising wills and bequests, in instituting memorials, whenever, in short, your Jewish heart prompts you to share your pious feelings with the Jewish community, to give to Israel at large a part of the fine inspiration that is yours because of sacred joy, holy sorrow or pious memory, or whenever you may have some exalted Jewish sentiment, let our home be at least one of the vehicles for such noble expression. You need never doubt the blessing that will follow therefrom.

The rabbis tell us that the phrase "For his mercy endureth forever," occurs twenty-six times corresponding with the twenty-six generations that God created without giving them the Torah. This seemingly statistical statement is meant to imply that God judges mercifully those generations which have not had the benefit of the Torah, true religion. But for many generations we have been of those of whom it was written "and all thy sons are taught of the Lord," and to us particularly, therefore, must apply the rabbinical homily: "Do not read 'banayich,' 'thy sons,' but 'Bonayich,' thy builders.'" May great peace come to us, as lovers of the Torah, the peace of the knowledge that we have lived up to our high obligation, so that our "children" of the next and future generations may look upon us as the founders and "builders" of an enduring structure for the glory of the Torah in our care for "the children of the poor."

Situation of the Jews in Roumania

By Our Special Correspondent

Since the outbreak of the war I have not reported to you about the present aspect of this question. But as the situation is constantly growing worse instead of better and the Jewish population in Roumania finds itself face to face with problems which it is unable to solve alone, I resolved to go abroad in order to get into communication with you and to appeal for that support without which we could not continue to the fight any longer.

We, as well as the oppressed Jews of the other countries, place our hopes in the Jews of America, of whose action we not only expect material and moral help, but also political intercession with the government of the United States. An energetic attitude in favor of the Roumanian Jews assumed by the government of the United States at the present time, and before the impending peace congress, would have a deciding influence upon the settlement of this question.

We have noticed with regret that in most of the Jewish meetings and in the Jewish press of America in favor of the East-European Jews the question of the Roumanian Jews was either entirely neglected or was touched upon perfunctorily only.

Permit us to give a short presentation of the aspect of our situation as it is today.

Suspicion of Espionage: Expulsion from the Border Territory.

In spite of the fact that in case of necessity, 20,000 to 25,000 Jews will be fighting under the Roumanian flag, notwithstanding that during the Bulgarian expedition of 1913, the mobilized Jews were promised citizenship and that also at present many thousands of Jewish soldiers have for months been concentrated and their families find themselves in bitter distress, the Roumanian government has just lately assumed an attitude of the fiercest hostility towards the Jews. For instance, a few months ago it promulgated an edict according to which strangers and Jews are forbidden to reside in places on the Austria-Hungarian frontier. In consequence of this the Jews were driven out from places where they were born. The expulsions were carried out with special cruelty; the Jews had to quit their homes within a few hours and leave all their property behind. Even the naturalized Jews were expelled. Jewish veterans from the wars of independence (of 1877), who were distinguished by war-medals were driven out, solely because they are Jews. Numerous Jewish families were in this way ruined. Merchants who had factories or grain magazines on the frontiers were forced to depart hastily with their Jewish assistants and to forsake their property.

The reason for all this, which was conceded in a semi-official newspaper, was that the Roumanian Jews are suspected of espionage in favor of Austria-Hungary.

One can conceive how heavily this suspicion weighed upon the Jews, what attitude it creates among the population against the Jews, who are hated enough without it, and the dangers which this can bring in case of war.

The same suspicion has also ripened another highly humiliating measure, one which is dangerous in its consequences. Among the troops stationed on the Austria-Hungarian frontier the Jewish soldiers were separated from their regiments and sent into the interior of the country. This is the latest event and you just think of the fearful danger of such a measure.

Besides, the position of the Jews in the army has been for a long time and is now extremely hard. They are there persecuted, jeered at and abused just because they are Jews. Anti-Semitism in the Roumanian army has developed into a plague. The thousands of Jewish soldiers are exposed to insults, rudeness and every kind of prejudice on the part of the anti-Semitic superiors without the possibility of a defense. Jewish physicians and young men with academic education, occupy a position in the army subordinate to their Christian colleagues and the Jewish soldiers can not attain the least promotion (the grade of officer is by law reserved for the Roumanian citizens).

I possess a complete brief with all minute documents about this subject according to name and date, as well as the official orders and decrees concerning the above facts. I am ready to place the material at your disposal.

The Law for the Control of the Strangers.

The hardest blow recently dealt to the Jews was indisputably the law for the control of the strangers, politically unquestionably the most dangerous law and of the most harmful consequences among the laws for strangers, with which the Roumanian legislation is so richly provided, and which are aimed against the native Jews, as it is known that these are considered as strangers, as homeless, or, as the favorite formula sounds: As foreigners without foreign protection, a pearl of the Roumanian Byzantimism. So the Jews can be deprived of their rights and enslaved without the word Jew being used in any way.

The mechanism and the aim of this law for the control of the strangers is too complex to be presented here in detail. This shall be done in a separate paper which I will send you later and which shall be published, for it is necessary that the world shall learn the real object of the Roumanian State with this law.

Here is a brief statement of the general aims:

According to that law only those can be considered as Roumanian subjects—mark well not as Roumanian citizens—in the sense of the law, who can establish by documentary evidence that they were born in Roumania, and that neither they nor their ancestors have ever been foreign subjects. At first glance the distinction seems to be judicially free from objection, but the initiated know that 80 per cent of the Jewish population can not produce this proof merely because the records of the civil class were introduced for the first time in 1866, because ten thousand Jews have changed their names and just as many transferred their residence from the place of their birth to other parts of the country; more than 80,000 have migrated and only a few of the better situated and educated classes have preserved their family records. Under these circumstances also the Christian Roumanians would not be in a position to furnish this kind of proof.

As the greatest majority of the Roumanian Jews are not in a position to bring these proofs, they, therefore, can not gain the recognition of their qualification as Roumanian subjects, which has very serious consequences, for these persons will then, as strangers, have to apply for a residence permit, be subject to all burdensome restrictions of the right of a free man to move from one place to another, etc., and finally—and this is the real aim of the whole thing—in case a law of emancipation were forced upon her, Roumania would stigmatize the native Jews as strangers and be able to maintain that no Roumanian Jews exist. First of all such Jews cannot obtain any travelers' passports. The passports, of which I will treat later more minutely, have become a true curse for the Roumanian Jews. There is a passport law which contains grievous regulations for the Jews. Since the promulgation of the law for the control of the strangers, the government demands that the Jews who wish to obtain a passport shall not only comply with the prescriptions of the passport law, but also with those of the law for the control of the strangers, which have nothing to do with the passport law, and which, as stated above, 80 per cent of the Jews are unable to comply. This is a regime of chicanery and of arbitrariness, such as has hardly ever existed elsewhere.

In the second place, the law of control has led to a number of vexatious imprisonments, expulsions and condemnation of Jews. The law compels those strangers (i.e., Jews), who can not prove that their parents were never subjected to foreign protection to apply within a short space of time to the proper authorities for a residence certificate, that is to commit an act by which their qualification as strangers is being officially certified to. Many Jews whose parents were not foreign subjects, but who could not produce this documentary evidence, were arrested and sentenced to pay fines, were driven out from the villages because they had not applied within the legal space of time for the residence certificate. Among those who were forced to take these strangers' certificates are many Jewish soldiers, such as took part in the Bulgarian expedition and who in case of a war are sent to the front to shed their blood for Roumania. An unheard of violation of right and justice.

Emigration in Masses.

This situation, the unceasing violences, annoyances, persecutions and abasements have called forth a desperate frame of mind among the Jews. It may be taken for granted that if the present events will not bring emancipation, tens of thousands of Jewish families will have to emigrate from Roumania. This will lead to a veritable catastrophe.

Foreign action may save the Roumanian Jews. It is a moral duty and a demand of solidarity that their American co-religionists shall now venture everything in order to attain the emancipation of the Jews of Eastern Europe. The Roumanian Jews cannot continue to exist without emancipation. The question of the rights of citizenship has become for them plainly a life-and-death question. The anti-Semitic legislation for strangers in Roumania has so far succeded and has extended itself over so many districts that the Jews are no longer able to stir because they are considered as strangers.

The American co-religionists are just the ones who are appointed to accomplish great things, because the government of the United States can now appear with greater force and authority than ever before.

MASS MEETING OF PROTEST IN CLEVELAND.

A mass meeting under the auspices of the Jewish organizations was held on Monday evening, Dec. 6, 1915, at the Auditorium of the East Technical High School. The hall was crowded and at the close of the meeting, a resolution was adopted protesting against the oppression of Jews in certain countries in Europe.

The chairman of the meeting was Judge John H. Clarke, of the United States district court, and the speakers were Rev. Father Francis T. Moran, pastor of St. Patrick's Church. Max Hayes, editor of the Citizen; Miss Florence Allen, representing women's organizations of the city; Judge Willis Vickery; President Bascom Little, of the Chamber of Commerce; Rev. Dr. W. W. Bustard, of Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, and Mayor Newton D. Baker.

Father Moran said: "Love your neighbor as yourself. I say to you tonight that we of the Christian world ought to be ashamed of ourselves. That men can arm themselves and go out to slaughter other men certainly doesn't do any credit to Christianity. And then to turn the vials of their wrath on a race whose only crime is that of being weak and oppressed, that's simply unspeakable."

Mr. Hayes paid his compliments to "discredited and disgraced" Russia; Miss Allen held that it is the duty of every American to make protest; Judge Vickery urged that the voice of protest be loud enough to be heard around the world; Mr. Little's address was strong and vigorous. Dr. Bustard, speaking of the first shot of the American revolution, fired at Lexington, said "out of meetings like this will go from America another shot of liberty that will be heard around the world."

Mayor Baker declared "whether there be peace or war in the world, there is no day and no hour in which we ought not to be remembering the hatefulness of prejudice and opposing it and all its works."

Ex-Congressman R. J. Bulkley read the following resolutions, after moving their adoption, which were adopted by a rising vote:

Whereas, it has been the good fortune of the people of the United States to be free from the horrors of the European conflict now raging, and from the hatreds and prejudices, and

Whereas, every form of oppression and discrimination is contrary to the spirit of the American people, and

Whereas, the people and the government of the United States can exercise a beneficent influence in aiding the world to lay a foundation for a durable and permanent peace which is to be based upon justice to all peoples and nations, and,

Whereas, in a number of European countries, the Jewish people, notwithstanding their great sacrifices for the countries of their birth, are deprived of all civic, political and national right, and

Whereas, the Jewish people are subjected to outrageous and inhuman atrocities at the time when they shed their blood on the battlefields of Europe; therefore,

Be it resolved, at a mass meeting assembled this 6th day of December, 1915, in the city of Cleveland, state of Ohio, that the Congress of the United States and the government of the United States be petitioned to use their friendly offices with the governments of the nations of Europe to bring about the complete emancipation of the Jewish people, and be it

Resolved, that copies of this resolution be sent to the president, secretary of state, speaker of the House of Representatives and to the Senate of the United States.

At the close of the meeting Chairman Clarke said that the American protest would accomplish results "because the governments abroad realize they have to account after this war to the righteous spirit of the world."

THE JEWISH CHAUTAUQUA SOCIETY.

The reports of the proceedings of the Twenty-fourth Annual assembly of the Jewish Chautauqua society, held during the last week of December, 1915, at St. Louis, Mo., were widely printed in the daily press. From these, it must have been noted that the program attained a degree of excellence, which reflected high credit upon the participants. Apart from the able addresses, however, it may be well to record the fact that the young men and women, active teachers in our religious schools, traveled from all sections of the country to share in the discussions, receiving information most helpful to them. The assembly was most inspiring, and the great community of St. Louis responded to its appeal in a most generous and enthusiastic manner. Dr. Sale declared his participation quite rejuvenated him, and he regarded the constructive work as being unexcelled by any other endeavor.

Among the practical achievements of this assembly were the preliminary steps taken by the teachers of Kansas, Missouri and other states to form a branch association. This is another evidence of the influence of the society in holding its assemblies in the various parts of the country. These have stimulated into existence State Teachers Associations. A number of these held their sessions during the last week in December, and in several instances had representatives in St. Louis.

Another notable influence of the assembly was the unification of sentiment and effort of the St. Louis community. Union services were held in the three temples on Sabbath eve, Sabbath morning and Sunday. The thrilling sermon given by Dr. Heller in Dr. Harrison's pulpit to a vast congregation, the masterly effort of Rabbi Feuerlicht on Sabbath morning in Dr. Thurman's pulpit, and the inspiring words of Rabbi Bernstein in Dr. Sale's pulpit left a profound impression on all. The extraordinary generosity and hospitality of the St. Louis community during the visit of the delegates gave to the social side of the assembly marked distinction. The membership list of the society was doubled through the efforts of Mr. Aaron Waldheim, and Mr. M. C. Reefer of Kansas City, in an enthusiastic telegram contributed $1,000 to the cause.

The social service and synagogue department of the society was ably expounded by Dr. Bogen of Cincinnati and Dr. Goldstein of New York. The second session of the summer school at the metropolis is being planned, and will no doubt draw a large constituency.

Dr. Berkowitz and Dr. Rosenau, at the head of the Chautauqua movement, were untiring in their guidance of the work throughout the sessions. The indefatigable efforts of the secretary, Miss Goldberg, won the enthusiastic acclaim of all.

During the course of the session a tribute was paid to the memory of the late Solomon Shechter.

The Jewish Chautauqua Society of America accounts it a sad privilege to add its voice of mourning to those who deplore the sudden removal by death of Professor Solomon Shechter.

PROF. SOLOMON SHECHTER.

Imbued as the society is with the sacredness of every endeavor to promote education, its members have ever looked up to him as an exemplar of the highest Jewish learning who in search for truth went even into the hidden recesses and brought forth material which has wrought wonderful changes in the estimate of our ancient books. Both here and abroad, Solomon Shechter made himself a name by his vast erudition, his original thought and his popular presentation of Jewish truth. He was a great sage in Israel. Personally modest in demeanor, his erect figure and penetrating eye concentrated attention upon him wherever he appeared. His geniality and his demeanor towards all of us, who regarded ourselves as his students, endeared him to all hearts. His contributions to Jewish thought and literature as made by his books will forever keep his name alive in the hearts of his disciples and of the studious of all lands.

He gave his encouragement to our efforts to conquer ignorance and prejudice by disseminating a knowledge of the history, life and literature of Israel. His presence as instructor at our summer sessions in Atlantic City, N. J., instituted the first attempt at a Jewish summer school.

With profound appreciation of what his life has meant to the Jewish Chautauqua society, we seek to put on record our sorrow at his taking off and place this minute upon our archives, and a copy thereof in the hands of the family of the bereaved, to whom we beg to offer our sincere condolence.

Sixtieth Anniversary Celebration OF JOSHUA LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Addresses by

Dr. R. I. COFFEE on Social Service Work :-: SIG. LIVINGSTON on Work of Anti-Defamation League

One of the most inspiring celebrations of the Order ever held in Philadelphia occurred on Sunday, December 5, 1915, when leading members of the Order assembled to make a fitting record of the sixtieth anniversary of Joshua Lodge No. 23.

In the afternoon at a meeting of the Lodge initiation of a class of thirty-six men was held in a most dignified manner by the degree team of the Lodge. At this meeting Brother Jacob Singer, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, spoke briefly introducing Brother Harry Cutler, of Providence, R. I., who addressed the newly initiated members on the critical problems which now confront Jews and Judaism the world over. He spoke of the many blessings which the Order could confer and pointed out how the individual members might be most helpful in strengthening Judaism.

On behalf of the new members Prof. Dr. Max L. Margolis was called upon and responded in a few well chosen words. He emphasized the larger significance of these ceremonies and deeply impressed not only the candidates but the large assembly by his appropriate words.

At the conclusion of the initiatory ceremony the members adjourned to the large banquet hall of the Majestic Hotel where in the evening the B'nai B'rith of Philadelphia sat down to a most enjoyable banquet. Hon. Jacob Singer, of Philadelphia, acted as toastmaster. The guests of honor of the occasion were Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the I. O. B. B., and Brother Sig. Livingston, of Bloomington, Ill., Chairman of the Anti-Defamation League. An outline of the speeches made during the evening follows:

Dr. Coffee on the Social Service of the I. O. B. B.

The Rev. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, Director of Social Service, Chicago, said in part:

"For seventy-three years the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith has been active in the field of philanthropy. Orphans have been reared, the aged have received shelter, and hospitals have been established for the consumptive and rheumatic. Henceforth, the Order will enlarge its field of usefulness. Instead of laying stress on building new institutions, members will be asked to give their personal efforts to improve conditions affecting Jewish people.

"We are anxious to protect the growing Jewish child. In the large cities, our poorer children are seriously handicapped. Witness the State of Illinois. Only one Jewish boy from the interior of the State is at the reformatory, yet the crowded West Side of Chicago, where the majority of Jewish people live, has sent seventeen. These boys are not bad. They are victims of circumstances. To meet this condition, the Big Brother movement has been started in Chicago. It is hoped that this movement will spread all over the country and thus save the Jewish children from reform schools and penal institutions. All over the country the B'nai B'rith is winning new members. St. Louis has just added 1,100, Cleveland 1,000, Chicago hopes to add another 1,000 this month, and so on. What does the B'nai B'rith offer these new members? I answer: An opportunity to serve, and one such avenue for service is the Big Brother movement. You in Philadelphia are now starting the larger aspect of this fine preventive work. Let the Jewish branch be one specific part. This Big Brother work will greatly minimize juvenile delinquency. The Big Brother will be asked to give his time and his energy toward developing the character and manhood of the lad in his charge. The Big Brother will be asked to give not of his purse, but of his personality; in short, he must give himself. As a result of this Big Brother movement, we confidently believe that, in a large measure, the reign of juvenile delinquency among our Jewish boys will be a thing of the past.

"Another very important work is with released prisoners. Public opinion frowns on the man who has served a term in prison. Last week, in Chicago, twenty-one Jewish employers were vainly besought to give employment to a released prisoner before a single man would open his shop to this paroled prisoner. A prominent attorney informs me that twenty-five per cent of those in the [illegible] would never be there had [illegible] properly defended. The Jew [illegible] by choice is exceedingly rare. [illegible] are paroled or released from [illegible] should be a helping hand to [illegible] employment for them. Therefore, this department will build a machinery so that a committee of Jews will take care of every man departing from prison. The I. O. B. B. will have a committee of its members near every penitentiary and reformatory in the land, so that the man who has served his term will be given a position and started again on the road toward useful living.

"Still more important is to prevent Jews from going wrong. The I. O. B. B. must do all within its power toward that end. That member of our faith who is interested in commercialized vice, or lives through illicit gain, is not only a disgrace to us, but a dangerous foes to the liberty we Jews now enjoy in America. That our freedom is absolutely safe no one will assert. Let him who thinks there will be no restriction on immigration remember that seventeen times a bill has passed one or two houses of Congress, only the veto of a strong President preventing restriction from becoming the law of this land. To continue liberal immigration Jews must live pure lives and we must be the first to bring the law-breaking Jew into justice. The law against the "white slave traffic" was passed through the personal efforts of President Adolph Kraus. He realized how dangerous such traffic was to our Jewish reputation. We Jews intend to clean house from within. Let the Jew know that no one loathes a Jewish lawbreaker more than Jews themselves.

"In every city of the land there should be a social service committee of the I. O. B. B. Too often the recent Jewish arrivals inhabit a most unsanitary part of the city. No playgrounds are available for children, and the public school equipment is much inferior to that in other sections of the city. Why should the child suffer these extra handicaps in addition to the poverty of the household? This social service committee should work with city officials to provide the same advantages as obtain in other sections of the city.

"The industrial situation will concern this department. Israel ever honored labor and the artisan, but in America Jews have fallen short of our historical ideals. All too many strikes have occurred in which the majority of employers and strikers have been Jews. Why should not this Order, in which are enrolled both employers and working men, do something to prevent strife, bloodshed and even loss of life? Is Israel, which produced Karl Marx and Ferdinand La Salle in the nineteenth century, bankrupt of prudent, conservative and wise economists in the twentieth? Our critics say the Jew only knows how to make money. Let us prove that in whatever industrial field the Jew enters he sets a higher ideal, pays better wages, and creates a cleaner standard of ethics.

"Then, this department will concern itself with the very serious problem of unemployment. In Chicago this Order has conducted an employment agency for five years. Now, we shall spread out and try to place Jewish people in all manufacturing towns within a radius of 100 miles. When that is working properly, the field will be enlarged so as to provide employment for the greatest possible number of Jews. Then we shall have agents in every city prepared to provide for the influx at the close of this horrible European war.

"In other words, this department aims at constructive and preventive philanthropy. There are fine and splendidly equipped charity organizations throughout the land. The Jewish Federation of this city is an honor and credit to you. Our department, however, will continue where you leave off. We are not concerned with charity in the sense of alms-giving; our aim is to prevent the need for such a condition of affairs. You take care of the orphans; we shall endeavor to prevent those conditions which make this child an orphan. You equip a magnificent hospital; we shall seek those measures which will diminish sickness through wiping out improper environment. Charity is a Christian concept which has come into the world by way of Greece.

The Mosaic legislation made no provision for charity. The word "charity" is not even found among its pages. True, we read in Deuteronomy XV-ii: "For the needy shall not cease out of the land." This merely meant that people whose ancestors had been slaves for centuries could not become independent and self-supporting in one generation. In the New Testament this phrase was utterly misunderstood. In three places this sentence was interpreted to mean that "the poor ye have with you always" (Matthew XXVI-ii, Mark XIV-7, and John XII-8). For eighteen centuries the Christian Church has believed in and taught this wrong interpretation, mightily influencing mankind and hindering its progress. The Mosaic legislation could never have taught such a doctrine. Only a few verses before, in the same chapter of Deuteronomy, we read, "IF there be among you a poor man" (v. 7). Moses did not believe there was any necessity for poverty or poor people if righteousness and justice ruled the nation. In this spirit Moses legislated for his people. Christianity taught that the poor are as much a part of this world as the ocean, the mountains and the lakes. By handing to the poor small pittances in charity, men could receive pardon for their sins.

It has been said that the greatest discovery of modern times is the "re-discovery of the Old Testament." Its ideals are being understood and correctly breathed into life. We now know that poverty is absolutely unnecessary. It will be abolished, surely abated, as soon as we are determined and resolved that this disgrace of modern civilization shall be wiped out. Scientific management has transformed the Panama Canal strip from a malaria jungle to a healthy district. Typhoid fever, smallpox and other forms of death-dealing diseases were formerly considered as visitations of God; now we know they result from the criminal negligence of society and can be prevented by proper sanitation. So, in every way, mankind makes progress and overcomes obstacles to life and happiness. Remove the causes of poverty and the need for charity ceases. This department is called into existence to do all within its power to abolish poverty and render charity unnecessary. It is highly significant that a recent publication on the "Abolition of Poverty" was written by a Jew, Professor Hollander, of Johns Hopkins University. Let this be our contribution to American freedom, that we give of our strength and of our best to blot out those conditions which make slums, the tenement districts, and for the continued need of doling out charity.

"Our Jewish people have come to America and have increased in wealth, but the acquisition of money has not decreased prejudice against us. We thought that when our Christian neighbors would learn the truth about the slanders against our Jewish people, when they realized that the Jews did not kill their God (as if any god could allow himself to be killed), the prejudice against our people would fall away. Events proved to the contrary. The university clubs in the different cities of America, where culture and education should obtain, are practically unanimous in denying admission to Jewish people. The sure method of preserving our liberty in America is to offer to America such ideals as the Jew possesses and this country needs. To this task this new department consecrates its service. We hope that this Order will vitalize and strengthen Jewish interest throughout the land, and by breathing nobler ideals into them, bless America and strengthen its citizenship."

S. Livingston on Work of Anti-Defamation League.

Sigmund Livingston, of Bloomington, Ill., Chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith, spoke as follows:

"The Anti-Defamation League was founded a little more than a year ago under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith. Its aims are two-fold: First, it deals with specific cases of abuse, defamation and discrimination against the Jew; secondly, it does constructive work so as to prevent as far as possible antagonism against the Jew. For years volunteers would arise to defend the good name of Israel, but never before was there a systematic effort made to resist and counteract the defamation of the Jew in its various forms. The league, at its very start, organized a complete office under the management of Leon L. Lewis, its secretary, a university graduate and splendidly equipped for this work. There has not been a day since the opening of this office but that strenuous work for the protection of the good name of Israel was not demanded. The results accomplished thus far are even beyond the most sanguine hope of the founders. We have found by experience that nearly every form of defamation in this land is caused by ignorance rather than through malevolent spirit. We have found that the people in general desire to do what is right; that in nearly every instance where the Jew has been defamed, when the author of the defamation has been properly approached and shown the error of the accusation and the possible injury resulting, correction has been made.

"The moving picture situation was the first to demand our attention. When we started our work it seemed that whenever a film manufacturer desired to depict a hard-hearted money lender, a blackmailer, a firebug, a depraved gambler, a swindler, a grafter or a white-slaver, they made a Jewish type. Thus we had the films of "The Fire-Bug," "The Missing Diamond," "Izzy," "A Pass-over Miracle," and many others, all of which depicted the Jew in a most miserable manner. The fight against films of this nature lasted more than six months and it required the united force of the league with its auxiliary organizations to finally succeed. Every film producer of stability has now entered into an agreement that films of this character will no longer be produced. The National Censoring Board, which refused to act in matters of this kind claiming that its powers were limited, were finally persuaded to increase its power so that now they have complied with our request and have included within objectionable features such pictures as give offense and traduce any religious sect or people in this land.

"The press, which had for years reported malefactors as Jews in describing their crime, was made to see the injustice of this practice. It was shown to them that malefactors who happen to be Catholics were not described as Catholics; that malefactors who happened to be Methodists were not so described; and that it was wrong and an injury to the Jewish sect to describe malefactors as Jews. The Associated Press adopted our view and sent instructions to their various offices throughout this country in reference to the misuse of the press in this regard. Mr. Ochs, of New York city, edited rules as to the proper use of the word "Jew" in newspaper reports for the guidance of reporters, and these rules have been printed by the league and distributed to the newspaper offices through the country. The newspapers have made splendid use of the same and in most offices the same has now a prominent place upon the wall of the editorial rooms.

"Magazine articles which have appeared and which were defamatory have received attention, and in most instances our request for an article setting forth the correct status of the Jew has been printed in the same magazine so as to reach thte same reading public and thus correct whatever evil has been done as far as possible.

"These are but a few illustrations which serve the purpose and which show the work which has actually been done. Within the space of a little more than a year we have gathered in the office of the Anti-Defamation League the largest collection of anti-Jewish literature ever collected within that space of time. The only way to correct a wrong done through public opinion is by public opinion. We have, therefore, taken upon ourselves the burden of even corrective measures. The minds of the young are even saturated with the poison of Jew hatred. In the very first literature that the child reads—the Mother Goose rhymes—the seed of Jew hatred is sown:

Jack sold his egg
To a rogue of a Jew,
Who cheated him out
Of half of his due.

We have succeeded in having these offensive verses omitted from some of the editions of this child literature.

"The child in school, through the histories used, is taught to hate the Jew. In the Sunday Schools this prejudice against the Jew is accentuated, and the study of 'The Merchant of Venice' caps the climax. If the graduates this year of the universities of this land were asked to name a Jewish philosopher, a Jewish statesman or a Jewish poet, but few could answer a single one of these queries; if, however, those same graduates were asked to name a Jew in fiction, every one would answer Shylock. We are now in the midst of a campaign to withdraw from the course of studies 'The Merchant of Venice.' Heretofore the objection made was that this was a college entrance requirement. We have obviated this, and after submitting our protest to the committee in charge of arranging the college entrance requirements, they have placed the study of 'The Merchant of Venice' as an elective rather than as a required study. Many of the high schools in the various cities have already complied with our request. We admit that there is much beauty in this drama; but we, however, insist that to the mind yet undeveloped the one feature accentuated is the cruelty, the hard-heartedness and the usury of Shylock.

"The discrimination against the Jew in hotels, clubs, laboring unions, fraternities, may not injure the individual except to the extent that it might bring embarrassment. If a hotel does not desire Jewish patronage, we can go to others; if a certain club does not invite Jewish citizens who measure up to the full standard in all requirements they can forego this privilege. Yet there is, as a result of this, an injury to the Jew as a body. Through these discriminations he is set down as an undesirable, as lacking in the requirements of culture, refine-

(Continued on page 16)

THE KEHILLAH, XIX

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

The second part of the nineteenth century is a highly interesting period of Jewish history, because it presents to us most vividly the difference between medieval conditions and those that developed after the French Revolution. The Austrian empire, under the able but bigoted Maria Theresa, presents perhaps again the most impressive specimen of the terrible sufferings, humiliations and persecutions under which our ancestors, the great-grandfathers of the present generation, lived.

When Maria Theresa came to the throne in 1740, her empire faced a terrible crisis. According to the law of succession, in existence up to the time of her father, Charles VI, the succession was limited to the male descendants of the ruler. Charles VI, having no male heir, changed this law so that his daughter, Maria Theresa, should succeed him. He made treaties with all powers to recognize this change of the constitution, but after his death his daughter, a young woman of 23, found that treaties were even then "a mere scrap of paper," if not supported by military power. From all sides attempts were made to grab part of her territory. The most formidable enemy of all was Frederick the Great, who had succeeded to the throne of Prussia in the same year in which Maria Theresa succeeded her father. His contention that he was entitled under the old feudal law to the possession of Silesia does not interest us at all. The main point is that without waiting for any legal decision, he occupied the territory by military force. Austria was unprepared. The whole empire was in danger of disintegration, and in the moment of crisis the Jews came in for their share of suffering. One of the important points of defense was Bruenn, the capital of Moravia, with its fort, the Spielberg, afterwards so famous as a place where political offenders were imprisoned and tortured. The commander of this fortress, Baron von Seherr-Thoss, an old soldier, implored the empress to relieve him of his command, as he knew that he was unable to hold the fortress, and he did not wish to close his long military career with the disgrace of a surrender. His request was not granted, and the first thing that the commander did in order to raise the means for putting his fortress in shape for defense, was an order issued to the Jewry of Moravia to raise 40,000 florins under penalty of pillage in case of refusal.

The fact is noted in the Yiddish of these days, freely mixed with Hebrew, in the records of the Nikolsburg congregation. The Jews were terror-stricken, and did what always was done under similar conditions. They sent two men to Vienna, the Landrabbiner permitting them to violate the Sabbath. They rode on horseback day and night under great peril through the country already overrun with the advance guard of the enemy, and in the capital obtained the aid of the influential court Jews, the Landrabbiner Bernard Eskeles and the banker, Baron D'Aguilar. With their aid, they finally succeeded in having the order of the commander temporarily suspended, but in the end had to pay the desired amount anyhow, but not with the threat, or with the insinuation that they were enemies of the country, but merely as a special war contribution.

This Baron D'Aguilar requires a more exhaustive presentation. Diogo Lopez, or as he afterwards called himself, Baron Moses Lopez D'Aguilar, is a romantic figure in Jewish history. His real story has not been investigated, and what is told of him is full of legends. The poet, Ludwig August Frankl (1810-1894), gives us a story which he heard from the Haham of the Sefardic congregation of Vienna, Reuben Baruch, which is so romantic that even without examining it by comparison with otherwise known facts, it shows its legendary character. According to this story, Diogo Lopez was a Maranno, who had been educated by his parents for the priesthood. This was indeed often done by the Spanish Jews, compelled to profess Christianity, in order to protect themselves against the Inquisition. In the course of time, Diogo rose to high rank and became grand inquisitor. One evening he received the visit of a woman who demanded to see him privately in order to give him some confidential information. When she was alone with the powerful ecclesiastic, she threw her arms around him and said, "I am your mother, and among the victims, condemned to be burned at the stake as secret Jews, is your sister." These words made a terrible impression on the grand inquisitor. He sent hurriedly to the prison to have the young girl brought into his presence, but the order came too late; the poor child had suffered her fate on the morning of the same day. Deeply shaken by this horrible experience, Fra Diogo at once made his plans to leave the country secretly with his mother, and under great perils reached Austrian territory. There his mother died, and he sent a letter to the Empress Maria Theresa, accompanied by a glove which she had given him on her visit to Spain as a child, when he entertained her. This symbol of friendship had the desired effect. The empress invited him to Vienna, where he obtained an important position in the Department of Finance.

The story has many faults, the main point being that Baron D'Aguilar was in Vienna as early as 1775, when Maria Theresa was a child and her father, Charles VI, was emperor. The latter had confirmed his Spanish baronetcy, and had given him the explicit right to practice his religion openly in Vienna. Furthermore, Maria Theresa, to the best of our knowledge, never was in Spain.

What really is back of the story, we do not know. It seems from the incoherent basis of information that we possess that the baron was one of the numerous families of Marannos, who in order to save themselves from the Inquisition, had left Spain secretly, and settled in Amsterdam, where they were permitted to practice their religion. The baron, in course of time, established a banking firm in London from where he obtained a contract for the exploitation of the tobacco monopoly in Austria. This, as stated above, was done under Charles VI, and Baron D'Aguilar continued his activity under Maria Theresa for some years, and when his contract ended, and the state took over the business, the empress gave him a flattering testimony as to his integrity, and the efficiency of his administration. He returned to London, where he died in 1760. Of his numerous family—he left ten children—not one remained within the Jewish fold. The last of his descendants, of whom I have any record, is a great-grandson, Sir Charles D'Augilar, a general in the British Army, who died November 5, 1912, at the age of 91, and to whom his Jewish descent was a distant memory: Jewish sources refer to him as a proselyte, and praise his interest in his Jewish brethren.

This interest was manifested in a tragedy, which is not found in Graetz, or any other popular history, deserves special mention as typical of the conditions under which our ancestors in the Eighteenth century lived. In the little town of Aussee, Moravia, a young priest entered a synagogue on Yom Kippur eve, 1722, and interrupting the services, began a tirade against "the Jewish superstition," which believed to propitiate God by fasting and lamentation, instead of approaching him by the only means of salvation, through the faith in his son, who died on the cross as an atonement for the sins of mankind. The poor Jews were naturally not in a position to answer these arguments, but politely reminded His Reverence that imperial laws and privileges had given them the right of worship in their synagogues, and they would respectfully ask His Reverence to withdraw for the present, and postpone his discussion for a more opportune time and place. The priest, however, pounded the "Mahzor" which was on the pulpit, and declared that he had to obey God more than man, and did not care for any privilege, whether it bore the seal of king or emperor, as long as his duty demanded that he preach the truth and fight error. Unable to gain anything by persuasion, four men took hold of the priest's arms, and while he still fought them, succeeded in pushing him to the vestibule. When they reached the door, the priest made a supreme effort to break loose from the grasp of the men, and in the struggle the heavy door was slammed, leaving the struggling people in darkness, and therefore unable to throw the heavy bolt back. Outside of the synagogue, a Christian woman was stationed, who acted as "Shabbes Goye," to be on hand if a candle should fail, or another such accident should require the putting out of fire. She heard the shuffling of feet and the struggle in the dark vestibule, and becoming frightened, ran through the town, yelling, "The Jews are murdering our priest!" In a few minutes the whole town was alive with people, arming themselves with axes, scythes, clubs and whatever they could find, to save the life of the priest, or to avenge his death.

Fortunately, by the time the infuriated mob had arrived, someone had succeeded in throwing back the bolt, and the priest appeared in front of the synagogue, surrounded by the four men who had forced him to leave the place, but aside from the signs of the struggle in his disarranged garments, entirely unharmed. The mob, a little disappointed at the loss of the opportunity for pillage and murder, asked, "Did these Jews do you any harm, Your Reverence?" "No, they merely forced me out when I tried to preach to them the truth of the Gospel." Voices of the mob answered: "Good for them! If they should have turned one of your hairs, we would not let one man, woman or child of them live to tell the tale!" So the matter ended for the present. The Jews continued their worship, and after the services, sent a committee to the Amtmann, the representative of the lord under whose protection they lived, filing charges against the priest for disturbing their services. To the Amtmann the whole incident was inconvenient. He obviously did not care to get into trouble by filing charges for breach of peace against a priest, which, according to the laws of that time, would have meant a heavy sentence in the penitentiary. He, therefore, dismissed the case, saying, "You were allowed to continue your services and tomorrow you can do the same. There is no action needed on my part, and if you have any complaints to make, you can present them in writing after your holy day."

This gave to the matter a different aspect. The priest, who in the hearing of the whole town had declared that he had suffered no bodily injury, and that he had brought the trouble upon himself now changed his attitude and declared that when he entered the synagogue for the sake of teaching the Jews the error of their ways, he was assaulted. This at once changed the aspect of the matter, and the four men who had so unceremoniously ousted the priest were indicted for assaulting the sacred person of a Roman Catholic priest. The church authorities, who, while probably not approving of the young man's conduct, would under no condition tolerate that a priest should be sent to the penitentiary for preaching the gospel, backed the indictment with all their power, and in spite of all efforts on the part of the Jewish community, backed by their influential co-religionists, the sentence was rendered that the synagogue should be demolished and the Jews should never be allowed to build another one, and that of the four men who had forced the priest out of the synagogue, three should be branded with hot iron and exiled, while the fourth one, who was 74 years old, was sentenced to penal servitude. This sentence was carried out and remained in force for more than thirty years, when in 1753 the Jews of Aussee made an effort to obtain a grant for the building of another synagogue. They sent a committee to Vienna, and with the aid of prominent financiers, amongst whom was Baron D'Aguilar, did obtain the right to open a new synagogue, but it was not to be a separate building, marked as such by its appearance. It should consist of only three rooms, have no ornaments such as a specially designed ark or candelabras, and in this way the memory of the crime committed against a priest of the Holy Catholic Church should be atoned. Maria Theresa upheld in all other respects the policy of her father. The latter had decreed that a ,Jew marrying without a special license, should be publicly flogged and expelled from the country. His daughter amplified the law by extending the same punishment to the rabbi who would officiate in such a case.

The most severe crisis, however, began after the disastrous second Silesian war in 1744. Austria had suffered an ignominious defeat. One of the most flourishing provinces was lost. Some culprit had to be found. It would not have been very difficult to point to the real cause. Austria had since the latter part of the Sixteenth century, when the death of Maximilian II, who was leaning considerably towards Protestantism, decided the victory of the Roman Catholic church surrendered all power into the hands of the Jesuits. Under the influence of this party, the ecclesiastic interests were absolute and supreme, and when in 1620, the battle near Prague suppressed the rebellion in Bohemia, the grip of the Jesuits on the affairs of the state was definitely secured. Patriotic and industrious citizens were exiled. Estates held by Protestants were confiscated and bestowed on loyal Catholic nobles, in this way increasing the wealth of an idle class and impoverishing the masses, so that commerce and industry in Austria constantly retrograded. The financial administration was guided by the same principles. The wealthy landowners were practically exempt from taxes, while the poor peasant had to work for them as serfs. Churches were built extravagantly at public expense, while roads, river improvements and national defense were neglected. Corruption was so openly practiced that judges in attending to plain duties like probating a will exacted graft openly and family connections, or the protection of the high nobility were qualifications for public service. None of these causes, however, would be admitted as responsible for Austria's defeat. A scape-goat had to be found, and the Jews, as always, were most convenient in this respect. In the last days of 1744, and in the first days of 1745, the empress issued an order that "for grave reasons" she found herself compelled to exile the Jews from the Kingdom of Bohemia, which included the provinces of Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia. It is not stated which these important causes are, but it is evident that the Jews were accused of having aided the enemy. It is the same history that we have experienced lately in Russia. Jews are the most convenient scape-goat for the sins of tyranny.

MR. JACOB FURTH ADDRESSES THE SOROSIS OF SEDALIA, MO.

During a visit of Mr. Jacob Furth, of St. Louis, Treasurer of the Order, to Sedalia, Mo., on the occasion of the B'nai B'rith Day celebration by Queen City Lodge No. 258, of that city, he was requested to stop over for a day to address a Ladies' Sorosis—composed of the very best element of Sedalia society, numbering about 250, with just two Jewish members. Mr. Furth accepted the invitation and named as his subject, "The Jewish Problem as Seen by a Jewish Layman." He was confronted by a splendid audience and in addition to the ladies, there were present nearly all of the Protestant ministers of Sedalia to hear the Jewish Problem discussed.

The "Social Messenger," the official paper of the club, gives the following account of the meeting:

"Mr. Jacob Furth, the Treasurer for the Benevolent Order of B'nai B'rith, a Jewish organization, addressed the ladies of this club Monday afternoon. Mr. Furth was introduced, most felicitously, by Mrs. Frank Leach and whatever proportions the Jewish problem, in the way of prejudice, may assume elsewhere there was absolutely none on Monday, as all were charmed and delighted with Mr. Furth personally and intellectually.

"The organization which Mr. Furth represents has for its aim charity and, as he so ably pointed out, charity is not a limited term but infinite in its scope, for is not charity love in its true analysis? And who can limit, coerce or bind love?

"Mr. Furth said the Jewish problem is the prejudice felt in general against the Jew, both socially and commercially, and that it antedates Christianity. He said most of the faults of the Jew were those his Gentile neighbor had forced upon him and showed by history the justice of his claim. He spoke of the bitter persecutions in Russia causing the enormous influx of Jews to this country and the problem it was to their fellows here to care for them. The Order of B'nai B'rith will petition the President to use the influence of our country to compel Russia to take care of her Jewish population in the right way on their own soil by the enactment and enforcement of better laws.

"Mr. Furth asked why the Gentile hates the Jew and the remedy. We would suggest that the remedy has already begun to be applied when Mr. Furth, a Jew, will give a heart-to-heart talk, as he did Monday, for no prejudice could live long in such an atmosphere of true brotherliness. Love is the fulfilling of the law and love comes from knowing our brother, his aims, heartaches and sorrows and in that mutual understanding the unworthy will disappear. We have never known it to fail that when we put ourselves in our brother's place but what we ever had sympathy and compassion for him. It is only the self-righteous, condemnatory thought that can hold prejudice. We believe that the beginning of the end of all hatred is here and that the present war is, in some sense, the purgatorial fire that will burn up much of the dross in human character. Out of it will come respect for mankind, the image and likeness of God, irrespective of race, religion, color of geographical location.

"In the discussion following Mr. Furth's address, Rev. Davidson and Rev. Kokendoffer spoke most feelingly and many of the club members asked pertinent questions that were ably answered. The point was well established that the Jew was a Jew by religion, just as the Baptist is a Baptist, or any other religious denomination and that Judaism was not a nationality. The Jew is a citizen of the country in which he lives. He is an American without a hyphen.

The B'nai B'rith Its World Mission

Address by Hon. Tracy R. Bangs, Ex-U. S. Attorney for North Dakota

Delivered before Dacotah Lodge

Concluded from Previous Issue

I do not want to be understood as ascribing to the Jewish people any inherent power greater than that possessed by the balance of the civilized world, for it seems to me that with the exception of minor characteristics the whole people average about the same. True, each nation of the earth has its own peculiarities, and without doubt the Jewish nation had and have theirs, but they, with each and every other nation or people drop or modify these essentially racial or national characteristics when they freely mingle with the people of other nations.

A Jew is just the same kind of a man that a Gentile is—is moved by the same emotions—he has the same feeling, the same affections—the same loves and the same hatreds, and the same ambitions, in fact, he is just a normal man.

We know that there has been attributed to the Jewish people peculiarly shrewd traits as traders, and we have heard it claimed that in this respect they had certain characteristics essentially their own, at least to a greater degree than is found in any other people.

I can not agree to the truth of the charge as applied to them as a race, although we may admit that among the Jewish people may be found those and possibly many who have developed some special traits of shrewdness in business affairs that might well be modified. But the same thing is true of the non-Jew.

The Jewish people are and have been traders for hundreds of thousands of years, and no one questions their shrewdness. Any particular or special trait of shrewdness, however, thus developed has been forced upon them by reason of the discrimination that has been practiced against them, because of the fact that they have themselves been made the victims of the cupidity of others until they have been obliged to develop such characteristics, such methods in defense of themselves and their property, and have become so accustomed to their use, that it is but little wonder if they use them for acquisition as well as defense.

The acquiring of a shrewd trading ability is not confined alone to the Jewish people. We find it in our own country and such traits of character as were developed in some parts of the New England states has given rise to the designation of a shrewd business deal as a "Yankee trick." The term "Yankee" is one applied to the residents of New England, a portion of this country settled by people from England, the term coming, it is believed, from an Indian mispronunciation of the French designation "Anglais."

In parts of New England, the soil and climate were both inhospitable. The early settlers were obliged to undergo great privations and hardships. None of that easy attaining of the means of livelihood that we, in this western country know, were there known. Those people, living in that inhospitable place, were obliged by stress of circumstances to practice the strictest economy, to develop the shrewdest kind of trading instinct and to make every penny count for its utmost. By the development of that shrewd ability they became trading people.

New England, today, is one of the greatest trading centers of the world and the greatest trading center of this country. But through this shrewdness there developed, they became known, not only as shrewd, but at times as a little bit too shrewd, and the people of the south and of the west particularly, where everything came easy—where money was figured in larger amounts to the common individual, these habits of thrift—these little traits and tricks of the trade were held in some contempt and scorn, and so, whenever anyone is guilty of a little shrewdness, even though it may not amount to trickery, it is commonly designated as a "Yankee trick," and, so we hear that in other portions of the world at least, shrewd tricks of the trade are not infrequently designated as "Jewish tricks."

Like the New Englanders, however, the Jewish people were not originally endowed with this special shrewdness, but were forced to adopt these methods as a matter of self protection.

In this connection, I am minded to call attention to the disposition on the part of all of us, to charge individual peculiarities or individual traits of character, when not up to the standard, to the group to which the offending one belongs, and the more exclusive the group the more prone are we to indict [illegible] group. [illegible] we not infrequently hear the whole legal profession scored and maligned because of the conduct of a few disreputable shysters; we hear the medical profession condemned because of the conduct of a few who fail to grasp the ethics of the profession.

We know how the shortcomings of a churchman are rolled as a sweet morsel under the tongue of the street corner philosopher, and pointed to as a sure sign of the hypocrisy of the whole mass, while the fall of one preacher is enough to damn the whole religious structure.

And so it is, that the people of your faith, constituting a distinct group in the public mind, are charged with all the peculiarities of the individual, and this, without regard to the manner of their acquirement.

Had we the time to consider the characteristics, the customs and manners, as well as the religion of the different nations of the earth, we would, when all was told, agree that fundamentally there is no more of a Jewish problem than there is of a German, French or Scandinavian problem. We all belong to the great white race. We are, or at least should be, brothers of the human family, and the only problem is that of equal rights and justice to all.

To bring about that condition, and to establish in the world that feeling of universality among all of the white inhabitants, that will guarantee to the Gentile and Jew alike, as well as all of the various and varying denominations of the Gentile and different congregations of the Jews, not only religious and political freedom, but business and social community of interest and existence, requires the most earnest, honest efforts, not only upon the part of the Jewish people, but as well on the part of the Gentiles.

It requires an educational enlightenment not yet attained by the great masses of either, and one of the greatest undertakings of your society, in fact, its greatest undertaking, is that of bringing about such mental, moral, material and cultural development, among the people of your faith, that it influences and educates the whole people of the civilized world, thus establishing on a firm foundation a rational, educational and mutually acceptable assimilation.

The Jewish Encyclopedia in speaking of B'nai B'rith or Sons of the Covenant, says:

"It was founded in New York in 1843 for the purpose of instituting the principles of morality among the followers of the Mosaic faith, uniting them on a platform upon which all could stand regardless of dogma and ceremonial custom and of inculcating charity, benevolence and brotherly love as the highest virtues."

It tells us the religious and political discussions were to be barred forever in order that harmony and peace might be preserved in the deliberations of the Order.

In a little booklet, issued by District Grand Lodge No. 1, of your Order, I find the purpose of the Order defined as follows:

"Of uniting Israelites in the work of promoting their highest interests and those of humanity; of developing and elevating the mental and moral character of the people of our faith; of inculcating the purest principles of philanthropy, honor and patriotism; of supporting science and art, alleviating the wants of the poor and needy, visiting and attending the sick, coming to the rescue of victims of persecution, providing for, protecting and assisting the widow and the orphan on the broadest principles of humanity."

In this same pamphlet, I find a list of institutions either maintained, supported or materially aided by your Order. Among them are homes for the aged and infirm, orphan asylums, hospitals, schools and institutions of various kinds intended to lend both material and sentimental aid to all classes and conditions; and, a glance at the list shows a great many of such institutions, not only in this country, but in Germany, Austria, Roumania and the Orient.

Among these institutions, each and every one of which has its purpose, we find many employment bureaus, and agencies for the purpose of furnishing the people of your faith proper, healthful and remunerative employment. While it is not for me to place any one activity above any other, yet I can not help but feel that in the final accomplishment these institutions that place deserving people in the way of earning an honest livelihood, will have to their credit a greater substantial showing than any other class of aid societies, for they are not only rendering temporary service, but they are doing work for the future, in that they are maintaining the self-respect of the individual aided, they are taking him and his out of the debit column, and putting them among the producers, and in that way rendering aid not only to the persons directly involved but to the entire community. They are building up substantial citizens.

While I do not want to minimize in the least the great charitable work of this society, and while I realize the great good that is accomplished by institutions such as the orphanage at Erie, the Leo N. Levi Hospital at Hot Springs, the Home for Orphans at Atlanta, the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Yonkers, the Jewish Orphan Asylum at Cleveland, the Home for Widows and Orphans at New Orleans, the magnificent National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, and all the other numerous institutions being carried on for the purpose of aiding those who are in need, yet we must realize that all such work is in its nature temporary. It reaches the comparative few and while it is a necessary, and a highly creditable work, yet all such work and all of the other charitable work carried on by the society is but an incident to its great world mission, which has to do not with the present ailments of a comparative few, but has to do with the whole political and social structure of twelve millions of your people now and for all future time.

I feel that I am safe in saying that no society was ever better equipped to accomplish the purpose for which it was organized than is the B'nai B'rith. With its wide range of influence, with its committees on social service, intellectual advancement, immigration, legislation, as well as its different committees on its various forms of charitable work, with its free employment bureaus, libraries and other institutions, each and all looking to the betterment of conditions among the people of your faith, together with the work of your Anti-Defamation League, which I am pleased to note was organized as the result of the recommendation of a member from this District (Sigmund Livingston), this society has an equipment for effective work that guarantees success in its undertakings.

Those in whose interest or for whose greater interest this work is to be done are distributed throughout every known country of the world. The greater number in any one country being, as I have said, in Russia. We find, however, that during recent years there has developed a markedly increased migration on the part of the Jewish people and toward the west, and that of all the countries the increase in Jewish population in the United States has had the most noticeable growth in recent years. Dr. Ruppin tells us that at the time of our civil war, fifty years ago, there were only about fifty thousand Jews in the United States. That twenty-five years ago this number had been increased to approximately two hundred and thirty thousand, while today, as I have already said, there are more than two million Jewish inhabitants in the United States, and at the rate that the Russian Jew is coming to this country, it will not be a great many years until we will have more of the Jewish population native of Russia, and the descendants of natives of Russia, in the United States than there are in Russia. In fact, it has been jokingly suggested by one of the Jewish writers, I have forgotten whom, in speaking of the great Jewish settlements in this country, and the fact that there were in New York City more than a million Jews, that this must be the "Promised Land," and New York the "New Jerusalem."

To bring about the desired political and religious condition requires a personal touch and influence throughout all Jewry that can by your society be accomplished where it would be much more difficult if not absolutely impossible of accomplishment with the scattered people of any other nation, for, if I understand aright, while the Jews of the world may be divided to some extent, yet there is a fraternalism, a cohesive religious autonomy that extends out and encompasses all people of the faith, and through that agency every man may be reached.

I am not unmindful of the fact that there are those among you, not only in the ordinary walks of life, but among your great writers and thinkers who express great fear that the assimilation of the Jew, especially in America, will result in decadence of Judaism.

I prefer, however, to believe with Dr. Joseph Jacobs, who in his introduction to Dr. Ruppin's "The Jews of Today," rather takes issue with Dr. Ruppin, and says:

"Does it altogether follow that the advance of modern culture among Jews must necessarily destroy their specific characteristics and ideas? Modern civilization in some of its chief aspects, is based upon the Hebraic ideals, and the rapid manner in which Jews have acquired modern culture is itself a proof that there is no incongruity between the Jewish folk soul and European civilization. In England, France, Germany and America, the Jew, in the immediate past, has shown himself quite capable of being strongly and patriotically English, French, German and American, but still retaining his devotion to his faith, his interest in the fate and misfortune of his fellow Jews throughout the world. Such Jews have had a duplex culture, and their nature has, in consequence, become richer and more irridescent. So far as this is so, both Jews and world have gained by their adoption of modern culture."

So that, it seems to me that there is no danger to the faith in bringing about a world wide business, political and social assimilation, and speaking of assimilation it has occurred to me that the complaint of discrimination is the result to a considerable extent of the Jewish self isolation, and when the Jewish people themselves abandon their own seclusive customs they will go a long way toward breaking down forever the bars that have been erected. To have community of interests, and sentiments, we must have community of associations. For as it has been well said, "No man can wrap his cloak about him and say that he will stand alone, that his life shall not influence, or be influenced, by other lives." It is not always because of the intentional wrong doing that injury results to an individual or group of individuals, and I doubt not but that the Jewish people have ofttimes suffered from governmental rules that were not primarily meant for them. We were close to such an incident in this country a few years ago in connection with the passage by Congress of a restrictive immigration bill, which, while aimed at unquestionably undesirable citizens from Southern Europe, in its terms embraced a very large percentage of the Jewish immigration. However, through the activities of your society such a mistake was averted.

I say mistake—because while there are a great number of people who firmly believe that the restrictive legislation referred to was necessary for the protection of this country against the great influx of illiterate, dangerous and criminal classes who seek our shores ofttimes for the purpose of establishing the same disturbing and criminal agencies here that had been the cause of their flight from other countries, and while we may all agree that the digestive operations would be more regularly performed, if all of the people coming to this country were peaceful, law-abiding men and women, seeking a new home with the honest intention of lending themselves to the building up of peaceful, law-abiding communities, yet, I can not but feel that this great government, with its well organized departments and agencies for its protection and the protection of its people will be able to handle, without serious inconvenience all the disturbing elements that enter our gates, and, even though not so able, we may better encounter even serious difficulties in the assimilation of some of our immigrants than that we would put one obstructing straw in the pathway of any considerable number of well-meaning, God-fearing, peace-loving men and women, seeking out hospitable shores for the purpose of building a home for themselves, and their children.

There are those also, who, if they do not believe, at least profess to believe, that the great influx of Jewish people will result in building up in this country an organized society of great strength and influence that will be antagonistic to American traditions and principles. I can no more agree with them than I can with those who believe that the Americanization of the Jew is inimical to the faith of Judaism.

It would seem to me that the accession of a large Jewish population, when conditions are so framed that they with all the other of our adopted citizens pass through that crucible of assimilation, the great human melting pot of this land of freedom will result in improvement not only for the Jew, to the German, to the Frenchman and to every other of the numerous races and nationalities that come to us, but the product will be an improvement and an advancement of the standard of American citizenship.

In this connection I would suggest that we of this country are drifting away from the tower of strength that has for so many years distinguished us among the nations of the world. A nation is no stronger than its people. It has been well said "The life of a nation depends entirely upon the life of those of whom it consists." It follows that if

(Continued on page 16)

The Things We Quarrel About

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

This is not really the time for us to be reminded of our quarrels. There is enough of war and carnage going on in the world just now, and whether we are immediately interested in the struggle or act merely as spectators, we all long for surcease to the strife and all that has resulted therefrom. And when the mind is so preoccupied with the peace that ought to come it is jarred by the mention of dispute and controversy. Yet even in the belligerent and near-belligerent countries ministries are divided and whiie all are bent upon the weal of the people, statesmen differ as to what road should be pursued and what policy should be adhered to. Certainly the neutrals go about their business in the routine manner and party strife is rampant and here in the United States the discord of the presidential election is already casting its shadow. The Jewish people naturally have their differences likewise. In the forefront of our problem stands now our task imposed upon us by the war and its sequel, the adjustments that the war will necessarily bring about. We are united in the wish that our brethren in Europe and the Orient may fare well. But we are divided as to the means that shall be adopted, the plan that ought to be followed. American Jewry seems to be rent in twain on the question of Conference and Congress. It is not, however, merely a question of expedient. It is rather one of principle. It goes to the root of our conception as to the place and destiny of the Jewish people. It is a question of opportunism on the one side and radicalism on the other. The Conference people are realists in politics and strive after the attainable. The Congressionals taunt the other party as men endeavoring to impose their policy from above; they themselves claim to stand for democracy with all its modern attributes. There is probably a middle road, a happy medium. But just now the strife is on and the noise and the clamor of calling names is upon us.

The quarrel is an old one. Naturally it has taken on different forms in the course of our history. In the dim past of the beginnings of our people there were the opposite tendencies of tribal segregation and national unification. It was the counterpart of what in modern times we call state rights versus the central government. The tribes were jealous of their own independence which preceded the state. The tribal chief was loath to cede his authority to the king. Scarcely cemented through the necessity of withstanding the foe without, they fell out again. North and south were in a constant feud: Manasseh devoured Ephraim and both fell upon Judah. In the cantons the older tribal constitution died hard. The monarchy was checked at every turn by the grandees and the classes stood against the masses. The politicians formed entangling alliances; the people would have preferred to live their own life. The priests attached themselves to vested interests; the prophets constituted themselves tribunes of the proletarians. The priests made much of temple piety and the observance of ritual; the prophets denounced the priesthood and raised the cry of social justice as paramount. The priesthood has at all times been aristocratic; the prophets were democrats. The priests maintained relations with neighboring powers, the small and the great; in Greek times they forfeited their position because they coquetted with the pagan civilization. The people arose in rebellion; the Hellenized capital was purified by the pious patriots from the country towns. In Roman times the nation was again divided. The victorious center made peace with the enemy and was satisfied to forego nationhood if religious autonomy was secured. The synagogue was heir to the prophetic conventicle and cultivated a piety of its own different from the sacramental variety of the temple. The synagogue was at first thoroughly democratic: there were no stated officials, there was no clergy. Only at a late date the rabbinical office was evolved and while it first went against the grain of Judaism the rabbi became a salaried officer. The chief rabbi was a sort of bishop. The layman laid hold on the secular administration of the community, the things spiritual were left to the rabbi. Still the ghetto boasted of an educated laity and the rule of rabbinism had its limitations. Today the synagogue no more unites the house of Israel. Intersynagogal activities must perforce be carried on by other institutions which are laic. In the club and the lodge room the differences of ritual disappear. But here again social distinctions manifest themselves. We are still more or less unsafe in our position. So we are led from above. We have our self-appointed spokesmen. But the spirit of democracy is upon us. We would not be saved vicariously. We want to have a voice in the handling of our business. The people clamor for representation.

The rift that exists shall here be merely pointed out. I am not taking sides. I am viewing things as they are. It is now a hundred years since the ghetto broke up in Western Europe. The new status called for adjustments. It was one thing for the Jew to be an outlaw in the feudal system of medieval Europe and quite another to be the citizen of a modern state. Akiba Eger was honest enough to prefer the old status to the new; but his position was clearly untenable. Orthodoxy could no longer be of the naive character. The newer kind of orthodoxy chose to make peace with the new and novel conditions. It clung to the past which was at outs with the present. It still persists in demanding observances which are consonant with seclusion. It must shut its eyes to the breach which is inevitable in modern conditions. While the people transgress the rabbis almost solely carry on the traditions of Jewish piety which brook no compromise. Neo-orthodoxy is a church, an ecclesiastical body, and so is reform. Reform is consistent enough in its adjustments, though some of them were strictly speaking uncalled for. But once the bars were let down and individualism became rampant, there was really no limitation upon whim or fancy. Time-honored customs were swept aside. There was much rubbish accumulated in the centuries of stagnation. But Judaism was turned inside out and upside down. While the more timid halted and made of inconsistency a virtue, the radicals had the logic on their side. The modern synagogue boasts of its indistinguishableness from the church in externals. The rabbis put the question themselves, "Wherefore the seclusion?" and each answers the question in his own way. If externals count for naught and dogmatic differences play no important part in the religious tendencies of our times, the future religion which shall be neither Christian nor Jewish, seems to be knocking at the gates of church and synagogue.

Yet the reform leaders would discountenance the charge that they are paving the way for the dissolution of the Jewish people, and rightly so. They have settled down to a dispersion permanent, yet they honestly mean the Jewish people to live on indefinitely. They believe that the synagogue has a place by the side of the church. They consider the dispersion as God-willed and as a blessing. They see in it a means for Judaizing the world. They may be wrong in their estimate of the vitality of Christianity. It may also be argued that the religion of the majority has a better chance of engulfing and submerging the minority. Reform, nevertheless, will answer that with God and the truth it is not a question of majority and minority. Reform means the Jew to stand as the eternal protesant, the vindicator of the right of religious minorities, the upholder of the freedom of conscience. And if we turn away from the questions of theology and look at things square in the face, the reform synagogue has held the German Jew pretty well within the synagogue. But of late the line of cleavage has changed. It is no more reform versus orthodoxy, but reform versus Zionism. Reform need not change its name. It started with throwing overboard the hope of restoration and it abides thereby. What goes by the name of liberal Judaism is a misnomer, it means our own article re-imported under a fresh label. Otherwise liberal Judaism might be consonant with dispersion as well as restoration, it might have its adherents in America or England or Palestine as well. Reform is honest enough to put itself squarely against re-nationalization. Zionism finds itself at one with reform in discarding Messianism as medievalism. There are Zionists who throw Jewish observances away as lightly as do the reformers. From the point of view of orthodoxy as well as of reform, Zionism is a heresy. The inherent philosophy of Zionism places it in antithesis to the synagogue. There is also a tendency on the part of Zionists to set themselves above the necessity of knowing Jewish lore and Jewish literature. The logical Zionist is a species of new Jew to whom all that is old is outworn. He makes a clean sweep and would start Judaism anew from a clean slate. Many Zionists will disclaim such tendencies, just as the reformer will gainsay that he is destroying Judaism. But a movement is to be judged by what it means if it were carried to its logical conclusions. We are more or less inconsistent, for life is a bundle of inconsistencies. We, the people, have a right to be inconsistent, but the leaders are committed to stubborn principles which admit of no compromise. There are among us the race Jews and the faith Jews and the nationalist Jews. Perhaps the normal Jew is all in one. But the quarrel is on, and the house of Israel is muchly divided.

MOBILE, ALA.

Captain Peter F. Alba, a well known citizen of the Catholic faith, who died at Mobile recently, made a number of bequests to charity, and among them, his will recites "To the Jewish Widows' and Orphans' Home at New Orleans, five hundred dollars, as a slight testimonial to that wonderful people, among whose members I have had many warm friends."

A few years ago, when the B'nai B'rith Lodge at Mobile furnished a new hall, Captain Alba asked to be allowed to donate valuable furniture.

Reason and Remedy for Conditions in Judaism

By Dr. Julius Rappaport

A physician is called to the bedside of a patient. He gives the sick man a thorough examination. He finds unmistakable symptoms of disease and soon detects the seat of the sickness. He is sure of the graveness and seriousness of the malady. But in order to make the right diagnosis the doctor must find more than mere symptoms. He must discover the cause of these danger signals, the cause and origin or else he will never be able to cure his patient.

Assuming that you agree with me that the religious aspect in Israel of today is not as satisfactory as it might be. Assuming that the note of lament and complaint about indifference which we hear from pulpit and platform is not altogether exaggerated. What are the reasons for this indifference, this lack of interest, this apparent apathy? The symptoms are undenyable. The signs are all too evident. The most urgent appeal of the synagog is unheeded is disregarded. The sons and daughters of those who were ardent supporters of religious institutions, are cold, callous. Now what is the reason of this change of heart? What is the cause of this apathy and indifference of the modern Jew? Why does the appeal of the synagog leave him cold and irresponsive? To remedy the evil we must look deeper than at the mere symptoms on the surface? We must know their cause, their nature and origin.

One of the mainsprings of the evil—namely, the economic and industrial conditions, which make observance of Sabbath and holidays almost impossible and thus work havoc and ruin in our ranks, I can not consider here at all. These are conditions beyond our control, and we must adapt ourselves to the inevitable best we can.

Another reason I find in the extreme difference of the aspect and appearance of religion as it is practiced in Europe as compared with that in America. Especially is, in this connection, the suddenness and abruptness wherewith the Jew is uprooted from Europe and transplanted upon American soil conducive towards creating chaos and confusion in his mind. Place yourself, if you can, in the position of the Jew coming from Kovno or Krakow, Kolomea or Kolozsvar. Imagine the bewildering effect it must make upon him when he enters for the first time an American Temple. In the old "Shul" he saw only men—the women were hidden behind a high banister on the gallery—men, each one wrapped in a Tallith, men chanting their prayers with an ardor, fervor and glowing warmth that was bound to inspire and enthuse. There may have been a lack of order and decorum, judged from our standard of propriety, but the Jew was not aware of the fact. He simply felt as much at home in the House of God as he did in his own home. Now, he comes to our Temple. He is immediately struck by the cold, frigid atmosphere. He beholds men sitting alongside of women. None of the former wearing a hat, none of the latter wearing a "Sheitel." For the first time also he hears a pipe organ accompanying the chant of a mixed choir of men and women—a woman's voice he never heard in the synagog. He hears the rabbi droning out the prayers in a somber, sleepy, monotonous voice, while the congregation sits there in a quiet, indifferent, cold, uncomfortable silence. Is it any wonder, then, that this sudden, abrupt change of the unaccustomed sight will shock and repel rather than attract him? Such a service to him is far from inspiring and elevating as there is little to remind him of what to him is Jewish.

Not that he is right in his estimate. Not that his judgment is correct. I simply try to analyze his mind. Those of us who know the history of Judaism know full well that it has undergone many and diversified changes. For progress is the essence of all life. We realize that stand-still is impossible in this world, spiritual as well as material. Eternal change, everlasting growth and development is the irrevocable rule of life. We know that the trend of thought in the priestly period of Judaism was different from that of the prophetic times. We understand that the aspect of religion of the post-exilic, Asmanean times was not the same as it was later during the life and work of the Tannaim and Amoraim, while the viewpoint of the Mishnic times was considerably changed during the Tosafist period. Again the conception of the Spanish religious-philosopher is as distinct and different from that of the pilpulist and casuist as is the reasoning of the mediaeval ages unlike that of the modern thinker. For while we find the Talmudic interpretation alongside of the Midrashic allegorist; while we meet the philosophic view side by side with that of the Kabbalistic one, and while hand in hand with the sharp and hair-splitting pilpulist goes the Hassidic dreamer, yet there is everywhere noticeable a constant growth and everlasting development. However, the development was always along natural lines. The growth is gradual and not abrupt; progressive but not sudden. While the change in the life of the immigrant Jew is unnatural, sudden, abrupt. Hence the bewilderment. Hence the repudiation.

Again, I blame for the attitude of the modern Jew towards the synagog his bend and bias toward individualism. And this propensity of the Jew is intensified by a widespread misconception of the meaning of democracy, an erroneous interpretation of liberty and a false view about independence. Democracy is misunderstood for: each to be law unto self. Liberty is mistaken for license and independence for disregard for other peoples' opinion. It is this false notion which breeds contempt for authority and disrespect for law. It is an undeniable fact that the American children treat their parents with the utmost lack of respect and consideration. It is also undeniable that lawlessness in our country is so common that we have become accustomed to it, and when we read daily about robbery, hold-up and homicide, we are not surprised. When we hear a man like Judge Kavanaugh make a public statement, as he recently did: "Chicago is the most dangerous city to live in," we are not at all disturbed. When we read that in the year 1913 there were in Chicago 221 murders, it does not startle us a all, as we read every day of so many murders. But let me show you what it means, what it ought to mean to you and to me. New York city, with a population twice as large as that of Chicago, had during the same year only 198 homicides. In other words, New York, with a population of about five millions, had 198 murders, while Chicago, with a population of two and a half millions, had 221 murders. But disregard for law and life will be even more startling if we compare it with conditions abroad. Thus during the same year Germany had 5 murders for every million inhabitants; England had 9; Canada had 13; the United States had 90. What wonder, therefore, if the disregard for civil law is so common that the religious law is disregarded altogether? It is the false notion about independence, an undue sense of individualism that breeds contempt for the law.

This disregard for authority is also apparent in the lack of American Jewish literature touching upon caustic questions or Sa'aloth U'teshuboth. To illustrate: Israel Abrahams in his masterful presentation has given us an extremely interesting description of "Jewish Life in the Middle Ages." And this wonderfully vivid and luminous picture of Jewish life during the ages of mediaevalism as it manifested itself in private and public—home and street, shop and market, play and work, dress and speech, individual and social life—all this he has gathered not from special books on these subjects, but from indirect allusions to it as it is reflected in the casuistic literature of that period.

Viewed from a cultured standpoint, the questions there asked are extremely interesting, proving beyond doubt how not alone customs, but the ethical value

(Continued on page 16)

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

Published Monthly (except July and August)
under the auspices of the
INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Printed by Excelsior Printing Co., Chicago.

Editorial Office
1228 TRIBUNE BUILDING, CHICAGO.
All matter intended for publication should be addressed to the editor.

Subscriptions received through lodges only. Subscriptions, one dollar per annum.

No responsibility is assumed for articles published over the signatures of the writers thereof.

JEWISH CALENDAR

5676-1916

Rosh-Chodesch Shehbat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Rosh-Chodesch Adar	Saturday, Feb. 6
Second Adar	Monday, March 6
Purim (Feast of Esther)	Sunday, March 19
Rosh-Chodesch Nissan	Tuesday, April 4
Passover (Pesach)	Tuesday, April 18
Passover (Seventh Day)	Sunday, April 24
Rosh-Chodesch Iyar	Thursday, May 4
Lag-B'Omer	Sunday, May 21
Rosh-Chodesch Sivan	Friday, June 2
Shabuoth (Confirmation Day)	Wednesday, June 7
Rosh-Chodesch Shebat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Fast of Tammuz	Tuesday, July 18
Rosh-Chodesch Ab	Monday, July 31
Fast of Ab	Tuesday, Aug. 8
Rosh-Chodesch Ellul	Wednesday, Aug. 30

6677-1916

THE PRANKS OF THE CALENDAR.

We Jews still keep to the lunar and our neighbors to the solar calendar. In the distant past our moon calendar was adjusted to the sun calendar. Our new year is not movable like the Mohammedan; it falls always in the autumn. Still there is enough variety. There are some who seriously consider the necessity of reforming our calendar so that our chief holidays shall not occur too soon when the majority of our synagogue members are still summering in the cool mountain resort or are enjoying the ocean breezes. When Hanukkah and Christmas occur in the same week, there is rejoicing. Jews and Christians may then celebrate the season conjointly. We exchange presents and label them Hanukkah gifts. The ultra-assimilated forget the associations of the holiday and the Christmas tree cheers Jewish abodes. To them Hanukkah is indeed an unknown festival. But for the majority of Jewish households the coincidence of the two festivals is a boon. When they fall apart, there is difficulty. Jewish organizations have Hanukkah entertainments out of season, in the Christmas week. More prevalent is the celebration of the first of January. It is the civil new year, as we call it. We keep our own in the autumn with the shofar blast. We blow the horn and revel in unseemly noises on the civil day. We see the old year out and the new year in. We frequent public places of amusement. We have our new year balls. But when, as it happened this year, the eve of new year falls on the eve of the Sabbath, shall the Sabbath be set aside and the horn be blown and the dance proceed and the merriment be indulged in? In times past Jewish scholars were wont to be approached to settle difficulties of their own calendar. In the temple the shofar was blown on the Sabbath day, in the provincial synagogue it was not. When the temple fell it was decreed that in Jabneh the shofar might be blown on the Sabbath day, but not elsewhere. Now the rabbi is confronted with a query arising out of the clash of two calendars. The Jewish club is the disturber of the peace. The trustees of the Jewish clubs are often also the trustees of the synagogue. Is it permissible for the congregation to adjourn from the Friday evening service to the club, from the rabbi's sermon to the president's allocution in the club, from the worship of God to the terpsichorean whirl? But club trustees are the servants of the membership; how shall they dictate a [illegible] and unpopular? Trustees [illegible] of the members' con- [illegible] each man and woman is [illegible] and all kinds of amuse- [illegible] it is brought home to the governing body that the desecration of the Sabbath on the part of individuals is one thing and quite another when a corporate body of Jews publicly make light of a Jewish institution. In more staid communities the difficulty has been solved by transferring the ball to Saturday night. But in the smaller communities a nidheh ball is an unheard-of thing. Their ancestors may have postponed fast-days; shall the children have a new year's ball after new year? What a pity that the old-fashioned rabbi did not deal with these modern difficulties! How much casuistry could have been spent? But it is really not a matter for quibbling. The modern Jew will not quibble. Where the Jewish sentiment is still alive and there is present a sense for decency the decision ought not to be equivocal. A new year's ball on Friday evening is a clear case of bold defiance of Jewish opinion. What a private man may do for himself is no criterion for a body of Jewish men and women. We are told that country clubs are kept wide open on the day of atonement and much pastime beside a good meal is indulged in. Here is a field for our rabbis who, be it said to their credit, are for the most part shocked by so flagrant an offense. But where the rabbi is lukewarm and chooses to equivocate, there are enough laymen in each congregation who are alive to the desecration of the name. They are perhaps in the minority, but theirs is the right attitude. It is a question of public decency pure and simple. There is no room for splitting hairs. Self-respect demands that public Jewish organizations do not flaunt their utter disregard for customs and institutions universally cherished by Jews. It may be hard to forego amusement. It is hard to swim against the current. But the world will respect a little stubbornness which is of the right kind. The double calendar must needs be fitful. But there cannot be a divided Judaism. There must not be a public desecration of the Sabbath. There must not be a public desecration of our holiest day. Public opinion will be on the side of the rabbi and layman who dares to protest in the name of Judaism against the vagaries of misguided organizations. We all wish to build up in our children a strong Jewish consciousness; shall we suffer it to be undermined when the elders refuse to sacrifice a little amusement for the sake of Judaism? It is bad enough that business rides rough-shod over the Sabbath; shall the dancing madness do away with what little is left of it?

THE BACK DOOR TO APOSTASY.

There is no religious organization that will not have its renegades. There is no state that will not lose one or the other of its citizens through expatriation. The wanderlust lays hold of an individual and transplants him to strange and distant countries. The bulk of mankind of course consists of stay-at-homes. The normal citizen is rooted in his soil. Religious traditions likewise hold the greater number of men. We remain that into which we were born. If we look askance at the expatriate, we condone the change where it really amounts to exile. Masses of people are often driven to leave their birthland because of persecution. Even economic betterment is above reproach. But when a man shifts from one political party to another we call him a deserter. And so when a man renounces the faith of his fathers we call him an apostate. We readily make allowance for the notable exceptions when a man is impelled by conscience to foreswear his religious affiliations. All religious bodies stand ready to receive proselytes. Some to be sure are more prone to admit converts. External conversion is frequently taken in lieu of the inner change of heart. Motives are not always inquired into. Sometimes it is confidently hoped that the new associations will in due season work the transformation from within. But the body that is the loser by this transaction cannot rest satisfied with the baser motives. If men turn their back upon us we should wish to have them do so for good reason; indeed, for a reason that will stand scrutiny. Still more ignoble is the defection which is of a circuitous character. Leave our house if you please by the front door, but do not sneak out by the back door.

We Jews have always had our apostates. To be a Jew at all times involved hardships, and if some lacked the strength to endure they succumbed. When the leash from without relaxed the secessions were few and far between. The road to fame beckoned weaker members away from their moorings. When persecution became intolerably pressing the number of deserters increased to an abnormal extent. When the exodus from Spain took place great masses sought safety in the Church. Today in Europe where restrictions, legal or otherwise, hem in the Jew, conversions en masse are sapping the strength of the Jewish body. In some countries the children at a tender age are led to the baptismal font while the elders merely withdraw from the community. This is a species of backdoor apostasy. Too shamefaced to subscribe to convictions which they do not share, they merely cease to be Jews. Indeed, they have ceased to be Jews before the step is taken which severs them from their people. And for this severance of relations they expect to be repaid with one prize or another.

In America the prize is neither economic nor professional; it is purely social. Jewish men and particularly Jewish women with the social bee in their bonnet believe they can climb easier without the trammels of Jewish associations. The fewest choose the front door by going over to a fashionable church. But quite numerous in every community are they who merely abandon Judaism without embracing Christianity. We have even back-door organizations. Their purpose is avowedly to fuse Jews and Christians by taking them both out of the religious bodies with which they were affiliated. It is assumed quite lightheartedly that Christianity and Judaism have outlived their usefulness. A new religion is manufactured for the convenience of our backsliders. For the most part these societies are composed of Jews, with perhaps a sprinkling of non-Jews. They are provided with ex-Christian leaders who tell them that ethical conduct takes the place of religion, is religion. The ethicals are in truth no more moral than the members of the positive churches. The only difference is that where the one listens to a sermon the other takes in a lecture. Both are merely passive. The life without is inexorable, and the ethicals are just as apt to fall from grace. Ethical hypocrisy is not a whit better than the religious variety. But the ethical Jew is snug in his having emptied himself out of the Jewish consciousness. A pogrom affects him as little or just as much as an Armenian massacre. We who remain within abhor all sorts of violence practised against the dissenter. But there is no denying the fact that the misfortune of our brethren touches us to the quick. Let the veil be removed. Shams have no place in dealing with so vital a concern as religion. If you wish not to be of us, go over, but do not remain on the frontier. But the ethicals are not quite as bad as the near-ethicals, those who have not severed themselves from the synagogue and yet coquette with the insidious movements marking out the synagogue for their target and laying the axe at the roots of our Judaism and Jewish organization. We should discountenance all manner of apostasy, most of all the backdoor variety.

U. S. SENATE FAVORS JEWISH RELIEF DAY.

Senator Martine's resolution asking the president to set aside a day as Jewish Relief day for Jewish sufferers was adopted today after Chairman Stone of the foreign relations committee had said that while he approved such a cause in relation to the Poles and Jews, who, he said, were without a government of their own, he hoped it would not extend to any of the organized nations.

JOS. KUHN.

Mr. Jos. Kuhn, one of the pioneers of Champaign, Ill., suddenly departed from life on Dec. 28, 1915, at the age of 79. During his long career he was personally acquainted with almost every family in the county, and the community lost one of its biggest men and most successful personalities. In his demise the Jews and Judaism lost an earnest and devoted champion, the Order of B'nai B'rith one of its oldest members, who was active in molding the history of the Order and shaping its destiny. He was simple, unassuming, unpretentious, enthusiastic, energetic in all matters pertaining to his people and to his faith. He left behind him the crown of a good name that will never lose its luster and will never tarnish.

NOBEL PRIZE AWARDED TO JEWISH ARTIST.

Leon Bakst, a Russian Jewish painter, who had been living in Paris for a number of years, has been awarded the Nobel art prize. Bakst has made himself famous by his paintings of mythological scenes, especially for sceneries in theatrical productions. He is especially noted for his skill in the combination of colors to produce the desired effect.

VICTOR H. KRIEGSHABER.

Mr. Victor H. Kriegshaber, one of Atlanta's most prominent citizens and active Ben B'rith, was honored by election to the presidency of the Chamber of Commerce. There is hardly a civic or communal activity of which he is not a part, whether it be Jewish or otherwise, and it is expected that the incumbency of Mr. Kriegshaber will have a tendency to banish much of the antagonistic spirit if such existed in the city.

ANOTHER JEW WINS NOBEL PRIZE.

The Academy of Sciences of Stockholm awarded the 1915 Nobel prize for chemistry to Dr. Richard Willstatter, professor at the University of Munich. Dr. Willstatter, who is forty-three years of age, began his career in Zurich and later in Dahlen. He was called to Munich as ordinary professor of chemistry only recently, after his fame as one of the foremost chemists had been established.

PROMINENT JEW APPOINTED HOME SECRETARY.

Mr. Herbert Samuel, Postmaster General, has been appointed Home Secretary of the British Cabinet, succeeding Sir John A. Simon, resigned.

B'NAI B'RITH OF DISTRICT NO. 1 OPPOSES RELIGION IN SCHOOLS.

At the monthly meeting of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 1, held in December, 1915, the following resolution was adopted regarding the religious feature of the Gary Schools:

"While we recognize the imperative duty of training our children according to the divine precepts of religion, and while we sympathize with all legitimate efforts that may be made towards the religious education of our young, we feel called upon to express, in unmistakable terms, our disapproval of bringing into our school system as part of the school day, of any plan whereby religious instruction may be deemed part of our public school curriculum. We feel that the association of the teaching of religion with the regular public school hours in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, means the introduction of sectarianism into our public schools. This we believe not only to be contrary to the letter of our laws, but absolutely opposed to the spirit thereof, and indeed, in direct opposition to the fundamental principle of the severance of church and state, which we consider the cornerstone of our form of government. Furthermore, inasmuch as the children would necessarily have to go to schools provided for that purpose by the different denominations, the intrusion of this creedal feature into the schools would destroy that feeling of unity which we have always prided ourselves was instilled by our public school system, and instead, religious prejudice and even hostility would be likely to arise among the children of the various denominations. We deem the attempted introduction of the religious phase of the Gary system to be fraught with grave danger to the democratic spirit of our Public Schools, which it is the patriotic duty of every American citizen to oppose."

The committee consists of Herman Asher, Abr. K. Cohen, Joseph Rosenzweig, Sol. Sulzberger, Samuel Fleischman, Bernard M. Kaplan, Maurice P. Davidson, Louis Kempner, I. Irving Lipsitch, Edwin J. Goodhart, Henry Lasker, Charles H. Shapiro, Joseph Levenson, Dr. Joseph Silverman, Joseph H. Ullman, Charles M. Stern, Charles Hartman and Harry Cutler.

Letter of Brother Dr. Paul Nathan of Berlin to Brother Grand President Timendorfer

DATED NOVEMBER 9, 1915

May I call your attention to the B'nai B'rith News of September, which has just reached me?

In the "News from London," the author of which is Brother Dr. M. Epstein, there are a number of statements which are in a most regrettable manner calculated to spread errors about the attitude of the German government towards the Jews.

Brother Dr. Epstein maintains that the German commandant of Lodz has published a proclamation in which our coreligionists in the city are informed that the wearing by the Jews of the long coat, a custom prevailing in the East, "offends the feelings of the German soldiers".

I myself was in Lodz, and the closest relations exist between the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden and our co-religionists in Lodz. But I have never heard that a proclamation like the one indicated was published in Lodz, and I therefore most emphatically dispute that a publication of that kind was ever issued in Lodz.

Brother Dr. Epstein then asserts that the German empress has, indeed, visited "all the hospitals" in Berlin, "but the Jewish hospital, where there were many wounded soldiers who expected the empress, she, however, passed away."

Also this statement is false. We all know that the German empress has paid a visit to the Jewish hospital of the Chevra Kadisha Adass Yisroel in Berlin, exactly as she inspected the hospitals of the Catholics and the Protestants. (The empress also visited the Jewish Institute for the Care of the Sick in Breslau, on which occasion the noble lady distinguished the nurse of the Grand Lodge employed there, by conversing with her. (The Editorial Committee of the Monthly Reports of the Grand Lodge.)

Brother Dr. Epstein also asserts that England, France Italy and even Austria-Hungary have Jewish field-chaplains in their armies. He adds: "German Catholics and Protestants may receive spiritual consolation upon the field of honor. German Jews can only die upon the field of honor." In other words: Jewish chaplains are not admitted in the German army.

Also this assertion is absolutely untrue. A great number of Jewish field chaplains is to be found in our armies in the East and in the West, and a few of them have already been distinguished with the Iron Cross for their deeds of sacrifice. As much as we know, fourteen Rabbis are active as field chaplains in the German army, namely, Baeck of Berlin, Emil Lewy of Berlin, Sonderling of Hamburg, Italiener of Darmstadt, Saenger of Berlin, Salzberger of Frankfurt, Wilde of Magdeburg, Chone of Konstanz, Rosenack of Bremen, S. Levi of Breslau, Taenzer of Goeppingen, Arthur Lewy of Berlin, Lewin of Leipzig, Baerwald of Muenchen. The first eleven are members of our Order. (The Editorial Committee of the Monthly Reports of the Grand Lodge.)

Brother Dr. Epstein asserts finally that a great number of Germans were not interned in England, but have retained their freedom, while "in Germany all Englishmen were interned".

This assertion, too, is not true. There is in Germany a considerable number of Englishmen who were not interned, and the Hilsverein der Deutschen Juden has been in the position to obtain freedom for a number of our English coreligionists by becoming security for the peaceful behavior of the respective persons.

I may positively state that every one of the assertions by which Brother Dr. Epstein seeks to lower the respect for Germany in the world, can be proven to be untrue. Not one of this kind of assertions in the offensive article is true.

Far be it from me to suppose that Brother Dr. Epstein intentionally spreads biased information about the conditions in Germany and about the attitude of the German Government towards the Jews. Whoever lives in England, whoever permits himself to be daily influenced by the untruths of the English press, is too easily exposed to the danger of taking for truth the invented statements contained in the English newspapers.

Although I believe that I should point out this fact, it is not done out of the joy of writing a cheap criticism. Neither am I that kind of a German chauvinist who makes use of every pretense to display noisily his national feelings. Nothing is farther from me than such demeanor, although as a Jew I claim for myself the right to be a good citizen of the German empire, just as Jews in England or in the United States claim this right for themselves.

When I call attention to the letter of Brother Dr. Epstein in the "B'nai B'rith News" I am induced to do it for a twofold reason: as a member of the Order of B'nai B'rith and because the great and responsible mission of the United States must not be prejudiced by false information.

As a brother of the Order, it is my duty to fight against pernicious errors and false perceptions like those that are being disseminated by Brother Dr. Epstein. And then I entertain the idea that under the political condition of today the terrible sufferings of the Jews in Russia can before everything be mitigated and perhaps eventually completely removed through the endeavors of our coreligionists in the United States. But how shall the Jews of the United States consider in a fitting manner that which can be done and which must be done when they receive a false picture of the international situation and of the condition of the German Jews, when they are forced to believe that the German Government and the German influential circles are accessible in a high degree to anti-Semitic agitations?

DR. PAUL NATHAN.

THE UNION OF AMERICAN HEBREW CONGREGATIONS.

Annual Meeting of the Executive Board.

The annual meeting of the Executive Board was held on Sunday, December 12, at the Hebrew Union College. President J. Walter Freiberg occupied the chair and Secretary Lipman Levy was at his post as usual.

Very complete reports were presented from all the officers and the various Boards of the Union showing the work that has been done during the past year. The Hebrew Union College is in a very flourishing condition, there being at this time ninety-five students in attendance, the greatest in its history.

The Board of Delegates on Civil Rights and the Board of Managers of Synagog and School Extension each presented full reports showing their extended labors during the past year and the splendid work they have accomplished in their respective spheres of usefulness.

The question chiefly under discussion was the one of finances. The increasing activities of the Union quite naturally result in larger expenses but the income does not show corresponding augmentation. The members present at the meeting pledged themselves to use their best efforts for the purpose of obtaining a larger revenue.

The Committee which had been appointed for that purpose presented a complete revision of the laws governing the Union, which after a full discussion, were recommended to the next Council for adoption.

The Board adjourned until the next regular meeting which is to take place in June, 1916.

MISERY OF THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

The Berlin "Tageblatt" publishes special correspondence from Stockholm relating to the present condition of the Jews in Russia, stating that:

"The Governor of Poltawa has ordered some 12,000 Jewish refugees to immediately depart from that government district. In the government of Tambow some 30,000 Jewish refugees fared even worse, as they were forcibly deported from that district and they are now tramping along the highways without food and not knowing where they can find a hospitable asylum. Jewish inhabitants of Setschinsk had prepared food and provision for the use of such Jewish fugitives as were being transported through that place. The Russian officials, however, forbade the carrying out of that humane intention, and either spoiled or completely destroyed the food collected for that purpose.

"Jewish women, who tried to leave the cars, in which they were being forcibly transported, for the purpose of buying some food for their starving children, were prevented from leaving these temporary prison cars.

"All the Jews are being exiled from Kieff.

"As reported by the 'Rjetsch,' anti-Semitic prints have been circulated among the inhabitants of Iwan Wosnessensk, wherein the Jews are being accused of treason.

"It seems evident that the open accusations against the government officials' participation in such unlawful and pernicious deeds, made during the recent session of the Duma, have not had the least salutary effect."

AN OPEN LETTER.

Jewish Publication Society of America,
Philadelphia, Benjamin Alexander,
Secretary.

Dear Sir:

Some of our brethren have seen fit to interpret literally the words "The absence of the Bible in the Temple," used in my earlier communication to you. They have strenuously denied the physical absence of the Bible from the Temple. It is true, the Bible is to be found in the Temple, and frequently a text for a sermon is drawn from it, but it is still absent so far as the people are concerned. Of what benefit is the Bible in the Temple or in any place of worship if it is not used; if it is not brought home to the people? They have also objected to individual prayer for fear that the medley of voices would give rise to a great disturbance. Has it never occurred to them that silent prayer is equally effective—if not more spiritual? Has the value of self-indulged prayer never presented itself to them?

The individual is recognized as possessing a conscious mind and a subconscious being, of which the latter is much deeper. Religions to the conscious mind has lessened, and undoubtedly is lessening, its hold. But, to the sub-conscious, quite the contrary; to it religion is as strong today, if not stronger, than at any time in the past. The materialism of the age makes the sub-conscious being of the individual especially active and, hence, it is not only susceptible to, but it requires the influence of religion. It must, however, be reached, and self-indulged prayer is the practical way to reach it. Those who continue, in a materialistic age, to administer to the conscious mind, at the neglect of the sub-conscious being, will find themselves barren of response.

Our Rabbis, along with others, have complained of the Jews taking to Christian Science. They have bitterly arraigned them, yet, has it never occurred to them that Christian Science has not fallen from the sky; that its growth is not out of the thin air; that there must be something in it that appeals to the people—especially to the Jew. Have they never sought to learn something of the nature of this cause—why it appeals to the modern Jew?

Why is it that Christian Science has made such little progress against Catholicism and Orthodox Judaism? Because both are fundamentally grounded upon self-indulged prayer; hence Christian Science—which is but a practical utilization of the psychology of prayer—does not appeal to them; it offers them nothing new, nothing which their own service does not permit of—but, to the so-called modern Jew, whose energy is much applied—self-prayer, the natural instinct in moments of distress—appeals mightily. Now, self-prayer is equally effective to the individual whether it is offered in the Temple, in the Church or elsewhere, and no read or recited prayer by the Rabbi will ever be as effective spiritually, physically or mentally. Self-indulged prayer is not practiced and observed by the modern Jew; it is not encouraged by the Rabbis in any respect. They believe their reading and recital of prayers from the prayer book is sufficient. It is not! It is not meeting fully the issue which this materialistic age presents. The Jew, as many another, has the right to ask for self-indulged prayer with all its benefits, whatever they may be—spiritually, physically and mentally.

Prayer for oneself is the instinctive basis of all religion. No faith or creed has any monopoly upon it. When the modern Jew goes elsewhere to indulge in self-prayer he does so without any less faith in his own religion—he is but seeking the relief which self-prayer gives unto all mankind irrespective of his faith. This is abundantly proved by the fact that the great mass of Jews who attend the Christian Science church are to be found in the Temple on the Jewish holidays and in their days of mourning. They are not lost to Judaism—they are but seeking the relief, the comfort, of self-indulged prayer, which they have a right to ask of their own religion, but which is not practiced or encouraged in its present-day service.

Certainly, it is not non-Judaic to indulge in self-prayer!

There is nothing wrong with the attitude of the people—the fault lies elsewhere.

DAVID E. EINSTEIN.

December 9, 1915.

INFORMATION DESIRED.

The B'nai B'rith News has been requested to endeavor to ascertain the whereabouts of one Abr. Lederer, a member of Jephtah Lodge No. 143, of Paterson, N. J., this brother having joined the lodge on November 23, 1910. Anyone in possession of information regarding this brother will confer a great favor upon his family by communicating with Mr. Joseph Lederer, 1430 Main St., Bridgeport, Conn.

DISCRIMINATION AND SOCIAL OSTRACISM IN THE ARMY?

Emphatic denial that boys of the Jewish faith are made victims of race discrimination and social ostracism at the West Point Military Academy is made in a letter addressed to Representative Chandler, of New York, by Secretary of War Garrison.

Mr. Garrison's letter was written in reply to a communication by Mr. Chandler. In his letter to Mr. Garrison the New York congressman wrote:

"During my terms in Congress, I have held several preliminary examinations after due notice to all the people of my district to fill vacancies at West Point and Annapolis. Very few Jews have taken part in these examinations.

"In this connection it has been repeatedly brought to my attention that there is a belief among the people of this race that it is difficult for a Jew to gain admission to West Point or Annapolis; that if he does succeed in entering he is met by race discrimination and social ostracism more or less and that if he succeeds in graduating the same race discrimination and social ostracism follow him into active service.

"I am writing to ask if there is any real foundation for this belief. Will you let me know whether there have been any well authenticated cases of race discrimination against the Jews at West Point? History records that in every age the Jews have furnished able officers and brave soldiers to all the armies of the world and it is a matter of personal official interest to me to learn whether our great and free Republic is being denied the benefit of their military services on account of race discrimination that violates at once the letter of our laws and the spirit of our best and noblest traditions."

Replying to Mr. Chandler, the secretary of war paid a high tribute to the Jew as a soldier. Secretary Garrison quoted from a report made by the superintendent at West Point in which alleged discrimination against Jews at this institution was discussed. The superintendent reported in part:

"No consideration of any kind is given at West Point regarding religious faith or belief of any candidate for the academy, nor is any such consideration given in acting on the case of any cadet at the academy.

"In my more than ten years' personal connection with the academy I have never observed or heard of a case of social ostracism at West Point because a cadet was a Jew or a member of any other religious faith. No record of any kind is made at these headquarters as to the religious faith of a cadet, and I cannot say whether there is one Jew or many Jews in the corps of cadets.

"In the social relations between cadets I do not believe that the question of religious faith ever enters in the slightest degree. It is purely a question of personal character and the elements of agreeable fellowship that social relations are intimate, cordial or unfriendly."

Secretary Garrison recalled that in 1899 reports appeared in the newspapers stating that cadets of the Jewish faith were being hazed and ostracized. An inquiry, he wrote, demonstrated that the reports were "absolutely false." With the report made in 1899 was a statement by a cadet in which he wrote:

"I am of the Jewish faith, and my relations with my classmates and the members of other classes indicate that this fact has nothing whatever to do with a cadet's standing in the eyes of other cadets."

Secretary Garrison wrote further that a select committee of the Home which investigated hazing at West Point in 1901 reported that "Hebrews are usually treated with respect, and this conviction is strengthened from the fact that there are two Hebrews now at the academy, both of whom testify that they have never been subjected to any maltreatment whatever on account of their race or religion."

Concluding his letter, Secretary Garrison wrote:

"The Jewish faith has undoubtedly furnished many able officers and many brave soldiers to all the armies of the world, and I am satisfied that many such are now in the army. In justice to them and the military service of our country generally it will be a matter of gratification to me if you will take some means to dispel and discourage the erroneous impression to which you refer, for I assure you that so far as I am aware no such distrimination or ostracism now exists in the army, and that while I am secretary of war no such discrimination or ostracism will be permitted."

ONE-THIRD ARE JEWS.

More than 900 students are enrolled in the new Warsaw University which has been opened under German auspices, of whom 34 per cent are Jews. Nearly one-half the students enrolled will study medicine.

:-: :-: The Jewish Farmer :-: :-:

Abstract of Address Delivered By Colonel HARRY CUTLER of Providence, R. I.

At the Seventh Annual Convention of the Federation of Jewish Farmers of America, Held in New York City, December 5, 1915

To look into the faces of this peaceful gathering of husbandmen, bent on promoting contentment and prosperity by sweat of brow and labor of hands, one can not help but contrast the picture with the hideous one in human blood now being spilled on the European canvas. On the one hand is our beloved Union, spelling equal opportunity to the nations of the world, and particularly to our Jewish citizens—a land, enriched by Almighty God with blessings for mankind. where all are born equal, regardless of race or creed. On the other, a war, inspired by that human frailty, commercial aggrandizement, is recording on the pages of our civilization such horrible destruction of God's gifts in land and people that our minds refuse to grasp the awful holocaust, and reject the harrowing details of this tremendous conflagration.

In all the belligerent lands our co-religionists are displaying a patriotism which compels admiration. In Russia particularly, where you and I were born, where our people have been and are suffering unjust persecution and discrimination for devotion to our faith, the "flesh of our flesh" "bone of our bone," and "blood of our blood," are going through a wholesale martyrdom unparalleled in the history of the world.

This contrasting view should in a large measure compensate for some of the social and economic shortcomings so bitterly complained of by many of our Jewish farmers and with which this convention will undoubtedly be concerned. The discussion of questions arising from soil, seed and crops, or poultry, dairy and live stock, each vital to your interests, I shall leave for the men qualified by experience and training, who will take part in your deliberations with encouraging results, I am sure, but on the larger, general question, as it affects the Jewish farmer or colonist. I beg leave to submit several observations, some of which are not new, but nevertheless, can not be emphasized too strongly or too often. In all professional, industrial and commercial pursuits, the majority of failures are the "misfits," those who, figuratively are a round peg in a square hole, who misjudge their aptitude for a given vocation.

The misfit in agricultural life is found in larger proportion than in any other walk, and consequently a greater number of "failures" result. The chief reasons are over-ambition on the part of both applicant and organization to populate and work the land; hence, this zeal overlooks many essential fundamentals. Does the individual or the organization, or both, give sufficient thought to the fitness, physical and tempermental, of the would-be farmer? Does it properly appraise his handicaps—lack of knowledge of the English language and of our American institutions and traditions, ignorance of customs, methods, laws and regulations of a new country, and all the other tribulations of the pioneer farmer, who starts a stranger in a strange land? I sometimes feel that these matters are too often forgotten or ignored in our eagerness to stimulate the "back to the soil" movement. When this negligence is coupled with the impatience of the farmer after the first season or at most the second year, because the acres of copper pennies planted have not yielded sections of gold dollars, but instead have provided only a bare living; when the interest on his mortgage must be met and insurance paid, or a silo built, when his potatoes have been damaged, his cattle attacked with hoof and mouth disease, his orchard invaded by the gypsy moth, or the numerous misfortunes which make war on and retard the progress of his farm from immediate fortune building, he loses courage, then hope, and finally comes failure.

Also to be considered, is the family group, consisting of several sons, who long for the social intercourse of the city, and soon tire of their humdrum existence. Perchance the family is blessed with a daughter of marriageable age, whose thoughts are not congenial to dairying, fruit preserving, or chicken feeding, whose fate is bemoaned by a doting mother and father. Then does the call of the ghetto become so strong that the agricultural ambition of this family is a pronounced failure.

My friends, it requires a stout heart and indomitable courage to overcome apparently insurmountable obstacles. In all ages, the Jew has displayed these qualities and by persistent thrift and immeasurable energy will ultimately win out. The Jew whose agricultural instinct has been suppressed by discrimination and laws of persecution, which for hundreds of years denied him the right to own land, will at least, in this blessed country, again come into his own. You are sowing now, not for yourselves, but for your children's children, whose lot will be cast in happier places than was yours, your father's, or your father's father.

You are engaged in a vocation, which today is dignified with all the virtues of all professions, and will perform a mission in solving the problems of our people, as no other calling ever can hope to accomplish. The fifty thousand Jewish men and women, who are today tilling the soil, are doing more for our people than the million Jewish men and women, who are making garments, laying brick, painting homes or doing any of the variety of occupations in mill, factory or sweat shop. The fifty thousand Jewish farmers are today doing more for the future of our people than the hundreds of thousand of doctors, lawyers, Rabbonim, Shochtim and teachers. This does not mean that we should undervalue the importance of the Jew's place in the professions, in business, commerce, education or manual labor, but it does mean that we must properly appreciate the importance of the Jewish farmer, and his influence for good on the future American Jewry. The presence here today of the second generation of Jewish farmers, taking part in this important convention, is in itself an indication that you are overcoming obstacles and conquering handicaps, and that your mission to take a part in the agricultural development of this country must be realized for your benefit and ours, as well as the advantage of the land of our adoption. Dr. Johnson said, "Agriculture not only gives riches to a nation, but the only riches she can call her own."

The pertinent matter of my discussion, however, must deal directly with the immigrant Jewish farmer; for after all is said, it is the newcomer, escaping from the tyranny of oppression, who looks to this country for refuge, and depends upon you and me for counsel and aid in settling upon the soil to carve his own career. Shall we be unmindful of our responsibility? Shall we, through lethargy or because of the tremendous task, follow the line of least resistance and permit him to drift into the ghetto, behind the push cart or into the sweat shop to increase the present over-crowded congestion in the large cities thereby inviting further restrictive legislation, both state and federal—un-American in its scope, and inhuman in its application —or shall we by every effort possible aim to ameliorate a condition, the disadvantage of which we ourselves are first to recognize?

I believe the later plan demands the activity and attention of every Jewish organization in this country whether akin to the farmer or not. Every philanthropic or altruistic society can and must have part in this program, especially at this time when after the cessation of hostilities our shores will be called upon to receive the thousands from Russia, Galicia, Austria, Rumania, the Balkan States, Turkey and other countries, who escape the process of extermination, engendered by this appalling war. Since the question of immigration is fundamentally a problem of distribution, it becomes our duty, without delay to engage in a policy of preparedness in which every detail shall be considered and plans adopted for the practical fulfillment of our duties as American citizens and Jews.

The first step should be a conference of representatives from the Federation of Jewish Farmers of America, the Immigrant Publication Society, the Immigrant Aid Society, the National Americanization Society and many kindred organizations and individuals, whose talent and capacity are not only desirable, but necessary.

The I. O. B. B. created a Commission on Immigration at its convention in San Francisco last May, which declared these principles:

"As American citizens, we re-affirm our belief in the true American policy, the exercise of which has contributed to the prosperity of the American nation—a policy which, in harmony with the traditions of our country, has extended a hospitable welcome to those immigrating from other countries, whether as voluntary immigrants or as the involuntary refugees forced to leave their native land by persecution of a religious or political nature.

"Upon us devolves the sacred duty of insisting upon the maintenance of this principle, particularly as it effects our brethren who come to these shores, whether from choice or as a result of political or religious persecution.

"We recognize in the problem of Immigration one of the greatest problems before the nation—a question whose solution requires not only clearness of vision but also high-mindedness and bigheartedness. There is no doubt that the exclusion of the physically, morally and mentally unfit, is imperative for the safeguarding of our country's interests; to that end, the existing immigration laws are sufficient and have our unqualified approval. On the other hand, it is equally obvious that the welfare of our country demands the admission of all those who can add by brain and brawn to the idealism and the national prosperity of our country.

"Our gates should be kept open to those who seek these blessed shores as the door of hope and opportunity for the upbuilding of themselves and at the same time contributing their share to the Commonwealth.

"We maintain that the problem of immigration is essentially one of distribution, and we earnestly recommend that as patriotic citizens we should devote our best efforts to the study of the best means of diverting our immigrant population from the larger cities, especially the ports of entry, to the sparsely populated sections of our country—more particularly to the vast tracts of uncultivated lands, which if put into cultivation would support millions who besides maintaining themselves would change many a desert into a garden spot.

"The opening of the Panama Canal, the economic questions involved through industrial congestion in large centers of our population, the remedial measures to be accomplished by the 'back to the soil' movement, the advantages of reclamation of abandoned farms in New England together with the tremendous opportunities which the vast unpopulated sections of the middle and western parts of our country presents; the encouragement for the enactment of such laws as may tend to open up the immense landholdings now out of use and unproductive, the dissemination of true information regarding our immigrant laws and industrial conditions, often misrepresented at the ports of embarkation, but which can be corrected through the machinery of our European districts, and the entire subject affecting the stream of immigration to our shores—to deal with these matters and to formulate a preparedness on our part both here and abroad that shall put into practical form our mission with respect to this very serious problem requires a special commission regardless as to whether the conclusion of hostilities abroad will increase or diminish immigration."

In harmony with these principles, the Commission on Immigration of the I. O. B. B. cheerfully offers to co-operate in any and all movements calculated to aid the Jewish farmer in promoting his religious, educational, social and economic welfare, in so far as the machinery of this international Jewish fraternity will permit, and if it be your desire will initiate the call for a conference to develop preparedness, not of offense nor defense, but preparedness for the reception, the distribution, and the assimilation of future American citizenry, which will add glory to our nation and contentment to untold numbers of our co-religionists.

In conclusion, it is fitting to note that this convention is held on Chanuka, the festival commemorating the victory of the Maccabeans, who gave their lives to cleanse and save our holy institutions from pollution and destruction, and made possible, by their bravery, the endurance of our ideals.

Today, Israel, whose mission is peace, is none the less heroically shedding his blood and the blood of his brothers for another ideal—that of loyalty to the country under whose flag he finds shelter, notwithstanding the fact that often times that shelter has meant persecution and extermination. Therefore, you are asked to strive with all your energy, regardless of hardships, in peaceful quest of another ideal which has been denied to you for centuries—the tilling of your own soil. In this land of equal opportunities, consecrated by the blood of our American martyrs, who made the Republic what she is—the best nation on earth —establish a permanency for yourselves and for future generations, who must seek a like salvation. In this labor may your deliberations be fruitful for good, and may you, individually and collectively, go from Strength to Strength.

A PACK OF CARDS.

The Game of Life Is Typified in a Pack of Cards.

By Simon Wolf.

First—We have a full pack, which in number, averages our life's duration.

Second—There are fifty-two cards, just as many as there are weeks in the year.

Third—Four colors, as there are four quarters in the year.

Fourth—Thirteen in each color, as there are weeks in the quarter.

Fifth—The different colors typify the different trials and colorings of our life as, for instance, the heart should be like our own—innocent of deceit, pure, and simple; and, when this color is trump in our domestic and social relations, then the game of life is never endangered. But when its sister color, diamonds, gets the upper hand, then life, in all its intoxication, may sparkle and flash, but the result is ever the same. It ends in a cold stone—dead for good and alive for evil. And oh! how many hearts have been sacrificed to gain diamonds, and how many of God's noblest creations have carried through life, instead of a contented heart a satchel of diamonds, every gem of which was purchased by degrading her or his divine and immortal attributes, and, when thus acting, they simply allied themselves to the clubs, to which so many are driven. They give to every enemy a club, with which they are beaten. In German it is called "kreuz" and many of us have seen and heard of the "Hauskreuz." And again, as in French, how many a man has started out in life with the "Treff" card in his hands, full of heart, rich in diamonds, and ended, as we all must, by a cold application of the spades. Yes, "to this complexion must we come at last." "A spade, a spade," as Hamlet says, ends all of our games and sports.

And thus, while we start in life with the nurse's "whist" of warning, often playing "solo" as bachelors do, often "cribbaged" in the vice of adversity and unfriendly criticism, which "piquets" us to such a degree that we miss the ripe age of "66"; but then in life's morning we often have "Loo," so that "high low" compensates "Jack" for the "game" he finally loses. But whether we are "Boston scat," we are often badly "euchred," whether "playing alone," "assisted," or "ordering up." For all our "bluff," cannot scare away the death "poker" who "cards" us off to the grave, where all the common trumps, where the colors are so blended that it is immaterial whether we have been kings, queens or knaves, and how often do we try to "bridge" our sorrows. but the "slams" come nevertheless. How many try to "pinochle" themselves into the "400" to become the "joker" on the "table" of "concern."

But in our game we must not forget, as we too often do in real life, the small cards. They are important to make up the pack; without them, as in our actual day life, we could not exist without the lower creation, whether human, animal, or vegetable. From many points of view this subject can be treated, and the limit of this article alone prevents me from carrying it into lengthening channels.

The ace is the high card; it is the supreme card as is the Creator of us all. and the primal number, the one card which in all games leads.

The deuce is husband and wife, how often do they play the deuce with each other, involving the whole pack.

JEWISH RECRUITING COMMITTEE.

The recruiting office in England, under Lord Derby, which has accomplished such wonders in the brief period of its existence, appointed a special committee to enlist Jewish recruits. Lionel de Rothschild and Edwin Montefiore are at the head of this committee and strenuous efforts are made by English Jewish communal leaders that the committee should make a good showing in inducing a large number of Jewish young men to join the colors.

JEWS IN THE CAUCASUS.

As a result of the complaints made by the Christian commercial organizations in the Caucasus of the bad effect on commerce of the order of Grand Duke Nicholas to expel all Jewish refugees from the Caucasus, the "high spheres" have made representations to the Viceroy concerning the matter. The Assistant Viceroy, however, received a Jewish deputation, headed by Rabbi Marcus, and declared that the refugees would have to leave the Caucasus. He could only promise that the expulsions would be carried out gradually, and that the exiles would receive material assistance. Nevertheless, further local efforts are in progress with a view to the annulment of the order.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, Dec. 22, 1915.

The word quiescence would describe the present state of Anglo-Jewry as a community. It is a quiescence not due to laziness of innate incapacity to move on; the causes that have produced it are external, and may be summed up in one word—war. In a great many countries many movements have been stopped by the war, certainly among the belligerents. And just as the larger community has stopped its main activities to prosecute and win the war, so the smaller section included in Anglo-Jewry is in the same case. The war and its atmosphere, as might be expected, dominates everything—politics, thought, religion, art, literature, even the drama. We are reminded of a number of boatmen who anchor their craft and break their journey in order to overcome a savage monster in the way. We are like the people who have left their boats for the nonce, and the things are lying idle—quiescent is the term we used. The journey will be continued when the temporary incident is closed. We shall, to use another metaphor, take up the old threads and continue weaving.

* * *

In the meantime, during the period of quiescence, it is to be sincerely hoped that someone is thinking. Never was the world, the vast whole of it, so much in need of clear, dispassionate thought as now. For many idols have been broken; many a man's faith will have to commence growing anew; many a formula has been found but empty sound, and on all sides there are bound to be changes. We are not concerned with the question as to how the war will end. End how it will, the changes in the face of Europe (to speak of certainties), will be many and far-reaching. And if this be so, will smaller entities escape? Is it conceivable that Anglo-Jewry, for instance, will remain as it was before the middle of 1914? The answer is obvious.

* * *

But if there are to be changes, is anyone thinking out how to guide and direct the coming tendencies? Officially we do not know that there is any such person. Indeed, it is difficult to see who is the proper person for this function. Private individuals have their own cares and worries and interests; it must therefore be a public personality. One thinks naturally of the Chief Rabbi. This is certainly his momentous opportunity. When he came into our midst many voices raised a querulous note. Did we really need a Chief Rabbi, we, who had no Rabbis, it was asked? Many people, a year or two later, pointed with victorious assurance to the empty harvest of the Chief Rabbi's appointment. Were we better off with him? Were we healthier, more religious, more alert, more alive? In a word, more Jewish? They may have been wrong, these people with the air of "I told you so". After all, could you expect a newcomer to be at once abreast of all the problems? Why, it would take him some little time to get to know the highways and byways of London, the faces and the places that matter. He would have to test the mettle of many men, learn their characters, try their trustworthiness. All this required time, and time the occupant of the Chief Rabbi's office has now had. The period of war adds thereunto, and provides an ample space for cogitating on problems of the future. The future matters in Anglo-Jewry. The less the immediate past and its traditions is dwelt on the better.

* * *

This, then, is the Chief Rabbi's opportunity. Will he rise to it? Will he shape Anglo-Jewry's destinies along the proper and fitting channels? It is to be hoped so. But one thing thinking men will wish for with their might. It is that the Feudal System in Anglo-Jewry be finally set aside and the fresh air of democracy be let in with its refreshing, recuperative powers. Communal Feudalism has been the dead hand on Anglo-Jewry; it is the canker worm gnawing at its roots. It has brought bitterness within our councils and lethargy in our religious life. It has driven some of our best men to turn their backs on communal work; it has encouraged a "village pump" outlook in our midst. Once and for all it must go, and the Chief Rabbi we look to as the agent of destruction, as a sort of Jack-the-giant-killer. as one who will lead us from feudal bondage to democratic liberty.

* * *

In the Feudal System the lord entered into a certain relationship with his vassals. These rendered service in return for the overlord's protection. In Anglo-Jewry we also had our lords who demanded obedience in return for their money. In the 18th century—in the 17th, in the 16th—such a relationship in Jewish communities between the mass of Jews in each community and their "Manhig" was all very well. The leader was often a person of influence at Court; perhaps he was literally a "Court Jew" with privileges, at whose word any Jew might be compelled to leave his place of domicile, on whose favor many a man's livelihood depended. Some of the old-world leaders were noble men. One thinks of a Joselmann of Rossheim as an instance. But history records cases of petty tyranny on the part of others. In any event the relationship that thus existed was rooted in the Social and Political environment of those days. If and when it is found today it is an anachronism. It is not too much to say that Anglo-Jewry is the last of the larger Jewish communities in Western Europe which still retains traces of that relationship. The present constitution of the Board of Deputies is a flagrant illustration. It is true that the Board is talking of amending its constitution. But we are all aware that great things need not be expected of it. The Board might be an engine for great good. As it is, it is a joke. Qualification for membership is worthy of a Gilbert and Sullivan opera. Did not a prominent Jewish leader say recently that he had not the remotest notion of the town or its locality for which he sat as member (save the mark!) at the Board? What is the result of this state of affairs? Privilege is entrenched and monopoly is bulwarked. Now and again we get glimpses of the underground burrowings. The "ecclesiastical authorities" (so they are called), as they cannot win universal confidence, attempt to enforce it by ways worthy of an Innocent III. They do not, it is true, threaten condign punishments, but they do refuse certain small recognitions. Their policy is: You must accept my authority or I will not let you live as a community. It reminds one of the second commandment.

* * *

All this must be swept away. We want to be a "great Society" (in the meaning Graham Wallas gives the term). We therefore require large outlooks. We must shed all pettiness; we must quit us like men. To send congratulatory telegrams to royalties and graces is after all ancillary. For that alone we do not require a Chief Rabbi. And yet these telegrams somehow stand out in one's memory as one looks to the achivements of the Chief Rabbinate. Hardly anything else. Still they belong surely to the preparatory period, to the days of the fledgling (if we may use the picture without any offense), and in the great days that are to follow larger and more enduring work will form landmark after landmark in the road of really important achievements. Once we get a democratic spirit in Anglo-Jewry (democratic in the best sense of the word), there will be only criticism of the right sort, and it will be impossible to talk of communal rebels chafing at the bit of authority because authority will be deserved and freely granted by a brotherhood. Not feudalism with its lords, but congregations will be the unit of communal life in Anglo-Jewry. If we achieve unto this, our religious life will be more of a reality, our communal politics will be effective both in and out of Jewry, and in the phrase of the German poet, we will be "a Band of Brothers."

* * *

Our smaller "Band of Brothers" is flourishing. If we could imagine Brother Bergel (whose memory be for a blessing), come among us, we believe he would be greatly pleased that he made the two memorable journeys to London to get us established. Well do we remember his passionate optimism and his determination to plant a seedling of the order in English soil. We are glad he did. When the war is over and human bonds are once again linked up, no one, we feel sure, will rejoice more at our existence than the German Lodge itself. It will be a test of the Order's effectiveness. Perhaps if our German and Austrian friends were not to forget so often that they are Jews as well as German or Austrian subjects, that test will be all the surer when the time for putting it into effect arrives. And anyhow it seems pitiful, this apparent forgetfulness of theirs, for some of their fellow citizens have taken good care to remember it. Thus at the recent annual meeting of the Verein zur Abwehr des Antisemitismus in Berlin (on November 26), a society to which very many great souls (non-Jews) in Germany gave their support, the Chairman, Herr Gothein deplored the fact that the sweet friendliness of the early days of the war among all sections of society in Germany was quickly ended, and anti-Semitic attacks were becoming frequent.

* * *

It is Russia, however, which is the worst offender and therefore the condition of the Russian Jews is receiving attention here. No less than four gatherings recently were devoted to aspects of the Russo-Jewish question. Mr. Claude Montefiore, the President of the Anglo-Jewish Association, at the annual meeting of that body, dealt with the position in Russia as only he could with his sympathy, his insight, his balance. On the whole, while admitting the thick blackness of the present he was hopeful for the future. Perhaps hopefulness is best after all. At any rate, hopefulness is free from passionate prejudice, and in these times that is very precious. Then, Mr. Israel Zangwill discoursed about the Jews in general and the Russian Jews in particular before the Fabians, and Mr. George Bernard Shaw gave the Jews his blessing and Mr. Hyndman voiced their claims to the elementary rights of citizenship. Thirdly, Mr. Sokolow told us about the cultural activities of Russian Jews, and finally, Dr. Joseph Kruk laid bare the tragedy of the Jew in Poland. All this stirring of interest is good. It only proves the urgency of Jews forming a united front to claim human rights and just treatment, no better and no worse than that accorded to others.

* * *

But for that the time is not yet. The immediate duties are war duties, and in the recent recruiting campaign Jews responded to the full. There was even a Jewish Recruiting Committee formed for advising Jews on matters affecting recruiting and Major Lionel de Rothschild M. P., was its moving spirit. Higher up, in political circles, we have to chronicle that Mr. Herbert Samuel, the Postmaster-General, has re-entered the Cabinet. When the Coalition Ministry was formed early this summer, Mr. Samuel was one of the ministers who cheerfully gave up his seat in the Cabinet in order to facilitate the rearrangement, and now the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Churchill has been filled by Mr. Herbert Samuel. In Parliamentary circles Mr. Samuel has won golden opinions for his ability and honesty, and all parties are agreed in the recognition of his sterling worth. One other matter should not go unmentioned: the Lord Chief Justice is placing his undoubted financial knowledge at the disposal of the Treasury.

* * *

A word is due to our Brother Maurice Meyers for his zeal and energy in bringing to fruition the scheme of a Jewish Bureau of Social Service (under the auspices of the First Lodge of England). Briefly the scheme will attempt to act as a clearing house between Jewish institutions which require workers and Jewish workers who have the inclination for Social Service but lack direction. The scheme has the support of the British Institute of Social Service, which has very kindly placed an office at the disposal of the Jewish Bureau. Brother Myers will act as honorary director and it is fitting that the best thanks of the lodge should be recorded to him here.

"JEWS NOT ADMITTED."

("Observer," London, Eng.)

Some excitement has been caused in the Anglo-Jewish community by the action of a restaurant proprietor in Leeds who has made it a practice not to serve Jewish customers. It seems that the latest victim of his insults is Sergeant Smith, one of the Jewish recipients of the Victoria Cross. It is probable that Sergeant Smith was unaware of the ban, otherwise he would never have courted a refusal. The case is in reality not one for active protest. The restaurant is kept by an anti-Semite, a class of individual more to be avoided than any which Jewry has produced. Jews should avoid coming in contact with persons of such character. All right-minded Christians will certainly also decline to enter into such company, and the restaurant should, therefore, be left to the patronage of the undesirable class with which its proprietor has identified himself.

A covetous man lives without comfort, and dies without hope.

THE EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE FOR THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF ORPHANS.

Twenty years ago, in the Jewish orphan asylum, at Cleveland, the fact was recognized that some of the children were gifted with unusual ability and possessed of talent which deserved to be cultivated.

To supply this needed opportunity, the Educational League was planned—its benefits to be open to orphan boys and girls, everywhere, in the United States—and with the hope that the chief supporters would be children blessed with parents and all the advantages which the children of adversity lack.

The executive board was to consist of the officers and a board of governors of not less than twenty-one; honorary vice-presidents were to be selected by the executive board from the various states; regular membership was to be $1 per year; patron membership $10, in addition to the annual dues of $1, and life membership $100.

In 1896 and 1897 the plan was presented to and received the endorsement of the directors of the Jewish orphan asylum and of the B'nai B'rith.

Wherever personal effort was made the response was immediate and gratifying. Contributions came with many letters of approval and encouragement from men and women who realized that the work ought to be done and that it was their duty and their privilege to further it; but insistence was placed upon the idea that it was a work of children for children.

Mr. Robert Woods of Boston, distinguished settlement worker, in "Americans in Process," said: "The Jewish race has an immemorial record as a mother of genius . . . And there can hardly be a better investment of public funds than by the establishment of scholarships, under which the successful pupil, otherwise kept by poverty from going further, should have the opportunity of continuing his education along academical or technical lines until he has received the best development and training which his talents justified, and his community could supply."

The late Emanuel Lehman, president of the Jewish orphan asylum of New York, hearing of the Educational league, was so impressed with the plan, that he gave, on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, $100,000 for a similar work.

In 1904, the first beneficiary of the Educational League was graduated from a western medical college with the highest honors of his class; each succeeding year has added to the number, until today there are written upon the records of the league the names of sixty young men and women of high mental ability, equipped to take their places in life beside the sons and daughters of the well-to-do. They are living testimonials, not of marble, nor of bronze, but of powerful human life, to the foresight and generosity of those who conceived and sustained the league.

A crucial time has now come in the life of the Educational League. As the opportunities it offers have become more widely known, the applications for scholarships have steadily increased; but there has not been a corresponding increase in the number of its contributors and worthy students, orphan boys and girls who have no parents to toil and save and sacrifice for them must be denied the means for the development of their talent and genius.

An appeal for the relief of their physical distress would bring a response that would be prompt and generous, for the Jewish people have always responded nobly to the physical cry of its children of misfortune. Shall we be deaf to the higher call for the development of the higher powers which may be within them? It is our sacred duty, to them and to society, to provide that opportunity, for "Genius is no respecter of persons or ranks, but is born with a fine indiscriminateness in the tenement and in the palace."

Not one of us has abilities so shining but that we stand in need of opportunity and friends. That the importance and true value of the work of the Educational League may be more clearly and fully understood, we ask your influence and your service in its cause. Carry the message of the league to the lodges, the councils of Jewish women, the congregations and sisterhoods, and especially to the children of the Sabbath schools; help us to awaken the Jewish people of America to the needs of the Educational League in order that not one Jewish boy or girl of talent or genius be denied the opportunity for a higher education.

Will you do this?

Any communication regarding the league should be addressed to Eugene F. Wolf, secretary, 336 Engineers Bldg., Cleveland, O.

DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 8, GERMANY.

Meeting of General Committee Held Oct. 19, 1915.

A meeting of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge of Germany was held on above date in Berlin, with Brother Dr. Berthold Timendorfer in the chair.

From reports and correspondence presented, Dr. Timendorfer emphasized the fact that the B'nai B'rith Hospital train completed its seventeenth journey, resulting in much good.

Initiation of new members in Friedens Lodge of Ratibor caused much satisfaction and the hope was expressed that in other lodges, despite the hard times, a gain in membership will be effected before the close of the year.

Fraternitas Lodge of Dresden reported having received a bequest in the sum of 50.000 mark, which generous donation will be used for the benefit of the Homes, for Children's Vacation Colony, and other benevolent and charitable institutions of the lodge.

President Timendorfer presented a communication in the form of a complaint on the part of a member of the Order that the Grand Lodge participates in the collection of funds for the Red Cross, Red Crescent and similar institutions, but that the Grand Lodge fails to participate in collections intended for the relief of co-religionists.

President Timendorfer suggested a reply to the complaint that the Grand Lodge has come to the conclusion that during the period of the war, only a centralized organization to secure relief for war sufferers can meet with the desired success and for that reason the Grand Lodge has abstained to arrange collections and has participated in the raising of funds under the auspices of various committees established for the General Jewry and to contribute direct to such agencies. He furthermore recommended that the 15,000 mark at the disposal of the Grand Lodge be used under the auspices of the Grand Lodge and not be turned over to the Jewish Relief Fund. He further reported that the Executive Committee of the Order forwarded two further contributions of 30,000 and 15.000 mark to the German Grand Lodge, at the same time expressing the wish that the first sum be donated for the benefit and relief of German brethren and that the second amount be applied for the relief of Jewish sufferers in Russian-Poland. It was resolved that the funds on hand be kept intact so as to afford the possibility to the Grand Lodge to engage in rehabilitative work after the close of the war. It was also resolved that the 15,000 mark previously appropriated for the relief of war sufferers be used for a similar purpose.

In compliance with the request of the President of the Order that the General Committee elect representatives of the German Grand Lodge on the Executive Committee and Court of Appeals of the Order, Brothers Dr. Berthold Timendorfer and Dr. Hugo Kuznitzky were elected members of the Executive Committee and Court of Appeals respectively.

The question of the Russian-Poland Jews in the territory occupied by Germany evoked considerable discussion. It was reported that the authorities are being advised by certain circles in one direction, while other Jewish circles have expressed the fact that the enfranchisement of the Polish Jews will have a bad effect upon the position of the German Jews. Brother Ellbogen emphasized the need of a clarification of these divergent views and suggested that the Order call a conference of Jewish notables at which various circles may gather information relative to the relief condition of the Jews in Poland before the war and during the present campaign. He suggested as members of such conference:

1st—Members of the Order in Poland who have a clear view of the situation and such members of the Order from Germany that have had opportunities to travel in Poland.

2nd—Members of the Order who earlier and now by participating in the relief organizations are fully acquainted with the situation confronting the Polish Jews.

3rd—Members of the Order, who as soldiers, military physicians and military chaplains have had the opportunity of seeking a closer acquaintance with the Jews of Poland.

The conference suggested should not be delegated to pass resolutions, but be the means only of securing the necessary information, and that subsequently [illegible] committee be appointed to [illegible] consider the subject matter. After [illegible] discussion of the proposition [illegible] it was pointed out that the creation of a new committee or conference [illegible] superfluous, in view of the fact [illegible] committees are now at work on the same lines and furthermore that the situation existing among the Jews in Russian-Poland is sufficiently familiar to all interested in the matter, it was resolved that no action be taken for the present regarding the proposed conference.

A request by the Deutsch Israelitischen Gemeindebund for an appropriation of 1,000 mark for religious instruction in the smaller communities was favorably considered.

To aid the suffering members of the Order, residents of Bulgaria, the sum of 3,000 mark was appropriated and it was further resolved that distribution of this money be in trust to Carmel Lodge of Sofia. Information to the effect that the lodges of Hamburg have presented the twenty-nine military hospitals located in Hamburg with books and other reading matter was noted and a vote of thanks expressed to the lodges.

M'KEESPORT LODGE, M'KEESPORT, PA.

In the presence of a large membership, the recently elected officers of the B'nai B'rith lodge of McKeesport were duly installed on the first Sunday in January by Brother Louis Sulzbacher, grand secretary of District No. 3.

How the double triangle, the shield of David, became the flag of Israel was the subject of an interesting article, which was read to the lodge by the chairman of the educational committee. The special resolution committee, which had been appointed to draft proper resolutions on the death of Dr. Solomon Schechter, made its report and the resolution was spread upon the minutes of the lodge and a copy sent to the family of the bereaved and to the Jewish Theological Seminary.

On Sunday, June 16, the first speaker of the newly inaugurated lecture course under the auspices of the educational committee was with us in the person of Mark Alexander, a member of the general committee of District No. 3 and the founder of the Abraham Lippmann lodge of Pittsburgh. He addressed the large gathering on the subject of "The Objects and Aims of Our Order." His talk was enthusiastically received and enlightened many of the members on the higher aspirations of our order.

On the latter date, many members of the various Pittsburgh and Monongahela Valley lodges were with us to aid in the celebration of Brother David Mannist's "fifteenth B'nai B'rith birthday." Brother Mannist is the patriarch of the McKeesport lodge; like the patriarch of old he delights in the wisdom of the Scriptures and his short talks from time to time abound with biblical references and are highly inspiring to all who hear him. Although now seventy-six years of age, he is always the first to reach the lodge room at every meeting and his faithful attendance has indeed been a splendid example to the other members of the order. He well deserves the honor that was bestowed upon him on that occasion, and the whole district joins in wishing that God will keep him with us for many years. Would that we had more David Mannists in our order, men who not only by word, but also by deed, inspire us to climb the heights from which we gain the broader and nobler visions of life and learn to labor unceasingly for the high ideals for which the B'nai B'rith stands.

ARMIN H. FRIEDMAN.

LOTHRINGEN LODGE NO. 591, OF METZ.

The Soldiers' Home which is maintained by the lodge, is doing excellent work and is reflecting great credit upon the order at large. During the past holidays, brethren of different lodges of Germany, who accidentally happened to be in Metz at that time, many Jewish soldiers who were in garrison of the city or who came in from the field, were royally entertained by the lodge. On the first evening of the festival about 200 soldiers were led into the Home, which is located in the lodge building, by the founder of this institution, Brother Th. Goldschmidt, and the president of Lothringen lodge, Brother O. Goldberg, where they all partook of a boundtiful meal. The beaming faces of the soldiers who were happy in the opportunity to spend the festal evening in the midst of Jewish brethren, testified to their gratitude to the B'nai B'rith and when at the conclusion just before grace the "shir hama-aloth" resounded from all throats every one felt that here a real home was offered to those who were deprived of it for such a long time.

All the Jewish soldiers who with those who came later numbered nearly 400, were placed in the Jewish families, part of whom are members of the lodge, where they found board and lodging, or were given tickets to Jewish restaurants.

The lodge spent a considerable sum of money in taking care of the Jewish soldiers.

B'NAI B'RITH MASS MEETING OF PITTSBURGH.

Nearly a thousand men and women assembled at the Ft. Pitt Hotel at Pittsburgh, Pa., on Sunday evening, Nov. 28, 1915, to attend the mass meeting under the auspices of the joint Pittsburgh B'nai B'rith Lodges.

The immense assembly was formally called to order by the chairman of the meeting, Brother Richard S. Rauh, Vice-President of Jericho Lodge, who introduced a song to the melody of "America," written by him. The great audience rose and in one accord chanted the poem. A large number of visiting brethren from lodges located in adjacent cities, such as New Kensington, McKeesport, Connellsville, Homestead and Braddock were present.

The chairman outlined the campaign for membership that is to be launched, explaining that the contest would be waged until Sunday, December 12 and that on December 26 an impressive initiation of the new candidates and an elaborate banquet would be held in the Ft. Pitt Hotel and the well-known and prominent members of the Order from distant cities have been invited and may be present to deliver addresses on the occasion, and it is expected that one thousand new members will have been secured by that time. The chairman further announced the names of the honorary committee that will counsel and assist the various teams during the campaign.

The guest of honor for the occasion was Brother Karl N. Vetsburg of St. Louis, Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and when introduced to the audience he was greeted with vociferous applause. In his address he outlined the function of the Order and explained the magnificent work which it quietly accomplishes. He referred to the marked strides in membership which the lodges throughout the country are making and expressed his belief that keener attention was being paid the Order by its members. He stimulated the workers with much enthusiasm so necessary in all membership campaigns.

Dr. John A. Brashear, of Pittsburgh, who was lately accorded the honor of being Pennsylvania's first citizen, was the next speaker. He expressed his gratification at the usefulness of the Order, which in his opinion was one of the most altruistic bodies with which he had ever come in contact. He was followed by an eloquent address by Dr. J. Leonard Levy, who reviewed the aims and objects of the Order in his usual masterly fashion.

The program was interposed with musical and vocal numbers.

The meeting was a great success in all respects, and will no doubt be the means of a successful campaign which will result in a large increase in the membership of the District.

The evening preceding the meeting, the competing teams tendered a dinner to the guest of honor, Mr. Vetsburg, at the Ft. Pitt Hotel.

On Sunday morning, the date of the mass meeting, Dr. J. Leonard Levy selected "An Inspiring B'nai B'rith Team" as the topic of his lecture in his Temple. A large number of members of the Order were in attendance.

RAMAH LODGE, CHICAGO.

The annual meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33, of Chicago, was held on Thursday evening, Dec. 9, 1915, with an attendance of more than two hundred members. A large number of applications for membership were presented and were acted upon so as to make it possible for them to be initiated at the Class Initiation held on Dec. 18.

"After the election of officers and delegates to the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge, the lodge was turned over to the chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, who introduced as the guest of honor and speaker of the evening Brother Rabbi I. E. Marcusson of Terre Haute, Ind., who addressed the lodge on the subject, "The Ark of the Covenant." Brother Marcusson in his eloquent address emphasized the need of purity in the life of the Jew, advocated the necessity of adherence with loyalty to the faith of the forefathers and pointed out the necessity of banding together in a bond of brotherhood like the B'nai B'rith, not only to be helpful to one another, but for the purpose of being able to champion the cause of the Jew wherever and whenever his rights may be endangered. At the close of his address the lodge rose and demonstrated its approval of the splendid address of vociferous applause.

Following the address, the syllabus, "Is Social Service the Highest Philanthropy?" was discussed by Brothers O. G. Finkelstein, Sidney Lyon and others.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a most congenial hour was spent by those present.

B'NAI B'RITH CELEBRATION BY COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Friday, Dec. 10, 1915, at Temple Emanuel. The evening marked also the eleventh anniversary celebration of the organization of the lodge, and was attended by a large number of co-religionists. Dr. Maurice Lefkowits officiated at the services and Mr. H. D. Frankel, of St. Paul, Minn., chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District, delivered the address which took the place of the regular Friday evening sermon. The subject of Brother's Frankel's address was, "The Other Fellow's Brother." At the beginning of his address, Brother Frankel spoke of the work accomplished by the Order since its inception and especially emphasized the new work undertaken by the Order.

"But now we have a new, wonderfully great work before us," said the speaker. "It is not caring for our own brother, as we have done in the past, but the other fellow's brother. At the Grand Lodge convention in San Francisco last May, this big-brother movement was launched for the purpose of cleaning the interior of the house of Israel.

"I do not mean that Judaism is weak or has lost its power. I mean that while boasting of what Judaism is, we ourselves are not blind to the fact that we have faults, and further still, want to point them out ourselves. It is broad and liberal enough to mold itself all over again. We do not complain of the rabbinate, nor of the good-hearted Jews, but of the new problems that have come with the advancement of humanity.

Changing Conduct of Life.

"We must clean our house from within. We must enhance certain theories and decrease certain others. We do not propose to change customs or ceremonials or a single iota of our belief, but we do propose to change the practical conduct of our life. No longer will we hush those Jews who have done wrong. We will aid in sending them to jail; but when they leave these institutions we propose to help them. We will take these Jews, who have forgotten their faith, their ancestry and the teachings of centuries, and bring them back to the fold. We propose to go to juvenile courts and co-operate with the officials in caring for the wayward boys and girls. We will not protect and shield them, but act as big brothers.

"When the war is over we must be prepared to receive hundreds of thousands of fugitives who will come here to live. If such a crisis should come, we must be able to meet it.

Set Pace for All Races.

"This movement is something new, something money cannot buy. It is personal service. Social workers want to theorize and gather statistics, but this never relieves suffering. We want men with warm-blooded handshakes, which money cannot buy. We do not propose to reform the world, but unite it. When the world sees our work progressing, we believe that the movement will spread to all the nations and races, uniting them into one peace-loving, fraternal brotherhood."

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND, ORE.

A most interesting meeting of Theodore Herzl Lodge No. 314, was held on December 14, at which Mr. D. Solis Cohen delivered a plea for Zionism, which aroused much enthusiasm among the members and which was followed by a discussion of Zionism and its relation to Americanism. Twenty-five applications for membership were presented at this meeting, and it is planned to hold a class initiation in the near future followed by a banquet.

The grand ball given jointly by Theo. Herzl Lodge and its auxiliary, the Daughters of the Covenant, on December 8, was a success in every way. More than 100 couples in full evening dress were in attendance. The affair will hereafter be an annual event.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE, WASH.

About 100 couples enjoyed one of the most pleasurable dances of the season given by Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503, on Wednesday evening, December 8. Several novelties were featured, among them the popularity contest, the prize being a huge basket of flowers.

One of the pleasant features of the meeting of the Daughters of the Covenant, auxiliary of the B'nai B'rith lodges of Seattle, held on December 2, was the visit of Mrs. Lukow, of Vancouver, B. C., treasurer of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Samuel Lodge, of Vancouver. After the meeting a supper was served jointly with the members of Hildesheimer Lodge and interesting addresses were made

MONSTER CLASS INITIATION IN CHICAGO LODGES.

Close of Remarkable Membership Campaign.

Beginning Oct. 1, 1915, a campaign was launched by the Chicago lodges of the B'nai B'rith to materially increase the membership of the order in this city. The management of this campaign was under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council, representing all the lodges. Ten teams, composed of ten members each, with a captain at the head, were appointed from among the most enthusiastic and willing workers, and it was the plan that each team secure at least 100 members so that the desired quota of 1,000 new members as a result of the campaign may be attained. The campaign lasted two months and the expectations had been more than realized, for over 1,100 candidates were secured during this brief space of time.

The initiation of these candidates was held on Saturday evening, Dec. 18, 1915, at the Hotel La Salle, and preparations were made for the proper care of the immense throng that was expected to be present. Long before the appointed hour, the members and candidates began to assemble and at 9 o'clock the formal ceremonies of initiation were begun. Mr. A. B. Seelenfreud, president of the Central B'nai B'rith council, presided at the opening ceremonies of the joint meeting of the Chicago lodges, and the initiation was conducted by the official degree team of the council, consisting of Brothers A. B. Seelenfreud, Wm. Wilhartz, Sidnev Lyon and Ben Samuels. The candidates were conducted into the hall by groups, headed by the assistant monitors appointed for that purpose. The initiatory work was excellently done and elicited much applause and favorable comment at its conclusion, from not only the local members, but some of the out-of-town guests who graced the occasion with their presence. At the conclusion of the ritual, Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee, director of the social service department of the order, briefly addressed the candidates, emphasizing the value of social service and soliciting their co-operation in this important work of the order. The chairman then introduced as the guest of honor, Brother Jacob Furth of St. Louis, treasurer of the order, who addressed the meeting on the work of the order and its accomplishments, reviewing its history from the order's inception to the present time. He was followed by Brother Hugo Sonnenschein of Chicago, one of the younger members of the order, who spoke on the duties of a Ben B'rith. Brother Adolf Kraus, president of the order, made the closing remarks.

The lodge was closed in due form.

An entertaining and interesting program was carried out, consisting of vocal and musical numbers, recitations, etc. The evening was brought to a successful close by the serving of refreshments and the indulgence of a social hour.

At the initiation 652 candidates were present. Of this number 386 were initiated for Ramah Lodge; 201 were initiated for Oriental-Hillel Lodge and 65 were initiated for David Fish Lodge. The remainder of the elected candidates are expected to be initiated at the regular meetings of the lodges.

Much appreciation and thanks are due to the membership teams that so earnestly devoted their time and service to the cause of the order in bringing into its fold such a large number of representative men whose affiliation with the order must be of much benefit to the order and be the means of greatly enhancing its usefulness.

TACOMA LODGE, TACOMA, WASH.

On Thursday. December 9, election of officers, as well as representatives to the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge was held in Tacoma Lodge No. 741. The attendance was one of the largest of the season.

The first public installation, under the auspices of the lodge will take place at the first meeting in January and the matter has been put in charge of the officers-elect and the Entertainment Committee, who have been instructed to leave nothing undone to make the coming event an interesting and impressive one.

OAKLAND LODGE, OAKLAND, CAL.

On Tuesday evening, November 30, Grand President Harry K. Wolff of the District Grand Lodge paid an official visit to Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal. He was accorded a rousing reception. In the course of the evening he delivered a stirring address expounding the mission of the Order and its ideals. Members of the Committee of Fifty of San Francisco accompanied the Grand President to Oakland Lodge as honorary escort.

CLASS INITIATION BY THE LODGES OF NEW YORK CITY.

New York City, where owing to the great many organizations, the increase of B'nai B'rith membership is not an easy matter, will show an unusual increase in the membership this year, due to the special efforts of the president of the district, Bro. Herman Asher, and the group of earnest and loyal brothers who rallied to his support, a grateful acknowledgment of which he made in his address as presiding officer at the Grand initiation held Wednesday evening, December 29th, at Hotel Astor, where 140 candidates were initiated in the presence of a brilliant gathering, representing the most prominent B'nai B'rith, both young and old, in the Metropolitan district.

The initiation ceremony, which was very impressive, was conducted by Bro. William Asher of Jordan lodge, Bro. Dr. M. M. Stark of Washington Lodge, Bro. Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein and Bro. Isidore Jaffe of Maccabee Lodge.

Bro. Dr. E. N. Calisch, member of the executive committee of the order, came from Richmond, Va., a distance of 500 miles, to address the meeting. The distinguished and eloquent brother received a veritable ovation. The large attendance which filled the spacious ball-room of the hotel arose at the instance of the venerable treasurer of the district, Bro. Solomon Sulzberger, and greeted the speaker of the evening with a welcome typical of the true B'nai B'rith cordiality. Bro. Calisch was deeply touched by the welcome, and responded with much feeling. Bro. Dr. Calisch spoke nearly an hour, emphasizing the two-fold obligation of every Ben B'rith, which is loyalty to country and loyalty to God, or, as he put it, "patriotism and piety." Bro. Dr. Calsich also emphasized the good work of the Anti-Defamation league, and called attention to the many achievements of the order. Bro. Dr. Calisch made a deep impression upon his audience.

President Asher added much to the enthusiasm of the evening by announcing that he secured new headquarters for the district, where, in addition to the executive chamber and the secretary's office, there will be a social hall, club rooms and a comfortable lodge room, where all the lodges in the city may meet. The new home of the district will be on Broadway near 83rd street. The president's announcement was greeted with enthusiastic applause.

Bro. Benjamin J. Samuels of Chicago, president of District Grand Lodge No. 6, who favored the meeting with his presence, was then introduced by President Asher. President Samuels conveyed to the brothers assembled the greetings from his district, and told of the fine social work which District Lodge No. 6 is doing. He appealed to the younger members to respect the time-honored Jewish traditions.

Bro. Joseph Levenson, chairman of the Intellectual Advancement committee, in a brief but eloquent speech, pointed out the great necessity of an organization like the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

Bro. Secretary Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan closed the program with a benediction, invoking God's blessing, also upon the new home of the district.

LADIES' AUXILIARY LODGE OF LESSING LODGE, NO. 349, OF BRESLAU.

Many arduous duties were imposed upon a society as great as the Ladies' Auxiliary of Lessing Lodge and the ladies have contributed their full share to the good work of helping the needy and alleviating suffering. They have donated liberal sums of money to the Red Cross and to the Ladies' Society of the Fatherland. A single appeal to the sisters made it possible for the auxiliary to provide 200 soldiers with food and drink every day for three weeks during the time when enormous masses of soldiers passed through the city of Breslau. A great number of sisters volunteered to attend to different kind of work and the auxiliary lodge was enabled to turn over great quantities of knitted woolen goods to the Red Cross and the Ladies Society of the Fatherland. Many soldiers applied directly to the auxiliary lodge for woolen garments. The Jewish congregation also sent all needy soldiers to the lodge and all the applicants were promptly attended to and fully provided with the necessary warm underwear. Provisions were later furnished to needy families. After investigation those who were deserving received groceries, clothing, shoes, coal and money to help to pay the rent. The auxiliary was a regular contributor to the soup-kitchens, sewing and knitting rooms and to the National Women's Service Society of Breslau. The Ladies Lodge also sent rich gifts to Saatz and Carlsbad in Bohemia, which alleviated much distress. The Ladies' Auxiliary Lodge intends to keep up the good work as long as this fearful struggle of the nations lasts.

ACTIVITIES OF HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The campaign for membership inaugurated by Horeb Lodge No. 25, of New Haven, Conn., has netted gratifying results, as more than one hundred new members have been enrolled, which brings the membership of the lodge above the 600 mark. Although the goal set out has been reached by the lodge, the campaign is still being carried on and new applications are continually being received. The Jewish community of New Haven is realizing that it has a real, live up-to-date organization in Horeb Lodge, which contains the names of all representative Jews of the city.

The lodge has been fortunate in having various degree teams in the past which were excellent in all respects and in one year the degree team of the lodge captured the prize banner offered by the District Grand Lodge. Recently a Horeb degree team club has been organized and its membership has already reached a goodly number. A dinner was given at which the members of this club attended and much enthusiasm has been aroused. It is the aim of the lodge, through its degree team club, to again capture the prize banner of the District.

The formation of a debating club has been suggested by the lodge and will no doubt soon be accomplished. The lodge had a bowling team which will be reorganized, and other clubs devoted to innocent sports such as chess and checkers are being suggested.

On Sunday evening, December 12, a rousing meeting was held by the lodge which has outshown all previous efforts. The special feature of the meeting was an address by Rabbi Mann on "Some Fundamental Differences Between Judaism and Christianity."

At the preceding meeting of the lodge, held on November 28, sixty-seven candidates were initiated by the new degree team.

The meeting was graced by the presence of Brother Chas. Hartman, a member of the Executive Committee of the Order, who addressed the lodge on the efforts of the Order to bring about united and concerted action on behalf of our suffering co-religionists abroad. After the meeting the members were served with luncheon in the banquet hall. The advancement committee arranged a smoker and musical program.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

A special meeting of Toledo Lodge No. 183 of Toledo, Ohio, was held at the Progress Club on the evening of Dec. 26, 1915, for the purpose of initiating a class of candidates. Thirty-eight new members were initiated in a most impressive manner by the degree team of the lodge.

After initiation, those present assembled in the banquet hall where a splendid supper was served. Brother C. K. Friedman acted as toastmaster, who introduced Mr. L. M. Eppstein, who delivered a splendid address. This was followed by a most inspiring address by the guest of honor, S. J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, President of the District. One of the prominent out-of-town guests was Brother Lionel Weil of Goldsboro, N. C., Past President of District No. 5, who expressed his great pleasure at being present at the meeting and presented a letter from Brother Simon Wolf of Washington, conveying greetings to the members of the lodge. Brother S. H. Cohen, when called upon to address the lodge, related his fifty-one years of activities in the Order. The closing remarks were made by J. H. Jacobson, and when adjourning all those who participated in the meeting expressed their gratification of having spent a most pleasant and instructive evening.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

Grand President Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco, paid an official visit to the lodges of that city on December 8 at the B'nai B'rith Building on the occasion of a joint meeting. In his address he outlined the results of his official visits to the various lodges in the jurisdiction and recited the work accomplished in various sections of the District.

In honor of the occasion a large class initiation was held. The work was performed by the crack initiatory team which conducted the initiation before the Constitution Grand Lodge at its convention held in San Francisco last May.

Ophir Auxiliary No. 4, of San Francisco, held a reception in honor of its retiring president on December 9, which was largely attended.

A special Chanukah service was given on Monday, December 6, 1915, by Occidental Lodge No. 345, in the B'nai B'rith Building. The members of all the local lodges were invited guests. Addresses were made by Brothers Lucius L. Solomons and Edmund Tauszky. Brother Harry K. Wolff, President of the District Grand Lodge, was the guest of honor.

DAVID FISH LODGE, CHICAGO.

A large attendance of the members of David Fish Lodge No. 130 of Chicago was present on the evening of Dec. 20, 1915, to participate in the election of officers and delegates to the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge.

The annual reports of the officers of the lodge were presented, from which it was shown that the lodge is in a most excellent condition, both from the standpoint of membership and finance. For the year 1915 the lodge shows a marked increase in its numerical strength. After the initiation of a class of candidates by the secretary of the District, Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, the meeting was formally closed and was turned over to the Social Committee of the lodge.

The special feature of the evening was an address by Rabbi Dr. Julius Rappaport on the subject, "Reason and Remedy for Conditions in Judaism." The speaker reviewed the history of Israel, pointing out the many changes that have taken place which have served gradually to bring about the existing conditions which he, the speaker, pointed out as dangerous to the welfare of Israel, having the tendency to undermine the purity of the Jewish home life, loyalty to God and close adherence to the virtues of the Jew as practiced in days gone by. As a remedy for existing conditions he advocated a return back to old ideals and to the practice of those virtues which made it possible for the Jews to withstand all persecutions in the past and to maintain themselves as a distinct people singled out for the special mission to bring enlightenment to the world. The address of Brother Rappaport was keenly followed by the members present, and at its close quite an ovation was tendered the speaker.

Following the address, a discussion on the question, "Is Social Service the Highest Philanthropy?" was participated in by many of the members present and at the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a good time was enjoyed by those present.

INSTITUTION OF NEWPORT NEWS LODGE.

Newport News (Va.) Lodge was installed December 12 and thirty-four charter members initiated. The following officers were elected: President, S. Mirmelstein; vice-president, Harry Reyner; secretary, A. M. Lefkowitch; treasurer, A. Rosenbaum; Warden, D. Berlin; guardian, A. Richman; monitor, Wm. A. Graff; assistant monitor, M. Rosenbaum; trustees, J. Reyner, Wm. Garner and H. A. Morewitz.

Installation of the lodge was conducted by Brother H. S. Bloomberg, President of District Grand Lodge No. 5. The initiation was conducted by Dr. E. N. Calisch, assisted by Rabbi L. D. Mendoza, of Norfolk, acting as monitor. The ceremony of initiation was very impressive and the new lodge starts off with the happiest of auspices. After the ceremonies short addresses were made by Brothers Bloomberg, Calisch and Mendoza.

The new lodge owes its existence to Mr. A. Brand, of Washington, D. C., the efficient field secretary of the District.

ORIENTAL-HILLEL LODGE, CHICAGO.

The annual meeting of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 of Chicago was held on the evening of Dec. 23, 1915, in the presence of a large number of the members. A class of eleven candidates was initiated and a large number of applications were received. The election of officers for the ensuing year, as well as the election of delegates for the coming Grand Lodge convention, was held.

The feature of the meeting was the discussion of the syllabus, "Is Social Service the Highest Philanthropy?" Brother O. G. Finkelstein, a visiting member of Ramah Lodge, addressed the lodge on this subject. He was followed by Brother R. I. Coffee. Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, and others, who emphasized the need of extensive work in the line of Social Service.

CHANUKAH BALL BY HERZL LODGE, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

The Chanukah ball, given by Herzl Lodge No. 608 of Houston, Texas, at the Beach Auditorium on Sunday, Dec. 5, 1915, was one of the best attended affairs in that Jewish community for some time. The floor committee had a well prepared order of dances. A bountiful repast was served at midnight by the committee. The hall was elaborately decorated for the occasion, the principal feature of which was a 4-foot high electric lighted Menorah, which was placed on the stage. The committee that had charge of the affair is deserving of a great deal of credit for the successful celebration.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

BARNETT LODGE, FT. SMITH, ARK.

B'nai B'rith day was observed by Barnett Lodge, No. 754, I. O. B. B., with a public meeting at the high school auditorium on Sunday, December 26.

The following was the program rendered:

Opening Remarks .... L. Barnett
Quartette....Messrs. Schlosser Brothers and A. A. French.
Vocal solo .... "Holy City" Miss Courtney Cowan.
Address.............Rabbi Louis Witt
Violin solo..........Miss Mary Gorman
Vocal solo........"Let Us Have Peace" Miss Courtney Cowan.
Quartette....Messrs. Schlosser Brothers and A. A. French
Benediction...........Rabbi Louis Witt

A large audience was present and appreciated the instructive address of Rabbi Louis Witt. It was a masterly effort and impressed all who hard it.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The pulpit of Temple Beth Israel was occupied Friday evening, November 12, by President Harry K. Wolff and Grand Secretary I. J. Aschheim, District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., who, with their wives, arrived from San Francisco on Thursday noon, the 11th. They visited the Exposition that same afternoon, attended a special meeting and initiation at Lasker Lodge that evening, which was followed by a reception and dance. On Friday afternoon the visitors and members of the lodge were the guests of Madam Katherine Tingley and members of the Universal Brotherhood and Theosophical Society at Point Loma.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS.

On Sunday, Nov. 28, 1915, Wichita Falls Lodge was instituted at Wichita Falls, Texas, with a charter membership of twenty-five. Rabbi George Fox and Brother U. M. Simon of Ft. Worth, Texas, represented the District Grand Lodge in the institution ceremonies. After the installation ceremonies, addresses were delivered by the visiting Grand Lodge officers, who explained the aims and objects of the Order, and reviewed its accomplishments since its inception. At the close of the evening, refreshments were served by the ladies and a social hour was spent.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Gideon Lodge No. 140 of Albany, N. Y., secured a class of fifty-six candidates as a result of its recent membership campaign. On Sunday evening, Dec. 12, 1915, the prize degree team of Springfield Lodge No. 684 of Springfield, Mass., initiated this class. Addresses were made on this occasion by Brothers Chas. M. Stern, Past President of the District Grand Lodge; Henry Lasker, of Springfield, Mass., a member of the General Committe of the District; Judge D. Muhlfelder, of Albany, and I. Bookstein, President of the Lodge. Prior to the meeting a diner was tendered the visiting degree team and other visiting brethren at the Adelphi Club, and later in the evening a reception was held.

The evening was in charge of the Intellectual Advancement Committee with Brother Wm. L. Oppenheim as chairman.

Enroute to Albany, the degree team of Springfield Lodge, consisting of twenty-four men, stopped off at Pittsfield, Mass., where they initiated a number of candidates for Adullam Lodge No. 326.

CALUMET LODGE, HOUGHTON, MICH.

The public installation of officers of Calumet Lodge No. 502 of Houghton, Mich., and the B'nai B'rith day celebration was held on Saturday evening, Jan. 1, 1916 at the Odd Fellows hall and was largely attended by the members and their friends. The following was the program:

Prayer.....................Rabbi I. Koplowitz
Installation of Officers..................
......................Rabbi Joseph H. Stolz
1915 Results of Calumet Lodge No. 502
......................President A. Albion
Effect of the War on the Jews in Europe..................Rabbi I. Koplowitz
History of Superior Lodge No. 775, Marquette Mich...Pres. A. G. Shauer
Address 'Jews in the Twentieth Cen-
....
Rabbi Joseph H. Stolz of Chicago, Ill.
[illegible]
Refreshments.

CLEVELAND LODGE, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Several committees of the lodge are now at work upon plans for the government of affairs within the club building recently equipped by Cleveland Lodge No. 16 of Cleveland, Ohio. House rules are being carefully considered, as are also terms and conditions under which other organizations may have use of certain parts of the building for meetings.

The committee on entertainment has been appointed to arrange a definite program to include social and intellectual events.

On Wednesday, December 15, the entertainment season for the year 1915-16 was opened. The entertainment consisted of a vaudeville show for the members of the lodge and the Jewish Men's Association department.

A bowling league is being formed and will begin operation at the beginning of the year.

HERZL LODGE, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

On December 1, Herzl Lodge No. 608 held its annual meeting, which was unusually well attended and showed much life and energy. It was the occasion of the election of officers for the ensuing term and with the exception of the secretary and treasurer, all the officers elected were of the younger element. The lodge decided to have a public installation of officers, which shall be opened to the general public.

The canvass for new members has already started and it is expected that the lodge will have a class of 100 to be initiated at the January meeting.

Addresses for the good of the Order were made by Brother Sol Schoeneman, vice-president of the District Grand Lodge, and several other members of the lodge.

CINCINNATI LODGE NO. 4.

At the meeting of the lodge, held on Monday evening, Dec. 13, 1915, a handsome testimonial perpetuating the work of the committee in charge of the campaign which raised the membership of the lodge to more than eleven hundred was unveiled in the lodge-room. The testimonial, beautifully engrossed and decorated in water colors by Neubauer, bears the photographs of the ten captains of the working teams. A. Edgar Aub was chairman of the committee and the work in general was under the supervision of Manny Strauss. Photographic copies of the testimonial in reduced size and handsomely framed were presented to the captains. The original will hang in the lodge room.

HAR SINAI LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The November meeting of Har Sinai Lodge witnessed the inaugural of a movement whose object is to popularize the work of the B'nai B'rith in this city. Although the evening was given over largely to the enjoyment of a musical program prepared by Mr. Edwin S. Weider, the members were also given a most interesting resume of the work accomplished by the Order in the past and the ambitious program for the relief and betterment of our co-religionists mapped out as the Order's future line of progress. Hon. Jacob Singer's address in this connection was listened to with keen attention by the unusually large number of members present.

MENORAH LODGE, BALTIMORE, MD.

The regular meeting of Menorah Lodge No. 771, of Baltimore, Md., was held in the vestry rooms of the Har Sinai Synagogue on Thursday, December 9. The nominating committee presented a list of nominees for the officers for the ensuing term. The lodge decided during the coming three months to hold meetings twice a month on account of the campaign for increased membership which has been inaugurated.

AMOS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

Amos Lodge No. 121, of Boston, conducted B'nai B'rith Night at Temple Ohabei Shalom, Dec. 10, 1915, in conjunction with the regular Friday night services.

Brother Morris B. Davidson, of New York City, represented the District Grand Lodge and favored the congregation with a very instructive and interesting lecture on the work of the Order.

ESCHOL LODGE, DAYTON, OHIO.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly celebrated by Eschol Lodge No. 55 on Sunday evening, Nov. 21, 1915. Dr. Jos. S. Kornfeld, of Columbus, was the speaker of the occasion and addressed the gathering on the subject, "The War Cries of Israel." There was also a musical program. The celebration was probably the most enthusiastic and well attended meeting of the lodge has had. The ladies' auxiliary arranged the entertainment features of the meeting.

DISTRICT No. 1.

Manhattan Lodge No. 156 gave a concert and ball at the Marseilles Hotel Saturday evening, December 18. Bro. Isidor Blum was chairman of the entertainment committee.

At the last meeting of Manhattan Lodge Bro. E. J. Graetz, who has been secretary of Manhattan Lodge for a number of years, declined re-election and Bro. Philip Cowen, former editor and publisher of the American Hebrew, has been elected in his place. Bro. Graetz has served the district in many capacities and was also governor of the Home for seventeen years. Bro. Graetz will continue to take an active interest in the order though he has declined the office of secretary.

Jordan Lodge degree team officiated in a very impressive manner at the initiation of candidates at Flatbush Lodge.

Henry Jones Lodge celebrated the seventieth birthday of its worthy president, Bro. Abraham Anhalt, by special exercises. President Anhalt, who has been president of Henry Jones Lodge for the past twenty-two years, was presented with a silver vase as a token of affection in which he is held by the brothers of Henry Jones Lodge.

Bro. Maurice P. Davidson, chairman of the committee on laws, visited Boston and delivered an interesting address at the B'nai B'rith service in Dr. Eichler's temple. The service was presided over by Dr. Eichler, rabbi of the congregation.

A brief history of the order and District No. 1 is being prepared by District Secretary Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan with the co-operation of Bro. Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston, first vice-president of the district; Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the executive committee, I. O. B. B., and Bro. Jacob S. Kuhns, as a souvenir of the Grand Lodge convention to be held in Boston.

President Herman Asher installed the newly elected officers of Haggai Lodge of Providence, R. I., Sunday, January 2, where he was the guest of Brother and Mrs. Harry Cutler. President Asher, accompanied by Bro. Ullman, also installed the officers of Ararat Lodge at Hartford, Conn. Both meetings were well attended.

Bro. Dr. M. M. Stark of Washington Lodge, accompanied by Bro. District Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan, installed the officers of Canaan Lodge on Sunday January 2.

Bro. Dr. J. L. Blumenthal of Manhattan Lodge, accompanied by Bro. District Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan and Bro. Henry Meyers of Washington Lodge, who represented President Herman Asher, installed the officers of Chananiah Lodge. Bro. Emanuel Stern, in behalf of the lodge, presented a beautiful gold cane to the outgoing president, Bro. Henry Weiss. Bro. Weiss's annual message was ordered published by the lodge. Bro. Gallinger will preside over the lodge during the coming year. The installation was public and an interesting musical program was rendered.

Asariah Lodge had its installation last Monday, January 3, the installing officer being Bro. Henry Meyers, accompanied by Bros. Mo. Minzesheimer, Wm. B. Koller, Edward Rosenfeld and Henry Gutenstein. The installation was followed by a banquet, presided over by President Dr. Leo Schnepp.

President Asher by the next convention will have visited nearly every lodge in the district. Someone has well said: "President Asher is a B. B. B."—Busy Ben Brith.

Bro. Charles Hartman will be very much in demand this month as an installing officer. Quite a number of lodges have made a special request that Bro. Hartman be appointed their installing officer.

The next convention of District Grand Lodge No. 1, which will be the sixty-fourth annual session, will be held in the city of Boston, Mass., on the 6th and 7th of February, 1916. Thirty-nine years ago District Grand Lodge No. 1 held its silver anniversary convention in Boston and was presided over by its venerable treasurer, Bro. Sol. Sulzberger, who was then president of the district. The accounts of that convention contain such adjectives as "magnificent" and "splendid" when referring to the session and the social events of that convention. May the approaching convention to be held in Boston be worthy of its predecessor.

Amos Lodge No. 121 of Boston, Mass., held an interesting meeting on Jan. 5, on which occasion the officers were installed. The joint executive committee of the Boston lodges in charge of the grand lodge convention to be held in that city on Feb. 7, has prepared an extensive and entertaining program for the occasion.

Mrs. Emily Kempner Duschnes recently gave a reading of a travelogue at Edward Everett Lodge No. 97 of New York City which was a source of delight and information to the brothers. The subject was "To the California Exposition with the I. O. B. B."

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Missouri Lodge No. 22, of St. Louis, Mo., held its annual meeting on December 19, 1915, at which the election of officers for the ensuing year and delegates to the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge was held. The special feature of the meeting was the initiation of a class of two hundred candidates by the degree team of the lodge. At the conclusion of the meeting, a Dutch luncheon was served.

Barzillai Lodge No. 111, of LaFayette, Ind., entertained its members and friends at a dance at Allen's Academy on December 2, 1915. It was a very delightful affair. There were a number of out-of-town guests.

Rabbi Heiman J. Elkin, of Leavenworth, Kans., is continuing the work of his predecessor, Rabbi D. L. Linknaitz, at the penal institutions in that city. This work is being conducted under the auspices of the social service committee of the District and consists of holding services at the Federal Penitentiary and Military Disciplinary Barracks. Steps have also been taken to provide prayer books for the Jewish inmates of these institutions.

United Cities Lodge No. 533, of Joplin, Mo., held a well attended meeting on November 30, on which occasion a class of five candidates were initiated. Several new candidates were proposed, and at the close of the meeting a smoker and entertainment was held, during which Brother Moses Weiler, the secretary of the lodge, was presented with a token in consideration of his faithful services to the lodge. The lodge observed B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, December 5, with a program consisting of addresses and musical numbers.

Brother Jacob Furth, of St. Louis, treasurer of the Order, paid an official visit to Queen City Lodge No. 258, of Sedalia, Mo., and delivered an address on the work of the Order, on the occasion of the B'nai B'rith Day celebration arranged by the lodge. The subject of his address was the Origin, Growth and the Goal of the B'nai B'rith Order.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Through the efforts of Rabbi H. Silver, of Wheeling, W. Va., the institution of a B'nai B'rith Lodge in Bellaire, Ohio, will soon become an accomplished fact. Twenty-five applications for the charter membership have so far been received.

At the meeting of Har Sinai Lodge No. 8, of Philadelphia, Pa., held on December 9, Mr. A. Berkowitz addressed the members on "Chanukah—Old and New." The Lodge has inaugurated a campaign for membership, which is hoped will result in a large increase of new members.

A Chanukah entertainment was given by the B'nai B'rith Sabbath School of Newcastle, Pa., on Sunday afternoon, December 12, 1915, at which a program consisting of musical and vocal numbers, the lighting of candles and an address by the superintendent of the school, Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, vice-president of the Grand Lodge, was carried out. Refreshments were served at the close of the celebration.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 3 held a well attended meeting on Sunday morning, December 5, 1915, at Philadelphia, Pa. Representatives from Pennsylvania, Delaware and New Jersey to the number of fifteen were in attendance.

Sunday, November 28, was designated by the General Committee of the District as B'nai B'rith Day, and the lodges throughout the District celebrated the day with open meetings, at which speakers of prominence delivered addresses referring to the work accomplishd by the Order. In Philadelphia a special service was held on Friday evening, November 26, at the Adath Jeshurun Synagogue. Rabbi Max D. Klein delivered a special sermon on the B'nai B'rith.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

Wheeling Lodge No. 615, of Wheeling, W. Va., observed B'nai B'rith Day November 28, 1915. Rabbi Max C. Currick of Erie, Pa., was guest of honor and delivered an address on the subject "The Next Generation."

DISTRICT NO. 3.

As a result of the efforts of Brother Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, a meeting of the co-religionists was held in the city of Johnstown, Pa., at the Beth Israel Temple on December 19, which was largely attended and which was addressed by Messrs. Richard S. Rauh and Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, on the work of the Order and as a result of the meeting, a former lodge existing in that city will be reorganized and will be reinstated within a very short time with a possible membership of sixty.

As a result of propaganda efforts in the city of Philadelphia, under the personal direction of the President of the District, Brother Abe Weil, a new lodge will be instituted in that city on or about Jan. 5, 1916, with a charter membership of over one hundred members composed of some of the most prominent professional men of the community.

At a meeting of New Castle Lodge No. 609 of New Castle, Pa., held on Sunday, Jan. 9, 1916, the officers for the ensuing year were installed. The annual ball of the lodge was held on Dec. 29, 1915, and was largely attended. Many out-of-town guests were present and the affair was a great success.

McKeesport Lodge No. 573, of McKeesport, Pa., under the auspices of its Committee on Educational and Intellectual Advancement, has inaugurated a course of lectures to be held in conjunction with the lodge meetings, which lectures wil! comprise not only Jewish topics but also civic, economic and national subjects.

DISTRICT No. 4.

A public installation of officers of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 of Los Angeles, Cal., was held on Jan. 11, 1915, at the B'nai B'rith hall. The Ladies' auxiliary met on the same evening at the same place and held its election of officers. At the close of the two meetings both organizations joined and indulged in dancing, during which refreshments were served.

The first meeting for 1916 of B. F. Pexiotto Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, Utah, was held on Jan. 4, 1916, on which occasion the annual reports of the officers were presented and installation of the newly elected officers was held.

Lasker Lodge No. 370, of San Diego, Cal., gave its third annual ball on Tuesday evening, November 25, 1915, which was a great success.

Under the auspices of the allied Jewish Societies of Alameda County, a ball will be given in the Municipal Auditorium at Oakland, Cal., for the benefit of the Jewish war sufferers. Oakland Lodge No. 252 is actively participating in this undertaking.

Bakersfield Lodge No. 764, of Bakersfield, Cal., held its annual meeting on December 8, 1915, on which occasion the election of officers for the ensuing year and delegates to the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge was held. The recently organized Sunday School under the auspices of the Lodge held a Chanukah festival on Sunday, December 5, 1915.

District Grand Lodge No. 4 will meet in annual convention in the city of San Francisco on February 20, 1916.

The annual election of officers of Grays Harbor Lodge No. 757, of Aberdeen, Wash., was held on December 7, 1915. The Lodge is in a prosperous condition and looks ahead for a substantial growth during the coming year.

At a recent meeting of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487, of Los Angeles, Cal., a committee of five was appointed to meet with a like committee of the Council of Jewish Women to establish and maintain a continual good understanding between the two organizations and with a view of establishing an Educational Alliance as the first point endeavor. As a beginning of this co-operative work the Council and the Lodge in joint meeting assembled recently welcomed Mrs. Frank Gibson at the lodge hall and had the extreme pleasure of listening to an exceedingly edifying address. Mrs. Gidson spoke on the subject of immigration, and her remarks were not only instructive but entertaining.

Grand President Harry K. Wolff, of San Francisco, will pay his official visit to Berkeley Lodge No. 765, of Berkeley, Cal., on Wednesday evening, January 12, 1916. Elaborate preparations are being made for his visit and a large attendance is expected.

The annual installation of officers ot Golden Gate Lodge No. 129 of San Francisco, Cal., was held on Wednesday evening, Jan. 5, 1916. The new officers have mapped out a program which promises to make the lodge one of the liveliest during the coming year.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

Rabbi Edward N. Calisch, of Richmond, Va., a member of the Executive Committee of the Order, accompanied by Rabbi Louis D. Mendoza, paid an official visit to Newport News, Va., on Sunday, Dec. 12, 1915, and delivered an address at the public meeting in connection with the organization of a new B'nai B'rith Lodge.

Mr. Harold S. Bloomberg, of Richmond, Va., President of District Grand Lodge No. 5, instituted new lodges at Danville, Va., and Newport News, Va., on December 6 and 12, respectively.

Brother Dr. Geo. Solomon, of Savannah, Ga., Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 5, and Milton Klein, of Atlanta, paid an official visit to Malachi Lodge, of Macon, Ga., for the purpose of doing propaganda work in the community. Their visit resulted very successfully as they secured thirty-two new applicants for the Lodge, among them a goodly portion of representative Jews of the city. A meeting of the Lodge was held on December 13, on which occasion the new members were initiated. Dr. Solomon delivered an address, which met with enthusiastic response from all present.

The annual convention of District No. 5 will be held at Savannah, Ga. Public exercises will be held Sunday evening, January 23, 1916. Dr. Edward Calisch, of Richmond, Va., member of the Executive Committee of the Order, will be the orator of the occasion.

Brother Harold Bloomberg, of Richmond, Va., President of the District, paid an official visit to Lynchburg, Va., and Brother Alvin N. Hutzler attended a meeting in Petersburg, Va., to initiate a class of candidates for Rimmon Lodge, of Richmond, Va.

At the cornerstone dedication of the Temple in Charlotte, N. C., the members of Charlotte Lodge No. 733, of the B'nai B'rith, attended the ceremonies in a body. Brother David E. Paul, Past President and founder of Charlotte Lodge, was master of ceremonies.

At Goldsboro, N. C., the family of the late Sol Weil, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 5, presented to the Jewish Congregation a new Sabbath School room splendidly equipped to perpetuate the memory and commemorate the life work of Mr. Weil. Hon. Simon Wolf came direct from Washington to assist in the dedication, which was held on Sunday, December 12.

DISTRICT No. 6.

Saginaw Lodge No. 636, of Saginaw, Mich., has started a campaign for new members and the city is being thoroughly canvassed. About twenty new applications for membership have so far been secured.

Winnipeg Lodge No. 650, of Winnipeg, Canada, is making arrangements to observe B'nai B'rith Day on Jan. 30, 1916. Dr. I. L. Rypins of St. Paul has been delegated by the General Committee to visit the lodge and deliver an address on that occasion.

The officers of Minneapolis Lodge No. 271 of Minneapolis, Minn., were installed on Jan. 6, 1916, at a largely attended meeting of the lodge. Brother Sylvan E. Hess of St. Paul, Minn., past president of the district grand lodge, officiated at the ceremonies and delivered an adress on the current activities of the order.

Jacob H. Schiff Lodge No. 694, of Lansing, Mich., gave its annual ball on the evening of January 1, 1916, which was attended by the entire community, as well as many visitors from surrounding cities. On the following day, January 2, the lodge held a well-attended meeting, at which the installation of officers took place.

Minnesota Lodge No. 157 of St. Paul, Minn., will hold a public installation of officers which will be attended by the President of the District, Brother B. J. Samuels, of Chicago.

The lodge at its recent meeting unanimously resolved to extend an invitation to the General Committee of the District to hold the coming convention of the Grand Lodge in the city of St. Paul.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Birmingham Lodge No. 368 and Magic City Lodge No. 725, of Birmingham, Ala., are planning a joint campaign for membership at the beginning of the new year. Various teams have been appointed and it is expected that a class of 250 members will be secured within a very short time.

Louis Barnett Lodge No. 754, of Forest City, Ark., held an interesting meeting on Sunday, December 12, 1915, on which occasion the officers for the ensuing term were elected.

The Lodge appointed a committee also to make arrangements for the coming B'nai B'rith Day exercises.

On December 26 the Lodge observed B'nai B'rith Day with appropriate ceremonies. Rabbi Louis Witt, of Little Rock, Ark., was the orator on the occasion.

As a result of the recent institution of the B'nai B'rith Lodge at Wichita Falls, Texas, a reformed congregation was organized by Rabbi George Fox, of Ft. Worth, Texas, who was present at the institution of the B'nai B'rith Lodge.

The Committee on Intellectual Culture of District No. 7 has prepared a syllabi on the subject, "What will Solve the Jewish Problem?" The lodges have also been requested to appoint committees on Intellectual Advancement.

Ft. Smith Lodge No. 306, of Ft. Smith, Ark., lost one of its most valuable members in the death of Simon Joel, a pioneer of that city and charter member of the Lodge, who died on November 15. He was the leading spirit in congregational, as well as B'nai B'rith work.

Gulf Lodge No. 221, of New Orleans, held an interesting meeting on Wednesday, December 15, 1915. Initiation of candidates was held. The committee on consolidation reported that it had met similar commitees from the other lodges of the city and recommended that Gulf Lodge express itself in favor of consolidation of the local lodges, and a resolution to that effect was unanimously adopted by the Lodge.

At the regular monthly meeting of Isidore Straus Lodge No. 519 of Ft. Worth, Tex., held on December 8, the officers for the ensuing year were elected. After the completion of the regular order of business, Rabbi George Fox addressed the lodge.

Alabama and Emanual Lodges Nos. 299 and 103, respectively, of Montgomery, Ala., will hold B'nai B'rith Day exercises at Temple Beth Or on Jan. 11, 1916.

DISTRICT No. 8.

During the winter Gabriel Riesser Lodge, No. 478, of Thorn, will meet once in every fourteen days. But the lodge hall will be open every Sunday from 3 to 7 in the afternoon for the purpose of giving a chance to outside brethren who are stationed in the garrison of the city to meet the brethren who live there.

Ostpreussische Lodge No. 541, of Allenstein, meets on Sunday evening every fourteen days. Extra meetings are held every Wednesday, to which the brethren of the city garrison are welcome guests. At these meetings the president of the lodge imparts brotherly advice and information.

Concordia Lodge No. 340, of Kattowitz, O. S., reports as follows about its activities during the year 1914-15: The fiscal year commenced with the installation of the new officers, on March 31, 1914, by the delegates of the Grand Lodge. The last meeting before the vacation was held on May 26th.

The vacation was interrupted by a meeting on August 18, which was called for the purpose of deliberating upon the claims made upon the Lodge by the outbreak of the war. In this meeting 150 marks were donated to the Red Cross, 400 marks to the Relief Fund of the city of Kattowitz. The Ladies' Auxiliary Lodge also contributed 150 marks to the Red Cross. In a meeting held later 80 marks were appropriated for friendly gifts to brethren and sons of brethren in the field. The Lodge contributed 800 marks to the outfitting of the B'nai B'rith Hospital Train. At the close of the year 300 marks were appropriated for the Jewish sufferers in Russian-Poland. In all the lodge appropriated 1800 marks for relief on account of the war.

Ten members of the lodge, 25 sons and sons-in-law of members were called to serve in the army. Medical doctor Brother Otto Aronade received the Iron Cross II class and the Bavarian Military Order of Merit, two sons of Brother Nathan Simenauer, who has five sons in the field, received the Iron Cross II class. Brother Alfred Reichmann was promoted to lieutenant.

On account of the difficulties in the beginning of the war, which prevented the holding of regular lodge meetings, full power was given to the officers on August 18, to conduct the business of the lodge by themselves. The meetings of the lodge were not resumed until October 27th. Eighteen meetings were held during the entire year, which were visited by an average of twenty-seven members.

The following lectures were delivered in the lodge: Brother R. A. Danziger, "Citizens and Germanism;" Brother Ex-President Kleemann, "Finances of the Grand Lodge;" Brother Margulies, "Jud Suess Oppenheimer;" Brother Dr. Bloch, "Maintenance of the People in War;" Brother Rector Gruenewald, "The War of Today and the War in the Bible;" Brother Ex-President Pinkus and Brother Ex-President Schalscha, "The Reports of the Grand Lodge;" Brother Professor Dr. Goldschmidt, "The B'nai B'rith News, September 1914—January, 1915."

The Grand Lodge of Germany has contributed 3,000 mark to the B'nai B'rith lodges of Bulgaria as an expression of sympathy in their efforts to aid the war sufferers of that country.

DULUTH, MINN.

At the meeting of Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., held on Dec. 29, 1915, the members unanimously voted to invite the Grand Lodge to hold its coming convention in the city of Duluth.

The election of officers was held and Brother A. B. Kapplan was honored with the election of president of the lodge for the ensuing year.

During the present season the lodge contemplates the organization of a study class among its members and friends for the purpose of attending a series of lectures and talks to be given by Rabbi M. Lefkovits. The study class will meet once a month in the vestry rooms of the Temple.

At the close of the regular business of the meeting, Dr. Lefkovits gave a short talk on Jew and Judaism in America.

FT. WORTH, TEXAS.

Isidore Straus Lodge No. 519, of Ft. Worth, Texas, will celebrate B'nai B'rith Day on January 11, 1916, with Rabbi Henry Cohen, of Galveston, Texas, as the guest of honor.

On December 26 the lodge held an open meeting under the arrangements of its Intellectual Culture Committee. The subject for discussion was, "What Will Solve the Jewish Problem?" After the discussion, a musical program was carried out.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Dallas Lodge No. 197 of Dallas, Texas, held a postponed meeting on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 19, 1915, at their lodge rooms in the B'nai B'rith Hall. The special order of business was the election of officers for the ensuing term.

The meeting was addressed by Brother Arthur L. Kramer, Past President of District No. 7, whose remarks elicited much applause. Brothers A. Eldridge, Dr. W. A. Greenburg and L. Kleinman also made interesting talks.

BRESLAU, GERMANY.

Toynbee Hall has recently been reopened and devoted to a new patriotic service. The numerous wounded convalescent soldiers, who are awaiting their complete recovery in Breslau, are given the free use of the hall with all its facilities from 3 to 7 p. m. daily, and they are furnished both food and drink as well as opportunity for entertainment, games and an extensive selection of reading matter.

The hall was dedicated to this new departure by an impressive celebration, in which the numerous local societies, the charitable institutions and the Jewish congregation were represented by their officials. The Mayor of the city sent a letter expressing his best wishes for the new undertaking and regretting his inability to participate in the inaugural ceremonies.

REASON AND REMEDY FOR CONDITIONS IN JUDAISM.

(Continued from page 7.)

and moral viewpoint changes with the times. But we needn't go as far as the middle ages. In the literature of the 19th century we find questions such as these: "How old must a rabbi be before he can assume rabbinical office?" As to a single man officiating as such, that was out of question. Another question is: May a Jew be a sculptor or a painter? As he might violate the second commandment. May a physician, who is a kohen, dissect a cadaver to study anatomy? Still another question is: Whether the wife of a kohen may, if she is in delicate condition, enter a house where there is a dead body? We are apt to make light of the religious value of such questions. But we can not deny that the spirit in which they were submitted for "opinion," was the spirit of respect and reverence for authority; something which we so deplorably lack now-a-days. In our days no one thinks of asking any authority whether a Jew may take a pleasure trip in an aeroplane or a spin in an automobile on Sabbath or holyday. We ask no questions. No inquiry is solicited. No opinions are sought. "Every man doeth what seems right in his own eyes." Every man a law unto himself. "Consideration for the sentiment of or regard for authority is held in utmost contempt.

In keeping with the general tendency at specialization, intensified by the disposition towards individualism we have divorced from the synagog all those agencies and factors which have always been an integral part of her functions. I refer to the separation from the synagog of the philanthropic, social and educational forces, the very factors that have been her mainstay during all the ages and centuries in the past. The synagog was the centripetal force from which radiated all the activities of Jewish life the center round about which revolved the religious and spiritual life not alone but the social educational, charitable and even industrial and business life. All institutions for the relief of the poor, the sick, the aged, the orphan, the indigent were managed from and with the synagog. But our efforts today tend rather towards decentralization, specialization, individualization. Education—with the exception of the Sunday School where we dole out to our children the bread of life in insignificant homeopathic doses—one hour a week, nay only 40 hours out of the yearly 8,760 ,hours, education, is separated from the synagog. Social agencies are altogether divorced from religious influence as are also the institutions of charity. We have special educational agencies at work, special social and charitable forces, thus dividing our interest, weakening our strength, dissipating our energies, sapping the very vitality of the body Israel. Decentralization has brought about disintegration working havoc among the ranks of Israel.

Now what is the remedy? What can we do, what should we do to cure the evil? Admitted that I made the right diagnosis, the curative seems simple enough. Concentration in place of division. Centralization in place of specialization. Union instead of individualism. Individualism and separatism have wrought havoc. Centralization, therefore, should be the goal of all our efforts and endeavors. In modern commercial and industrial life this principle has been recognized long since. In our charitable efforts, too, association, federation, is the watchword of the day. Why not also in the synagog? Why not have one "Central Synagog" or a "federated Synagog," likewise, all the synagogs merged and managed as one from one central bureau? Why not unite all institutions of one city into one, religious, educational, social and charitable as well? Indeed, some modern synagogs, like Sinai Congregation in our city, and other congregations in other cities, have, indeed, seen the light and have united the social activities with the religious work. New York and some few other cities have a "Kehilah" or a union of all agencies and social institutions, though the religious tendency there is not sufficiently emphasized. In some places they have adopted the "Gary" system, or some other system where the religious and the secular education go hand in hand. In other communities of light and leading, they have chaplains to work in penal and reformatory institutions. For it has been recognized that religion is the most effective factor in reforming and restoring the delinquent to a useful member of society. There are everywhere signs of an awakening noticeable. The archaic conditions of separatism and individualism are clearly out of date. Such a state of affairs is positively absurd. Let [illegible] rid of our individualistic tendencies. Let us unite our forces. Let us [illegible] our efforts. Let us bend our [illegible] at centralization. Let us strengthen our ranks by uniting our social, educational and charitable agencies with our religious forces in the synagog. Let the synagog be the central sun round about which all our efforts shall be united. For only in unity is there strength and power, safety and security. Unity is the cure, unity the remedy.

OPPORTUNITY FOR WORTHY BOYS.

At the National Farm School, in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, worthy young men who desire to make agriculture their life's work, but have not the means to pay for an agricultural education, may realize their ambition.

This school, which was opened a score of years ago and has a farm of almost 400 acres, situated in one of the richest agricultural districts of Pennsylvania, gives to poor, worthy boys a three-years' training in practical and scientific agriculture, free of all cost to them. The object of the school is to train young men in the practice and science of agriculture for agricultural callings and for leadership of agricultural colonies.

The requirements for admission are briefly: The applicant must be between 16 and 20 years of age; he must have an education equivalent to that required for admission to the high schools of this country; he must be in good physical, mental and moral health; and he must have an earnest purpose to make agriculture his life's work.

Applications for admission to the new term, which begins in March, are being made now. Further information may be had by addressing Mr. Morris A. Kaufmann, Chairman of the Applications Committee, 407 Mutual Life Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

(Continued from page 4.)

ment, morals or ethics. These things become known, and every wrong permitted to go unrebuked or unremedied merely invites another wrong. Therefore, it is the duty of the Jew not to bow in submission against discrimination and prejudice, but he owes it to himself, he owes it to posterity and he owes it to his country to stand up like a man and protect the good name of Israel.

"In view of all these things, the Jew also must measure up to the highest standards. We are and always have been judged by the lowest type. The idiosyncrasies and the characteristics of the few are taken as typifying the entire people. A wrong done by a Jew is charged against the entire Jewry; therefore the greater need of toeing the mark and measuring up to the highest and the best citizenship. It is an old adage that the Jew must be of pure gold in order to be taken for silver. Therefore every Jew is interested in the conduct of every other Jew.

"We may not be able to eradicate prejudice. We can, however, stop to a large extent current defamation which all helps to mould public opinion. We can prevent the vile caricature of the Jew in press and upon the stage; we can educate those that are ignorant concerning the Jew; and we can by continued and never-ceasing efforts along these lines insure fair-play in this land. This is our duty, not only as Jews, but as citizens of this country. Prejudice in whatever form against any class of people in this country injures the democracy of our land. It is un-American, it is against the spirit and soul of Americanism. We can by continued work speed the day when there will be less hate and more love, less cruelty and more humanity, less prejudice and more justice."

Louis E. Levy on Immigration.

Mr. Louis Edward Levy, of Philadelphia, speaking on "Immigration," said that immigration after the war would not be so large as was generally thought. He declared that if the Jews were given a little more freedom and opportunity abroad most of them will be willing to stay and attempt to build up their homes. Those who have friends and relatives in America, he said, probably would come over in considerable numbers, but the proportion of impoverished, friendless families would be less than ever.

Never be cast down by trifles. If a spider breaks his web twenty times, twenty times will he mend it. Make up your minds to do a thing, and you will do it Fear not if trouble come upon you; keep up your spirits though the day may be a dark one.

THE B'NAI B'RITH—ITS WORLD MISSION.

(Continued from page 6.)

we are weak and incapable, so will be the government, and I fear that with the tendency of the times toward paternal legislation we are building up a citizenry dependent upon the nation rather than a nation dependent upon its citizens. It behooves us therefore to cultivate an increased individual strength, and I know of no better way than to have infused into the life of this nation and its people more of the strong individual traits of character of the Jewish people.

There has been for some time an organized movement having for its object the establishment of a Jewish nation. The objective point at the present time seems to be ancient Judea. The question of the feasibility as well as the possibility is a mooted one, even among the Jews, and it is not my purpose to discuss either question, but I would make this suggestion: One of the strongest influences in maintaining the Jewish people in what might be termed almost isolation or segregation has been their own insistent and persistent effort to maintain not only their religion intact, but to maintain their nationalism as well.

In this I believe they are distinctive. I am not conscious of any other people, who, coming to this country make any struggle to preserve the nationality of their birth place.

The people coming from these other countries, as a rule, co-incident with their arrival in this country enter upon the adoption of the ways of this country. They turn their minds to the politics, to the business and to the social life of this country, and in an almost incredibly short time, even those who have reached a mature age acquire an American air that almost, if not quite, diverts them of any mark of foreign birth, while their children are generally undistinguishable from the children of descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers.

We have been told that racial and national characteristics, mental and physical are the result of environment, of education, and thought, in fact, of the culture of the country, and experiments have disclosed that life in this western country, particularly when entered upon by a child, with the influence of the broadening principles of freedom and individual liberty, with the influence of our great public school system, where the youth of the country are equally instructed in all of those things that are material to the rounding out and development of American manhood and womanhood, with the influence of general social, business and political affiliation works changes, not only in bodily form and contour, but in facial expression, in fact, even in cranial development, so that, with the amalgamation and assimilation of all these different people there is developed a distinctive American type.

There is no reason why the people of Jewish faith should not develop into this American type as readily, or even more readily than any other people, for, with their cosmopolitan spirit, with their natural ambition, their marvelous power in mental development, and their great love for the schools and school system of this country, it only requires a little freer intermingling to effect a perfect assimilation.

It has occurred to me that one of the reasons why the average immigrant so readily abandons the customs of his native country, is that he has no feeling of personal responsibility in maintaining the fatherland and its customs. He knows that he has left an established nation—that thousand, hundreds of thousand or millions of people are still in the fatherland and perpetuating the customs and habits and writing the history of that land. And hence, though he may not consciously so reason it out, yet it would seem that subconsciously it comes to him that his personal responsibility for the perpetuation of the land of his birth and of the memories dear to its inhabitants is at an end, and he turns his mind and attention and devotes the best that is in him to the country of his adoption.

On the contrary, the Jew, leaving no established country of Judaism, realizing that there is no place where by the force of governmental power the laws, the teachings, the memories and the customs of Judaism will be kept alive, feels that on him rests a duty, a personal and individual responsibility to aid in maintaining and keeping alive a spirit of nationalism, so that when the time comes, which he hopes, and properly so, will come, when there shall be a Jewish nation upon the earth, there will be in all its purity a Jewish nationalism to be planted in that promised land. If then, there could be established a Jewish nation, if the Zion movement could be successful, to that extent, there would be removed from the mind of all the Jews, resident in other countries that feeling of personal responsibility for the maintenance and upholding of Jewish nationalism, and thus the time would be materially hastened when the Jewish people resident in other lands would become essentially part and parcel of the citizenry of the land in which they live, maintaining only their ancient and honored religion. But whether the Zion movement succeeds or not, I still believe that the time is coming when justice to the Jew will remove the last restriction in the last civilized country of the world, and when that is done, then the Jewish people, always patriotic, will unreservedly throw themselves into the national life of their chosen country in all departments and activities with the result that all discrimination will follow the restrictions into the obscurity of an indistinct recollection.

And when that time comes there will be no more of a distinctive mark to indicate the man of Jewish faith than there is to indicate the man of any one of the other religious denominations, and when that time comes, as it will, your great society will be hailed as a most potent factor in bringing about the consummation of a glorious plan, the establishment of the brotherhood of man.

The fruition of this plan must be first attained in this great country, that owes so much to the Jewish people, and to which the Jewish people owe so much, but in which I regret to say, there still exists, at least in certain quarters, traces of the old prejudices and consequent discrimination. But I believe the day is soon coming, and that there are those amongst us who will see the last vestige of prejudice and discrimination swept from the minds of the American people, and then we will be all one people, with one country, one flag and one God with differing forms of devotion, and throughout this land of civil liberty, this haven of refuge for the oppressed of all other lands, this great melting pot in which is formed a distinctive type of western citizenship, there will be a great army of industrious, peace-loving, law-abiding people, firm adherents to the faith of Judaism, but above and beyond all else, loyal and patriotic American citizens.

DAN LODGE, CHARLESTON, S. C.

At a public meeting that taxed the capacity of the Hasell Street Synagogue, the Hon. Oscar Straus, of New York, delivered an inspiring address under the auspices of Dan Lodge No. 593, I. O. B. B., on the evening of December 16.

Mr. Straus was in Charleston at the invitation of the Southern Commercial Congress, at its annual meeting for 1915. Other distinguished men of national prominence, governors of many states, and a host of well-known men were assembled for several days in the city. Mr. Straus' scheduled address was received with great applause, and a committee from Dan Lodge persuaded the distinguished co-religionist to make an address under the auspices of the lodge.

After an invocation by Dr. Raisin, and an introduction by Bro. Montague Triest, Mr. Straus, choosing as his theme "The Jew and the American Spirit," delivered an address that gave his large audience keen pleasure.

He traced the spirit of true democracy back to the time of ancient Israel, asserting with emphasis that no true Jew can conscientiously support an autocracy. The American Republic, the speaker declared, was the nearest approach of any to the democratic ideals that governed the Jewish nation in its old days, the ideals which have eternally stimulated the Jew to resist with blood and treasure tyranny, oppression, and persecution. He reminded his hearer that no good Jew can be a hyphenated American.

Mr. Straus presented several historical facts that were received with great interest. Having traveled considerably, and having met prominent men in all parts of the world, the speaker very ably recounted circumstances of great interest to his audience.

He pointed out, what is now admitted by Spanish historians, that the retrogression of Spain commenced with the expulsion of the Jews. Illuminating historical facts, concerning the discovery of America, were elaborated upon by the speaker, and it was shown to what great extent the Jews aided in that memorable event.

Mr. Straus' speech was strengthened by his brilliant oratorical powers, and his address, upon the whole, was one of the very best and most inspiring ever heard by Jews and others of Charleston.

Brother Jos. Fromberg, Dan Lodge's vice-president, presided during the occasion and thanked the speaker for his splendid address.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY

Vol. VIII. FEBRUARY, 1916 No. 6

Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

Jewish Rights and the Congress

By LOUIS D. BRANDEIS

Address Delivered at Jewish Rights Meeting Held at Carnegie Hall, New York, January 24, 1916.

Five weeks ago many of you met in this hall to consider the misery of the Jews in the war zone, and to aid in relief measures. This week, under the proclamation of our President, a special effort will be made throughout the United States to raise funds for that purpose. The need is urgent. The matter is one of life or death. To give quickly and to give generously is imperative. Each of you doubtless will do this. For you must realize that the relief funds, though large, will still leave thousands of our brethren in danger of starvation.

The Cause of Jewish Misery.

But though we may give ever so generously in money, we shall still fail to do our part in this great crisis unless we seek not merely to alleviate the suffering of individual Jews, but to end the wrongs to the Jewish people. We cannot cope with individual suffering unless we succeed in removing the cause of that suffering. And the fundamental cause of Jewish misery is not the war. The war is but an accident which has made the long existing misery obvious to the whole world. The war has acted as a magnifying glass, intensifying the suffering in some places ten or a hundred fold; so that now none, except the blind, can fail to see it. The underlying cause of Jewish misery is ever the same. It is now the same as it was before the war. And after the war is over the misery will continue further unless the conditions under which more than one-half the Jews of the world live are radically changed. In order to end the misery an end must be put to injustice—an end to oppression, an end to denial of opportunity. The oppression and discrimination before and during the war was and is so extreme as to make one marvel that living has been possible at all. It was oppression and unjust discrimination which brought the great masses of Russian Jews to the verge of destitution, in which the commencement of the war found them and which plunged them into starvation when the war came. It was prejudice and unjust discrimination which exposed the Jews to the unnecessary hardships during the war of hostile treatment among their own countrymen.

Rights Not Tolerance the Essential.

But the war brings amidst its horrors at least one compensation to the whole world and particularly to the Jews. It forces the world to lay aside makeshifts; to seek ultimate truths; to deal with fundamentals. We long for peace; but we begin to see that neither international congresses and courts, nor disarmament can secure peace. Peace can exist only in a world where justice and good-will reign. Justice and good-will involve not merely toleration of differences, but the grants of full rights, despite differences. There must be justice and good-will not only between individuals, but between different peoples. All peoples must have equal rights.

Democracy and Nationality.

In the past it has been generally assumed that the full development of one people necessarily involved its domination over others. Strong nationalities are apt to become convinced that by such domination only does civilization advance. Strong nationalities assume their own superiority, and come to believe that they possess the divine right to subject other peoples to their sway. Soon the belief in the existence of such a right becomes converted into a conviction that a duty exists to enforce it. Wars of aggrandizement follow as a natural result of this belief.

This attitude of certain nationalities is the exact correlative of the position which was generally assumed by the strong in respect to other individuals before democracy became a common possession. The struggles of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries both in peace and in war were devoted largely to overcoming that position as to individuals. In establishing the equal right of every person to development, it became clear that equal opportunity for all involves this necessary limitation. Each man may develop himself so far, but only so far, as his doing so will not interfere with the exercise of a like right by all others. Thus liberty came to mean the right to enjoy life, to acquire property, to pursue happiness in such manner and to such extent as the exercise of the right in each is consistent with the exercise of a like right by every other of our fellow citizens. Liberty thus defined underlies twentieth century democracy. Liberty thus defined exists in a large part of the western world. And even where this equal right of each individual has not yet been accepted as a political right, its ethical claim is gaining recognition. Democracy rejected the proposal of the superman who should rise through sacrifice of the many. It insists that the full development of each individual is not only a right, but a duty to society; and that our best hope for civilization lies not in uniformity, but in wide differentiation.

The movements of the last century have proved that whole peoples have individuality no less marked than that of the single person; that the individuality of a people is irrepressible, and that the misnamed internationalism which seeks the obliteration of nationalities or peoples is unattainable. The new nationalism proclaims that each race or people, like each individual, has a right and duty to develop, and that only through such differentiated development will high civilization be attained. Not until these principles of nationalism, like those of democracy are generally accepted, will liberty be fully attained, and minorities be secure in their rights. But there is ground for hope that the establishment of these principles will come as one of the compensations of the present war; and with it the solution of the Jewish Problem.

The Jewish Awakening.

For the war is awakening the more fortunately situated Jews from their torpor. It is bringing them to the realization of fundamental truths which a sorrowful past had obscured. Living in various lands as minorities during the eighteen centuries of dispersion; whirled like human flotsam sometimes by eddies away from the main stream; sometimes helplessly down the rapids; Jews had too often come to regard their misery as inevitable, and themselves as individuals merely. Those individuals to whom good fortunate came rejoiced, and the others, habituated to sorrow, were prone to bear philosophically evils which long persistence had made them look upon as unavoidable.

The world war has brought their monstrous condition into clear relief. Intense suffering came; but with it, hope and courage. The awakening brings also recognition that the rights of the Jewish people can be gained only by traveling the same road which other peoples travel —the road of democracy—through the peoples asserting their own authortiy in their own interest. The demand for democracy in the consideration of the Jewish problem is not a matter of form. It is of the essence. It is a fundamental Jewish conception as it is the basic American method. It rests upon the essential trust in the moral instincts of the people, potent to create their own well being; to perfect it and maintain it, if an opportunity is given.

The Jewish Peoples' Congress.

Among Theodor Herzl's contributions to our understanding of the Jewish problem are these:

First. The recognition of the fundamental fact that the Jews are a people—one people.

Second. The recognition of the political truth that emancipation of the Jews can come only through themselves; that is, by democratic means.

That the Jews are a people was a well known fact long before Herzl's time; but it had been submerged by the multiform individual struggle for Jewish existence. That emancipation could come only through the Jews themselves had also been clearly stated before Herzl's time; but it was Herzl who made clear the essential democratic means when he called the first Congress.

It is eight months since the movement for an American Jewish Congress was actively organized. To some it seems that the movement has proceeded slowly. But when we consider the obstacles which had to be overcome, the progress must be deemed rapid. The time spent in discussion—which some have called controversy—was time well spent. Discussion has educated the Jews of America. It has taught them the need, the character and the purpose of the Congress. Week by week, as this process of education was continued, opposition yielded even more to reasoning, and former opponents declared their adhesion to the Congress idea.

In the eight months since the Congress Organization Committe was formed practically all save one of the important national Jewish organizations have declared their aproval of holding a Congress; and in 72 cities general committees have been formed in which for the first time in the history of America the many local Jewish organizations have combined with a view to the solution of the Jewish problem. There are still differences of opinion as to the powers which the Congress shall exercise when it convenes—and as to the time and manner of assembling. But the fundamental idea has passed beyond the stage of controversy. It is accepted by the Jews of America.

To estimate truly how great is this achievement, we must bear in mind that it is only eighteen years since delegates, representing Jews from all parts of the world, gathered together in an open Congress to discuss the Jewish Problem. That was at the Basle Congress of 1897, called under the inspiration of Theodor Herzl. For centuries Jews had been forced by circumstances to abandon their own traditions of democracy inherited from their fathers and expressed in the Hebrew Commonwealth, and to seek protection not through the methods of free and open discussion, and the development of public opinion, but by secret and indirect means through the efforts of individuals who had or were supposed to have influence. When one considers the tremendous force of long continued habit and the tendency of oppression to breed methods of indirection, it is easy to understand the misgivings even of able and public spirited men and women, who long opposed the Congress because they feared to have discussed in public the Jewish Problem, which had theretofore been discussed only in private. The opposition of conservative minded men, accustomed to the caution which heavy responsibility ordinarily entails, was natural. Patient consideration of the objections was appropriate. But it was also clear that if America can aid materially in the attainment of Jewish rights, it will be only through those forces which an open Congress can mobilize.

Jewish Unity.

Absence of discord does not imply unity. Absence of discord may be due to indifference. Unity implies interest and participation. There may be acquiescence in the decision of a self-constituted body purporting to act on behalf of a free people. But there cannot be unity of action of a free people unless the decision is the act of that people participating through its properly constituted representatives.

What is demanded of the Jewish people now is action, not acquiescence. We must seek to put an end to those conditions which through the centuries, and not merely during this war, have brought misery and suffering to the Jews. The position of the Jew is not entirely unique. The history of the Bohemians, Poles, and several other Slavic races provide remarkable parallels, and among all these nationalities hopes are now high that in the peace that will follow the war their elemental wrongs will be righted. We have not made less, but more sacrifices than they have, and are justified in expecting that our elemental wrongs, too, will be righted. But we must be first in making our wrongs known, and be ready to take action which will be the result of our careful deliberation and a thorough understanding of the situation.

But we can do this only if the Jews of America will that those conditions shall end; and undertake to express that will through action. What this action shall be involves decisions which are both difficult and serious; decisions on which reasonable men will necessarily differ. The Jews are a people of thinkers; and they have a passion for freedom. If we acquiesce in decisions made for us and not by us, it can only be because we are practically indifferent; because we do not care, or, at all events, do not care enough, to assert our views. And if we do not care enough to assert our views, we certainly will not care enough to make the sacrifices necessarily involved in saving our brethren, and solving the problem of the Jewish people.

There are a large number of Jews in America who are not indifferent to the suffering of their brethren abroad, or to the injustice to which these are subjected. There are a large number of Jews in America who are eager that something should be done to remove the causes of their brethren's misery. These Americans have views differing widely from one another as to what can be done, and what ought to be done, and how it should be done. They ask to be heard on these questions through their duly constituted representatives; and they ask also to hear the views of others in order that the different proposals may be subjected to the test of public criticism. They deem it necessary that in view of the grave and difficult problems involved, the minds not of a few, but of many, should be turned towards their solution. It is for these reasons, among others, that they have demanded a Congress, and have demanded that it be convened on a democratic basis, and that the proceedings shall be made public. The deliberation of such a Congress would be enriched by the public discussion from others who are not delegates to it. And the Congress itself will create needed public opinion in support of the measures which it determines upon.

But the Congress is essential also for other reasons. Besides those Jews who have already given evidence of their readiness to aid in remedying the condition of their brethren, there are many in America whom the present need of action has failed to rouse. They are indifferent largely through lack of knowledge. We have such faith in our people as to believe that with most of them knowledge will overcome indifference and will lead to active participation in the effort to solve our people's problem. We must bring home the situation to those seemingly indifferent and make clear to them not merely the intensity of existing suffering, but also that they can play a part in ending it, and indeed that they must do their part or we cannot succeed. And for the awakening of interest the Congress is a necessary means.

The Congress is not an end in itself. It is an incident of the organization of the Jewish people — an instrument through which their will may be ascertained, and when ascertained may be carried out. In order that their will may be ascertained truly the Congress must be democratically representative. In order that their will may be carried into effect, the decision of their delegates must be supported by Jewish public opinion, intelligent, widespread, and expressive of deep conviction. In order that the decision may be the wisest possible, the Congress must be preceded by general public discussion of the measures proposed. The decision must embody the wisdom, not of the few, however able and public-spirited, but the thought and judgment of the whole people. The support must be active; it must be financial as well as moral. It must be the support of the million, not of a few generous, philanthropic millionaires. In order that the support may be adequate, the Congress must also be preceded by such organiaztion of the Jews of America as will insure their co-operation in carrying out such measures as shall be decided upon. The Congress is not to be an exalted mass-meeting. It is to be the effective instrument of organized Jewry of America.

It cannot be effective if its functions are limited to the passing of resolutions, however carefully framed. Those whom the Congress authorizes to act for the Jewish people must have the actual support of the Jews of America. They must not only be prepared to act, but must be supplied with the means to do so.

What the Congress Can Achieve.

First. The Congress by creating spokesmen for American Israel who are representative, will provide a body through which the Jews of America, as the only great neutral group of Jews, may not only authoritatively address other Governments, but may be so addressed by other Governments desirous of dealing with representatives of the whole Jewish people.

Second. Our demands may not be extravagant. Even the language used must be temperate. But the Jews can properly ask that throughout Europe, Asia and Africa their rights be acknowledged. The Congress will have to work out those basic ideas according to two fixed democratic principles. It should recognize the conception of needs as experienced by the Jews in the various lands in which they live, and the political circumstances in which great groups of Jews find themselves at the end of the war. It must, of course, recognize and act according to what it may find to be in accord with the general will and the feasible program. But the Congress must go a great step further. Mere protest or manifesto will bring no achievement. The Congress will elect men to be its spokesmen—men who will accept its mandate to do their work within the limitations of that mandate. But these men must be supplied with more than authorization. The Congress must create the machinery which will assure that what these spokesmen promise will be fulfilled, and that whatever gains the treaty of peace may exhibit will be maintained by the united effort of the Jews.

How much we have to do in order to realize the seriousness of this latter task we may learn from our experience with the Roumanian Jewish Tolerance Clause in the Berlin Treaty of 1878, which had been so eagerly worked for, and was so widely rejoiced over. It would have been infinitely better if that provision for equality for the Jews in Roumania had not been written, because the scorn with which Roumania treated it exposed the helplessness of the Jews to the world. Had the machinery of the organized Jews existed, Roumania would have been compelled to keep her word. Through the Congress we must secure that power in men, in ability, in influence and in money necessary to maintain any gains that may be made.

Third. The Congress will have the further effect of creating unity in American Jewry, without which achievement abroad is impossible. Unity will develop because the minority will co-operate with the majority to attain the common end, when the judgment and will of the majority has been democratically ascertained. That is in accordance with American methods and the demands of loyalty The past impotence of 3,000,000 Jews of America to aid their brethren abroad should not surprise us. With over ten thousand separate Jewish organizations, each formed for a limited purpose and serving its individual policies there has been no effective co-operation on the larger problems of Jewish life. The organizations largely overlapped one another, and inevitably clashed when broader problems were involved. And no means existed of composing the discord. There could be no effective co-operation because there was no co-ordination. The Congress, in developing the practice of unity through the yielding of the minority to the will of the majority cannot fail to immensely simplify, develop and strengthen the forces in American Jewish life.

The Essentials of Success.

Dr Nordau said some time ago that the Jews are a "miracle people," meaning by that that they expected results like freedom to be obtained without the resort to the means by which results would naturally be secured. It is indeed extraordinary that the Jews should entertain such an idea. For there is no people in the world in which the individual members are more conscious of the fact that success is the result of persistent effort. No Jew expects any results for himself by miracle. He expects to work for them, and the Jew so frequently obtains results because he does work for them. It is the persistence of the individual Jew, his willingness to exert him[illegible] forego pleasure and to undergo [illegible] grave dangers and submit to [illegible] that wins his individual success. [illegible] when the Jews have sought results for the whole people, they seem to have forgotten the lessons of every day life. They have lacked the statesmanlike quality which should bring them together, each saying: "I as one of the people will join with each and every other member of my people to attain the end in which the whole people is interested, and as such I will make the necessary sacrifices so that our great end may be achieved."

What we need, therefore, is that the Jews individually shall, for the common cause of the Jewish people, be ready to make sacrifices like those which they are always making in order to attain their individual successes. When Jews are ready to do that, the three million Jews of America with their high intelligence and strong will cannot fail to have a great effect in ameliorating the condition of their brethren in other lands. Patience may be necessary as well as persistence. But patience, persistence and devotion will accomplish sooner or later in one way or another the great end we have in view. The purpose of our deliberation, when we come together in conference and in Congress, must be to discover what the best way is to proceed in order soonest to attain that end. But it will never be atained unless the individual Jew is willing to make such sacrifices in time, in effort, and in money.

The great Jewish inheritance and the great American inheritance demand that each and every one of you should specially pledge yourself to work for that end.

JEWISH ARBOR DAY.

Beginning at sunset to-night, the Jews of the United States, as well as of many other countries, will observe by special customs and services the "New Year for Trees," corresponding to what is known in this country as Arbor Day.

It is not generally known that there is more than one New Year among the Jews. The ancient Jewish legislators evidently looked at the world not from one angle. They made provision for different points of reference. Thus, for instance, there are three (according to some rabbis, four) New Years: First, the religious New Year, occurring in September, and originally an agricultural holiday; second, the civil New Year, commemorative of the organization period of the Israelites prior to leaving Egypt; lastly, there is the botanical New Year, known in Hebrew as Hamishah Osar Bish'vat, or simply the 15th day of Sh-vat, the date of occurrence forming the designation of several Jewish holidays.

Many centuries ago this holiday marked an occasion of great festivity. The planting of a tree or more, according to the size of his family, was considered a duty by every Jew. At present, however, in the absence of agricultural pursuits, the Jews have retained only some of the ancient customs, such as decorating the house as much as possible with verdant things, and partaking freely of all sorts fruit, especially the carob fruit, or St. John's bread. Probably more of that fruit is sold in the Ghetto on that one day than in all the remaining days of the year. The Jewish mystic Hayyim Vital even attached a special significance to the different kinds of fruit symbolizing the three spheres of creation, according to the teachings of the Cabbalah (Jewish mystical philosophy).

The most interesting, and perhaps amusing, phenomenon of this holiday is the fact that the fruit venders in the Ghetto feel themselves called upon to remind the people of this occasion, and many a shabby shop window is decked with carob fruit, nuts, dates, figs and other articles recalling the Orient. On top of the motely collection is generally a card stating in crudely drawn characters and ludicrously spelled words that it is Khamish'osor, as it is abbreviated in the vernacular

This reminder is often necessary, because many even of the most observant Jews do not easily connect the weather of January with the original idea of the ancient festival of nature. A large number of orthodox Jews, too, are prone to forget the significance of the mere date, "the 15th day of Sh'vat," as there are several commemorations in the Jewish calendar—fast days as well as holidays—that are not labeled by any particular name. This, coupled with the fact that the holiday is not among the sacred days of Jewish tradition, renders it expedient for the Ghetto fruit vender to promulgate the occurrence of the Jewish botanical New Year.

The old Palestinian custom of planting trees on that day—a cedar tree for every male child and a cypress tree for every female child in the family—was superseded by the fruit repasts close to the sixteenth century, when Palestine became the center for the Jewish mystics known as the Cabbalists.—Christian Science Monitor

WORK AHEAD FOR THE B'NAI B'RITH.

(Written for the B'nai B'rith News, by Isadore Shapiro, Birmingham, Ala.)

The progress of mankind is spurred by the spirit of unrest. Humanity's advancement is dependent not upon those whose resting places are beds of roses, but upon those who are caused to move and change and wince and sweat upon beds of rocks.

Nothing is more deceitful than flattery. Nothing is more progress-impeding than contentment.

The B'nai B'rith merits all the commendation of which it has been the recipient. The B'nai B'rith may be all roses, and no thorns; but even roses need nourishment, cultivation, sometimes a little trimming, ofttimes a little plucking. And roses must be serviceable. If permitted to remain in hot houses and flower yards, they will bring less cheer and fragrance than if taken to the sickroom, to warm the heart of the ill, or sent to inspire the well to resolves high and achievements sublime.

Never in all history were conciliation and solidification in the divided House of Israel more imperative than at present.

The most warrish war in all history brings to our doorsteps problems of intense seriousness and magnitude. But a cessation of hostilities will throw into our laps questions of even more paramount significance.

Now, we can only give money.

The end of the war will be the commencement of reconstruction, of rehabilitation. Like birds uncaged, flying hither and thither and everywhere, so those freed from the chains of war will migrate to more peaceful and prosperous and free shores. In this home-seeking process the Stars and Stripes will get more than its share.

Will the prilgrims be permitted to enter?

Having taken refuge under the wing of the American Eagle, ours will be the task of distribution and work-getting.

Properly distributed, work secured, homes established, it will devolve upon us to inculcate into them "the purest principles of philanthropy, honor and patriotism."

After assimilation and adaptation, together, we must grapple with and floor the numerous and various and intricate problems that evolve from American life.

More livable living conditions, the abolition of industrial feudalism, the generation of honesty in our political organism, the control, conduct and operation of our government by and for the people. The lessening of crime, the diminution of vice, the conservation of health, the preservation of life—these and kindred matters are undertakings for Sons of the Covenant.

Ah, this is the occasion for altruism. This is the time for the singing of the Hymn of B'nai B'rithism.

In the discharge of these tasks there must be collective action. Individual efforts and single endeavors may be misdirected, and, all traveling different roads; some of them are bound to miss the needy spots. An existing international medium must be employed and applied.

That medium, and the only medium, is the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

The work of the B'nai B'rith is far-reaching and praiseworthy, but its efforts have not been and are not today comprehensive or inclusive.

There are yet inequalities to adjust, truths to pursue, injustices to overtake.

The B'nai B'rith was born and served its infancy as an insurance institution. Growing to manhood, its vision broadened, its muscles hardened. It forsook the narrowness and selfishness of its origin and entered upon the broad, human field of charity.

But my enthusiasm for the B'nai B'rith and my conception of its worth would be immeasurably lessened if I knew or even thought that the B'nai B'rith would remain a charitable institution.

Even "charity" is being relegated to the inhumanities. We are realizing that charity is but alarm-clock relief. We have permitted occasional contributions to charity to cover a multitude of the donor's sins.

Social justice must supplant charity.

As the B'nai B'rith evolved from an insurance to a charitable institution, so let us dedicate our efforts to cause its evolution from a charitable to a potential, vibrating instrumentality for social justice. Let us seek to annihilate causes, instead of whitewash effects.

The B'nai B'rith must be assertive. It must originate. The Jews of the world would be more powerful and effective if they enrolled under the flag of one organization—that flag should and must be the flag of benevolence, of brotherly love, of harmony.

If the B'nai B'rith will pulsate with initiative, its colors will always fly on high.

Tonight B'nai B'rithism in Birmingham is on the rise. Those who conceived and executed this impetus merit the warmest praise. While in numbers there is strength, the B'nai B'rith, to perform its true mission, must have more than mere muscle. That strength must be utilized, and utilized for the common good.

Concluding, let us render our portion towards making the B'nai B'rith, not a here-and-there, now-and-then visitor of charity, but an instrumentality that vibrates unceasingly with righteousness, and, like a bird of Paradise, hover over all mankind, singing the song of benevolence, of brotherly love, of harmony.

FACILITIES FOR LOCATING MISSING FAMILIES EXTENDED.

Owing to the large number of persons who applied daily for information as to the location of their relatives in the countries at war, the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America found itself greatly hampered for lack of space in its building at 229 East Broadway, New York. When this was brought to the attention of the directors of the society by the president, Judge Leon Sanders, at a meeting recently held, Mr. Joseph S. Marcus, a member of the board, offered to place at the disposal of the society all available accommodations in the building of the Bank of the United States, of which he is the president, at 77-79 Delancey Street. The office was opened on December 18 by a meeting which was attended by several thousand persons who were eager to hear the list of names which the society had received through Mr. Isidore Hershfield, its representative in Europe. About five thousand persons were unable to secure admittance to the meeting, and the society was obliged to conduct similar meetings in various parts of the building. Even then it was impossible to accommodate all those who had come in the hope of hearing some word of friend or relative, and many thousands were addressed in the street in front of the building. The meetings were addressed by Judge Sanders, Rev. Masliansky and I. M. Rosenthal.

Since the opening of the office, 40,000 persons have called to register additional inquiries for their dear ones. These names are sent as soon as possible to the society's office in Rotterdam, from which they are directed to the various European centers for investigation and report.

It was soon found that residents of outlying sections of the city, found it inconvenient to come to the East side of the city for the purpose of registering their applications. Arrangements were thereupon made with the Uptown Talmud Thora on East 111th street for the use of their auditorium in connection with this work. The branch was opened in that institution on January 10th, and applications are now being made there by residents of Harlem.

To accommodate the residents of Brownsville, the society secured permission to open an office in the Beth Hamedresh Hagodal at 333 Sackman street. The opening of this branch took the form of a meeting which was addressed by Isaac Allen, Rev. Ch. Taylor, Meyer Block and Rabbi Benjamin Fleischer.

Immediately after the meeting, applications were made by about 500 residents of Brownsville. This office will be continued until all who live in that section of the city will have an opportunity to register their inquiries.

Similar bureaus will be opened in the Bronx, and in Newark, Yonkers and other cities having a large Jewish population.

At the branches of the society in Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, San Francisco and Seattle, applications are being made for the residents of those cities.

IF I WERE A JEW MYSELF.

"If I were a Jew myself, I should be greatly proud of the fact—proud of belonging to an ancient race, which has produced some of the greatest of men, proud of a nation which still plays a mighty part in the world's affairs, although it has neither a throne nor a king, nor a soldier, nor an inch of earth which it can call its own—proud of a literature which reached in the Scriptures a sublimity unapproached by any other masterpiece of the human mind, proud of the opportunity to play my part in an effort to lift up Palestine from the condition of a barren waste to that of a land of great fertility and prosperity, but perhaps proudest of all the great chance now before the Jews of helping to realize for the poor and oppressed of their own people in many lands the great religious hope which has sustained them through three thousand cruel years."—Hall Caine.

Americanism, Judaism and B'nai B'rithism

By DR. MENDEL SILBER

Address Delivered on B'nai B'rith Day at Houston, Tex., January 16th, 1916.

Nowhere is the wholesome effect of Americanism and Judaism more clearly demonstrated than it is in the noble Order of B'nai B'rith. The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith is a Jewish organization that was conceived and called into life on the American soil. Hence, it is both American and Jewish. And it is the more truly Jewish because it is American, and the more truly American because it is Jewish. For, no matter what might be said about hyphenating Americanism, there is a close and intimate relationship between Americanism and Judaism which cannot be denied or doubted.

Providence itself seems to have linked Jewish ideals with American ideas in inseparable union. It seems to have been a direct decree of Providence that the oldest and weakest of civilized peoples should contribute mightily to the foundation and development of the youngest and strongest nation on earth. At the very time when ungrateful Spain thrust the Jew from her and Israel, the tribe of the wandering foot and weary breast, was all at once rendered homeless and helpless, it was God's will and design to found a haven of rest and home of refuge for the oppressed and persecuted of mankind. At the very time when Ferdinand and Isabella, under the spell and shadow of inquisitorial fanaticism, expelled our people from their domain, Jewish money helped to start Columbus on his voyage of discovery and Jewish mates helped to man his caravels and Jewish charts and almanacs helped to discover the New World. And just as it was our people of the Book that was helpful in the discovery of the New World, it was the Book of our people that was largely instrumental in the establishment and has ever since been a most potent factor in the maintenance of the New Republic. The Bible, our Bible, was the compass that guided the Mayflower Pilgrims. The Bible was their text-book of religion, law and government. Its precepts formed the pattern for their new polity. From the Bible was taken the text for the Liberty Bell. In the spirit of the Bible was the Declaration of Independence framed, the American Constitution drawn and the American soil consecrated as an asylum for all the classes, creeds, and nationalities of all the earth.

The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, as an offspring of Americanism and Judaism, is both religious and secular. It is the secular arm of the Synagogue, carrying into practice the inspirational teachings and theories of the Temple. It strives to promote the principles of liberty and justice, of light and enlightenment, of charity and philanthropy in the strictest sense and truest spirit of the Torah and Jewish tradition. At the same time it strives to promote Jewish consciousness and to protect the faith of the Jew and defend the fair name of Judaism in the true sense and spirit of American principle and practice. It strives to make the Jew self-respecting and respected by others. It would have the Jew stand erect and with liberty-loving consciousness of his human rights insist that he be treated with justice and equity. It demands that the world judge the Jew as other peoples are judged—not by the worst of us but by the best of us. It insists that we be characterized and not caricatured, that we be portrayed correctly but not defamed and distorted. The world is but too often prone to misjudge us. It only too often thinks of the worst of us and forgets the best of us. Let one Jew commit theft, and all Jews will be called thieves. Let one Jew deal dishonestly and it will call all Jews swindlers. For the first time in our three-thousand years' existence there appeared among us recently such a miscreant monstrosity as a gunman, and the world will never forget it. But it fails to remember the Noble prize winners, the hundreds of poets and philosophers, the artists and scientists and scholars who have enriched it immeasurably and have made life better, truer, more noble and beautiful.

The nations forget that whenever it was possible, and at times even when it seemed impossible, the genius of the Jew has shown itself in every part and department of the world's work. The moral significance of husbandry, which other people have but recently learned to appreciate, was already grasped and taught by the Jew in Biblical times when, in the metaphoric poetry of the Bible, God himself was represented as a gardener, planting a garden and walking about among its fruit trees. When Greece and Rome degraded husbandry to slavery, the Jew drew his princes and patriarchs, his poets and prophets from the field and the farm. During the middle ages, when husbandry was debased by serfdom, the study of the Law was suspended in Jewish academies for several months in the year, so as to give the students an opportunity of working in their fields, while the rabbis themselves left off preaching to their flocks for the purpose of plowing their farms. And even to-day, after the hostile world's attempt for centuries to annihilate the Jew's agricultureal ability, his love and longing for husbandry manifest themselves in the establishment and maintenance of an International Institute for Agriculture by a Jew, Lubin; in the devotion of a lifetime to the discovery of the "wild wheat" by another Jew, Aronson, in the founding and maintaining of Jewish agricultural schools and colleges and bureaus and aid societies, in the sweat and toil of the hundreds of thousands who are plowing and planting and sowing and reaping, in the Palestinian colonies, in the Arabian highlands, in the Russian lowlands, in the Argentine Republic, in the North American States. Equally important is it to remember the part the Jew has played in other branches of the world's work. For centuries he occupied himself with the subject of law. Conceiving of his sacred Scriptures as "Torah," Law, he busied himself with questions of law day and night. Law was the subject of every codifier and commentator; law formed the bulk of Jewish literature and the basis of Jewish life. But, as soon as the ghetto walls fell, the people that had given the world its divine law became an apt and able leader in human law. The mere mention of only a few of the many distinguished names, the Bedarrides and Behrend, Gans and Goldschmidt, Hirsch and Hitzig, Staub and Stahl and Serebrenick, attest fully to the marvelous contributions of the Jewish jurist to the world's work.

More grudgingly perhaps, yet none the less gratefully, the world has accepted the glorious services of Jewish statesmen, those of a Beaconsfield, a Herschell and a Pirbright, a Cohen and a Jessel, an Isaacs and a Klotz, a Luzzati and a Simon, a Straus and a Solomon.

Then, too, he has supplanted medieval superstition by medical science. In the darkest and dreariest days of medieval bigotry he founded medical colleges and taught in them, established medical schools and maintained them, built clinics and hospitals and ministered to his suffering fellowmen, carried on reading and research and wrote medical books and invented medical instruments—all for the sake of his fellowmen. Read the history of any nation, follow the ancient wanderer through the Orient and to the Occident and you will find the Jewish physician as the trusted guide and guardian of health at the court as well as in the community, the favored friend and faithful adviser of pope and prelate, of shah and sultan, of king, caliph and khan. You will find how long and strong is the chain in which our modern Marmoreks and Mandelstamms, the Metchnikoffs, Ehrlichs, and Flexners, our Connheims and Neissers, our Haffkins, Frankels and Friedlanders, our Zeissls, and Kaposis, our Lambrosos and Picks and Jacobys. You will find how long and strong is the chain in which these men form but the latest links.

Or turn from the professions to art and literature. Think of how much poorer the world's music would be to-day without Mendelssohn or Meverbeer without Halevy and Hiller, without Bruch and Bruell, without Moskowski and Rubenstein, without Levin and Hoffman, without Joachim and Ernst and Wieniawski. Think, too, of how much more barren life would be to-day without the poetry of Halevi and Gabirol, of Heine and Herz, of Creizenach, Frug, and Lazarus. Think of how much rarer would be the world's wholesome amusements and edifying pastime, were it not for its Rachels and Sarah Bernhardts, its Barnays and Sonnenthals. Or think of how much less adorned modern life would be without the masterpieces of Jewish painters like Israels and Lieberman, or of Jewish sculptors like Antocolski and Bernstein, Guenzberg, Guttman, and Klein. Think of all this, not to speak of Crescas and Cohn, Maimonides and Spinoza, Mendelssohn, Bergson, or Munsterberg, who made of philosophy a pleasant pastime, or of our Baron de Hirschs, our Rothchilds and Montefiores, our Rosenwalds, our Schiffs, and our Slimmers, with whom philanthropy has been a holy passion, or of our bankers and financiers who established the world's commerce and introduced the world's currency—think of all this and then see if you can find any other people whose genius has contributed more or as much to the world's work.

But the world forgets all this and judges, or misjudges, us by our junk dealers and pawnbrokers. The world is simply prejudiced and cannot see us as we are. The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, therefore, insists that the non-Jew leave off his prejudice and treat us impartially and without bias.

But the B'nai B'rith is counteracting also another sort of prejudice, a far more pernicious and perilous prejudice—the prejudice of the Jew that is so often exhibited by his brother Jew. The B'nai B'rith strives to unite all our people under the light of the Menorah. It strives to organize all Jews as Jews, regardless of "oxy" and "ism," providing a common meeting ground for Jews of all shades of opinion and practice—the Orthodox Jew and the Reform Jew, the conservative Jew and the radical Jew, the Jew by virtue of race and the Jew by virtue of faith, the German Jew, the Russian Jew, the English Jew, the Galician Jew, the Roumanian Jew, the Austrian Jew, the American Jew—all may be united under the glorious banner of the B'nai B'rith.

Organization is the sign and slogan of the present age. In religion, politics, and commerce organization is carried on as it never was carried on before. Denominational and party lines are drawn more closely than ever. The principle of organization is everywhere recognized as of paramount necessity and importance. In former years the close connection, the interrelation and interdependence between the alley and the avenue were not grasped nor understood. When an epidemic raged in the little shanties on the river front of a city, the big mansions on the hill tops thought themselves immune. To-day we have come to understand that the fair blossom on the proud family-tree of the millionaire may wither and fade through infection from the tiny bud on the puny plant of the pauper. Hygiene is organizing to protect the rich and poor, the weak with the strong, the indigent because of the wealthy.

It is possible that we Jews, whose just pride it has always been to have kept pace with the world's progress and to have had a large share in the development of mankind—is it possible that we Jews of to-day should fail to see the all-important principle of organization? Grave dangers are threatening us on all sides. Can we afford to let them come unheeded and unrestrained; can we afford to remain silent and inactive because, forsooth, they affect the downtown Jew and not the up-town Jew, the Russian Jew and not the German Jew, the European Jew and not the American Jew? Must not the strength of a chain be gauged by its weakest link? Do you fancy that your Judaism will long remain unharmed if Russian Jewry is killed off? Whom do you imagine your neighbor thinks of when the Jew is slandered and maligned? Not of the Russian Jew and not of the Roumanian Jew and not of the Austrian Jew; he thinks of his next door neighbor, he thinks of you and me, he thinks of one and all. For, what affects one, affects all. The continuation of our race has not ceased with Columbus' discovery of America, nor can the ocean wash away the common feelings of a people through whose veins flows the common blood of ages. As he was centuries ago, so is to-day every Jew, the Russian Jew and the Roumanian Jew, the German Jew, and the Galician Jew "flesh of our flesh, bone of our bone, sinew of our sinews." And if we do not recognize this truth, our neighbor yonder does. How, then, are we going to ward off the dangers that are threatening us in our brothers? How are we going to stay the calamities that have come upon us because they have come upon our brothers? By organization into one strong, solid, sacred, invulnerable and invincible body. To do this is not only our right but our duty. And how, indeed, can we effect such an organization better than through just such an association as the B'nai B'rith which strives to promote the cause of the Jew and Judaism locally, nationally, and internationally, which carries on work of charity and philanthropy both of a sectarian nature and of a non-sectarian character, which establishes and maintains schools and hospitals and orphan asylums, which can unite all Jews and represent all Jews, which protects the fair name of the Jew and defends the noble principles of Judaism, which, in a word, endeavors to preserve our people and our faith and to perpetuate all that is great and good in Jewish life, in Jewish lore, and Jewish tradition?

There is a Midrashic legend to the effect that, when the Tabernacle of old was to be built and the various tribes were commmanded to bring certain gifts and offerings. Aaron felt grieved because the tribe of Levi, to which both he and Moses belonged, had been omitted from the list of donors to the sacred edifice. But God said to him through Moses: "Do not grieve nor fear, for you are destined for far greater things: yours will be the largest share in the Sanctuary. Your tribe shall kindle the lights upon the altar."

All civilization is an edifice builded and reared from the gifts and offerings of the many and various generations of man. But it seems to have ever been the Providential task of the Jewish genius to kindle the lights in this Temple of Humanity, upon the Altar of Civilization. If we but remain loyal and steadfast, if we but continue to work and to watch under the light of the Menorah, the time will come when the Jewish ideals of justice and peace shall prevail among the nations of the earth, and when all men shall, in the spirit of Americanism, in the spirit of Judaism, aye, even in the spirit of B'nai B'rithism, profess and practice Benevolence, Brotherly Love, and Harmony.

LONDON LODGE ESTABLISHES BUREAU OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

A Valuable Step For a Better Organization of the London Jewish Community Has Been Taken by the First Lodge of England, London Lodge No. 663. of London, England.

It is notorious that a large number of Jewish institutions experience great difficulty in recruiting suitable voluntary social workers. It is equally a fact that there are many Jewish men and women who are willing and anxious to undertake some form of work, but do not know the particular sphere of activity in which their services would be most acceptable, or for which their qualifications render them most suitable. It will be the chief object of the Bureau to bring the would-be workers and the institutions requiring their services into touch with one another. It is proposed to issue monthly a statement showing the vacancies for voluntary workers that exist. This statement will be communicated to the press and distributed among the clergy and other persons likely to come into contact with suitable recruits. It is also proposed to publish leaflets describing various forms of social service for which there is a constant demand for workers. It is felt that these leaflets may greatly assist would-be workers in deciding upon the form of service for which they are best adapted. Recruits will be interviewed by representatives of the Bureau, accommodation having been kindly provided for this purpose by the British Institute of Social Service at Central Building, Tothill street, Westminster. Mr. Percy Alden, M. P., Secretary of the British Institute, is taking keen interest in the experiment. One of the subsidiary objects of the Bureau will be to collect a library relating to Jewish social service in London, which will be a useful adjunct to the valuable collection in the library of the British Institute.

A strong committee has been formed to administer the affairs of the Bureau. It consists of the following:

The Revs. David Hirsch and Ephraim Levine, M. A., Dr. M. Epstein, Mrs. Maurice Myers, Mrs. Oscar Selinger, Messrs. Alfred Benjamin, L. G. Bowman, M. A., Sol Cohen, Paul Goodman, Augustus Kahn, H. M. I., Alex Rubens, LL. B., S. Rehfisch, S. Rowson, M. Sc., Chas. E. Sebag-Montefiore, D. Spero, Fred S. Spiers, B. Sc., and Maurice Myers (who is provisionally acting as Hon. Secretary).

Nearly all the more important institutions and firms of social service in the community are represented on the committee. It is hoped that members of the community will readily avail themselves of the services of the Bureau which will commence its operations immediately after the Christmas vacation.—Jewish Chronicle.

Of all Jewish organizations, the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith is one to which it should be considered as a distinct privilege to belong. Of all times, the present is one which calls upon every Jew to evince his kinship and fellow-feeling for his brother Jew. No one but the most callous and indifferent can, therefore, refuse his membership and co-operation to this noble Order at this particular time.—(Jewish Ledger.)

∴ Dr. Yahuda's Triumph ∴

By DR. MAX NORDAU

Even amidst the all-absorbing incidents of the world's war, an event, which may appear perhaps small in itself at a superficial glance, but is yet of vast historical importance and of wide bearing, ought not to pass unnoticed. On the 7th of December the Official Gazette of Madrid published a royal decree appointing Dr. Abraham Salom Yahuda, Professor Ordinary ("Catedratico numerario") of Rabbinical Language and Literature at the philosophical faculty of the Central University of Madrid. The chair, of which Professor Yahuda becomes the first occupant, was created by a royal decree dated June 21, 1915. Officially styled "Chair for Rabbinical Language and Literature," it is, in fact, devoted to the teaching of the history and literature of the Jews in Spain.

The decree of appointment in the Official Gazette is accompanied by four memoranda, wherein the Supreme Council of Public Instruction, the Royal Academy of History, the Faculty of Philosophy and Letters of the Madrid University, and the Spanish Academy, the two first named unanimously, the two others with only one or two dissentients, propose Professor Yahuda to the Minister of Public Instruction and to King Alfonso XIII. for appointment to the newly created chair. All these memoranda concur in the high praise they bestow on the personality and the works of Professor Yahuda, enlarging on his character, his professional attainments, his capacity as a teacher, his European fame, and his success as a scientific worker. This Father Fidel Fita, member of the Order of Jesuits, president of the Academy of History, of which Professor Yahuda is a corresponding member, after describing the works of Professor Yahuda, winds up with the following paragraphs:

"It is impossible to quote here, however concisely, the generally appreciative criticisms which have been published concerning the above-named works and others not mentioned, over the signatures of the most illustrious men in intellectual and academical Europe. We may select, nevertheless, among many others which the academy must omit for brevity's sake, those of the great scholars, Drs. J. Halevy, of Paris; S. Fraenkel, of Breslau; E. Benyahuda, of Jerusalem; Em. Loew, of Szegedin; W. Rosenau, of Baltimore; Abrahams and Nicholson, of Cambridge; T. Goldziher, of Budapest; T. Horowitz, of Breslau; Ruska, of Heidelberg; Horten, of Bonn; Brockelmann, of Halle; W. Bacher, of Budapest; and K. V. Zetterste, of Upsala. A learned doctor who carries with him such a stock of works as his specialty, written and published by him, and such a numerous body of exceptionally competent and scientific judges giving their opinion of him, offer not only the highest guarantees, but make it evident that it is an honor for us to secure him and to offer him a place among the distinguished teaching body of our university."

Banishment Edict Tacitly Revoked.

It is certainly highly satisfactory to note the flattering terms in which a Jesuit Father of great repute as a Hebraist speaks of a Jewish scholar. But the matter has other aspects which give it a significance reaching far beyond the interest attaching to a mere personal notice. Professor Yahuda is the first Jew called to a Spanish university chair, or, indeed, receiving any state appointment in Spain since the wholesale expulsion of the Jews from the peninsula by the Catholic kings in 1492. The last Jewish professor in Spain was the great mathematician, Abraham Zacuto; now another Abraham comes to take up and continue after an interval of more than four centuries the glorious tradition of Hispano-Jewish scientific labor cruelly severed by Ferdinand II. and Isabella. The law by which the Jews were banished forever from Spain has never been abolished; theoretically it is still in force and stands on the statute book. By his decree of Dec. 7 King Alfonso XIII. has now tacitly ignored it and stamped it as obsolete. It means a quiet but efficient and, taking all in all, sufficiently ostentatious disavowal of a long and black historical past and the turning over of a new leaf. Spain throws a veil over the piles of the Inquisition, dissipates their pestilent fumes, and makes an official profession of tolerance, of human [illegible] and of the recognition of [illegible].

[illegible] Yahuda has undoubtedly assumed [illegible] responsibility, but we may [illegible] that he will do honor to the Jewish name. Great work is in store for him and the disciples he is bound to form. In spite of the endeavors of Kayserling, Amador de los Rios, and some other lesser lights, the history of the Jews in Spain is practically unbroken ground. The great state archives, the monasteries, and the cathedrals of Spain are full of unpublished, and mostly entirely unknown, documents relating to the manifold and important activities of the Spanish Jews, who for more than seven centuries had cultivated and fertilized every field of thought and science in Spain. There are untold treasures to be unearthed. It will be Professor Yahuda's glorious task to bring them to light and to open the way to others who will not fail to follow in his path.

Professor Yahuda's British Nationality.

An interesting feature in connection with Professor Yahuda deserves passing mention. Professor Yahuda is a British subject. Now the Spanish constitution and law forbid the appointment of a foreigner to an official position in the Spanish state service. It was therefore suggested to Professor Yahuda that he should become naturalized as a Spanish subject. But as he firmly refused to give up his British nationality, a special law was passed sanctioning his nomination in spite of his being a foreign subject.

On Dec. 15 an impressive ceremony took place in the great hall of the University of Madrid. In the presence of nearly all the professors, of a crowd of students, and of many distinguished guests, Professor Yahuda was solemnly installed in the chair to which he had been appointed. The rector presented him to his colleagues, who cheered him, whereupon Professor Yahuda delivered an extempore speech, in the course of which he said: "At this solemn moment which marks a new era in my life and starts a new phase of my scientific activity, it is impossible for me to explain the entire importance of the present event and the far-reaching influence which the institution of these new studies will have on historical research as well as on the living interests of Spain. Therefore I wish to limit myself at present to the simple expression of my gratitude for the generous reception extended to me by this learned corporation and particularly for the sincere enthusiasm which several colleagues, scientific glories of this university, have expressed at the creation of this chair. The distinction of which I have been the object by being called to direct these studies would surely have filled me with extreme joy but for my being conscious at the same time of the grave responsibility which such a difficult and delicate mission imposes on me. However, the kindness shown me by the most authoritative scientific and intellectual circles of Spain will encourage me to justify, according to my best powers, the hopes you place in my modest collaboration. I come to you animated with the purpose to support you according to my modest means in your scientific labors, having no other ambition than to work and no other desire than to deserve the confidence, the affection, and the esteem of my colleagues and disciples. But there is another very powerful moral stimulus which will impel me to show myself worthy of the exceptional distinction that has been bestowed on me, and this is the ever present memory of the example set to me by those men of my race who by their invaluable scientific work shed glory on the name of Spain in the past. The remembrance of these venerable figures will be a continuous exhortation to me to fulfil my duty and fully to display all my energies. The last Sephardic scholar who occupied a chair at a Spanish university, that of Salamanca, most celebrated in its time, was the greatest astronomer and naval scientist of the fifteenth century, the friend and adviser of Christopher Columbus, Abraham Zacuto, whose works were of so great an importance for the discovery of the new world. His greatest pride and only comfort in the sadness of the exile, amid the dire circumstances and the disasters that had befallen his people, was the recollection that he had worked during his whole long lifetime for the advancement of science and the prosperity of his country. Now that after such a long interval of time I have the honor of being called to assume a similar high charge in the old country of my ancestors who had never forgotten it and had always thought of it with love and sadness, I shall consider myself happy if, with my good intentions and my humble merits, I succeed in at least not falling too far below the standard of such glorious traditions and in rendering homage, by these means, to all who have thought it worthy of a free and progressive Spain to form new relations of mutual sympathy with the descendants of ancient fellow countrymen, and who have chosen as the most apt interpreter of their noble feelings the peaceful voice of science and as the most adequate place of reconciliation the sacred temple of learning. My colleagues, from my childhood I have been imbued with the spirit of one of our old proverbs, which teaches us, 'The honor of thy disciple shall be as near unto thee as thy own honor, and thy respect for thy colleague shall be as great as thy respect for thy master.' With the intention of being inspired by this maxim also, I have the honor to take possession of the chair so generously offered me."

The Ceremony of Admission.

Amidst the cheers of the audience, the dean of the faculty, Professor Tormo, who, by a curious coincidence, happens to bear as his Christian name that of our old prophet, Elijah, invested Professor Yahuda with the insignia of his office, a golden star adorned with emblems, suspended around the neck on a blue and white ribbon. With visible emotion, Professor Tormo made a neat little speech. After eulogizing Professor Yahuda for the tactful manner in which he had alluded to the ancient relations between his ancestors and Spain, so sadly interrupted four centuries ago, he went on to declare that he was a fervent Catholic himself, but that his faith did not in the least prevent him from respecting the old faith of his new colleague; that he rejoiced to see him joining the teaching staff of the university in order to continue the long line of Jewish luminaries who formerly shone so brightly in Spain; that in the field of science no insidious distinction should be made between scholars of different religions and race; and that modern Spain bade a hearty welcome to an illustrious descendant of those who once were her noble and faithful sons. The dean, then in accordance with continental habits, embraced Professor Yahuda. Thus the impressive ceremony ended.

What a contrast to certain other countries, which deem themselves vastly in advance of "backward" Spain, where Jews cannot attain to the position of an ordinary professor of university!

A New Departure.

It may be mentioned that one of those who were most instrumental in the appointment of Professor Yahuda to his chair is the Jesuit father, Fidal Fita, president of the Academy of History, author of a great many scholarly publications on Spanish and Hispano-Jewish history, literature, and archeology. Father Fita is deeply learned in Hebrew, and to his zeal and efforts displayed for the last fifty years it is due that a great number of Jewish documents and inscriptions have been discovered, saved from destruction, placed in museums, or published, and that venerable monuments, such as the synagogues of Segovia, of Toledo, etc., have been restored, cleared of unsuitable occupants, and officially classed among the historical antiquities that are carefully to be preserved from decay and profanation. The history of Judaism in Spain is greatly indebted to this fine scholar.

The first impulse to the revival of rabbinical studies in Spain, however, came from the celebrated author of "Espanoles Sin Patria" ("Spaniards Without a Fatherland"), Senator Dr. Angel Pulido. He made himself the champion of the Sephardic cause. With incessant efforts, continued for upwards of twenty years, he succeeded in awakening and spreading interest in the remote descendants of the Jews so cruelly treated by the Catholic kings and in giving rise to the movement which eventually led to the creation of the university chair for the science of Judaism, and to the appointment of Professor Yahuda to occupy it. Perhaps not many of the Spanish intellectuals whose warm sympathies are now extended to the new chair and to everything Sephardic, bear in mind the fact that they follow the example set by Dr. Angel Pulido. But this is just the noblest triumph of a big heart and a lofty mind: to have engendered an idea which continues to live and to develop by its own power and merit, independently of its originator.

Not the least remarkable feature of the event above recorded is the attitude of the Spanish press before and since Professor Yahuda's appointment. All the great papers, with scarcely any difference of party, published long articles, giving the professor's biography, many of them adding his portrait, and expressing themselves in the most flattering terms on his professional attainments and his personal qualities, and lavishing compliments and congratulations on the government for having taken the initiative in calling an illustrious Jewish scholar to a chair at the Madrid University, thereby showing its resolution to break with old prejudices and to follow the road of progress.—London Jewish Chronicle.

RUSSIA'S BRUTALITY UNDIMINISHED.

There has been no cessation of the persecution of the Jews in Russia. The brutality of the civil authorities is no greater nor more inhuman than that of the military authorities. A telegram from Berlin, dated January 15, received by wireless at Sayville, N. Y. says:

The Anti-Semitism in the Russian Army is illustrated by the following official documents which have fallen into the hands of the German troops and are now published here:

Headquarters of the Commander-in-chief for Provisions and Transportation, Lublin:

Austrian spies are receiving a great deal of valuable information from the many Jewish soldiers employed in the Russian transportation service. The enemy learns everything that is going on behind our front through the Jews and their relatives in Galicia and Poland.

The Jewish soldiers often manage to be sent to the interior of the empire on duty. Their object is to gather information in regard to the movements of our troops, our supply of munitions, etc. This information they smuggle to the enemy as soon as they reach the front again.

To break up this system of espionage and Jewish treason the Commander-in-chief has decided that all Jewish soldiers now attached to the transportation service shall be sent to the reserve battalions at once. They shall receive six weeks of training, and will then have to join the regiments on the firing line. During their term of training and at the front they have to be kept under constant surveillance.

SHERSHEWSKY,
Major General.

Headquarters of the Middle District of the Eighteenth Army.

The Jews have committed treason so often that hereafter no trust is to be placed in them. In all villages and towns their houses have to be searched rigidly and all who lay themselves open to suspicion are to be arrested and tried before a court martial. If our troops, for strategic reasons, have to retreat from any town the Jews must be taken along. In cases where this may seem expedient they may be driven in the direction of the enemy.

WINANTOW,
Major General.

Order to the 375th Witebsk Infantry Regiment:

In many towns no sugar can be obtained for our troops lately. The commanders of our detachments are therefore instructed to search all stores and private houses and to buy the sugar they find. Confectionery may also be taken, if no other sugar is found, but nothing must be bought from Jews, as the candies manufactured by them are dangerous and may contain poison. It has repeatedly happened that some of our brave soldiers were poisoned by the treacherous Jews.

GODSEWSKY,
Colonel.

The Russian authorities and their apologists in France, England and America are endeavoring to hide the real facts from the neutral countries. England and France needed Russia to make a successful war against Germany possible, but it is hard to believe that the statesmen and people of these two enlightened countries are not heartily ashamed of their savage ally and bitterly regret that necessity should have forced them into association with Russia.—(Chicago Israelite.)

JEWISH SOLDIERS DISTINGUISHED.

During the past three months more than three hundred and forty Russian-Jewish soldiers were awarded the Order or Medal of St. George for bravery at the front. The total number of Jews who obtained the Order or Medal of St. George is now six hundred and forty-six. Among the new knights are the youths, Maltinsky, aged fourteen, and Frenkel, aged fifteen, who volunteered for service in the army. Seventeen of the soldiers received each two orders, while several received three or four. In addition, a number of members of the Red Cross and Jewish military doctors received the Orders of St. Anne and St. Stanislau and gold and silver medals.

THE KEHILLAH, XX

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph. D.

It may be a lesson for the Jews of the present age in the great task that shall come before us, when the terrible war shall finally be ended, to know that the outside world does not take the same interest in our affairs which we believe to have a right to expect. Maria Theresa had a chamberlain, Count afterwards Prince Khevenhiller, who wrote his memoirs with the minuteness, typical of a courtier. In three volumes comprising 1,000 pages and covering only part of the empress' reign, he gives us with a consciensciousness worthy of a higher object, not merely each case of a cold in the head from which his mistress suffered, and each case in which the court physician administered a bleeding but takes us even into his confidence, when important problems of etiquette had to be settled. In the first years of Maria Theresa's reign her husband was not yet "Roman Emperor," but Duke of Lorraine. Then the serious question arose, whether the husband of "The Queen of Hungary and Bohemia," who was merely a duke and a vassal of the empire, was entitled to an armchair at the table, when the Kurfuerst of Saxony was also a guest, who while likewise a vassal of the "Roman Empire," was in his capacity of King of Poland a foreign sovereign and therefore entitled to the honor of an armchair. The question was finally solved by placing for the two princes an armchair each with the arms sawed off.

In spite of all this minuteness, the only mention that Count Khevenhiller makes of the Jews in the three volumes of his memoirs is a brief notice that the empress on a journey in Hungary passed a town where a Jewish wedding was just celebrated according to the custom of the time in the open air, and that Her Majesty deigned to stop in order to see the ceremony. Yet, during that period, the empress had ordered the expulsion of the Jews from the Kingdom of Bohemia, the lives of 150,000 human beings was at stake, court Jews and foreign ambassadors tried to influence the empress to repeal the edict, and perhaps one or another might have approached the powerful chamberlain with a gold snuff box or with a diamond pin for his lady, but to Count Khevenhiller, this was not even so important as that the empress, after one of her many confinements—she bore to her husband seventeen children—went in spite of the warning of her physician to her box in the gallery of the court church to witness at least "the Consecration" ceremony at the mass.

Maria Theresa was indeed an able woman, incomparably superior as a ruler to her Philistine father, Charles VI, and to her defective grandfather, Leopold I, but she had inherited from the latter, who ordered the expulsion of the Jews from Vienna in 1670, and from her long line of bigoted ancestors the bitter hatred of the Jews. The expulsion from Vienna was in reality a temporary measure; it was never officially repealed, and did not cease to be law until 1848, when the new constitution, without mentioning this fact, gave to the Jews freedom of residence. After the siege of the capitol by the Turks in 1863, it was practically set aside in favor of some of the great financiers like Samuel Oppenheimer, whose services the government, in the serious national crisis, could not spare. The principle, once being broken, could not be carried out. If a Jew had influence and money, the latter being practically the only way of obtaining influence, he could buy the favor of some of the officials in high standing, and become a "Tolerated Jew" with the right of residence in Vienna. Such a fortunate fellow was a man by the name of Goetzel. In some way, we do not know how, Goetzel had obtained the much coveted privilege. The empress had no means of repealing the concession made by responsible officials, but stated that "in future no Jew shall receive this right without my written permit, for I know of no worse pest to the state than this nation of frauds and usurers who pauperize the people by their money transactions, and do all sorts of things which any reputable man would avoid. It is therefore my wish to keep them out of the capital as much as possible, and I order to submit to me every quarter a list of all those who are living here with the statement of their addresses." The lady believed in doing things herself. No thing was too small for her. In 1751, the representatives of the Jews of Moravia held one of their regular meetings. The bill for the expenses amounted to the indeed exorbitant sum of Fl. 4,208 Kr. 30 (about $1,700). The empress audited the bill personally, and reduced it. Of course, if money was to be gotten out of the Jews, the imperial treasury needed and wanted it. The amount of taxes imposed upon the Jews on every possible occasion is appalling, and was levied without regard to existing laws. The Jews of Hungary possessed a patent, which stated expressly that no additional taxes should be imposed upon them, but in 1743, owing to the war, an extraordinary "contribution" of six florins on every family was decreed. The Jews had to be patriotic and pay it. Three years later this "extraordinary contribution" was changed to an annual poll tax of two florins per capita. This time the Jews protested with the only result that in 1749 this tax was changed into an annual levy of 20,000 florins imposed upon the Jews as a body.

It was already stated that the empress was very sensitive, when she felt that anybody tried to influence her decisions. The foreign ambassadors who interceded on behalf of the Bohemian Jews had therefore a very delicate task. Finally the empress yielded, not to foreign intercession, but to the demand of her "States" and suspended the edict of expulsion issued in 1744 for ten years. This suspension, ordered July 14, 1748, should have lapsed in 1758, but then Austria was again at war with Prussia, and the expulsion of the Jews would have deprived the state of the annual sum of 300,000 florins which the Jews had to pay, and which the state could surely not spare at this moment. So the whole matter was forgotten. It seems even that Maria Theresa mellowed with the years, for during the war of Seven Years, 1756-1763, the charge of treason was not repeated. The empress is satisfied with the promulgation of a ban against all who would aid the enemy, and in individual instances she remits the taxes of Jews who had suffered from the enemy invasion. Of the 300,000 florins, Mohemia had to pay 211,000, Moravia 87,700, and Silesia 1,300. The collection of these taxes caused no expense to the state, for the "Judenschaft" of each province had to assess the amount against every congregation and the latter again had to collect it from its members. Emperor Joseph II in 1782 abolished this tax, but it was practically only the abrogation of the inviduous name of "Toleranz Steuer." The Jews still had to pay it partly as a tax on every family, and partly as excise duty until 1848.

The regular tax, however, did not exhaust the exactions levied on the Jews. Whenever the state was in financial straits some new scheme of Jew-taxes was devised, and not too rarely the Jews themselves assisted for selfish reasons in this system of exploitation. In 1774, David Heinrich Lehmann, of Prague, suggested that the government compel the Jews of Bohemia to pay annually 40,000 florins for the right to import the "ethrogs" for the "Succoth" festival. If they refused to pay, the government would declare the ethrog business a monopoly and charge the Jews any price it saw fit. Naturally Lehmann demanded for himself a bonus. The Jews protested, especially in view of their impending expulsion, but all that they obtained was that the amount was reduced, and the tax remained in force until 1748, when it was abolished, not out of consideration for the Jews, but for fiscal reasons, because it was more convenient for the treasury to consolidate all Jew-taxes to the amount of 300,000 florins, as was stated. Lehmann, by the way, did not become a rich man, as he expected; the government gave him only 1,000 ducats, and in 1771, as a man of 82, he begged in view of his poverty and his helplessness for the balance promised to him, which, however, he does not seem to have received. It is gratifying to notice that with the progress of time, these cruelties ceased. In 1799 three Polish Jews suggested again a monopoly on the ethrog business, and offered to pay the state 300,000 florins if they were given this monopoly. Maria Theresa's grandson, Emperor Francis II, though bigoted and a reactionary, would not hear of it. Religious observances should not be taxed.

One should imagine that since the Jews were so exorbitantly taxed their business enterprises should be encouraged, but the exactly opposite was the case. They were in every activity subjected to petty annoyances and severest restrictions. A pathetic insight into these conditions is presented to us in a petition which the Jews of Prague submitted to the empress in 1763. The market regulation does not permit them to buy victuals before 9 a. m, cattle not before 11 a. m., fish not at all during the Lent; kindling not at a certain place. Jewish druggists are not permitted to buy medicinal herbs until the Christian druggists have supplied their needs. According to routine, this petition is presented to the police commissioner of Prague for an opinion. He advises to have this petition burned publicly by the hangman. The imperial chancery is more humane, and returns the petition with "a reprimand for the presumption" to undermine the Christian state. It must, however, not be overlooked that similar restrictions were in those days quite the rule of the German Empire. In Frankfurt a. M., which also is typical for its cruel treatment of its Jews, some Jewish merchant had presumed to deal in coffee and sugar. The Christian merchants found that this was interfering with their privileges. The senate investigated and found that there was no law in the numerous provisions of the "Judenstaettigkeit" of 1616 which prohibited such an activity, but there was an elastic paragraph which declared that Jews must not deal in "Aromata." The question was submitted to the law department of the University of Giessen, and after thirty-one years of litigation, it was decided that inasmuch as coffee has an aroma, and sugar makes it more palatable, both are to be classed as spices (1771). Maria Theresa, in spite of her prejudice, knew how to value the Jewish business activities, when they helped to develop the economic condition of the state. She recognized the importance of the Jews for the commerce with the Orient, and in a treaty with Turkey, permitted all subjects of the Sultan, including Jews, to settle in her states, granting them even exemption from taxes, and allowed thirty-three Jewish families to settle in Semlin on the border of Servica, though with the restriction that only one son of each family should be permitted to marry. By an order, issued in 1749, she not only allowed them but encouraged them to establish manufactories. In spite of the protests of the guilds, the Jews of Prague were permitted to sell furniture and clothes which they had made themselves. The latter, however, could only be sold in the "Tandelmarkt" (junkmarket) in the ghetto though, when called to a customer, the Jewish tailor was permitted to sell "In the Christian city." All these concessions, however, were subject to the pettiest restrictions. Thus a Jewish jeweler was not permitted to keep an apprentice. Jewish contractors, when making a bid, were not to appear in person in the office where the contract was to be awarded, probably because they were suspected of corrupting the officials. Jews, living in the border districts, were not permitted to deal in rabbit skins. The reason for the latter rule is not clear, but it is known generally that any class of merchants or mechanics, finding the competition of the Jews inconvenient, could have some law passed which would relieve them of such inconvenience. As soon, however, as the business activity of the Jews was advantageous, they were coaxed to participate in this activity. The city of Teschen in Silesia drew a great deal of its importance from the commerce with the neighboring province of Galicia. Probably owing to the partition of Poland, the trade declined, and the governor of the province addressed a personal letter to Jacob Landau, the son of the chief rabbi of Prague, who was a merchant in Brody, called Yakevka, addressing him as "Lieber Herr" and requesting him to use his influence, for the sake of encouraging the trade relations of the Polish Jews with Teschen. The Jews of Goerz were exempted from the toll when attending fairs, though in this case the government had an excuse for such favor inasmuch as the Italian Jews were different from the Yiddish-speaking people.

In religious matters, as would be natural for a deeply religious woman, the empress, as a rule, evinced consideration for the religious needs of the Jews. In connection with the case of Isaac Landesmann it was already stated that Maria Theresa would not countenance the baptism of children against the will of their parents. A law issued in 1768 put a penalty of 1,000 florins, or two years' forced labor, upon such an offense. Priests, who could not be sentenced to the penitentiary, were fined 1,000 ducats, if they baptized Jewish children without the consent of their parents. At the same time the law had a loophole. Unauthorized baptism still was valid as the church declared, and in case of imminent death or when children were disowned by their parents, the offender was not punished. It must, however, be said that Jewish convicts could not be compelled to work on the Sabbath, although they had to make up for lost time during the week. In spite of such toleration the practice of the Jewish religion was considerably restricted. Under Maria Theresa's father, Charles VI, a systematic persecution of rabbinic literature began. It was very likely in connection with the infamous book of Eisenmenger which was published in 1701. Eisenmenger, a Protestant, who harbored strong anti-Catholic bias, had attacked rabbinic literature, displaying a great deal of learning. Catholics could not allow Protestants to outdo them in zeal for the protection of the Christian religion, and a systematic persecution of rabbinic literature began. In 1712 all rabbinical books were seized in Prague to be examined for anti-Christian passages, and in the same year the printer Sabbatai Bass, who had established an office in Dyhernfurt, near Breslau, then Austrian territory, was arrested for printing in a devotional a hymn which contained an allusion to the hope that the cross would soon disappear from the holy city of Jerusalem. Under Maria Theresa this persecution was continued. The empress was a great admirer of the Jesuits, and it was certainly a cause for profound grief to her, when in 1773 the order was dissolved by the pope, and the Jesuit colleges had to be closed even in Austria. It was her express will that a Jesuit should always be a member of the censorship commission, and Father Franz Haselbauer-Graetz IX, 351, speaks of him as a bishop. He was not a bishop, but a plain Jesuit priest—was for many years censor of the Hebrew literature, and exercised the prerogatives of his office with great rigor. In 1726 he denounced a Hebrew calendar printed in Amsterdam because it translated "All Saints' Day" "Kol Hakedeshim" which he explains by an unprintable word, instead of "Kol Hakedoshim". It is amusing to read the excuse given by the "Vor-Censor" or assistant to the Censor's office, Simon Jeiteles. Jeiteles declared that the word had to be read "Kol Hakadeshim" and means that the Kadish is to be recited. Haselbauer kept his office until his death at the age of 88 in 1756, and we are indebted to him for a condemnation of the ritual murder charge, which he wrote in 1736 upon the request of Rabbi Jonathan Eybeschuetz, afterwards chief rabbi of Altona, and therefore Graetz is wrong when he speaks of Eybeschuetz's "Wedelnde Gefuegigkeit" (Trucking) to the Jesuits, and also that Eybenschuetz was afraid of making a protest against the ritual murder charge.

The empress was not always so considerate in regard to Jewish practices. In some Moravian place the Jews desired to place an Erub, the rabbinic measure for evasion of the prohibition against carrying an object on Sabbath. The governor of the province declared that this was not necessary for the practice of their religion. These, of course, were small matters, but while Joseph II, as a rationalist, did not favor rabbinic Judaism, and while some Hasidic rabbis saw in him an instrument of Satan, the great majority of the Jews in the dominion of Austria felt relieved, when the noble and brilliant woman breather her last, Nov. 29, 1780, and was succeeded by her son, who already in the first year of his reign issued the order of Oct. 19, 1781, which prescribed secular education, allowed the Jews to engage in agriculture, manufacture, mechanic trades and liberal professions.

ABERDEEN, WASH.

At a meeting of Grays Harbor Lodge No. 757 of Aberdeen, Wash., held on Feb. 7, 1916, resolutions were adopted extending appreciation to the Christian gentlemen who took charge of the matter of collecting funds for the relief of Jewish war sufferers in response to the President's appeal. More than $1000 was collected and the Y. M. C. A. building was thrown wide open for public meeting. The clergymen of Aberdeen and Hoquaim headed the movement and it was chiefly due to their indefatigable work that the large sum of money was realized, which came principally from non-Jewish sources, as the Jewish population of Aberdeen numbers but fifteen families.

The Lodge has also, under the supervision of its president, created an employment committee, which has been most successful in finding employment for fifteen Russian refugees recently arrived from Siberia and Japan. In addition to the securing of employment for them the lodge has organized a night school for their benefit, and it is under the management of Mrs. M. Brumberg.

JEWISH GIFT TO THE TSAR.

The Tsar received a deputation of the Jewish community of Kherson, whom he thanked for the gift of 5,000 roubles it handed to him for war purposes

Hearing Before The House Committee on Immigration on the Burnett Bill

A public hearing before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives was held in Washington, Thursday and Friday, Jan. 20 and 21, on the Burnett Bill, which contains a literacy test of immigrants seeking admission to the United States. The hearing was procured by Congressman A. J. Sabath of Chicago, and Isaac Siegel of New York, members of the committee, who fought strenuously to give an opportunity to those opposed to the bill to be heard.

The only organization which appeared in favor of the Burnett Bill was the American Federation of Labor, while the opposition was led by the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America.

Mr. Louis Marshall appeared on behalf of the American Jewish Committee, and, as he stated, "also for the immigrant." He expressed surprise that the bill containing a literacy test should be introduced now, since similar bills were vetoed by three presidents, Cleveland, Taft and Wilson. He called particular attention to the provision of the bill which exempts from the operation of the literacy test, "All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or the Secretary of Labor, that they emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents solely for the purpose of escaping religious persecution." He explained that this clause, as it appeared in the bill, would not help the Jewish immigrant because it would be difficult to establish in any given case that the immigrant came here solely on account of religious persecution.

Judge Leon Sanders, president of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America, made a vigorous protest against the literacy test as well as the proposed increase of head tax from four to six dollars, and exclusion on the ground of "constitutional psychopathic inferiority." He presented communications protesting against the adoption of the literacy test by William Dean Howells, Dr. John H. Finley, Jane Addams, Charles W. Eliot, Andrew Carnegie, Bishop David H. Greer, Seth Low, George Kennan, Thomas W. Churchill, George B. McAneny, Roger W. Babson, and Albert Shiels.

Hon. Simon Wolf, national representative at Washington of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, being prevented from attending the hearing, sent the following synopsis of what he wished to say:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:—

Time and again I have appeared before the Committee on Immigration and always in opposition to contemplated restrictive immigration legislation and particularly in opposition to the so-called literacy test. You, Mr. Chairman, and some of the gentlemen composing this committee have been made aware of my sentiments, but as the present committee has some new members, it is incumbent upon me to say at least a few words in addition to that which has become public record.

I had the honor and privilege in the late Congress to give voice to my feelings and opposition on the part of a large number of representative American citizens. These sentiments are embodied in the hearings before the Committee on H. R. 6060, Part 2, Dec. 12, 1913.

Three presidents of the United States, to-wit, Cleveland, Taft and Wilson, have vetoed immigration legislation in consequence of the obnoxious literacy test. I trust it will be taken in the proper spirit if I suggest to the members of the committee who have not read these vetoed messages to do so, as they embody the spirit of our opposition and in consequence of which the chairman of this committee and the majority all favored restrictive legislation and have so far not been enabled to pass such restrictions over their vetoes and I sincerely hope they never will, as in my humble judgment it is un-American, unpatriotic and unnecessary.

The fear of increased immigration when this unholy war shall have passed into history is uncalled for at this time. What is true at present immigration before the normal will prove doubly so when the war shall have ceased. As far as Jewish immigration is concerned, if their rights are guaranteed and equality in the land of their birth is granted there [illegible] practically be very little if any [illegible] from that element but [illegible] such act of humanity and civil[illegible] shall be accorded or not each and every nation will need its own population to repair the waste and loss caused by the war. Fit and efficient men will be needed, and the unfit will not be permitted to land in this country. Why then have any fear as to the immediate future? Our country is safer by admitting more brain and brawn combined and less education. We need bone and sinew of other lands and the mouthings of anarchists, and the nihilists who would by virtue of being able to read and write have free admission while the stalwart laborer or artisan who by unjust legislation has been deprived of those privileges in the land of his birth would, if you enact this legislation, be debarred.

I trust in the wisdom of my fellow Americans who represent the sane thought and love of fair play of the American people. I have not approached the main question as to what effect on the prosperity of our country immigration has been, for that would be almost an insult to your intelligence. It has been proven and conceded that one of the most important factors in the development, growth and prosperity of the nation is due to immigration.

Among others appearing in opposition to the bill were Mr. Louis Edward Levy, president of the Philadelphia Association for the Protection of Jewish Immigrants, representing that society and also appearing on behalf of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, being a member of the National Commission on Immigration created by the Order.

Mr. Levy pointed out that our present immigration laws provided fully and effectively against the admission of all immigrants who are physically, mentally or morally unfit, and who are therefore undesirable additions to our population, and that to prevent the coming of honest, able-bodied and well-meaning immigrants by requiring them to pass a literacy test would be contrary to the best interests of our country generally.

In this connection Mr. Levy urged:

1. That an immigrant's inability to read does not unfit him for making an honest living.

2. That being able to read is not a test of an immigrant's moral qualities, and that an immigrant who could pass the test might soon prove to be morally undesirable.

3. That the proper application of a literacy test of immigrants is not at the time of landing, but when they are to be naturalized as citizens.

4. The literacy requirement would work in favor of the half-educated immigrants from the cities and factory towns of Europe, for whom there is no great need here, and against the unlettered peasants from the European country districts who are able and willing and, because unlettered, doubly willing, to perform the sturdy yet humble tasks of life. This is the very class of workers whose numbers are now insufficient for the requirements of our various industries, and certain to be yet more so in the future, and whose unskilled labor does not compete with our American wage earner, but on the contrary, is necessary in preparing employment for the latter.

5. The administration of the proposed literacy test would be fraught with extreme difficulty. The time necessarily consumed in the proper application of the proposed test through the selection of the requisite language prints, the reading of the text by the immigrants, perhaps haltingly as containing unusual phraseology, and the possible misunderstanding by the examiner of an immigrant's dialectic pronunciation of the text, would extend the examination of a shipload of immigrants through several days, causing great discomfort to the immigrants and more or less confusion generally, unless a very large number of inspectors were employed for the purpose. These inspectors would have to be conversant not only with the language in question, but also with its various dialects, and would have to determine whether an immigrant's reading of the text was sufficiently perfect to pass him or sufficiently imperfect to bar him. If the immigrant were remanded by the inspector for re-examination by the special board of inquiry composed of three inspectors, the same conditions would still obtain. The fate of whole families would thus be left to the discretion of minor officials empowered to decide it, a power which only men possessing at once great linguistic accomplishments and high judicial qualifications can possibly be expected to exercise properly.

Finally, that the shortage of unskilled labor, which had become increasingly marked in many sections of the country even before the war, is not likely to be over-supplied by an influx from the depleted ranks of labor in Europe after the war, when every remaining able-bodied worker, and unskilled laborers particularly, will be called on from every side to help in rebuilding the shattered economic structure of the exhausted nations. This condition alone is practically certain to reduce immigration far below its former volume, lower than will be needed by our industrial requirements.

Apart from that we may expect with certainty that at least the continental governments will, as a measure of national policy, put obstacles in the way of the emigration of able-bodied men and perhaps aim to promote the emigration of the surplus number of women and girls. This would help on this side to meet the unsupplied demand for domestic service, but this supply would be greatly impeded by the proposed literacy test. All in all, the idea of pushing through an immigration restriction measure at this time is more unreasonable than ever before.

Others appearing in opposition to the bill were Prof. Isaac A. Hourwich, William Edlin, representative of the Workmen's Circle, Assemblyman Shiplacoff, representative of the United Hebrew Trades and the National Jewish Workmen's Committee, and former Representative W. Bourke Cockran.

DUMA MEMBERS WITNESS JEWISH ATROCITIES.

The following is an extract from the speech of Deputy Telegatza, as published in the Monthly Bulletin of the American Jewish Relief Committee for January, 1916:

"What kind of truth is this when lying communiques are being published in the official organ of the government to the effect that Jews at Kuzy have betrayed the Russian soldiers to the enemy? Why have the various periodicals been ordered to publish this communication under threat of penalties of the justice, that requires that a Jewish volunteer—and there are thousands of them in the Russian army—who has been several times embattled and is now crippled and mutilated, should be sent out within twenty-four hours from places in Russia where he was looking for some employment? What humanity is this which forbids the offering of food to hungry Jewish fugitives, kept in sealed wagons at the stations, as our authorities have done? What freedom is this? To have the whole Jewish press suppressed and destroyed by a single stroke of the pen? What fraternity is this, when a part of the army is set against the Jewish soldiers who are risking their lives in the same trenches with the others? What, gentlemen, in the name of what code of law are orders being issued to the Russian army to drive the Jews—the peaceful Jewish population—in front of the fire of bullets? By virtue of what code are Jewish subjects of Russia being taken as hostages by the Russian army and thrown into prison in order to subject them to torture and to have them shot? Shame, indeed—but this is a fact."

Another deputy of the Duma, Duworsky, as representative of the Fifth Siberian Division, says: "I have been at the front and can bear personal witness to the immeasurable brutality with which the Jews are expelled from the province of Radom, for example. The whole population was driven out in the night time within the space of a few hours. At 11 o'clock they were informed that they must leave immediately, and those found behind by daybreak would be hanged, and in the night the Jewish population started for the nearest town, Ilsah, lying at a distance of thirty versts. The old, the sick, and the paralyzed, and the invalids, had to be carried in arms, as no means of conveyance were obtainable. The number of those expelled is enormous; for instance," says the deputy, "the expelled from the province of Kovno alone, from one province that was a center of Jewish life, and of Jewish culture, of Jewish hope and of Jewish work, from one province alone there were expelled about 150,000 Jews. From the province of Grodno about 60,000 in a night; given a few hours in which to leave—men, women and children, the old, the maimed, the sick, packed into freight cars, when they were available, carrying them along in their arms, wending their weary way if they must; from Poland and other provinces about another two hundred thousand—about a half million people condemned to suffering placed on a footing with criminals because the police are treating the expelled Jews exactly as if they were criminals."

B'NAI B'RITH BANQUET BY PITTSBURGH LODGES.

Initiation of 200 Candidates.

Sunday, Dec. 26, 1916, will long be remembered by the Jewish community of Pittsburgh as a distinctively red letter day, when the lodges of Pittsburgh initiated 200 candidates in the afternoon and held a splendid banquet in the evening.

The formal ceremonies of initiation were held at the joint meeting of the four Pittsburgh lodges at the Moose Temple in the afternoon, at which Brother Mark Alexander, a member of the general committee of the district grand lodge, and a pioneer in the work of local B'nai B'rith, presided. In his remarks he elaborated about the great issues concerning the Jewry of the world, and concluded with a statement of the aims and objects of the Order and its phenomenal growth during the past year, as evidenced by the huge assemblage of more than 500 enthusiastic members of the Order. He briefly introduced the officers in charge of the initiatory ceremonies, Brothers A. L. Solomon, past president of the district grand lodge; Honorable Jacob Singer, of Philadelphia, a member of the executive committee of the Order; Abe Weil, of Philadelphia, president of the district grand lodge, and Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, Pa., second vice-president of the district grand lodge. The honorary officers who occupied the platform included Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy, Judge Josiah Cohen, O. H. Rosenbaum and I. Reizenstein. Dr. Alfred Buka served most successfully as musical director in connection with the ceremony. The lodge room was appropriately decorated when 200 candidates, led by the monitors and their assistants, filed into the auditorium to the melody of inspiring anthems. The formal initiation deeply impressed the new recruits, and in keeping with the occasion, a splendid address was delivered by Mr. Jacob Singer, in which he outlined the work of the Order since its foundation, 73 years ago.

At the completion of the initiatory work, Mr. Alexander expressed gratitude to the local lodges for the splendid result of the membership campaign and the workers who participated therein.

The president of the district, Mr. Abe Weil, acknowledged his appreciation to the B'nai B'rith of Pittsburgh for the great increase of membership. Representatives of the local lodges expressed their delight at the re-awakening of the Order in Pittsburgh.

The meeting adjourned until 6:30 in the evening, when a banquet was served at the Ft. Pitt Hotel. More than 500 members of the Order and their ladies crowded the dining hall, which was fittingly decorated for the function.

Mr. Mark Alexander opened the evening program by calling upon the audience to sing a verse to the melody of "America," written by Mr. Richard S. Rauch, of Jericho Lodge. After the anthem was sung, Mr. Leonard Levin was introduced as toastmaster, who expressed regret that Judge Josiah Cohen, who was originally to have presided, was forced to forego this pleasure on account of a slight indisposition.

Mr. Isador Sobel, president of the Erie Home for Friendless Children, an institution maintained by the district, was the first speaker. He elaborated upon the work of the institution, and among other things emphasized the fact that the home was being maintained on strictly Kosher lines.

Mr. Abe Weil, president of the district, delivered a stirring address, taking for his subject, "The Work of Social Service by the Order." He was followed by Dr. Gotthard Deutsch, of Cincinnati, who was an entirely unexpected guest of the evening. He held the closest attention of his audience during his remarks, in which he expressed his inspiration at so illustrious an occasion and averred that the B'nai B'rith was an Order in which Judaism proved the propelling force.

Mr. Jacob Singer, of Philadelphia, in his brief remarks, added to the renown which he had won in his splendid address during the afternoon.

Mr. Edward Hemple, one of the most enthusiastic workers of the Order in Pittsburgh, was then informally called upon. As a result of his labors, six new lodges were instituted in West Virginia and Pennsylvania. In his modest manner he emphasized the fact that he had done nothing much; that his labor had only begun and that it is his purpose so to enlarge the scope of the work of the Order within the district that its roster will number 100 lodges within the next year.

The last speaker of the evening was Dr. Silver, of Wheeling, W. Va.

The Two Sons of Oil

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

It cannot be too often emphasized that the things that divide us now were the selfsame questions on which our ancestors differed in times bygone. Not that history repeats itself; history is rather one and uninterrupted, and whatsoever agitates the minds at one time is bound to exert its influence in aftertimes. It requires often thousands of years for a problem in the spiritual realm to unfold itself in all its potencies. A spark thrown into inflammable material may not ignite it at once; but unless stamped out it is only a mater of time when the conflagration will have sprung up, the flames mounting higher and higher and devouring everything in their way. In the world at large, Church and State have been the two giant antagonists battling for supremacy these many centuries. In our own midst Church and State, religion and nation-hood occupied the arena when there was a Jewish state; and under manifold guises and with a different staging, the two institutions are still wrestling with one another. All over the world priest and king have been rivals. Priests arrogated to themselves kingly functions, and kings not content with the purple aspired to the mitre. The history of mediaeval Europe is centered in the struggle between Rome and the Holy Roman Empire. Pope and Emperor matched power, the one hurling anathemas and interdicts, the other throwing his armies into the fertile Italian plains. Often there was a lull in the storm; but a truce meant only preparation for the next onslaught. Popes have been known to make overtures for peace and Emperors have gone to Canossa to plead mercy. Which of the two institutions is the older among the Jews may be a matter of doubt. The everlasting conflict may bear witness to a very ancient rivalry. Both seem to have had a singular hold upon the imagination and loyalty of the people. This much is certain, that when the political interests were strongest, the king dominated. The priest was the first subject of the realm, and no more. He had precedence after the king. When the royal institution was swept away through foreign conquest, the priest asserted himself. The prophet, Zechariah, in the days of Darius, is torn between a double allegiance: Zerubbabel of the seed royal is heir to the Davidis halo, and Joshua the high priest, is invested with a dignity of a lineage equally, if not more, ancient. The prophet would fain effect a peace between them: Let there be two crowned heads, two anointed chiefs, two sons of the oil.

What is called the Messianic hope is with a singular consistency ignored in the Pentateuch. We may grow weary with the bullocks and the rams and the goats and the tithes and the temple-taxes to which half of the Torah is devoted, but there is a point to all that. The Tabernacle dominates the camp, the temple overshadows the royal palace. The precedence of Judah's lion standard is just tolerated. The deeds of that valorous founder of the Judean dynasty could not be entirely wiped out of memory. But at the head of the community stands the hierarchy; it is a pyramid built up of the broad masses below and the menial Levites and the lesser priests with the highest among his brethren on the top. The Deuteronomist in line with the prophets considers the kingly office as a concession to the wilfulness of the people; it is marked off as a piece of assimilation to the environment. Ezekiel has room for the prince merely as a liberal giver to the temple. There his functions begin and end. The verdict of history as made by the prophets was that the kings with possibly three exceptions behaved badly. There were good priests, loyal lovers of the people, righteous like Simeon the just of whose praises Ben Sira sang with rapture. But there were also the disloyal Hellenists. Against them the people rose in righteous indignation. It placed a new line of functionaries at the re-consecrated altar. They merited the nation's gratitude. But they soon swerved from the path of their origin. They restored in their person the kingly office and would not relinquish the priestly diadem. And when at last Rome was throtling the Jewish soul, the people instinctively turned their back upon venal priests and the Jewish soul yearned for David of old.

The hotspurs of Galilee and later on the patriots led by Simeon of Cozeba turned to the Messianic hope and "with might and power" sought to bring back the ancient glories. The nation was once more paramount. The priests and the chief rabbis protested and at best were lukewarm. The hope of Judea collapsed beneath the legions of Rome. The leaders were bent upon effecting a truce. They would have the two institutions. The temple was no more, but would be re-built sooner or later. The regulations concerning temple and priesthood and the many kinds of sacrifices were to be made a subject of study. They would be prepared when the restoration came. The descendants of the priesthood were accorded a certain deference, but in reality their function had passed on to those learned in the law. The rabbi made himself comfortable in the seat of Aaron, and the synagogue became a little sanctuary. The Messianic hope which could not be silenced lived on in the prayer book. Ever since, we have been praying for the restoration of the Temple and the advent of the scion from the house of David. There was to be room for the two sons of oil. And all of it was to be accomplished not "by might and power," but "by the spirit." Far be it from us to be-little the "spirit." All through the centuries of the dispersion it is the spirit that maintained us. The great work of the synagogue which dominated the Jewish street as did the Temple erstwhile in the land of our fathers was to conserve a condition ill-adjusted to the environment but admirably adapted to the better days that were to come. But the synagogue and with it Jewry in the dispersion became petrified.

Then came the Jewish renaissance. Forces from without and within operated alike. The emancipation era brought with it problems of adjustment. A portion of our people proceeded to root out the ancient Messianic hope. For the Messianic hope at its core meant the holding fast to an undying belief in Jewish nationhood, in the capacity of the Jewish people for re-nationalization. A new species of hierarchy was set up. The little sanctuary became the great sanctuary, and the Temple in each community dominated Jewish interest. The synagogue, muchly changed in structure, in outward appearance, in service, was pronounced the center. Far be it again from us to underestimate the honesty of motive or the importance in result attaching to the movement. The Messianic hope had been invested through the mediaeval period with miraculous trappings which had enough of "spirit" but none of "power" behind them. The newer nationalism is not Messianic in so far as outward appearance goes. It discards miracles; it is not satisfied to sit still and wait for redemption to come with the clouds; it believes that God works miracles through human agencies, and that the greatest miracle is to infuse the spirit of life into the dry bones. Where others speak of a lost hope, it sings triumphantly that the hope is still potent. In its deeper meaning, however, the newer nationalism is but the self-same Messianic hope of the past. Over against the hierachy in any form it emphasizes the right of the masses to stand up and say what they want. Over against the modern synagogue, striving with all its power to concentrate religion within its walls, it asserts the vital interests of the Jew outside the synagogue and its sphere. When the Temple makes havoc with Judaism, it rises in revolt against "pastorized" Judaism. It remembers that the synagogue replaced the Temple of old. It was a momentous transformation. It may come to that that the synagogue will have to pave the way for an institution quite as vital but a bit more Jewish. What it is to be, nobody knows But we all feel that the change is imminent. Above all, the newer nationalism places itself squarely upon the emphasis on Jewish nationhood, and to that extent it denotes a revised form of the old Messianism. The old struggle is still on. What the outcome will be we know not. Probably another truce will make for an honorable peace between the two points of view. We shall emerge stronger. We shall have the "power" and the "spirit." There is room for both the sons of oil. There can be no Judaism without the Jew, and no Jewish people without Judaism.

FIVE JEWS IN GREEK PARLIAMENT.

Five Jews were returned as deputies in the Greek Parliament at the recent elections held there in December. All of these come from Salonika. Three of them, M. Joseph Mallah, Dr. M. Coffinas and M. Haim Cohen, sat in the previous chamber. The two new members are M. Salomon Meir, well known banker and landed proprietor at Triccala, Thessaly, and M. Leon Cattagno, principal of a Jewish Lycee at Salonika.

FAREWELL TRIBUTE TO RABBI M. FRIEDLANDER, OF OAKLAND, CAL.

A banquet at the Hotel Oakland on Tuesday evening, January 4, 1916, was held in honor of Dr. M. Friedlander, Representative citizens in every walk of life spoke of the great services to the church and to humanity rendered by Dr. Friedlander and of the loss sustained by Oakland through his departure from the city. Officers of the congregation, of which he was for so many years the head, joined in giving the farewell banquet.

Dr. S. H. Buteau was chairman of the evening. At the tables sat judges, ministers of various churches and men prominent in the public and business life of the community. Addresses were delivered by former Governor George C. Pardee, who spoke of the services of the guest of honor in his efforts to find employment for the needy. Supreme Justice H. A. Melvin told of his early associations with the guest of the evening, and how he had been of assistance to youthful offenders before the juvenile courts were called into existence. Col. John P. Irish, in his remarks, spoke of the spiritual superiority of the Hebrew people, typified in Rabbi Friedlander, as the foundation of modern civilization. Mr. Joseph R. Knowland, in his remarks, emphasized Oakland's need for more men of the character of Rabbi Friedlander. Judge Wm. H. Donohue and former Mayor F. K. Mott spoke of the Rabbi's work in helping straighten out chaotic conditions during the 1906 disaster.

LUNCHEON BY PASTORS.

Rabbi M. Friedlander, retiring head of the First Hebrew Congregation, of Oakland, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by sixteen pastors of churches and their congregations at noon January 5, 1916, at the Women's Exchange.

Rev. F. L. Goodspeed of the First Presbyterian Church presided. The older members of the party were called upon for short addresses, in which the public work of Dr. Friedlander was dwelt upon.

TESTIMONIAL BANQUET BY B'NAI B'RITH WORKERS.

A private banquet was arranged and participated in by 72 intimate friends of Rabbi Friedlander, and co-workers in the cause of B'nai B'rith, at the Hotel Sutter, on the evening of Dec. 29, 1915, in testimony of the high regard in which he is held by those who were best qualified to judge his great qualities as a man and as a Rabbi.

Dr. Martin A. Meyer acted as Toastmaster, and in his remarks referred to the valuable services the guest of honor had rendered the Oakland Congregation for more than twenty-two years, and his splendid services as a teacher in Israel. Messrs. Lucius L. Solomons, Otto Irving Wise and Senator E. L. Wolfe eulogized Rabbi Friedlander's good work and extended good wishes for his success in his new field of endeavor.

Brother Harry K. Wolff, President of the District Grand Lodge, on behalf of the Fraternity, presented Rabbi Friedlander with a token as an appreciation of his services, not only to the B'nai B'rith of his home city, but to the Order in general. Rabbi Friedlander responded in a fitting manner.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 of Los Angeles, Cal., held an unusually well attended meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 8th, 1916, at the B'nai B'rith building.

The Literary Committee arranged for an address by Rev. Dr. D. L. Liknaitz on the subject of "The B'nai B'rith Lodge and the Community." The Membership Committee presented a class of 30 candidates which were initiated in due form by the degree team of the lodge. The House Committee arranged a program of musical and vocal numbers which were excellently rendered.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served.

At the meeting of the B'nai B'rith Executive Committee held in Chicago recently, it was resolved not to take any part in the formation of the proposed Jewish congress or to be represented in it if it should be established. The Order, however, is willing to co-operate in "all critical emergencies with other recognized Jewish organizations for the achievement of immediate results in matters affecting the Jewish cause." While the B'nai B'rith Order is not the largest in numbers of the various Jewish Orders, it is easily the most influential, because of the wide scope of its activities and the quality of its membership. The action of its Executive Committee may therefore be regarded as most important and significant.—(American Israelite.)

THE B'NAI B'RITH AND OUR YOUNG MEN.

The B'nai B'rith can do an excellent work for our young men, and we are glad to note that it is making great efforts in this direction.

The order was organized about seventy-five years ago for philanthropic and educational purposes by a band of sturdy pioneers who had recently come from across the sea. One by one these sturdy pioneers are dropping out of the ranks and their places must be filled, and who is to fill them but our young men? We are glad to note that large numbers of our youths are joining the order in every city. Surely there could be no nobler work for our young men to do than to engage in B'nai B'rith activities, and while they are aiding others they are elevating themselves.

The order comprises among its members some of the most eminent men in American Israel, who will serve as an inspiration to our youth.

It is a source of much gratification to us that the B'nai B'rith in our city has acquired such an elegant home where our young men can find a pleasant place to spend their leisure time with an opportunity for pleasant companionship, and to improve themselves intellectually.

Our young men are entitled to such a home and we are glad that it has come at last after many years of earnest endeavor to accomplish this purpose.

We hope and trust that every Jewish young man in Cleveland will become affiliated with the organization and contribute his share toward enhancing its usefulness, which during the three-quarters of a century of its existence has been far-reaching.

Social service is to be a prominent factor in the future work of the order, and young men are eminently qualified to enter into it if they are only willing to give it the proper time and attention.—Jewish Review & Observer.

CLARKSBURG, W. VA.

The installation of officers of Clarksburg Lodge No. 727 of Clarksburg, W. Va., was held on Jan. 9, 1916.

A very pleasing incident during the meeting was the collecting and raising of an amount of $166.00 for the Jewish war sufferers abroad. Considering the fact that the lodge has a membership of only forty-five, it speaks well for the generosity and liberality of its members.

APPOINTMENT OF SOCIAL SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR DISTRICT NO. 4.

Grand President Harry K. Wolff of District Grand Lodge No. 4 has appointed a District Social Service Committee to work in conjunction with the Rev. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, director of the Social Service Department of the B'nai B'rith.

In naming this committee, the Grand President selected one member from each of the cities of the district, in which there is a B'nai B'rith lodge. Herman Gutstadt of San Francisco, a past grand president, is chairman of the district committee.

It is expected that this committee will be of material aid in carrying out the social service work launched by the Order at the Constitution Grand Lodge convention.

The full committee follows:

Herman Gutstadt, San Francisco, chairman; George N. Black, Los Angeles; David N. Mosessohn, Portland; Morris N. Schneider, Oakland; Max Grossman, Vancouver, B. C.; Herbert Schienfeld, Seattle; Max Fleischman, Bakersfield; M. J. Jacobs, Berkeley; Dr. S. H. Hartman, Victoria, B. C.; George J. Wolf, Aberdeen; L. Verstandog, Bellingham; Rev. J. K. Levin, Helena, Mont; Theo. Feist, Tacoma; L. M. Mendelson, Fresno; Sam Edelstein, Spokane; S. Marcus, Salt Lake City; D. Simon, Butte, Mont.; Rev. Dr. Montague Cohen, San Diego; Leo Garfinkle, Sacremento; Marcus Levy, San Bernardino, and S. S. Saferhill, Stockton.

FRENCH LEAGUE DEFENDS THE JEWS.

The French League of Mercy, composed of some of the foremost men of France, issued a circular defending the Jews against the calumnies published against them and narrating the Jewish sufferings in the war zone. The circular was spread broadcast throughout France.

The French Ambassador in London expressed his indignation against the reports that Jews are in sympathy with the Teutonic Allies. He declared that this was entirely without any foundation and that the French government will mete out due punishment to those who spread these calumnies.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

Published Monthly (except July and August)
under the auspices of the
INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Printed by Excelsior Printing Co., Chicago.

Editorial Office
1228 TRIBUNE BUILDING, CHICAGO.
All matter intended for publication should be addressed to the editor.

Subscriptions received through lodges only.
Subscriptions, one dollar per annum.

No responsibility is assumed for articles published over the signatures of the writers thereof.

JEWISH CALENDAR

5676-1916

Second Adar	Monday, March 6
Purim (Feast of Esther)	Sunday, March 19
Rosh-Chodesch Nissan	Tuesday, April 4
Passover (Pesach)	Tuesday, April 18
Passover (Seventh Day)	Sunday, April 24
Rosh-Chodesch Iyar	Thursday, May 4
Lag-B'Omer	Sunday, May 21
Rosh-Chodesch Sivan	Friday, June 2
Shabuoth (Confirmation Day)	Wednesday, June 7
Rosh-Chodesch Shebat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Fast of Tammuz	Tuesday, July 18
Rosh-Chodesch Ab	Monday, July 31
Fast of Ab	Tuesday, Aug. 8
Rosh-Chodesch Ellul	Wednesday, Aug. 30

5677-1916

LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

The New York "Sun" comments editorially on the appointment of Louis D. Brandeis to the United States Supreme Court as one "utterly and even ridiculously unfit." Other organs charged as being controlled by the "interests" also oppose the appointment, while a number of leading newspapers, and labor unions, and all of the Jewish press comment very favorably on the selection. We are among those who are pleased, and wish to be counted among those who deem the selection an honor to the Jewish race.

Some coward mailed an anonymous message to the Senate committee protesting against Mr. Brandeis' appointment solely on the ground that he is a Jew. The editor of the New York "Sun" and some others of his kind do not place their objection on that ground. We cannot resist the thought, however, that if Mr. Brandeis was not a Jew the same editors would be complimenting the President upon the appointment. Their failure to state any basis for their conclusion gives color to the thought. The fact that the President appointed Mr. Brandeis is in itself proof that the appointment is proper, for it is well known that the President has so far made no appointment for a judicial position without first being well informed as to the qualifications of his choice.

A few weeks ago the writer presided at a meeting composed of advocates and opponents of the Jewish congress. The discussion lasted many hours. Some of those present in opposing Mr. Brandeis' views thundered loudly and long. Mr. Brandeis never lost his temper, never raised his voice, but calmly argued all through the session like an able lawyer and a gentleman. Mr. Brandeis at no time showed the slightest impatience or disrespect towards any of the speakers and calmly replied to every point which was made against him.

If Mr. Brandeis does not possess the learning and temperament to properly qualify him for the position of judge, then it would be difficult to find a man who does. Mr. Brandeis has a long line of ancestors. One of his family stood on Mt. Sinai when the law was handed down. The people of his faith will live forever, for the Lord said "And I will betroth thee unto me forever." The way of those who come after will be less difficult, less full of that weary, patient suffering for conscience's sake that has characterized the life history of the Jewish people, as hatred and prejudice towards the Jew give place to fairer judgments. The example of a leading Jew holding steadfast and true to the high [illegible] that America loves cannot fail to [illegible] a fairer attitude towards the [illegible] as a whole. Mr. Brandeis, [illegible] judge, will know, and appreciate to the full, that in the discharge of the responsible duties of that high office he will have in his keeping the honor of that august and honorable body, the Supreme Court of the United States, the honor of the name of Brandeis, and the honor of the Jewish people With these treasures in his keeping,—. exalted by the consciousness of it,—Louis D. Brandeis will not fail.

The President has acted wisely; the Senate should promptly confirm his action.

THE DOUBLE TASK.

These are extraordinary times for the Jewish people. In times of peace we have our troubles in plenty. Our poor we always have with us; our congested districts, alas, breed in the young of both sexes vicious habits; we have our share of prisoners to look after; deserted wives and orphaned children require our succor; but the burden is none too staggering and our organizations are amply capable of coping with the evil to which no large section of the American people can be immune. Even in peace times conditions abroad are not always favorable to our brethren; and whether they come to our shores or remain behind they need looking after. The rightlessness of our people in certain lands is a primary source of untold evils with which we are called to deal either at close range or at a distance. But in these days of a world conflagration Jewish misery is reaching stupendous dimensions. This is one task: to afford quick, immediate relief where the staff of bread has been broken and the normal sources of sustenance have been cut off. We are by this time fully acquainted with the terrible lot of millions uprooted, beggared, forced to leave behind their scanty possessions, in need of immediate relief that soul and body may be kept together. Those that die heroically on the battle fields are not to be mourned for; weep for those who living must struggle for a livelihood under untoward conditions And yet the eye must not be dimmed by tears and the vision must be kept clear; for another task is awaiting us when the war is over. For if ours is a statesmanlike comprehension we recognize even in the present misery an echo of the Jew's rightlessness, and no matter what sacrifices the needs of the hour must call for we are in duty bound to look ahead and prepare and see to it that the cesspool of all Jewish misery must be stopped and that the Jew must be enfranchised and be granted his inalienable rights as a citizen. Jewish loyalty even in the lands of oppression has been vindicated in a most glorious manner; it is for us the more fortunately situated to wrest from unwilling governments what is the Jew's due.

To address ourselves to our double task we must be united more so than at any other time. Our own Order, with that characteristic liberality which has marked out activities on behalf of Israel at all times, has been more than ready and willing to co-operate with other organizations whether in relief measures or with reference to the after-the-war effects, the inevitable sequel to the present upturn of things political This is not the time to quarrel over precedence or to hark back to first principles. There is always a suspicion that the man or the organization that believes that salvation can come only along certain lines has an axe to grind and that for them the goal is less important than the road or the method by which it may be reached. We need millions upon millions of dollars. Let the money be collected and we care not how it is done and by whom. Unbidden by Jews, the President set aside a day in the past month for the American people to respond to the dire necessity of the Jewish people in the belligerent countries. The calamity must be great indeed that we must be willing to accept contributions from our neighbors. We Jews have been known not to fail any call for relief. We give freely to any worthy cause. And we are satisfied that in the hour of our need we shall be helped raising a fund which severely taxes our resources. And equally we are sure that when the further task of securing rights for the rightless will be laid before the liberty-loving American people we shall find sympathy and a willingness to help on the worthy cause. We want for the Jew nothing that he is not entitled to, and when we plead for him we mean to use our good offices for any and all peoples equally situated. So we shall welcome the good offices of all those who are in a position to make their voice heard and their influence felt, not indeed for chimeras, but for tangible results, for a line of action which will command attention because of its reasonableness and attainableness. And with this clarity of purpose we call upon all right-minded men: Give us your support to relieve temporary distress and on the other hand to make its recurrence humanely impossible. For this is our double task.

THE MINISTER'S TENURE OF OFFICE.

Our congregations are autonomous. They are united after a fashion with the prayer-book as a standard. But the union, whether of one type or another, wisely refrains from meddling with the internal affairs of the constituent units And so each congregation is free to govern its own affairs without let or hindrance. Still, the example of one will affect all. The conduct of congregational temporalities must indeed be the concern of nobody outside. But the way in which the spiritualities are managed is at least open to criticism. The lay boards must know that there is a lay public opinion to reckon with.

Somehow the old times have passed away. Ministers used to be secure in their positions. They might choose to transfer themselves to new fields of activity. The smaller congregation felt honored when its minister received a call from a larger center. But the congregation rarely saw itself constrained to terminate its contract with the incumbent. The minister's position, even when not directly so stipulated, was understood to be a life position. He had spent the best years of his life with his charge and when largely through his efforts the congregation grew, it was willing to avail itself of the matured powers and the tried energies of one whom every man and woman and child had come to know and to love. Nowadays ministers somehow seem to lose their grip upon their charges. The man may be learned enough, enjoying indeed national reputation. He may be a fine thinker and preacher. But he may have ceased to draw audiences. The fault may not lie with him. But he is made the scapegoat. Congregations may be saddled with debts. The minister ought to lift the indebtedness. Congregations may foolishly and recklessly involve themselves in debt. Then the minister is responsible. His past services are forgotten. He is turned adrift at a time of his life when to seek new pastures is out of the question, and the step is tantamount to turning him out of the ministry. It is true, new avenues of usefulness are just now opening themselves up for the clerical gentlemen whose career as ministers is either cut short through an unfriendly board or has for one reason or another become uncongenial to themselves. Theologians used to think that the ministry meant the highest and most honored office in Jewry. It is alas no more so. Not only in point of emoluments, but also of dignity other spheres of usefulness will command comparison. But congregations are undermining their own usefulness by bringing on a state of affairs which keeps in the pulpit only those that have to stay there. It is true in all professions that for one position vacated there will be found many applicants. But nowhere else outside the congregation is a premium in store for the tyro. Of course, where manner counts for more than matter and the youngster fresh from college commands the crowds while the tried colleague with a reputation behind him must take a back seat the time has come when the middle-aged preacher quickly outlives his usefulness But should it be so? We venture to enter a plea for the safeguarding of the minister's tenure of office. For show the youthful lieutenant of good appearance who will clatter his sword with a vim may seem to be destined to lead armies to victory. Yet, as the war has taught us, the retired generals, sexagenarians, and even beyond the age of three score and ten, are recalled to batter in fortresses and to do the real business of war. And so it ought to be in the ministry. The minister is he that deals with the eternal varieties. He interprets Judaism. He represents the Jew. Age, sobriety of judgment, experience, these are the assets. It is quite in order for a congregation to pension a minister who has grown old in the service. But to shelve the men of learning and experience and to send them back into the world after years of faithful service betokens a view of the congregational business which is to say the least short-sighted. Congregations have their own affairs to manage, but in their keeping is the weal of Judaism. And the weal of Judaism will best be served by a ministry sure of its position. Congregations and ministers ought to be united for better or for worse until the minister's death do part them. There ought to be no divorce for trivial causes. The cause of Judaism is higher than the cause of any single congregation. And the cause of Judaism demands that its servants shall be made secure in their positions. For the sake of their past achievements they ought to be kept there where they have grown and made the congregation grow with them. In the business world, tried employes are not turned loose to seek new places where they must compete with men younger and fuller of energy. Surely the synagogue which is a concern of spiritual effort should be animated with a sentiment of fairness toward its minister. And it is but fair to him that he be spared the humiliation of being turned out after decades of useful service. A return to older conditions seems to be imperative: life tenure for the Jewish minister.

UNITY LODGE HONORS RABBI MARTIN A. MEYER.

Rev. Dr. Martin A. Meyer, retiring president of Unity Lodge No. 273, San Francisco, was presented with a handsomely bound set of Stevenson's Works by his lodge at a banquet given in his honor on Thursday evening, January 13, 1916. Mr. Melville Salomon acted as toastmaster, while Louis Goodman made the presentation address. Among other speakers were Mr. Roy Cohn, who succeeded Rabbi Meyer to the presidency of the lodge, Otto Irving Wise and A. A. Voorsanger.

Dr. Meyer, in a happy talk, adjured the young men to put their daily endeavors on a maximum basis of efficiency as the sole means of obtaining success.

SAMUEL J. HERSKOWITZ.

In the death of Brother Samuel J. Herskowitz Zion Lodge No. 62 of Columbus, Ohio, mourns the loss of a valued member and past president. Although but thirty years of age he was one of the most prominent and popular young Jewish merchants of the city, deeply interested in the Order, the Jewish charities, the congregation, and all matters affecting Jewish interests.

ASSOCIATION FOR JEWISH RIGHTS.

There was formed last week in London an organization for the protection of Jewish rights in different lands. The object of the organization is to secure equal rights for the Jews in all lands where they are now oppressed and free access to Palestine, as well as the right to establish colonies in Palestine where they should have complete political and municipal rights. . It is interesting to note that the president of this organization is Lucien Wolf, who agreed to establish a plan for harmonious working along these line of the various sections of English Jewry. Mr. Wolf is also secretary of the Conjoint Committee and it is therefore expected that he will succeed in getting the co-operation of that committee with the new society, which also has a number of Zionist leaders.

JEWISH EDUCATION.

By Dr. David Philipson.

From the days that the lawgiver issued the command, "Thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children," and the sage enjoined, "Train the lad in the way he should go," the education of the young has been written large on the horizon of Jewish life. The methods of this education have changed with varying vicissitudes. It is impossible in a brief article to attempt even an outline of these methods as they would be given in a history of Jewish education. We are concerned primarily with the subject as it affects our present American Jewish generation. Owing to the public school system which has no stronger or more ardent adherents than the Jews of this country, there is a distinct differentiation between sacred and secular in the educational field. The term Jewish education signifies for us religious education.

As in all educational effort, so also here, the two great desiderata are competent teachers and good text books. Under present conditions we are greatly dependent except in our larger cities upon volunteer teachers. These willing workers must be furnished with proper tools. These tools consist chiefly of good text books. To furnish such literature is the aim and object of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations through its Board of Editors. If throughout the country, in large cities and in small, Jewish public school teachers or others who have pedagogical training can be enlisted as teachers in our religious schools and good teachers' manuals as well as text books for the classes can be placed in their hands, the problem will be begun to be solved.

Provision must be made too in all our communities for the religious instruction of all Jewish children whether their parents belong to congregations or not. Even in communities that have but few Jewish families, possibly not enough to maintain a school, instruction can and should be given in homes with the help of the publications of the Union.

It is notorious that there are thousands of Jewish children throughout the land who receive no Jewish education. Happily most of our congregations have adopted a liberal policy and have thrown their schools open to all children whether their parents are members of the congregation or not. If congregations there still be that have not adopted such a policy, the sooner they do so the better for them and the honor of the cause they represent. But even then there will be many thousands for whom there is no accommodation. Here is where real missionary work must be done. The Union through its Department of Synagog and School Extension is organizing schools where they do not yet exist. Some congregations are beginning to see their duty in this all important matter and are organizing branch schools way from their houses of worship, which schools are attended largely by children not of the congregation. Congregational Sisterhoods and the Council of Jewish Women are doing commendable work in starting schools. The Bureau of Education of the Jewish Community of New York has attacked the problem in the metropolis and is performing a fine service.

But with all the agencies at-work much more remains to be done. Millions of dollars should be at the disposal of these agencies instead of hundreds and thousands. There is no more important task before us than the religious training of the young. This is fundamental. The synagog rests upon the school. If we are to have faithful and loyal Jews in the future there must be adequate provision for Jewish education in the present. Jewish education synonyms spiritual and moral training. This produces the righteousness that exalts the people. "It is time to work for the Lord." More necessary work, more urgent duty than this, there is none.

POSITION OF THE JEWS IN WARSAW.

The authorities of Warsaw have prohibited members of the militia from searching Jewish shops without the permission of the police, because the searches were frequently carried out from dishonest motives. Yiddish interpreters have been appointed at the factories and the Zionist movement has been legalized. The prohibition of the holding of a conference of the Jewish communal leaders of Poland on educational and charitable questions has been revoked, but the greatest concession obtained for the Jewish schools was only a permit to use Yiddish as the language of instruction until the children understood Polish.

Many Liberal Poles protested against the demand of the anti-Semites to introduce a percentage norm for Jews into the Warsaw higher educational institutions.

RESOLUTIONS IN HONOR OF PRESIDENT ASHER.

At the last meeting of the General Committee the following resolution, relative to President Asher's administration, was introduced by Bro. Samuel Fleischman and unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the General Committee records its high appreciation of the services rendered to the District by President Herman Asher during his term of office. He has been indefatigable in his attention to the duties of his office. He has given most liberally of his time to the performance and advancement of its work. His many visits to Lodges invariably created enthusiasm among members and were productive of excellent results. He has been an enthusiastic executive. His work has been most efficient and his administration highly successful. Personally he has endeared himself to every member of the General Committee. The Committee extends to him its hearty congratulations upon his work and its hope that he may long continue to favor the District and the Order with his valued aid."

JEWS HONORED.

The New York State Prison Commission has re-elected Mr. Henry Solomon, of New York City, as president, an office which he has held for some years past.

At the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Medical Society, held in New York, Dr. G. G. Fischlowitz was elected president.

Moses E. Greenebaum was unanimously elected president of the Citizens' Association of Chicago, Ill., at the annual meeting recently.

Mayor Mitchell appointed Leo Arnstein, a director of the Mount Sinai Hospital, to be a commissioner of education for New York.

Leo Goodman of Memphis, Tenn., formerly president of District No. 7, I. O. B. B., has been elected commissioner of public utilities of that city.

Among the newly named assistant district attorneys of New York are Abraham G. Meyer, Joseph D. Edelson, Samuel Markewich, Newman Levy, Edward Weil and Alexander Lehmen.

Edwin Samuel Montagu, financial secretary to the British Treasury, has been given the portfolio in the cabinet of Cancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, succeeding Sir Herbert L. Samuel.

Mayor-elect Puchta, of Cincinnati, O., has selected Mr. Walter J. Friedlander for Service Director. Mr. Friedlander, who is thirty-five years of age, is a native of Cincinnati and a successful business man.

Three Jewish lawyers were recently appointed to high judicial positions in Germany. Herr Max Steinberg, of Munich, was appointed Staatsanwalt (district attorney). Landesgerichtsrat Moritz Silberschmidt was appointed to the Supreme Court of Bavaria. A similar distinction was conferred upon Landesgerichtsrat Herman Alexander. Another Jew, Dr. August Hausman, was appointed to the Regierungrat in Nurenberg. It is said that during the last thirty years there were but few Jews appointed to such high positions.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY.

The month of January is signalized throughout the southern districts of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith by stimulating celebrations of B'nai B'rith Day, and the communities which give themselves whole-heartedly to such observance not only give impetus to activities on the high plane of service and brotherhood but honor themselves. There are two distinct currents of influence in the life of the Order. One is the influence of altruism, which makes it the highest boast of the true Ben B'rith that the Order does not appeal to any selfish need, but gives its members the fine opportunity to be helpful to others. The other influence leads to Jewish self-expression and leads to the high hope that the Order shall grow into a stronger Jewish brotherhood, with a deeper Jewish consciousness and an exalted Jewish aim.

It is to be hoped that the orators who throughout the southern communities shall stir the latent loyalty of the members of the Order shall emphasize this twofold interest. To say that the aim of the I. O. B. B. is only altruistic is only a half truth. To say that it is only a Jewish brotherhood, for the sake of self-defense or self-expression, is to narrow the broad appeal of the Order. To put squarely before the men of Israel the strength and unity of an inclusive brotherhood devoted at the same time to the highest principles of social serving is to express a truth of which the bare statement should be an irresistible appeal. EMIL W. LEIPZIGER.

Annual Convention of District :-: Grand Lodge No. 1 :-:

The 64th annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 1 was held at the Hotel Somerset, Boston, Mass., beginning Sunday, Feb. 6, 1916.

The convention was called to order by President Herman Asher, who presented his Honor, Mayor Curley, who welcomed the delegates on behalf of the city.

"It is an exceeding pleasure," said the Mayor, "to welcome in convention an organization that is as truly Bostonian as Boston itself. This organization, like charity itself, is not local in its consideration of great problems. The world is its field of operation and humanity the ideal it serves, and whether it be to suppress tyranny in Russia or to demand justice in America, this organization has ever been in the forefront, and by force of logic and by intelligent direction has succeeded in preserving the best traditions in American life.'

President Asher responded to the words of greeting.

After the convention was duly organized President Asher read his message, the keynote of which was an appeal for liberty to the Jews throughout the world.

"In the latter part of 1914 and the early part of 1915," said Mr. Asher, "this Order made a prompt and substantial contribution in money for the purpose of relieving the distress of our co-religionists abroad. While this contribution was a relatively generous one, it was never intended that it should constitute our only financial assistance for the purpose in question. On the contrary, our order, with characteristic determination to render aid at the earliest possible time, essayed only to act as a pathfinder in this collection of funds, leaving the later and more comprehensive work to specially constituted agencies.

"Facing now the worst catastrophe that has overtaken our people, we must recognize that our obligation to render all the financial aid within our power still continues, and I therefore earnestly call upon our brethren to contribute generously to the funds now being raised for the purpose. No amount that may be obtained will be too large, and every man of us should tax his resources to the utmost to adequately share in this common burden.

"But, important and urgent as is the need of financial assistance, we must not for a moment forget our paramount obligation to persistently and continuously carry on our efforts to strike off the shackling bands of our brethren in the lands of their oppression.

Neutral, but Humane.

"Certainly, as citizens of this land we should maintain the wise rule of neutrality which is our country's policy in these trying days. But neutrality requires no sacrifice of humanity, and so, neither in times of war nor of peace, need we relinquish our striving for humane and civilized treatment of our brethren, deprived of human rights."

The election of officers for the ensuing year was held in the afternoon with the following result:

President, Judge Abraham K. Cohen, of Boston.

First Vice-President, Joseph Rosenzweig of New York.

Second Vice-President, Maurice P. Davidson, of New York.

Treasurer, Sol. Sulzberger, of New York.

Secretary, Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, of New York.

The members constituting the General Committee are:

Chairman Com. on Laws, Henry Lasker.

Pres. Board of Governors, Myron Sulzberger.

Chairman Com. on Finance, Edwin J. Goodhart.

irman Com. on Endowment. Samuel Campner.

Chairman General Fund and Charitable Objects, Rev. H. S. Goldstein.

Chairman Com. on the District Court, Charles H. Shapiro.

Chairman Com. on Intellectual Advancement, Joseph Levenson.

Chairman Com. on Religious Activities. Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman.

Herman Asher, Joseph H. Ullman, Charles Hartman, Charles M. Stern, Harry Cutler, I. Irving Lipsitch.

Samuel Fleischman, Counsel to District.

Banquet.

In the evening a banquet was tendered to the delegates and visitors at the Hotel Somerset. Rabbi M. M. Eichler acted as toastmaster. The banquet was a most brilliant affair, the speeches were eloquent and most appropriate. The speakers were:

Albert K. Sheldon, President of Amos Lodge.

Rev. Dr. M. M. Eichler, Toastmaster.

His Excellency, Samuel McCall, Governor of Mass.

His Honor, James M. Curley, Mayor of Boston.

Herman Asher, President of District No. 1.

Abraham K. Cohen, the new President of District No. 1.

Samuel Fleischman, Council to District No. 1.

Joseph Rosenzweig, First Vice-Pres. of District No. 1.

Maurice P. Davidson, Second Vice-President.

Charles Hartman, Member of Executive Committee of Constitution Grand Lodge.

And Hon. F. E. Stacey, Mayor of Springfield, Mass., who accompanied the delegates from that city.

Governor McCall said he looked upon the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith as one of the greatest forces for good in this country. Mayor Curley referred to the historic sketch of the Order which appeared in the souvenir of the banquet and said he wished that a copy of it were in the hands of every American citizen so that the country might know of the benevolent work done by the Jews of the Republic. The historic sketch was prepared for the occasion by the secretary of the District, Brother Bernard M. Kaplan, and edited by Brother Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee.

A feature of the convention was the initiation of some forty candidates by the Springfield degree team. The team was awarded the prize offered by President Herman Asher in the beginning of his term.

Brother Joseph H. Ullman initiated the past presidents. Brother Chas. Hartman installed the newly elected officers, assisted by Brother Jacob B. Klein of Bridgeport.

CLASS INITIATION BY HOUSTON, TEXAS, LODGES.

On Tuesday, Jan. 18, 1916, at the Montefiore Temple Beth Israel, Houston, Texas, initiation of a class of twenty candidates was held in the presence of the largest assembly of members of the Order that has ever gathered in Houston. As a result of Dr. Silber's visit to Houston, thirty-six applications were secured. The meeting place was conveniently arranged for the initiation ceremony which was the sole purpose of the joint meeting of the three Houston lodges. Dr. Barnstein acted as president and the short address he administered at the conclusion of initiatory work served to enthuse the new members. Others taking part in the initiation were: Sol. Schoenmann as vice-president, S. J. Westheimer as monitor and Dr. W. Willner as assistant monitor. Brother Schoenmann, vice-president of the District Grand Lodge, delivered an appropriate address, as did also Dr. Willner, both being instructive and inspiring. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served. Keen delight and enthusiasm prevails in B'nai B'rith circles of Houston, and the outlook for the future is very bright.

NSTITUTION OF LINCOLN LODGE AT PHILADELPHIA.

The institution of Lincoln Lodge No. 780, of Philadelphia, Pa., took place at the Hotel Walton on Wednesday eve., Jan. 5, 1915, and was followed by a banquet.

Mr. David Phillips is president, Mr. Jacob D. Lit, vice president, and Mr. Joseph Kun, monitor of the new organization, which is composed of about one hundred well-known young business and professional men of the city.

Regular meetings of the new organization will be held at the Hotel Walton monthly.

JEWS AND CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

In the course of a communication from Mr. Robert C. Love, chairman of the Christian Science publication committee of Louisiana to the editor of the Jewish Ledger of New Orleans, Mr. Love remarks:

"The Christian Science Church does not encourage nor solicit members of other denominations to sever their affiliation with their church. Before an applicant can unite with the church he must have severed his connection with any former church, which makes dual membership impossible. And so in subscribing to its tenets the Jew thereby ceases to be a member of the synagog by his act of severing his former relationship."

Report of Dr. Berthold Timendorfer

President District Grand Lodge No. 8, I. O. B. B.

Presented at the 128th Session of the General Committee Nov. 28, 1915

In my report to the last session of the General Committee, I could express my satisfaction with the fact that our apprehensions regarding the shock given to the Order by the war were, thanks to the activity of the individual lodges, very quickly dispelled. This feeling of satisfaction still continues to exist today.

Of course, the war could not remain entirely without harmful consequences, also for the German District. For the first time during its existence we will have to reckon in the year 1915 with a decrease in the number of members.

While at the end of 1914 the membership of our District was 8983, it fell, up to the first of October, 1915, to 8878. It is to be feared that the retrogression at the end of 1915 will reach the number of 150 members. In discussing the items of my report, the members of the General Committee will have the opportunity to determine whether the lodges shall undertake to increase the membership during the winter and in what manner they shall do it.

While up till now the addition of new members amounted annually to 200 and 300, during the first 9 months of 1915, all the lodges of the German District admitted only 16 new members.

* * *

Sixty-two lodges have replied to our circular letter in which we asked for informatioin regarding the number of brethren taking part in the war. 1137 brethren and 1934 of their sons and sons-in-law have been summoned to serve. The four Berlin lodges are included in the foregoing numbers, but not in the following statistics, which only extends to 58 lodges, as in giving the numbers the Berlin lodges did not state the number of sons and sons-in-law separately.

When the individual lodges are arranged according to the percentage of the brethren in the field, we find that 14 lodges have participated to the extent of 25 per cent, and more. Lothringen Lodge stands at the head with 36.770 per cent; 28 lodges took part with 15 to 25 per cent, and 15 lodges from 5 to 15 per cent. Only in one lodge the participation amounts to less than 5 per cent.

Of the total number of brethren, 31! were, in all, promoted, which is equal to 31 per cent; 29 were raised to the rank of officers.

108, equal to 10.76 per cent, were distinguished with the iron cross.

23 received other marks of distinction

25 were wounded.

26, equal to 3 per cent, were killed.

Of the sons and sons-in-law, 396 were, in all, promoted, 47 of them to officers.

151 received the iron cross; 144 were wounded, and 75 killed.

74 of the brethren of the four Berlin Lodges were distinguished with the iron cross; 7 are missing; 21 are wounded; 49 were promoted, 11 to officers; 30 were killed.

According to this, we may say in summing up that of all the war participants (sons and sons-in-law included), 131 were killed, 190 are wounded, 333 have received the iron cross, and 756 were promoted, and 87 of these to officers.

* * *

I cannot report today about the charity work of the lodges. You know we have requested the approved statistician, Dr. Segall, to compile a list from the individual reports, which will not appear till after the war, and will enlighten us about the war relief work.

But the following can already be stated now:

The charitable work of the lodges can be divided into gifts of money and natural products, personal relief work and a group of social measures which bear their own special character and are composed of money distributions and personal work.

The sum raised by the lodges amounts now already to more than 400,000 mark. The committee for the welfare and care of sufferers from the war of the Berlin lodges alone has expended about 50,000 mark. Compared with the huge amounts which were raised for social purposes during the war time, the sum expended by the Berlin lodges does not seem to be immeasurably high. But we have to take notice of the fact that here reference is made only to the sums which were raised by the lodges as such. It is self-understood that the individual brethren of the lodges have like all other German Jews participated in the great relief work with the greatest willingness to [illegible] and the fact of belonging to the Order has surely had an [illegible] [illegible] the joy of giving.

[illegible] contributions were made in detail for the following purposes:

1. [illegible] the Red Cross. The contributions in some of the individual lodges reach the splendid amount of 4000 mark, and went nowhere lower than 150 mark.

2. Like the Red Cross, the Red Crescent was also remembered with contributions, which are, of course, by far not as large as those for the Red Cross.

3. Also all other arrangements for the welfare of the war sufferers were supported, so before every thing the city war relief, which received from very many lodges allowances of 1000 mark and more, so did the National Organization for Survivers, and other arrangements for the benefit of war sufferers in the fatherland.

The social measures in favor of the Jews we can separate into four groups:

1. Assistance of German Jews within or without the congregation.
2. Asisstance of those belonging to friendly states.
3. Social measures in favor of those belonging to lodges.
4. Taking care of Jewish soldiers.

Concerning the first point, quite a number of lodges have placed considerable sums of money at the disposal of the Board of Directors of their congregations or the special aid committees within the congregation. We know lodges which have placed not less than 4000 mark at the disposal of sufferers, coreligionists of the places where these lodges are located, who have been plunged by the war into economic distress. But the lodges have also given liberally for Jewish purposes outside of the congregation, before everything for the officials of the congregations and religious institutions of East Prussia, who were suffering from the war, and for the afflicted Jews in Alsacia and Loraine.

It is known that the lodges have taken care in an exceptional measure of the grievously harmed coreligionists in Galicia. Even in times of peace the care for these poor coreligionists was already an essential part of the social activity within the individual lodges. Sums of money and especially clothing were sent in a lavish measure to the refugees. The lodges also assisted to a great extent the Polish and Russian Jews; those lodges were especially active in this respect whose communities consist of a strong settlement of Polish or Russian Jews, who after the outbreak or the war either had to leave the country or were interned. These were well taken care of.

The assistance which the lodges extended to those who belonged to them forms a large chapter. Beginning in the form of friendly gifts up to the relief extended to members of the lodge who were in need, whose existence the war had undermined, and relatives of lodge members whose supporters are at the front. It is pleasant to state that only a small number of lodges had to attend to these two tasks.

In order to do justice to all the demands for social measures within the lodges, which came to the lodges in the course of the war, a number of lodges have created a special committee for the care of war sufferers and a war relief fund. Special mention is to be made here of the committee for the aid of war sufferers of the Berlin lodges, which gave not less than 100,000 mark for the sole purpose of helping those Berlin brethren who on account of the war have fallen into temporary or permanent distress. The lodge in Mannheim has created a war fund of over 25,000 mark. Also numerous other lodges have created war funds with greater amounts, and it is known that one lodge has urged that all lodges may create such a war fund for the duration of the war, so that when help is demanded it can be given instantly.

The care of Jewish soldiers was finally accomplished by collecting friendly gifts, nursing the wounded, boarding on holydays, providing Kosher fare, organizing of Chanukkah and Purim evenings, etc.

As stated in the beginning opposite the donations of money and natural products we must place the purely personal acts. As such we must designate the co-operation of lodge members, especially lodge sisters, in the service of the Red Cross, furthermore the activity of the Jewish nurses in the hospitals. The sister unions especially have distinguished themselves by excellent work. The sisters have everywhere placed themselves at the disposal of the National Women's Service, depot service or other arrangements for the good of the fatherland and were willing to work to the utmost of their power. Nearly in every lodge knitting evenings were arranged.

In conclusion a third sphere of social activity is to be named which plays a prominent role, namely the making ready of lodge rooms for the voluntary care of the sick, for the arrangement of hospitals, for the fulfillment of other kinds of tasks for the benefit of the fatherland, for the creation of independent hospitals, which was done by the four Berlin lodges, the lodge in Leipzig, Borussia Lodge, Glueckauf Lodge, Esra Lodge, Raphael Kosch Lodge and Saar Lodge. Here belongs further the forming of the kindergartens which exist in many lodges and children's retreats, which were turned into kindergartens and retreats for war children as well as the creation of special public kitchens for children and adults.

In the face of this extent of expediture for the care of war sufferers, it is more than gratifying that the sum total of all the funds of the German lodges has not decreased, but has even increased. While the sum total of all the funds of the German lodges was, at the end of 1913, equal to 2,564,712,08 mark, it amounted, at the end of 1914, to 2,604,247.15 mark, and on October 1, 1915, it was equal to 2,655,672.25 mark.

This can only be explained by the special voluntary gifts donated during the war, especially through foundations.

Among these foundations, I name with special sorrow, the foundation of a brother who gave to his lodge 10,000 mark in memory of his two sons who were killed in the war.

To be sure, a number of lodges in which no foundations were established, partly had very considerable deficits, among them are especially the Berlin lodges, it may probably be because of their magnanimous activity in caring for the war sufferers.

* * *

On October 1, 1915, the following seven lodges had the largest funds:

Lessing Lodge...........	267,013.59 Mk.
Berthold Auerbach Lodge	195,354.60 Mk.
Frankfurt Lodge.........	178,029.86 Mk.
Montefiore Lodge........	173,898,22 Mk.
Deutsche Reichs Lodge...	147,157.87 Mk.
Henry Jones Lodge......	146,346.76 Mk.
Fraternitas Lodge........	140,911.89 Mk.

The property which is under the administration of the Grand Lodge has fortunately also increased. It amounted at the end of December, 1914, to 463,895.80 mark, and on September 30, 1915, to 541,689.31 mark.

The source of this increase is easily stated. Not counting a few smaller foundations which came additionally to the Grand Lodge during the time covered by this report, the constitution Grand Lodge in America has sent a total of 115,000 mark to the German District.

We have the more reason to thank the Constitution Grand Lodge in America for this rich remittance, and I feel the need of again expressing my hearty thanks in this place. For even if we have resolved not to use the money from America for the German District but for work abroad and mainly for the Jews in these foreign countries, it is nevertheless clear that we could not have done near as much for the aims of the German district if through the American money we did not have had so much left for the relief work abroad. For even if the American money had not been here we could not have shirked all obligations to the Jews abroad.

The following fully proves how rich in blessings was the bestowal from America:

The Kraus-aid fund, the so-called emergency fund, which was newly founded in 1913, amounted in the year 1914, to 8358 mark, and in the year 1915, to 8831 mark. Total, 17,189 mark.

This catastrophy fund had nearly all melted away. We considered ourselves justified to take from this catastrophy fund what money we needed to pay the appropriations to the Red Cross, the Red Crescent, Bulgaria, the care of bathing places and other institutions. Through the money received from America we are in a position to refill the catastrophe fund to the amount of 17,189 mark, which it must have had if nothing had been taken from it.

We believed that by so doing we were fulfilling a noble duty, and when America shall call us to help, in case of a catastrophe, we are able to do it.

We possess a sum of 15,000 mark, which, according to the instructions from America, we can only use for the Jews in Russian Poland. We have requested the Hilfsverein der deutschen Juden, the field Rabbi, Brother S. Levi and our Brother Ex-President Dr. Haas in Warsaw for propositions how we shall use these 15,000 mark. After we will receive the propositions the Committee will have to attend to the matter.

The Grand Lodge possesses at the present moment an aid fund for the Jews in foreign lands, which amounts to 20,000 mark, an aid fund for German Jews of 15,000 mark, and a fund for the lodges and their brethren of 30,000 mark,

* * *

But we not only have to render thanks to the leaders of the Order in America for the money, but we must also think of them in love for other reasons. It is known that the editorial management of the organ of our Order, "B'nai B'rith News" has by its demeanor created quite a feeling of disharmony between the German District and the American head of the Order. It must surely be ascribed to the influence of the leaders of the Order that the conduct of the Order's organ has so quickly changed. The testimony can now not be refused to the paper that it observes strict neutrality.

But in spite of the disharmony the conviction of the German District has never faltered that our highest authority of the Order, especially the President of the Order, Brother Kraus, has at all times manifested a true brotherly sentiment. I can only repeat what I have already said in other places: If it were possible to make the relation of the German District with Brother Kraus still more cordial than it has been heretofore, the war and the activity of Brother Kraus called forth by it would have been able to accomplish it.

* * *

The Hospital Train is to be looked upon as a sign, visible for quite a distance, of the activity of the Grand Lodge The Grand Lodge has created this sign with the help of the German Lodge. and upon the suggestion of the Rheinland Lodge. The Hospital Train has completed its twenty-first trip, has carried thousands of wounded soldiers from the battlefield to be cured in their homes, and has found unlimited recognition from private and official sources.

The lodges deserve special thanks for the support of this work. Aside from the friendly gifts which are still coming in, the account of the Hospital Train shows a balance of 13,000 mark. This balance will hardly be sufficient for the prospective duration of the war. The friendly gifts must also be considerably increased. But I personally have always occupied the standpoint that the Grand Lodge need absolutely have no worry regarding the Hospital Train. The lodges will not forsake their work.

The Grand Lodge considered of great importance the correspondence with the Grand Lodges and the lodges in the countries which are allied with Germany or are neutral. The political and military interest which unites us with Austria-Hungary naturally made its impression upon the close relationship of the lodge life of both empires. We have offered to take part in the relief work in Galicia later on and in consequence of the war new thoughts and new ways may develop for the relation between the German and Austrian lodges.

* * *

Our relations with the Orient have also been very much strengthened through the fraternity of arms with Turkey and Bulgaria. When we appropriated a sum of money to the Red Crescent and have now submitted a similar proposition to the General Committee for the Bulgarian Red Cross we intended to manifest outward signs of our sympathy.

* * *

Upon our suggestion the Executive Committee published a protest against the Russian horrors, in the September issue of the "B'nai B'rith News," it has brought besides articles by our Brother Paul Nathan which it had also caused to become public in other ways. It must afford us special satisfaction that President Wilson writes such appreciative words of the work of the Order in a letter to our Brother Simon Wolf on the occasion of the convention of the Constitution Grand Lodge.

* * *

Our relations with the most diversified Jewish organizations also remained friendly.

Together with the Hilfsverein der deutschen Juden, with whom we are since years united in special cordiality, we have twice issued a call for the relief funds of 1914-15 The contributions from lodges and from lodge members are mostly sent direct to the place of payment, and the sums which came to the Grand Lodge or to me and those which are still coming, are also sent, according to an agreement with the Hilfsverein, in the name of the donor direct to the place of payment, where a plain receipt is issued. This is the reason why the

(Continued on page 16)

.·. Cleveland B'nai B'rith .·.

Activities in New B'nai B'rith Club House

The magnificent new home of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 of Cleveland, Ohio, was formally opened on Sunday, Jan. 2, 1916.

The affair was practically an all-day session continuing until nearly midnight, and comprised a reception, dancing, a banquet, an initiation, and installation of the recently elected officers. The afternoon was devoted to young people who took possession of the great dance hall. Then came the banquet in the beautifully decorated banquet hall, with Mr. S. J. Kornhauser, president of the District Grand Lodge, as toastmaster. In his introductory talk he told of his recent travels through the district and spoke of the prosperity of the Jews of the far west. Mr. J. C. Rahming recited a number of dialect stories which won for him much applause. Dr. D. A. Huebsch spoke of the work of the Anti-Defamation League and emphasized the need of abolishing prejudice of Jew against Jew.

After the banquet the members adjourned to the ball room where a class of more than 100 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge. After the ceremony was over the ladies and non-members were invited to the lodge room to witness the public installation of the recently elected officers, conducted by the president of the district, Mr. Kornhauser.

The new president, Mr. W. R. Wiedenthal, expressed his gratitude at the honor conferred upon him and complimented Mr. Alf. A. Benesch, the retiring president, on the successful membership campaign conducted under his administration. Short talks were also delivered by Brothers A. A. Benesch, Max E. Meisel and A. Lewenthal. After the public meeting was closed, dancing was indulged in until midnight.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 12. 1916, Rabbi Jos. Silverman of Temple Emanuel, New York, past president of District Grand Lodge No. 1, addressed the lodge on the subject, "The Pride of the Jew."

A junior membership for young men under twenty-one is being organized by the lodge, and already has quite an enrollment. The annual dues will be $6.00, entitling its members to all the privileges excepting attendance at the regular meetings of the lodge.

Under the auspices of the lodge a bowling tournament has been inaugurated which began its operations on Monday, Jan. 3, 1916. The league is composed of sixteen, recruited entirely from among the members of the lodge.

On Thursday, Feb. 3, 1916, a smoker for members only was held. This consisted of an entertainment given in the ball room, followed by lunch and cigars in the luncheon room. The entertainment committee provided an excellent program with prominent speakers, including Mayor Harry L. Davis.

On Sunday, Feb. 6, 1916, a dancing party was held in the ball room, which was open to the members and their friends.

On Thursday, Feb. 10, the lodge will hold an open meeting, at which prominent speakers will deliver addresses on timely topics.

Feb. 17 will be a notable day, on which the ladies will have full charge of the meeting. A lady toastmaster will preside and all the speakers will be women. Members of various women's societies will be invited to attend the meeting, which will be the first of its kind ever held.

The annual meeting of the lodge, which was held on Tuesday evening, Dec. 21, was attended by more than 400 members. Election of officers was the principal feature of the meeting.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE, WASH.

At the annual meeting of the Hildesheimer Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, held in December, the officers for the ensuing year were elected. At the conclusion of the meeting a supper was served and an entertainment concluded the evening's program.

Installation of the newly elected officers was held at the second meeting in January.

Rainier Lodge No. 627 held a public meeting on Jan. 27, 1916, at which the officers were installed and a class of eight candidates was initiated in the presence of an unusually large attendance.

A meeting of Rainier Lodge No. 627 was held on Monday evening, Dec. 27, 1915, at which officers for the ensuing year were elected. After disposing of the general business of the lodge a smoker was held, during which refreshments were served.

Installation of officers of the Daughters of the Covenant of the Seattle Lodges was held on Jan. 20, 1916, Mr. A. Levy conducting the exercises. An interesting program, followed by the serving of refreshments and the holding of a reception, were the features of the evening.

RAMAH LODGE, CHICAGO.

The meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33, of Chicago, held on Jan. 13, 1916, was attended by almost 300 of its members. The special order of business consisted of the installation of officers, initiation of a class of 30 candidates, an address by Rev. Dr. Samuel Sale, of St. Louis, on "Race Culture—A Defense of the Jew," also an address by Judge Samuel Alschuler, of the United States Court, on the subject, "The Duties of a Ben B'rith." At the conclusion of the addresses the lodge by a rising vote and demonstration of hearty applause testified its appreciation of the speakers for their instructive and entertaining addresses.

The reports of the officers for the year were submitted, showing an increase in the membership for the year of 364, with the further information that more than 150 candidates are awaiting initiation. The financial condition of the lodge was shown to be excellent, its general assets being $11,014.00, and its disbursements for the past year for charitable, benevolent, educational and social purposes amounting to the princely sum of $9,801.54.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

The public installation of officers of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 and Oregon Auxiliary No. 2, Daughters of the Covenant, was held on Tuesday evening, Jan. 11, 1916, at the B'nai B'rith building.

Portland's leading musical artists rendered vocal and instrumental selections. The installation ceremonies were conducted by Brother David N. Mosessohn, second vice-president of District Grand Lodge No. 4, and A. Boskowitz, district deputy, and A. Rosenstein, ladies' auxiliary deputy.

The following was the program of exercises:

1. 'Cello Selection. Charles Duncan Raff
   Accompanied by Miss Alicia McElroy
2. Opening of Meeting—
   Theodor Herzl Lodge..........
   ....Nathan Weinstein, President
   Daughters of the Covenant.....
   ...Mrs. J. Lauterstein, President
3. Vocal Selection..................
   .....Mrs. Henry William Metzger
   Accompanied by Mischa Pelz
4. Introduction of District Deputies of District Grand Lodge No. 4, A. Boskowitz and A. Rosenstein
5. Official Visit and Introduction of Second Grand Vice President David N. Mosessohn
6. Installation of Officers, Theodor Herzl Lodge No. 314
   By A. Boskowitz, District Deputy
7. Vocal Selection..................
   ....George Hotchkiss Street
   Accompanied by Mischa Pelz
8. Installation of Officers, Daughters of the Covenant
   By A. Rosenstein, Ladies' Auxiliary Deputy
9. Address—Second Grand Vice-President David N. Mosessohn, District Grand Lodge No. 4
10. Piano Selection. Mrs. Beatrice Dierke

With an attendance that taxed the lodge room to its capacity, the last meeting of the year of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 was held on Tuesday evening, Dec. 28, 1915, at the B'nai B'rith building, amid much enthusiasm and good fellowship.

The election of officers was one of the principal features of the evening, following which a class of 50 candidates was initiated into the lodge amid impressive ceremonies. This was followed by a supper, presided over by Chairman N. Mosessohn, of the entertainment committee, who also presented the retiring president, Brother M. Weinstein, on behalf of the lodge, with a beautiful token in appreciation of his services. Brother Weinstein responded most fittingly. Toasts were made by various speakers and the affair was brought to a close at midnight.

Oregon Auxiliary No. 2, Daughters of the Covenant, held a successful meeting on Dec. 28, 1915, at which officers were elected for the ensuing year. A splendid supper was served following the meeting, after which short talks were indulged in by a large number of the members.

The Daughters of the Covenant, auxiliary to the Portland lodges, have resolved to continue their series of entertainments, which are to take place monthly. The first of such parties for the new year was given on the afternoon of Jan. 4, which consisted of card playing and a concert. Beautiful prizes were given and refreshments were served.

Portland Lodge No. 416, of Portland, Ore., held an interesting meeting on Jan. 18, 1916, at which interesting discussion was had on various timely subjects.

The B'nai B'rith Building Association is planning to make many changes in the near future whereby more club facilities will be given to members.

Under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith Y. M. H. A., of Portland, a public meeting was held at the B'nai B'rith Hall on Jan. 19, 1916, at which Dr. H. C. Shidlovsky delivered a lecture on the condition of Jews abroad.

Newly elected officers of Portland Lodge No. 416 were installed by District Deputy A. Boskowitz on Tuesday evening, Jan. 4, 1916.

Initiation of new members also took place and a most successful year is predicted for Portland Lodge.

A leap year character dansant, given by the B'nai B'rith Y. M. H. A. at the B'nai B'rith building on Saturday evening, Jan. 2, 1916, was one of the most successful affairs ever given in that community. The affair was unusually well attended and it required the capacity of both halls in the building to accommodate the great throng. Various novel features were introduced, which occasioned much merriment. The halls were attractively decorated and the programs were unique.

ORIENTAL-HILLEL LODGE, CHICAGO.

The first meeting of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72, of Chicago, in its new quarters, the new Morrison Hotel, was the best attended meeting the lodge ever held. More than 250 of its members and visiting brethren from the other lodges filled the hall to its utmost capacity. The new degree team of the lodge, consisting of Brothers H. H. Krinsky and A. F. Mecklenburger, ably officiated in the initiatory ceremonies with a class of 31 candidates.

The special feature of the meeting was the address by Rabbi Dr. Tobias Schanfarber, of Chicago, on the syllabus submitted by the director of intellectual advancement of the district, "How to Bring Jews Back to Judaism." In eloquent words he pointed out how old Jewish traditions and customs were being discarded; he emphasized the lamentable failure on the part of the Jews to affiliate with congregations, and deplored the fact that the Jewish home life of today is unlike that of former years, which was recognized as a model of purity and sanctity. In strong words and in a forcible manner he called upon the audience to again rally to the support of the old faith, to cultivate the old time virtues of the Jew, humility and devotion to God and to the home, and expressed his appreciation of the fact that the B'nai B'rith and its lodges are a faithful ally to the synagogue and the temple. At the close of his address he was greeted with an emphatic demonstration of approval

After routine matters had been disposed of, including the election of trustees and the installation of the newly elected officers for the ensuing term by the president of the district, Brother Benj. J. Samuels, the lodge was closed and refreshments were served.

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

The fifty-third annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 4 will open in San Francisco Sunday, February 20, 1916, continuing for three days. Grand President Harry K. Wolff, in his annual message, will review the district's activities during the past year and will, no doubt, show a substantial membership gain during the term.

The committee of fifty, representing the San Francisco lodges, is making arrangements for a leap year dance, to be held on Sunday evening, February 27, 1916, for the benefit of the Jewish war sufferers in Europe. Many novelties are being planned and it is promised that the affair will be one of the most original of its kind ever held. All the proceeds will be turned over to the relief fund for the Jewish war sufferers.

Ophir Lodge No. 21 and its auxiliary held a joint public installation of officers on January 5, 1916, in the B'nai B'rith building. The ceremonies were in charge of Grand President Harry K. Wolff, and an appropriate program, presided over by District Deputy Richard E. Gutstadt, was successfully carried out.

On Thursday evening, January 27, 1916, Ophir Auxiliary No. 4, Daughters of the Covenant, held a public reception in B'nai B'rith hall in honor of Grand President Harry K. Wolff, whose most successful term of office is nearing its conclusion.

An excellent musical program contributed to the interest and pleasure of the evening, the principal feature of which was an address by Mr. Lucius S. Solomons, first vice president of the Order. At the close of the program refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

At the last meeting of Cremieux Lodge No. 325, Rabbi Herman Rosenwasser retired from the office of the presidency of the lodge, and the occasion was made use of for the presentation of a beautiful gift by the lodge in appreciation of his services. The presentation address was made by Brother Richard E. Gutstadt. The gift consisted of a beatifully bound set of books entitled "History of All Nations."

Dr. Rosenwasser, in accepting the gift, responded most beautifully and pledged his continued zeal for the Order and loyalty to the lodge.

SUPERIOR LODGE, MARQUETTE, MICH.

Superior Lodge No. 775 was instituted in August, 1915, and from the report submitted by the lodge it is evident that the intellectual progress of the lodge has been excellent and that the work of the Order has been taken up by the lodge with sincere enthusiasm. More than 85 per cent of the membership of the lodge are regular attendants at every meeting, where the true principles of the Order are put into practice in many and various ways.

B'nai B'rith Day Celebrations

OMAHA LODGES CELEBRATE JOINTLY B'NAI B'RITH DAY.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly observed by Nebraska Lodge No. 354 and Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521, by a joint celebration held on Sunday, Jan. 16, 1916. The program filled the entire day and evening. It was ushered in with a reception at the Fontenelle Hotel in honor of the Grand Lodge officers delegated to attend the celebration.

In the afternoon a joint meeting of the two lodges was held, at which over fifty candidates were initiated out of a class of sixty-five, which had been secured for that occasion. The meeting was one of the finest that the lodges ever held and was particularly noted for the enthusiasm that prevailed. Addresses on the work of the Order were made by Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, director of the social service department of the Order, and Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul, chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District Grand Lodge, guests of honor of the occasion.

Banquet.

In the evening at six o'clock a banquet was held at the Hotel Loyal which was under the auspices of the two lodges and the Ladies' Auxiliary of Wm. McKinley Lodge. About 200 members and their ladies participated. Mr. Arthur Rosenblum acted as toastmaster. Mr. Isidor Ziegler responded to a toast on behalf of Nebraska Lodge, and Mr. Isidor Rees performed the same duty for Wm. McKinley Lodge. Miss E. Epstein represented the Ladies' Auxiliary on the program of toasts. The visiting Grand Lodge officers made brief addresses complimenting the three organizations for the enthusiasm manifested, and for the work accomplished by them in the interests of the Order. Among the out-of-town visitors was Mr. M. Friend of Lincoln, Neb., member of the General Committee of the District.

Public Meeting.

At the conclusion of the banquet, which was rushed through with neat dispatch, a public meeting was held at Temple Israel, which was called to order by Rabbi Frederick Cohn, and at which Mr. Henry Monsky acted as chairman. Dr. Coffee delivered the principal address.

Dr. Coffee said that the twentieth century would stand out as an age in which the old testament and its teachings had been rediscovered, after having been lost sight of for eighteen centuries.

The B'nai B'rith Order, he said, accepts the Jewish principle, taught in the old testament, that God is just and never made one man rich and another poor.

The object, he pointed out, of the social service branch of the order was to make poverty impossible by a "big brother" movement, the giving not of money, but of moral support and opportunity.

Especially, he said, were the boys to be taken care of, and surrounded by influences and given encouragement which would make of them useful citizens. He urged the appointment by the local B'nai B'rith of a committee to look into the social welfare of the Jewish people of Omaha and to co-operate with the national organization.

The following was the program of exercises:

Invocation.......Rabbi Frederick Cohn
Piano Solo......Miss Charlotte Abrams
Opening Remarks..Mr. Henry Monsky,
Chairman of the Meeting
Vocal Solo..........Miss Cecelia Feiler
Introduction of Speaker and Guest
Rabbi Frederick Cohn
Address.......Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Ill.
Violin Solo......Blanche Monheit Klein

During the day the visiting Grand Lodge officers were taken on a tour about the city and visited various Jewish institutions.

The entire celebration was an unqualified success. The visiting Grand Lodge officers left impressions which will result in inestimable good to the Order. At no time in the history of the Omaha B'nai B'rith was greater interest displayed or were better results accomplished.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Dallas Lodge No. 197, of Dallas, Texas, has arranged for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day, Sunday, Feb. 6. Dr. W. H. Fineshriber, rabbi of Memphis, Tenn., will be the guest of honor and will deliver the principal address.

The celebration will be preceded by [illegible] campaign for members.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.

On Sunday, Jan. 9, 1916, the fourth annual meeting of Dacotah Lodge No. 731, of Grand Forks, N. D., was held. The occasion was also made use of for observing the annual B'nai B'rith Day.

Brother Gustavus Loevinger, of St. Paul, a member of the grand lodge, was the guest of honor and the orator of the occasion. Upon his arrival in the morning he was met by a committee of the lodge and escorted to the hotel, where breakfast was arranged, in which the committee and other members participated. At noon Brother Loevinger was entertained at the home of Brother Max Rabinovitch, one of the leading members of the lodge and a prominent citizen of the community.

In the afternoon the lodge convened for a special meeting. Candidates secured for the occasion were initiated by a team composed of members of Dacotah and John Hay Lodge, of Fargo. The meeting was well attended, almost the entire membership of the lodge being present, and in addition thereto a delegation consisting of 10 members from John Hay Lodge, of Fargo, came up especially for the occasion.

After the initiation and the routine of business was concluded, Brother Loevinger made an address on the subject, "For a Valuable Consideration." He pointed out the fact that the Order enters into no contract with its members for the promises it exacts from them when they are initiated into the lodge; that the only consideration for the promises demanded from the members is the opportunity for service in co-operation with the best element of Jewry.

After the conclusion of his address, Brother Lesk, of John Hay Lodge, of Fargo, N. D., presented to Brother I. Papermeister, a member of his lodge, a gift from the lodge brothers in view of the fact that the recipient was leaving Fargo and was making Grand Forks his home. The occasion afforded opportunity for several short talks which were pleasing.

In the evening a public meeting was held under the auspices of the lodge, which was attended by over 300 people and which was quite a compliment to the speaker, in view of the fact that the weather was extremely cold. The first order of business after the reading of the president's message was the installation of the new officers by Brother Loevinger, as representative of the president of the district. Following this the retiring president, Brother Rabinovitch, was presented with a token in recognition of his services as president of the lodge.

The address of the evening was the next order of business, and Brother Loevinger spoke on the subject, "The Great Divide." He illustrated his address by referring to the great Continental Divide causing the waters to the south tc flow southward and the waters to the north to flow northward, and that ultimately the waters so separated met in the ocean. By similar applications he illustrated the political and religious schisms. He showed that this is natural; that it is a sign of life. He made an urgent plea that various factions should be sincere within their own ranks and tolerant of all other factions. He pointed out to the members that the lodge is a meeting place for those separated by "The Great Divide"; that their common purposes and common service unite them in a brotherhood of work for the salvation of its people. The address seemed to strike a responsive chord in all elements in the audience and they manifested their appreciation with generous applause.

After the formal meeting was closed a reception was held in honor of the guest and the evening was brought to a close with an informal dance.

EDAR LODGE, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

Seldom if ever had San Antonio people an opportunity of witnessing an entertainment of such excellence as the one under the auspices of Edar Lodge No. 211, I. O. B. B., in honor of B'nai B'rith Day, Monday, Jan. 9, at Temple Beth-El. An unsurpassed musical program, coupled with a splendid address by Rabbi Henry Cohen of Galveston, brought delight to the many that braved the extreme cold weather to be present. Rabbi Cohen, who spoke on "Opportunity," urged the audience that the time had come for all Jews to assist the war sufferers

LINCOLN, NEB.

Lincoln City Lodge No. 377 of Lincoln, Neb., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Monday, Jan. 17, 1916. The occasion was honored by the presence of Brother Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, director of social service department of the Order, and Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul, chairman of the propaganda committee of the district. The guests of honor were tendered a dinner at noon which was attended by the Social Service Club of the city, at which Dr. Coffee delivered an address on the work of the Order in relation to social service work.

In the afternoon the institutions of the city connected with social service work were visited.

In the evening about twenty members of the lodge tendered Dr. Coffee and Mr. Frankel a dinner, after which a public meeting was held at the Temple, which was well attended. Addresses were delivered by the visiting Grand Lodge officers, Dr. Coffee speaking on social service and Brother Frankel on the general work of the Order. Dr. Coffee dwelt on the future religion.

"The religion of yesterday was concerned with the future world," he said. "The religion of tomorrow will be concerned with the living forces of the day. Religion of the past has worried too much over obscure problems of theology and the rise and fall of man, the religion of the future will concern itself with the welfare of every man, woman and child.

"Tomorrow there will be no such thing as 'charity.' We will speak of it as social service. People do not want charity, they want an opportunity to earn their living. In the future each man will select that religion which best aids his spiritual development."

GALVESTON, TEXAS.

Zacharias Frankel Lodge No. 242, of Galveston, Texas, celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Jan. 9. The services were held in Temple B'nai Israel. The lodge was unusually fortunate in the selection of the orator in the person of Rabbi Dr. Leonard J. Rothstein. of Alexandria, La. A large audience filled the temple and heard the following program excellently rendered:

Organ Prelude....Prof. Frank B. Herrle
Quartet—Mesdames Holman and Moore;
Messrs. Dreyfous and Poutney
Vocal Solo......Mrs. Ralph I. Frapart
Address—"Why I Am a Ben B'rith"
Rabbi Leonard J. Rothstein, of Alexandria, La.
Vocal Solo........Mr. Alfred Dreyfous
America...............By the Audience
Benediction........Rabbi Henry Cohen
Postlude.........Prof. Frank B. Herrle

Dr. Rothstein addressed the Galveston Jewry from the pulpit at the Friday night and Saturday morning services. His address on Sunday was a masterly appeal rendered in his usual fluent style and impressive manner. At the conclusion of the services as a result of his appeal many of the audience signified their intention to join the Order.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.

The coldest and most disagreeable weather in the annals of Houston greeted those who braved the atmospheric terrors in order to participate in the joint B'nai B'rith day celebration in Houston on Sunday, January 16, at the City Auditorium.

Mr. S. J. Westheimer presided and opened the meeting with a few appropriate remarks, after which the following program was carried out:

Reading............Miss Sarah Radoff
Violin Solo, Mr. Sidney Lipman, accompanied by Miss Goldie Epstein Vocal Solo, Prof. J. M. Spurway, accompanied by Mrs. Lawrence Tabor

Dr. Mendel Silber of New Orleans, La., was the orator of the occasion and presented a brilliant exposition of the principles of "Americanism, Judaism and B'nai B'rithism" and received much applause and the hearty commendation and congratulations of those present.

"The Order was called into light on American soil," he said. "It was more truly Jewish because it is American, and American because it is Jewish. It seems a decree of Providence that here in this land should be founded and maintained a home and a haven of refuge for oppressed mankind."

Dr. Henry Cohen of Galveston and Dr. Louis Grossman of Cincinnati, also responded to calls from the chair and received their share of applause.

After adjournment luncheon was served at the Rice Hotel to the members and their friends.

FT. SMITH, ARK.

"Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony" was brought out in all its forcefulness at the annual celebration of B'nai B'rith day by members and friends of Fort Smith Lodge, No. 306. The Order was never better represented in this city than it was at both sessions held at the temple and the Progress club. The rank and file of Fort Smith Jewry were present and made further resolutions to carry on the charitable work of the International organization of nearly 50,000 scattered all over the world. It was a gala day for Fort Smith.

The afternoon session was a business one and held at the vestry rooms of the temple. Many new members were initiated; Rabbi Rudolph Farber of Texarkana officiated as presiding officer for the occasion. The new members were received by the lodge and told what it meant for them to be members of the Order and their duty as members. Officers were also installed for the ensuing term. Rabbi Farber also delivered a highly interesting address for the good and welfare of the Order and was given close attention.

The evening session was very entertaining and instructive. It was held at the Progress club and was well attended. President Max Hopp officiated. He gave the address of welcome. Prof. Parmenter delighted the audience with a beautiful violin solo and Mrs. Latz' voice filled the hall with its beautiful strains. Rabbi Latz of the United Hebrew congregation made a short address and told the audience the principles of the Order and its accomplishments. Rabbi Farber of Texarkana made the chief address of the evening. He went into the details of the foundation of the B'nai B'rith, its interests in this country and other countries and the benefits to suffering humanity. He made an appeal to his audience to alleviate the wants of the poor and distressed and always live up to the beautiful motto of the B'nai B'rith, "Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony."

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly observed by Council Bluffs Lodge No. 688 on Sunday, Jan. 16, 1916. The celebration was ushered in with a dinner at the Grand Hotel which was tendered to the visiting Grand Lodge officers. Brothers Dr Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, director of social service department of the Order, and Hiram D. Frankel of St Paul, chairman of the propaganda committee of the district. This was followed by a meeting of the lodge in the afternoon at which thirteen candidates were initiated out of a class of sixteen which had been gathered for the occasion. Addresses on the work of the Order were made by the guests of honor.

In the evening a public meeting was held, which was attended by more than 500 people. The principal address was made by Brother Hiram D. Frankel. A musical program was also ably rendered

Council Bluffs has a population of about one hundred Jewish families, and it is remarkable that of this number more than seventy are represented in the membership of the lodge, and the enthusiasm of the members is most inspiring. The meetings of the lodge are regularly attended by a number which closely approximates the entire membership.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

B'nai B'rith Day was jointly celebrated by Alabama Lodge No. 299 and Emanuel Lodge No. 103 of Montgomery, Ala., on Tuesday evening, Jan. 11, 1916, at Temple Beth Or. The occasion was largely attended by members of the lodge and their friends, who displayed much attention and interest in the exercises. The guest of honor and principal speaker of the occasion was Brother Nathan Cohn of Nashville, Tenn., president of District Grand Lodge No. 7.

Following was the program of exercises:

Organ Prelude—Scherzo......Hofmann
Mr. Alonzo Meek.
Invocation........Dr. B. C. Ehrenreich
Introductory..........Mr. Lucien Loeb
Leo. N. Levi Memorial. Miss Della Mohr
Soprano Solo—Hindoo Song..Bemberg
Mrs. Howard Seay.
Address—"The Independent Order B'nai Brith and What It Stands For."
Hon. Nathan Cohn.
President D. G. L. No. 7, I. O. B. B
Violin Solo with 'Cello Accompaniment
Miss Pauline Lewy,
Mr. Saranson.
Benediction....Rabbi B. C. Ehrenreich

MOBILE, ALA.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly observed by Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., on Monday evening, Jan. 10, 1916. Mr. Nathan Cohn of Nashville, Tenn., president of District Grand Lodge No. 7, was the guest of honor and principal speaker at the celebration; other speakers being Leon Schwarz, past president of the District Grand Lodge, and Herbert C. Brown, president of the lodge.

The entire Jewish community participated in the celebration, which was held in the Battle House Auditorium, and after the program was concluded, a general reception was held and a dance followed.

The subject of Brother Cohn's address was "The B'nai B'rith and What It Stands For," and the speaker handled this topic in an able manner.

JOHN HAY LODGE, FARGO, N. D.

Sunday, January 2, 1916, was the day set aside by John Hay Lodge No. 634, of Fargo, N. D., for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day. A meeting of the lodge was held in the afternoon, at which candidates were initiated, and which was largely attended. The grand lodge was represented by Brother Hiram D. Frankel, of St. Paul, the chairman of the propaganda committee of the district, who addressed the members on the newer work of the Order.

In the evening a large and enthusiastic meeting of all the Jewish citizens of the community was held. Brother Frankel delivered the principal address on the subject, "The Other Fellow's Brother."

LOUISIANA LODGE, SHREVEPORT, LA.

The annual B'nai B'rith Day celebration of Louisiana Lodge No. 107 of Shreveport, La., was held on January 27th, 1916, at the Auditorium of B'nai Zion Temple, which proved a delightful affair with features both social and entertaining. Dr. Louis Abrahamson presided and addresses were delivered by Brothers A. B. Freyer and E. R. Bernstein. Brother Freyer reviewed the work of the Order and Brother Bernstein gave an interesting talk on the convention of the Order held in San Francisco last year. A beautiful program of varied numbers was also a feature of the celebration. A delightful social hour followed the program and refreshments were served.

The Lodge has at present a membership of 150, and is most active in carrying out the aims and objects of the Order. One of its prominent members, Brother E. R. Bernstein, will be elevated to the Presidency of District Grand Lodge No. 7, at the coming convention to be held in Little Rock, in the month of April.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

Winnipeg Lodge No. 650, of Winnipeg, Canada, celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on January 30, 1916, at the Manitoba Hall. The celebration consisted of a business meeting of the lodge during the afternoon, which was attended by over 100 members, and at which meeting a class of 12 candidates was initiated. Brother Dr. I. L. Rypins of St. Paul, who was delegated to represent the Grand Lodge, addressed the candidates on the principles of the Order, laying special stress upon "Harmony" which was much appreciated.

After the meeting, a banquet was given under the auspices of the Lodge at the Manitoba Hall which was largely participated in by the members and their ladies. The principal Speaker was Dr. Rypins, who spoke on the subject, "Brotherhood." The program of exercises for the evening was as follows:

Afternoon.

Business Meeting of the Lodge.
Initiation of Candidates.

Evening.

Banquet.
Toast ...."The King"
Song, "Rose in the Bud".Dorothy Forster
Miss Bernice Tissman.
Toast ...."Our Order"
Bro. M. J. Finkelstein.
Bro. Max Steinkopf.
Song, "Berceuse" ....Jocelyn
Mr. H. R. Isaacs.
Violin Obligato by Miss Lena Gofine.
Address by Bro. Dr. I. L. Rypins.
Pianoforte Solo, Waltz...........Chopin
Miss Olga Guilaroff.
Song, "My Laddie"...................
................Princess Proubepskory
Miss Pearl Lobel.
Violin Solo—
"Legende"..................Winiofsky
"Menuette" ....Sadofsky
"Indian Lament" ....Dvorak
Mr. Sam Sadofsky, Graduate Hamburg Conservatory.
Accompanist, Miss Rose Ripstein.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The last meeting for the year 1915 of Horeb Lodge was held on December 26, Officers were elected as well as delegates to the convention of the District to be held in Boston.

In the afternoon a special meeting of the lodge was called for the purpose of initiating a large class of candidates.

The sixtieth anniversary committee of the lodge held a meeting on Dec. 26 at 10 o'clock to make arrangements for the proper observance of this eventful day. It is proposed that the celebration be closed by a ball, which is expected to be the most magnificent ever given by the lodge. The chairman of the committee, Brother Major L. M. Ullman, is devoting a great deal of time and energy to make the event a memorable one in the annals of the lodge.

At a meeting of the lodge held on Jan. 9 installation of officers took place. The ceremonies were conducted by the President of the District, Brother Herman Asher of New York City. At the conclusion of the ceremonies he addressed the lodge and particularly the incoming officers, urging them to utilize their talents and powers to perform their duties to the best of their ability. He then spoke of the rapid progress which is being made throughout the District, of the steady and remarkable increase in the membership, thus enabling the Order to do the important things which it has undertaken. He particularly expressed his gratification with the establishment of the B'nai B'rith headquarters in New York City, a building recently purchased and being fitted up in excellent style where visiting members may come and find at all times real B'nai B'rith spirit. The new officers then addressed the lodge and all united in the hope that the excellent work accomplished during the past year may be continued.

Anniversary Celebration.

The sixtieth anniversary of the institution of the lodge was celebrated on Jan. 20. As a rule all preceding anniversaries were marked by an elaborate banquet at which prominent men from all over the District were invited guests. The mere suggestion, however, of having a banquet as one of the features of this celebration was met with unanimous disapproval, as it was deemed improper to spend large sums of money for food and drink while so many co-religionists were suffering for the mere necessities of life. The suggestion of a charity ball met with the greatest favor since it afforded an opportunity for the members as well as their families to participate in the event. The committee in charge therefore arranged a charity ball, which was held on the 20th and was strictly for members and their ladies only. No tickets were sold but a subscription list was circulated among the members and the funds so received were designated as "The Sixtieth Anniversary Charity Gift" to be distributed in such manner and for such charitable purposes as the lodge should determine. The affair was held at the Music Hall, which was specially decorated for the occasion, and the plans worked out by the committee of which Major L. M. Ullman was chairman, made the event a grand success. A souvenir in the form of a history of the lodge from its inception to the present day, carefully prepared and beautifully executed, was one of the features of the anniversary.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Missouri Lodge No. 22 and Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47, of St. Louis, had a joint celebration of B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Jan. 16, 1916, at the Moolah Temple. An attendance estimated at from 2,500 to 3,000 persons congregated to witness the occasion. The speaker of the evening was Honorable Alfred A. Cohen, of Cincinnati, who spoke on "Jewish Progress in America." His effort was masterly and much appreciated.

The occasion was also used to install the newly elected officers, and musical numbers served to enliven the program.

COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

Covenant Lodge No. 559 is playing a prominent part in the local campaign for subscriptions to the fund for Jewish war sufferers. Dr. Maurice Lefkovits and Charles E. Oreckovsky, prominent members of the lodge, are chairman and secretary, respectively, of the recently organized body, known as the Central War Sufferers' Association of Duluth. Mr. A. B. Kapplin, president of the lodge, is also an active member of the association, and Bernard Silverstein is its treasurer.

The association canvassed the city thoroughly on January 27, the day set aside as Jewish Relief Day in a proclamation issued by President Wilson.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY CELEBRATION AND CLASS INITIATION BY THE LODGES OF BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

One of the most effective and successful campaigns ever conducted in the southland by the B'nai B'rith came to a close Monday night, January 17, when 150 new members were initiated into the Order by Birmingham Lodge 368 and Magic City Lodge 725. Following the solemn and impressive ceremonies of initiation, a banquet was held at the Hotel Hillman, at which over 350 members were present.

The large number of initiations was the fruit of two weeks of arduous campaigning. A central committee under the guidance of Joseph Beitman, with the able assistance of Chester Bandman and Irwin Engle, supervised the work of obtaining new members. The committee appointed teams and team captains, and within fourteen days Birmingham was thoroughly canvassed with the results already stated. The championship belt for the number of candidates obtained was won by Charles A. Lass, of Magic City Lodge 725. Brother Lass easily outdistanced his competitors by bringing in fully one-third of all the new brothers, 50 in number.

During these two weeks the Order received more publicity than at any time in its history in Birmingham. Every day the daily press carried interesting and enthusiastic stories and articles concerning the progress of the campaign and quite a number of illuminating essays on the nature and work of the B'nai B'rith. As a result of the interest created in the organization, there are prospects of at least 50 others joining during the coming year. Already the fame of Birmingham's achievements has spread to the neighboring states, and daily inquiries are being received regarding the methods of the campaign, one request for information having come from as distant a community as Waco, Texas.

Promptly at 7:30 in the evening, before a brilliant audience that thronged the spacious ballroom of the Hotel Hillman, initiation ceremonies began. The team consisted of Chester Bandman, retiring president of Birmingham Lodge 368; Dr. Morris Newfield, Isadore Shapiro, M. M. Ullman, Irwin Engle, C. A. Lass, I. T. Weil, Joseph Kartus and Frank Abelson. The district grand lodge president, Nathan Cohn, of Nashville, Tenn., occupied the place of honor.

After the initiation those present proceeded to the banquet hall. Every detail to make the feast enjoyable had been looked after by the committee. An interesting feature was a "Kosher" table in the center of the room on which tempting food of the prescribed kind was served to those of Orthodox persuasion.

Mr. A. Leo Oberdorfer presided over the festivities. After a few words of welcome he called on Rabbi Morris Newfield, of Temple Emanuel, to say grace. Following the prayer, the toastmaster introduced the guest of honor and speaker of the evening, Mr. Nathan Cohn, of Nashville, president of District Number 7.

President Cohn in his opening remarks paid tribute to the work of the committees, and congratulated Birmingham in a hearty manner on the excellent results of the campaign. A wave of applause swept over the hall when he announced that Chester G. Bandman, of Birmingham, had been designated as the essayist of the next district convention.

"What the Independent Order of the B'nai B'rith Stands For" was the subject of the speaker, and he proceeded to give concrete illustrations of the beneficent work of the Order.

President Cohn related in an interesting manner the history of the B'nai B'rith from its inception to the present day. "Organized in the fifties to assist fellow Jews who sought refuge on our shores from the oppression of foreign lands," said the speaker, "our order was a school to acquaint the newcomer with the institutions and traditions of our country. Soon, however, it outgrew its educational aspects and entered actively into the field of constructive philanthropy. This move manifested itself in the establishment of orphan asylums, homes for the aged and infirm and finally in the erection of hospitals for the treatment of the poverty stricken sick."

The orator told of the work of these institutions and emphasized the nonsectarian nature of the hospitals. "These establishments," he continued, "are the echoes ringing down the corridors of time in answer to the question of 'Are we our brother's keeper?' The answer thereto knew no such word as 'charity' —it was only 'justice.' The downtrodden felt they could call on their more fortunate brothers, and those in the higher estates of life were imbued with the sentiment that it was but elemental justice to help their suffering co-religionists and fellow men. Let us, therefore, today ourselves strike out and do so forever that hideous unsympathetic word of 'charity' and substitute therefore the noble, benign, golden word of 'justice!'

"Our Order is not political. I hope the day may never come when such will be the case. There is no such a thing as a Jewish vote. The Jew is not a slave. He cannot be controlled by any one in the exercise of his rights as an American citizen. Therefore, let us put down for once and all the idea that our organization is of a political nature, and let us impress on the world, rather, that it stands for the highest conceptions of equal rights and justice to all humanity."

Continuing in the exposition of the mission of the B'nai B'rith today, President Cohn emphasized the fact that it was the great common meeting place of Jews of all shades of thought and religious affiliation. He told his auditors that the temple and the synagogue could not unite the various elements of Jewry, and that the Order was the one great organization which furnished the opportunity for the intermingling of the various component parts of the people of Jewish faith.

In telling of the work of the Order in its struggle to obtain justice for the Jew from the nations of the earth, the speaker recalled to his hearers the memorable action of the B'nai B'rith after the massacres of Kishineff. He told of the fights waged against the various and sundry prejudicial immigration bills introduced in Congress, and paid especial tribute to the effective work of the Anti-Defamation League in its success in combating insulting and misleading caricatures of the Jew in the realms of journalism, literature and the stage.

While referring to the prejudices aroused by these caricatures, President Cohn made a telling reference to the prejudice existing among the Jews against each other. "Have we a right to feel offended at a prejudice of the Gentiles," he asked, in a dramatic manner, "when in our own hearts we harbor prejudices toward our own brethren? It is a blot on the history of American Jewry that such a feeling exists. What difference does it make to us where a man comes from, whether it be Germany, Poland or Russia? His birthplace is but an accident. It is the man himself—what he is, that counts. The B'nai B'rith stands for this ideal, and I pray to God for this consummation so devoutedly to be wished!"

This reference caused a long and frantic outburst of approval. Members arose from seats and cheered—such was the responsive chord struck in their hearts.

"The investment we make in our Order of money, labor and good will," said the speaker in the peroration, "is the richest we can make. Nothing in life can compass the happiness of doing good, and it is for the good of our brethren, of all mankind, that our Order exists."

The other speakers, Isadore Shapiro, Chester G. Bandman, Dr. Morris Newfield, Herman Beck, Charles A. Lass and Charles Miller, dwelt interestingly on the significance of the occasion and spoke in optimistic tones of the future work to be done by the two Birmingham lodges.

During the course of the evening the officers for the new term were installed.

CORSICANA, TEXAS.

Despite an unusually disagreeable day the B'nai B'rith Day celebration of Corsicana Lodge No. 275, observed at Temple Beth-El on Sunday evening, Jan. 16, 1916, was a great success. A literary and musical program of rare merit was presented. After preliminary remarks by the president of the lodge Rabbi David Goldberg was introduced as master of ceremonies. He presented Mr. U. M. Simon of Fort Worth, as the principal speaker of the evening in place of Mr. Chas. Frenkel of Galveston, who was unavoidably detained in the east. Mr. Simon's address touching upon the work of the Order and the condition of the Jews throughout the world was well received.

ALEXANDRIA, LA.

Rebecca Lodge No. 240, of Alexandria, La., fittingly observed B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Jan. 2, 1916. In the afternoon the installation of officers for the ensuing year took place, and an address to the members was delivered by Dr. Mendel Silber.

In the evening the B'nai B'rith Day celebration took place at the temple, where almost the entire Jewish community gathered to listen to an address by Dr. Mendel Silber, of New Orleans. Musical numbers preceded the address, and a reception followed.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

RENO LODGE, RENO, NEV.

On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 5, 1915, a Chanukah party was given to the children of the community by Reno Lodge No. 760, which consisted of an entertainment, games, distribution of prizes and the serving of refreshments. In the evening on the same date, a reception and banquet, in honor of the Chanukah Festival, was given by the lodge to its members and their families which was one of the most enjoyable affairs ever given by any Jewish organization in this city.

The address of the evening was made by Brother Sol Levy, who spoke on the history and origin of Chanukah. The musical program that followed was rendered in a very excellent manner. At the conclusion of the program there was dancing, and this was followed by a supper during which several good talks were made by the members of the lodge.

JORDAN LODGE, NEW YORK.

The officers of Jordan Lodge No. 15 of New York City, for the ensuing year, were installed by Brother Harry Cutler of Providence, R. I., past president of the District, on Jan. 6. The meeting was unusually well attended. The new president of the lodge, Dr. Eugene H. Lehman, in addressing the members proposed as a motto for the year, "Every Jordan Member a Social Service Worker." The social service work which the members will undertake is in connection with the Jewish Big Brother Association.

At the meeting of the lodge held on Jan. 20, Brother Alex Kaminsky, secretary of the Jewish Big Brother Association, addressed the lodge on this work and the social service activity of the lodge was immediately begun.

It was proposed also in the lodge to hold a series of lectures by prominent men. The first lecture is to be delivered by the ex-warden of Sing Sing, Mr. Thos. Mott Osborne, on Feb. 3.

On Sunday afternoons Dr. Lehman, the president of the lodge, proposes to offer a course of lectures on the scientific and historical study of the Old Testament. This course will be held at the new quarters of the District, and will be open to all the member of the Order and their friends.

WASHINGTON LODGE, NO. 19, NEW YORK.

An unusual scene characterized the installation of the new officers of Washington Lodge, No. 19, at Carlton Hall, Jan. 6, when the vice-president-elect was inducted into office by his own son. Whether Brother Morris Davidson sought his appointment as installing officer to Washington Lodge or whether one of the District officers with a taste for excitement and a desire to enliven the evening saw to it that he was designated has not yet been revealed.

"A staggering duty and a rare privilege falls to my lot this evening," began Brother Morris Davidson when, having disposed of the new president, Harry C. Adams, he gazed down from the platform into the upturned face of the second man in the line of officers-elect who stood before him. He paused a moment, while a galvanic tingle ran through the audience and a few irrepressible feminine giggles broke the tense silence.

Feminine? Yes, for the members of the lodge, not foreseeing this occurrence, had some weeks ago decided upon a public installation, and there was present the congenial assemblage always drawn together by a Washington Lodge affair.

The installing officer's beaming countenance was suffused by a flush. "It never has happened until now, and it may never recur, that things are so topsy-turvy between us" he continued, passing a handkerchief over his brow. "My youthful prattling has always been subject to sharp parental interruptions, while I never might cut into the flow of wise utterances falling from your sapient lips upon my immature ears. And now, to state it bluntly, you've got to hold your tongue and stand at attention facing me while I make you undergo an examination to determine your fitness for the office to which you have been elected."

Here a change manifested itself in the installing officer's visage. Through- [illegible] [illegible] play of conflicting emotions it [illegible] [illegible] that he was trying to [illegible] a sterner mien. At length he [illegible] his features into a severe ex- [illegible] [illegible] foreign to them "Vice-president-elect, what is your name?" he suddenly shot out.

Even those who knew that the question was coming joined in the outburst of merriment. And no one laughed more heartily than did the two Davidsons. Thereupon the dignitary became the son. All present felt that the cloak of exaltation and stateliness that marks the installing officer had in a twinkling been shed. Was it because these two having often laughed together before, the familiarity of it restored their customary relation? The chronicler knows not.

Be that as it might, the rest of the vice-president's induction was evidently impromptu. Whatever gems of scintillating wit which had either been prepared or would have been brought forth on the spur of the occasion, were withheld, and filial affection and respect permeated the remaining remarks ex-cathedra. And that touching scene was the part of the evening's proceedings that will live longest in the memory of those who witnessed it.

The new officers are: President, Harry C. Adams; vice-president, Philip Davidson; treasurer, Dr. William L. Kantor; financial secretary, I. Irving Lipsitch (whom the installing officer referred to amid applause as the lodge officer most beloved in the District outside as well as within his own lodge); recording secretary, Maurice S. Weeker; warden, Elias Kantor; guardian, S. Cohn; monitor, Dr. Meyer M. Stark; trustees, Emil Freund, Charles Rosenbaum and George M. Saches. The new president announced the appointment of M. F. Behar as chairman of the advancement committee.

Another feature of the evening was the presentation on behalf of the members of the lodge by the venerable Brother Henry Meyers of a handsome thin Elgin gold watch to the retiring president, Dr. Meyer M. Stark, whose self-sacrificing devotion has been exemplary.

M. F. B.

TACOMA, WASH.

The largest gathering ever assembled in the lodge rooms of Tacoma Lodge No. 741, witnessed a public installation of the officers of the lodge on Jan. 9, 1916. District Deputy Brother David Lipman of Seattle was in charge of the installation ceremonies.

As an appreciation of the services rendered by the retiring president, Brother Julius Friedman, a token was presented to him in the name of the lodge, and the presentation speech was made by Rabbi Theo. Koch of Seattle.

Brother Jacob R. Fain of New York City was then presented to the audience, which he addressed, telling them of the object of his visit to the State of Washington as a representative of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society. In forcible terms he impressed upon the audience the duty of the community to assist immigrants that are now arriving on the Pacific Coast, and to aid them in settling there and thus prevent their going to the eastern congested districts. President A. A. Pillar of Rainier Lodge of Seattle, and Brother Max Hardman, also spoke on the same lines with the result that a committee was immediately appointed by the lodge to take care of the local situation.

At the close of the meeting the assemblage proceeded to the banquet hall where an elaborate feast was tendered them. During the course of the banquet Brother Meyer Jacob in an impressive manner called the attention of those present and of the Jewish community in general to the obligation and duty resting upon them to render immediate assistance to the Jewish war sufferers, and as a result thereof a liberal sum was secured to be given by monthly subscriptions.

BARON DE HIRSCH LODGE, BUTTE, MONT.

On Jan. 2, 1916, the officers of Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420 of Butte, Mont., were installed. The year just drawn to a close was a very successful one in the way of increasing the membership of the lodge, due to the efforts of the outgoing officers.

On Jan. 16 the lodge gave a dance, which was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed.

On Feb. 6 the lodge held a debate on the subject, "Resolved, that after the war there will be an increase of immigration to the United States." A number of members participated in the discussion.

OFFICIAL VISIT TO MILWAUKEE LODGES BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE DISTRICT AND DIRECTOR OF THE SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

Brother B. J. Samuels, President of District Grand Lodge No. 6, accompanied by Brother Dr. R. I. Coffee, the director of the Social Service Department of the Order, both of Chicago, paid an official visit to the B'nai B'rith lodges of Milwaukee on Jan. 13, 1916. Their visit was considered a most noteworthy one.

Dr. Coffee attended the special meeting of the Milwaukee B'nai B'rith Council at noon at the Pfister Hotel. The meeting was well attended and Dr. Coffee addressed the members present with particular reference to the machinery of the social service organization he is now effecting throughout the country. His remarks were interesting and enlightening and were well received by the Council.

During the afternoon a committee of the Council escorted Dr. Coffee to various places in the city of particular interest to him as director of social service work, and during which visit he gathered an impression of the special needs of the city.

In the evening the Council entertained the President of the District, Brother B. J. Samuels, and Dr. Coffee at dinner at the Pfister Hotel. This was followed by a joint meeting of Gilead and Isaac lodges at the lodge hall, which was addressed by the two distinguished visitors. The addresses were full of interest to all of the members and left a deep impression upon them. As a result of the visit, social service work in Milwaukee will soon be started in a well organized form.

CLASS INITIATION OF NEW ORLEANS LODGES.

The gathering on January 19 of the B'nai B'rith of New Orleans proved an intellectual treat to all those who attended.

Mr. Sam. Blum, the Chairman of the meeting, arranged by the joint lodges of the city, introduced those who participated in the program. The guest of honor was Mr. Nathan Cohn of Nashville, President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, who delivered an address stirring in contents and telling in eloquence, bringing the members present to the full consciousness which the privilege of membership in the Order entails, while non-members were made to feel keenly the loss in having no share in the work the Order is doing for its people and humanity. Mr. Cohn's address was devoted solely to the work of the Order, its aims and objects, and contributed much to the great success of the affair.

After a musical program was concluded the meeting of the lodges was held at which a large class of candidates was initiated by the degree team, which was most impressive.

The initiation over, the Chairman called upon Brother Sol Marx, a veteran member of the Order, to make the closing remarks.

After the meeting the guest of honor was entertained with supper, attended by a large number of prominent members of the Order.

The campaign which had preceded this gathering is to be continued with increased vigor, and it is hoped that a large number of new members will be gained before the meeting of the Grand Lodge, which will be held in April at Little Rock, Ark.

WORCESTER LODGE, WORCESTER, MASS.

On Jan. 11, 1916, Worcester Lodge No. 600, of Worcester, Mass., held its installation of officers. Brother Judge A. K. Cohen, of Boston, first vice-president of the district, assisted by several past presidents of the lodge, officiated at the ceremonies.

The lodge has inaugurated a new committee, known as the communal committee, whose duty it is to perform any and all activities of a communal character which may be undertaken by the lodge. The lodge is arranging for its annual ball, to be held in March at the Hotel Bancroft, and also contemplates the holding of an affair for the benefit of the Hebrew Free School of the city.

On Jan. 30 the lodge gave a concert, which was largely attended, and the proceeds of the same were donated to the fund for the Jewish war sufferers.

TOLEDO LODGE, TOLEDO, OHIO.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 26, 1915, Toledo Lodge No. 183, of Toledo, Ohio, held its annual banquet and class initiation. Mr. Samuel J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, president of the district grand lodge, was guest of honor and the principal speaker. Mr. C. K. Friedman acted as toastmaster, and Rabbi Epstein and Brothers A. S. Cohn and Dr. J. Jacobson were among the other speakers.

Brother Lionel Weil, of Greensboro, N. C., past president of District Grand Lodge No. 5, who also attended the affair, delivered a short address and read a message from Brother Simon Wolf, of Washington.

At a meeting of the lodge a class of 40 candidates was initiated by the official degree team.

The annual election of the lodge was held at the meeting on Dec. 28, 1915, on which occasion officers for the ensuing term as well as representatives to the District Grand Lodge Convention to be held in Cleveland were elected.

MONESSEN, PA.

The first annual dance given by Monongahela Lodge No. 776, of Monessen, Pa., on Tuesday, Jan. 11, was a brilliant and successful affair. The attendance was large and many out of town guests were present.

At the meeting of the lodge held on Jan. 23 officers for the ensuing term were installed by Brother Adolph Edlis, of Pittsburgh, assisted by other grand lodge officers.

Monongahela Lodge was instituted on Oct. 3, 1915, with a charter membership of 18. At the present time the lodge numbers 42 active members, showing an increase of 24 members within a short period. Much of the progress of the lodge is due to the untiring efforts of its officers.

MINNESOTA LODGE, ST. PAUL, MINN.

At a meeting of Minnesota Lodge No. 157, of St. Paul, Minn., held on Monday evening, Jan. 10, 1916, Brother Benjamin J. Samuels, of Chicago, president of the district grand lodge, paid an official visit. He delivered an address on "Utility of the Order."

The officers for the ensuing term were installed by the president of the district. Short talks on the aims and objects of the Order were made by Brother M. Stoffer, the incoming president; Brother Firestone, the retiring president, and Dr. I. L. Rypins, who, in his remarks, enlarged upon the relation between the synagogue, the temple, and the Order. Brother G. Loevinger, as chairman of the intellectual advancement committee, presided. Brother Samuels' address was well received and very much liked. He made a fine impression upon the members by his pleasing and earnest personality, and his visit to Minnesota Lodge will have beneficial results.

The lodge has elected an excellent set of officers and has on its rolls an increasing number of young men who are active, earnest and enthusiastic, and the coming year promises to be one of the most prosperous years the lodge ever had.

DENVER LODGE, DENVER, COLO.

At a meeting of Denver Lodge No. 171 of Denver, Colo., held on Jan. 9, 1916, the installation of the newly elected officers took place. Reports of committees and outgoing officers were also submitted, showing the lodge to be in a most flourishing condition. Short talks by the incoming officers were made.

At a meeting of the lodge held on Jan. 23, initiation of a class of candidates was held. Memorial services followed with a memorial address by Brother Percy S. Morris.

The lodge also appointed a committee composed of some of its best workers to investigate and report at the next meeting of the lodge with reference to the Big Brother movement which has been taken up by many lodges of the Order.

A strong and eloquent appeal was made at the last meeting of the lodge by Brother Spivak to assist the suffering Jews in the war zone. As a result the lodge appointed a committee to cooperate with other local organizations in the arrangement for the holding of a mass meeting to raise funds.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

DISTRICT NO. 1.

District No. 1 has moved into its new headquarters, 2307 Broadway, between 83d and 84th Sts. The new headquarters are a great acquisition to District No. 1. In addition to the District office and the Executive Chamber there is a beautiful and spacious lodge room with a reception room and reading room for the accommodation of members and their friends. It is expected that out of town brothers who come to New York will find the new headquarters to be of great comfort. The new headquarters are the result of President Asher's efforts.

President Asher's administration has been distinguished by a number of activities and considerable increase in membership, as well as the establishment of the new headquarters. Much credit in connection with the new headquarters is due to Bro. William H. Silk, President of Akiba Lodge No. 173. Bro. Silk is one of the younger men who is very much of the style of Bro. Herman Asher, earnest, conscientious and Jewish to the back-bone.

Bro. Henry Muhlhauser is making every effort to establish a lodge in Far Rockaway, which is a part of Greater New York. A number of prominent New York business men reside in Far Rockaway and the field there for the establishment of a new lodge is exceptionally good.

Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee, accompanied by Bro. Maurice P. Davidson, Chairman of the Committee on Laws, visited New Haven and Springfield, where the two distinguished brothers addressed large and enthusiastic meetings. Bros. Hartman and Davidson were royally entertained in these two cities, where B'nai B'rithism is the central force of the best Jewish activities.

Manhattan Lodge No 156 will celebrate its 45th anniversary next March. Bros. Isidore Blum, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of Manhattan Lodge, Henry Gutenstein, Alfred Weil, President Samuel Leavitt, Dr. J. L. Blumenthal and P. Irving Grinberg are making preliminary arrangements for the coming event.

Jordan Lodge Degree Team has been very busy initiating candidates in a number of sister lodges. It has lately initiated a number of candidates at Flatbush and New York Isaiah Lodges. This is the second time this season that this Degree Team has initiated candidates in the oldest lodge of the District. Jordan Lodge Degree Team comprises the following brothers: William Asher, Captain; Harry A. Silberstein, David Kraus, Harry Cohen, Isaac Deutsch, Paul J. Shrier, B. Franklin Wyskoff.

Maccabee Lodge No. 71 will celebrate its Golden Jubilee sometime in April. Those who will participate in the celebration are Judges Leventritt and Rosalsky, Congressmen Goldfogle and Cantor, Senator Joseph and Simon M. Roeder. Bro. Isidor Enselman is the President of the Lodge. Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig installed the officers of Maccabee Lodge Jan. 5, 1916.

Jordan Lodge No. 15 held a public meeting Feb. 3, 1916, at Temple Israel, which was addressed by ex-Warden Thomas Mott Osborne on Prison Reform. Bro. Eugene H. Lehman, President of the Lodge, expects to have these public meetings at least once a month.

Bro. Judge Louis D. Gibbs was installed as the President of Rehoboth Lodge No. 38 by Bro. Joseph Levenson of Henry Jones Lodge No. 79.

Henry Jones Lodge No. 79 held its installation of officers on Jan. 24, 1916, Bro. Charles Hartman installing the newly elected officers. Bro. Abraham Anhalt has served as President of the Lodge for the past 18 years. Bro. Maurice Cohen, a young rising attorney and very active in Jewish matters, is the newly elected secretary of Henry Jones Lodge.

Bro. William Goldschmidt of New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1 installed the officers of Flatbush Lodge No. 753 on Jan. 5, 1916, and delivered a very interesting address on the occasion.

Bro. Dr. Bernard M. Steinberg is arranging a high class entertainment for Zion Lodge No. 2, to take place Sunday evening, Feb. 27th, to which the brothers of the various Metropolitan Lodges have been invited.

Brother William Asher, of Jordan Lodge, installed the officers of Akiba Lodge on January 13th. The meeting was well attended and was addressed by Eugene H. Lehman, of Jordan Lodge, and Brother David Kraus, Past President of Jordan Lodge; the new President, Brother William H. Silk, spoke of the great possibilities of the B'nai B'rith and of the wonderful progress made by Akiba Lodge during the past year; from an inactive lodge this lodge has increased its membership during 1915, almost 50 per cent.

Col. Harry Cutler installed the newly elected officers of Jordan Lodge on January 6th. A very interesting address was made by Col. Cutler, and at the close of the meeting a collation in honor of the guest of the evening took place at Pabst Casino. Jordan Lodge, known throughout the district as the President's Lodge, has been exceptionally active, having added over 50 new members to its membership during the year 1915.

In response to a call issued by Jordan Lodge No. 15, of New York City, a number of ladies met Dec. 19 at the B'nai B'rith headquarters and organized a ladies' auxiliary, with the object of carrying on social service activities.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

The propaganda committee of the district is now at work organizing lodges in the cities of Lima and Bellaire, Ohio, and Hannibal, Mo.

United Cities Lodge No. 533, of Joplin, Mo., appointed a committee at its meeting held on Jan. 16, 1916, to assist in the general move to raise funds for the war sufferers.

Rabbi Isaac E. Marcusson, of Terre Haute, Ind., addressed Indianapolis Lodge No. 58, of Indianapolis, Ind., at a well attended meeting on Dec. 13, 1915.

A special meeting of Missouri Lodge No. 22, of St. Louis, was held on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 19, 1915, at which a class of 200 members was initiated. At the close of the meeting a Dutch luncheon was served.

At a meeting of Indianapolis Lodge No. 58, Indianapolis, Ind., held Dec. 27, 1915, officers for the ensuing year were elected, as well as delegates to the District Grand Lodge Convention to be held in Cleveland next May.

Under the auspices of the social service committee of Columbus, services were conducted by Rabbi I. B. Jashenosky at the Ohio Penitentiary on Jan. 9, 1916. Mr. A. J. Schonfarber, president of Zion Lodge No. 62, of Columbus, Ohio, eloquently addressed the audience.

At the regular meeting of Cincinnati Lodge No. 4, of Cincinnati, Ohio, on Dec. 27, 1915, officers for the ensuing term were elected. The meeting was followed by an entertainment and the serving of refreshments.

On April 15, 1916, Joseph Lodge No. 73, of St. Joseph, Mo., will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary and the Lodge is arranging for a day's celebration the following day, Sunday, April 16th.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

On Wednesday evening, Feb. 2, 1916, the annual "booster" banquet of Salem Lodge No. 26, of Harrisburg, Pa., was held. Many prominent members of the district were in attendance and a large class of candidates was initiated at the meeting of the lodge preceding the banquet.

At the December meeting of Lancaster Lodge No. 228, of Lancaster, Pa., Brother Rabbi Chas. J. Freund, of Harrisburg, delivered an illustrated lecture.

The ladies' auxiliary of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90, of Newark, N. J., gave a card party and a reunion for its members as well as the members of Ezekiel Lodge and their friends on Wednesday evening, Jan. 26, 1916, at the Music Temple. The net proceeds of the affair are to be devoted to the B'nai B'rith Orphan Asylum at Erie.

The quarterly meeting of the board of Governors and directors of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3, located at Erie, Pa., was held at Pittsburgh, Pa., on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 30. Many matters of vital importance to the institution were considered.

Monongahela Valley Lodge No. 776, of Monessen, Pa., held its election of officers on Dec. 26, 1915. The installation of the newly elected officers took place at the meeting of the lodge on Jan. 23, 1916. Brother Louis Sulzbacher, of Braddock, secretary of the district grand lodge, acted as installing officer.

The first annual dance given by the lodge on Jan. 11 was a most successful affair. The attendance was large and many out-of-town guests were present.

At a well attended meeting of Clarksburg Lodge No. 727 of Clarksburg, W. Va., held on Jan. 16, 1916, a neat sum was collected from the members of the lodge for books to be used for the B'nai B'rith Sabbath School.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 19, 1915, Messrs. Edward Hemple and Richard S. Rauh of Pittsburgh, Pa., addressed a mass meeting at Johnstown, Pa., in the interest of forming a B'nai B'rith lodge. At the conclusion of their addresses, practically all the men present responded by expressing their willingness to become charter members of the new lodge.

New Castle Lodge No. 609 of New Castle, Pa., celebrated the tenth anniversary of its institution on Sunday evening, Jan. 23, 1916.

A class of candidates was initiated by the degree team, after which the regular order of business was disposed of and dinner was served. Addresses were delivered by members of the lodge and representatives from the Grand Lodge. Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, vice-president of the District Grand Lodge, delivered the principal address.

At an entertainment of the Young Men's Hebrew Association of Wheeling, W. Va., held on Jan. 17, 1916, Mr. Leon B. Stein, past president of Wheeling Lodge No. 615, addressed the audience telling them why the members of the Young Men's Hebrew Association should affiliate with the Order.

Lincoln Lodge No. 780 of Philadelphia, Pa., held its monthly meeting on Feb. 3, 1916. A class of candidates was initiated, after which Rabbi Chas. J. Freund of Harrisburg, Pa., delivered an address on "Mormonism from a Jewish Standpoint" with stereopticon views.

Installation of officers of Parkersburg Lodge No. 767 of Parkersburg, W. Va., was held on Monday, Jan. 24, 1916, under the auspices of Rabbi Silver and Leon B. Stein, representing the president of the district.

Following the regular Friday evening service at the B'nai B'rith lodge rooms on Jan. 21, 1916, a meeting was held for the purpose of raising funds for the relief of Jewish sufferers of Europe. Mr. Joseph Stern was chairman of the meeting and delivered the principal address.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Under the auspices of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City, Utah, a "good time" dance was held at the B'nai B'rith building on Tuesday, Jan. 25, 1916, which was largely attended by the members of the lodge and their friends.

Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., gave a dinner dance and vaudeville at Covenant Hall on Wednesday, Jan. 26, 1916, which proved a great success. An excellent musical program was planned for the occasion and successfully carried out.

Officers of Paradise Lodge No. 237 of San Bernardino, Cal., were installed at a well attended meeting of the lodge, held Jan. 9, 1916, after which a general discussion on the question of collecting funds for the relief of war sufferers was held with the result that committees were appointed to take charge of this matter. Following the meeting a smoker was enjoyed.

On Dec. 5, 1915, a Hannukah Basket Social was given by Everett Lodge No. 761 of Everett, Wash., jointly with the Montefiore Congregation, for the purpose of raising funds for the war sufferers in Europe. The program included songs and musical numbers and addresses by various members.

A joint meeting of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 and the Los Angeles section of the Council of Jewish Women was held in December. The speaker of the evening was Mrs. F. A. Gibson, whose theme was "Illiteracy in the United States and Plans to Eliminate It." The lecture was most instructive and enjoyable.

The annual meeting of Lasker Lodge No. 370 of San Diego, Cal., was held on Tuesday evening, Jan. 4, 1916, at which officers for the ensuing year were elected, as well as delegates to attend the coming annual convention of the District Grand Lodge in San Francisco.

Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 of Los Angeles, Cal., held a well attended meeting on Jan. 25, 1916, at the B'nai B'rith Hall. The reception committee presented the speaker of the evening, brother H. W. Frank, former president of the Board of Education, who addressed the lodge on the topic "As Others See Us." The committee arranged for a musical program and the serving of refreshments. The members of the lodge were urged to attend a mass meeting held on January 27, for the relief of the Jewish war sufferers.

At a meeting of Lasker Lodge No. 370 of San Diego, Cal., held on Jan. 24, 1916, the officers for the ensuing year were installed by District Deputy Adolph Levi. The officers installed entertained the members to a sumptuous repast at the conclusion of the meeting, at which addresses were delivered by Rabbi M. N. A. Cohen and other members of the lodge. An extensive program of activities is in preparation for this year's work.

At the regular meeting of Bellingham Lodge No. 756 of Bellingham, Wash., held on Dec. 26, 1915, officers for the ensuing year were elected, as well as delegates to attend the convention of the District Grand Lodge to be held in San Francisco.

The first dance of the season given by Samuel Lodge No. 668 of Vancouver, B. C., was held on Jan. 6, 1916, and was an enjoyable affair. The interesting feature of the evening was the presentation to Past President Max Grossman and to Past Financial Secretary S. Teasnoff, of beautiful tokens in appreciation of their services rendered to the lodge. At the close of the evening supper was served.

Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 and its Ladies' Auxiliary, have arranged for the annual ball to be given on Thursday evening, February 15, which will be a formal affair.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Jacob H. Schiff Lodge No. 694 of Lansing, Mich., gave an entertainment and ball at the Knights of Phythias Hall on Jan. 1, 1916, which in spite of the inclement weather was a great success. The affair was participated in by nearly all of the members of the lodge and their families and their friends. Many thanks are due to the committee of arrangements, consisting of Brothers Cahn, Wershow and Boor for their painstaking efforts in bringing about the desired results.

Brother H. D. Frankel of St. Paul, chairman of the propaganda committee of the district, paid an official visit to Sioux Lodge No. 598 for the purpose of holding a conference with the leading members of Sioux City Lodge on Jan. 18, 1916.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago a Purim ball will be held at the LaSalle Hotel on Saturday, Feb. 19, 1916. The affair will be strictly for members and their ladies.

Under the auspices of Nebraska Lodge No. 354 and Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521 of Omaha, Neb., a membership campaign was held which lasted for ten days, during which a class of sixty candidates was secured, and which was presented for initiation at the recent B'nai B'rith Day celebration held by the joint lodges. The campaign for membership is being continued, and it is expected that another class of a substantial number will be secured.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Under the auspices of Birmingham Lodge No. 368 and Magic City Lodge No. 725 of Birmingham, Ala., a membership campaign was waged, which resulted in the addition of 160 names to the rosters of the two lodges.

At the annual meeting of Reuben Lodge No. 257 of Marshall, Texas, the officers for the ensuing year were elected. A vote of thanks was extended to the outgoing officers.

Public installation of the newly elected officers of Herzl Lodge No. 608 of Houston, Texas, was held Sunday evening, January 2, at the Jewish Literary Society Hall. The feature of the evening was an address by the installing officer, Brother Sol Schoenmann, vice-president of the District Grand Lodge, and a response by the president of the lodge, Brother Max Westheimer. The families and friends of the members of the three local lodges of the Order were present in large numbers, and at the close of the meeting a reception was held in honor of the newly installed officers.

At the meeting of Eureka Lodge No. 198 of Waco, Texas, held on Dec. 12, 1915, at the Temple, Mr. Sol Hirschberg led a discussion on the subject of problems that confront us, taking as his theme "The Future of European Jews After the War." Many members present joined in the discussion. The officers for the ensuing year were re-elected.

At the meeting of Gulf Lodge No. 221 of New Orleans, La., held on Dec. 27, 1915, the committee on consolidation reported having had conferences with like committees of Home and J. K. Gutheim lodge and recommended that Gulf Lodge express itself in favor of consolidation, which was done by unanimous adoption of a resolution to that effect.

The annual election of officers of Memphis Lodge No. 35 of Memphis, Tenn., was held Dec. 26, 1915. An unusually large attendance was present, and in addition to election of officers a class of candidates was initiated.

Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., is represented by a committee of five in the general organization of the city, created for the purpose of securing subscriptions to the fund for the relief of war sufferers.

Birmingham Lodge No. 368 of Birmingham, Ala., held a well attended meeting on Sunday, Jan. 23, 1916. Final reports were received from the various committees as to the campaign for membership. The lodge expects to have initiations every month during the present year, as the campaign for members will be kept up right along.

Eureka Lodge No. 198 of Waco, Texas, celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Jan. 30, 1916. Mr. U. M. Simon of Fort Worth delivered the principal address.

On Sunday, Jan. 9, 1916, the sixty-first anniversary of the Jewish Widows' and Orphans' Home of New Orleans was celebrated by the lodges of New Orleans. The orator for the occasion was Brother Nathan Cohn of Nashville, Tenn., president of the District Grand Lodge, who with his usual eloquence spoke of the work performed for the widows and orphans throughout the Order. His remarks left a deep impression on the audience.

The contract for the construction of the new building for the B'nai B'rith Literary Society of Vicksburg, Miss., to take the place of the building destroyed by fire last year, has been signed. The contract calls for an approximate expenditure of $45,000.

ABRAHAM LIPPMAN LODGE, PITTSBURG, PA.

The annual dance of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672, of Pittsburg, will take place on February 29, 1916. The affair will consist of a leap year dance, and in conjunction with it the lodge will commemorate the fifth anniversary of its institution. Ex-Governor John L. Tenor, of Philadelphia, has been secured as the speaker for that occasion.

Abraham Lippman Lodge has contributed much to the many successes attained by the district grand lodge. It contributed liberally to the building fund of the Erie Orphanage, and has inaugurated the holding of social affairs in the community. In the recent campaign for membership the lodge doubled its strength and had the distinction of having the largest attendance of members present at the class initiation.

The ladies' auxiliary of the lodge will have charge of the refreshments, and will contribute its share toward making the affair a successful one.

NEW CASTLE, PA.

On January 23, 1916, New Castle Lodge No. 609, of New Castle, Pa., celebrated its tenth anniversary. The meeting was well attended and a class of four new members was initiated. This was followed by the installation of the officers for the ensuing term, conducted by Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, second vice-president of the district grand lodge, and Brother Louis Sulzbacher, of Braddock, the secretary of the district grand lodge. After the regular meeting was concluded a social session was held, at which addresses on the work of the Order were delivered by the grand lodge officers and several members of the lodge, Brother Abe Levine acting as chairman. The meeting was brought to a close with the serving of refreshments.

HOPE LODGE, STOCKTON, CAL.

The officers of Hope Lodge No. 126, of Stockton Cal., were installed at the regular meeting of the lodge, held on Jan 5, 1916, by District Deputy S. S. Safferhil. The meeting was followed by a banquet. One of the features of the evening was the appointment of a committee to investigate and report on plans for the purpose of procuring a building site for the future home of the lodge.

During the year the lodge made a gain of 32 members and its enrollment is now [illegible] strong.

COOSA LODGE, GADSDEN, ALA.

Coosa Lodge, No. 734, of Gadsden, Ala., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Jan. 30, 1916. The principal speakers were Judge A. Bilbro of Gadsden and Brother A. Leo Oberdorfer, of Birmingham, the latter representing the District Grand Lodge. A musical program [illegible] members was excellently rendered. Talladega Lodge was represented [illegible] who made a special trip [illegible] the celebration.

DAVID FISH LODGE, CHICAGO.

David Fish Lodge No. 130, of Chicago, held a well attended meeting on Monday, Jan. 17. Several candidates were initiated and a number of new applications were presented. The officers for the ensuing term were installed by the president of the district and this was followed by an address by Brother Julien J. Gusfield, member of the general committee of the district.

The lodge appointed a committee to make arrangements for a change of meeting place. Other committees were also appointed with a view of increasing the efficiency of the lodge and arousing more interest among the members.

WASHINGTON LODGE, NEW YORK.

The public installation of the officers of Washington Lodge No. 19, New York City, was held on Thursday evening, Jan. 20, 1916, at Carlton Hall. Brother M. B. Davidson was master of ceremonies. The feature of the program was the induction into office of Vice-President Phil. Davidson by the presiding officer, who is his cousin.

A gold watch was presented to the retiring president, Dr. Myer M. Stark, in appreciation of his services to the lodge. The presentation address was made by Brother Henry Meyers.

BEAUMONT, TEXAS.

An open meeting of Beaumont Lodge No. 435, jointly with the Temple Literary Society of Beaumont, Texas, was held on Wednesday evening, Jan. 12, 1916, at the Harmony Club.

The meeting was interesting and most impressive and was opened by the installation of the officers by Rabbi Samuel Rosinger. After the ceremony Mrs. M. L. Hurwitz read a paper on "Zionism as a Solution of the Jewish Problem," which was well received.

The principal speaker of the evening was Mrs. Florence Ramer, a prominent attorney and Jewish communal worker of San Antonio, whose address held the undivided attention of the audience, and was received with much applause and praise.

A musical program by Mrs. L. Goldstein was very much enjoyed. Refreshments and dancing brought this interesting meeting to a close.

WHEELING, W. VA.

Wheeling Lodge No. 615, of Wheeling, W. Va., held a well attended meeting in the Y. M. H. A. rooms on Sunday, Jan. 23, 1916, at which the installation of the officers for the ensuing term took place. Messrs. Leon B. Stein and Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, officiated as representatives of the district.

Following the installation of officers a class of candidates was initiated.

A committee of the lodge, consisting of Rabbi A. H. Silver and Leon B. Stein, was delegated to pay an official visit to Parkersburg Lodge, of Parkersburg, W. Va., to assist at the installation of its officers.

INSTITUTION OF JOHNSTOWN LODGE, JOHNSTOWN, PA.

Sunday, Jan. 30, 1916, witnessed the instiution of Johnstown Lodge, No. 781, at Johnstown, Pa. Mr. Jos. W. Salus, of Atlantic City, Past President of the District, officiated, representing the President of the District in the ceremonies attending the institution of the Lodge, and Brother A. L. Solomon, of Pittsburgh, Past President of the District, presided at the initiation ceremonies upon a class of 32 new members initiated as charter members of the lodge. The formal exercises were concluded at six o'clock in the evening and then all present were escorted to the Elk's Club, where an elaborate banquet was in waiting. Seventy-five members participated in the affair, of which a large number were visiting brethren from neighboring cities. Addresses were made by the Grand Lodge officers and others.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Dallas Lodge No. 197, of Dallas, Texas, held a special meeting on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 19, 1915, at which officers for the ensuing year were elected.

A special feature of the meeting was an address by Brother Arthur L. Kramer, past president of the District Grand Lodge. Short talks were also given by other members of the lodge. At the close of the evening a program of entertainment was carried out.

SPOKANE, WASH.

Abraham Geiger Lodge No. 423 and the Ida Blum Strauss Ladies' Auxiliary held their annual meeting and election of officers on Dec. 16, 1915.

After the conclusion of the regular order of business, and the formal closing of the lodge, the balance of the evening was utilized with dancing and cards. The ladies served refreshments.

HAGGAI LODGE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

For over two months the membership committee of Haggai Lodge No. 132, of Providence, R. I., has been quietly conducting the most successful membership campaign of its existence and is effectively gathering into its fold the best element of Providence Jewry. The preliminaries of the campaign have already resulted in securing 50 applications for membership, which augurs well for the ultimate success of the movement.

On Jan. 30, 1916, at a well attended meeting of the lodge, the first class of candidates, numbering 50, was initiated in the new lodge rooms. The initiation was followed by a banquet and reception for the members and their invited guests at the Crown Hotel, which was a great success and at which speakers of national and local prominence made addresses on the work of the Order.

The gratifying results of the campaign have given an impetus for the club house.

The proposition of a ladies' auxiliary to convene in adjoining rooms at the same time that the lodge holds its meetings was formally discussed at the banquet.

On Sunday, Jan. 2, 1916, Brother Herman Asher, of New York, president of the district grand lodge, paid an official visit to the lodge and installed its officers for the ensuing term. At the conclusion of the ceremonies Brother Asher delivered an impressive address, which was followed by remarks on timely topics by Colonel Harry Cutler and other members of the lodge.

COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

The annual installation of officers of Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., was held on January 19, 1916, in the Temple Emanuel vestry rooms.

Preceding the installation the Temple Aid Society served a bountiful supper to the members of the Lodge and their families, after which Mr. John Z. White, of Chicago, spoke on "The Constitution of 1787."

At the close of the installation ceremonies all present participated in a card party.

ZION LODGE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Zion Lodge No, 2, the second oldest lodge in the Order, has lately admitted a number of candidates, amongst whom is the celebrated journalist, Maurice Brotky, an intimate friend of Bro. Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, the Secretary of the District, who is also the Vice-President of Zion Lodge. Bro. Brotsky was present at the last meeting of Zion Lodge and addressed the brothers on the Jewish conditions in England and Austria, a subject on which he is an authority. Bro. Dr. Richard Stern is President of Zion Lodge. The honored and venerable Treasurer of the District, Bro. Sol Sulzberger, installed the newly elected officers of Zion Lodge. The outgoing President, Bro. Myron Sulzberger, has been at the head of the Lodge for the past ten years. The brothers presented him, through Bro. Charles Hartman, a member of the Lodge, with a beautiful gift as a token of esteem in which he is held by the brothers of the Lodge. Bro. Myron Sulzberger, who is a son of the venerable Bro. Sol Sulzberger, has just been elected President of the Home at Yonkers in place of President Louis Kempner who declined renomination on account of his health.

Report of Dr. Berthold Timendorfer

(Continued from page 10)

amounts of the contributions from lodges and lodge members to the relief funds cannot be stated in correct figures. It is necessary to emphasize this fact, because a number of lodges have complained about it that the Grand Lodge does not place itself at the head of such undertakings.

But the Executive Committee believes that it has done the right thing when it figured in all these collections as a part of the whole only, as nothing appears to be more dangerous in this regard as the scattering of forces. Only by tightly drawn lines of centralization in relief work can blessed results be attained. To be sure, this centralization does not exclude the wish of the Grand Lodge that when the reports of the achievements of the central organization are published the acknowledgment will be made that it was not the work of one institution alone but was accomplished by all those institutions united in the central organization.

We are now, as ever, connected with the Deutsch Israelitischen Gemeindebund through the General Archive of the German Jews and through the Jewish Training Institution for Feeble Minded Children in Beelitz.

The proposed appropriation of 1000 mark for religious instruction in small congregations for the year 1916 will surely be granted to the Deutsch Israeltischen Gemeindebund.

It is self-understood that we also stand in friendly relations with the other institutions like the Central Association of Citizens of the German State of the Jewish Faith, the Union of German Jews The Grand Lodge is represented in the committees of all these societies.

But the Grand Lodge is also represented in the German Central Relief Committee for the sufferers in the parts of Russian Poland which are occupied by German troops, which committee is of an inter-confessional character.

It is represented in the Central Committee of the German Societies of the Red Cross.

It is further represented in the Committee of the East, the Committee for Poland and in the Osmanic Union of German Jews.

If the Grand Lodge entertains one wish in this direction, it is the one which it has repeatedly expressed admonishingly that in a time like the present all these institutions should work as much as possible under a common head.

The harmony as we are striving to attain it in the Order should also be fostered by our coreligionists outside of the lodges. Alas, this harmony is still always absent.

* * *

The Executive Committee has decided that after the war, it will extend its activities within the sphere allotted to it by its tendencies and follow the way in which the Order is properly doing its work. Whether this will manifest itself in the founding of lodges in countries outside of Germany or through other kinds of arrangements which shall wield a favorable influence upon the cultural life of the foreign Jews, of this the future will take care.

Prominence must be given to the fact as an idyl in war time, that in these grievous days in which nearly the whole world stands hostilely in bloody combat one against the other, the Grand Lodge has not suspended the work of the magnanimous and high-minded foundation of Brother Mannheimer. Even for the year 1915, the Grand Lodge has advertised a prize contest in the elaboration of the theme: "In how far can love of humanity, justice and toleration, as foundation pillars of human society be brought to realization in the state." It is significant that even in this year just as many compositions were received as in the previous year.

* * *

The losses through death remain pretty nearly the same. In the year 1913 we lost 162 brethren; in the year 1914, 160 brethren, and in 1915, up to November 1, we have already lost 154 brethren.

* * *

We will preserve a lasting and revered remebrance of these tried and meritorious brethren.

In this place we will also express our deep sorrow over the death of the member of the Executive Committee for Austria, Brother Adalbert Skall, with whom we were united in special friendly relations.

We are especially painfully moved by the loss of the ex-presidents, the brethren Alfred Story, of Berlin, and Dr. Hugo Mates, of Mainz, who fell upon the field of honor.

Today we will devote a special thought to the memory of these and other brethren and the relatives who fell on the field of honor. All the dear ones who have fallen, they are not dead, they live. They work in our midst from their silent graves. As victors they call unto us: "We have given our lives that you may live!"

The great deeds in the field shall cause us to think that it is our duty to accomplish great deeds at home also.

We will keep together in peace and in unity and vie with each other in harmonious love to heal the wounds which the war has inflicted. We will endeavor to act as it is expressed in the essay of our Brother Lazarus, to vanquish the worldly desires and in brotherly unity and public spiritedness seek to fight against the spirit of selfishness, so that when our brethren shall return home again after a victorious ending of the war, they shall find the soil prepared for the further exercise of our lodge activity.

The words which Brother Professor Kalischer expressed in his letter of reply to our congratulations are indeed very striking. He states that the work of the Order during the war must naturally remain one sided, but after the war, the work of the Order will be confronted by great problems, even much greater than at any time in its long term of activity.

We all long for this activity and we therefore long for peace. I close my report with the wish which is the most fervent of the present time, with the wish for a speedy successful termination of this unhappy war, which an eternal peace may follow.

6.05
3N

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS
BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY
Vol. VIII. MARCH, 1916 No. 7
Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

Why Remain a Jew?

An Address Delivered by Mr. Charles Rosen at the First Meeting of the Jewish Forum, New Orleans.

I am asked to open this Forum, established by the enterprise of our new Director, Mr. H. L. Glucksman, with a discussion, from the point of view of a layman, of the question, "Why Remain a Jew?"

It is a question which must have come to each of us many times in our lives; and really the first question which ought to present itself is: Why does the question arise at all? Its significance becomes sharper if we will ask ourselves the counter-question, "Why become something else?" "Why become a non-Jew?" And if so, become what?

We never hear the question "Why remain a Christian" in the same way as the question "Why remain a Jew?" What does it mean? Why does this eternal question arise?

If we will be frank about it, it means nothing more than this: Why remain a Jew with all the discrimination that being known as a Jew subjects one to? That is what the question means; and, therefore, it is really no different from what it has been to the Jews for the past two thousand years. Only now it presents itself in a more subtle form. During all the persecutions and suffering of the Dark and Middle Ages, the like temptation of convercation or apostasy was ever presented and thrust at the Jew; that, to escape the hardship of being a Jew, renunciation or change afforded "the easiest way". And the question, boldly stated, now also is, why suffer these "slings and arrows" of hotel outlawry of social ostracism, of public and private discrimination, merely to remain a Jew? Why have sons at college kept out of Greek letter fraternities, no matter how worthy these sons may be? Why have daughters barred from sororities, no matter how gentle or refined or popular they be? Why have ourselves denied admission to hotels in this country which refuse to admit Jews? Why be denied admission to organizations, to country clubs, to city clubs, too; to public balls and social functions of all sorts, here and elsewhere, for no other reason than because we are Jews? Why suffer these discriminations, these obstructions at every turn of our lives—these obstacles for ourselves and our children?

Do we not all know, if we would be frank with ourselves, that this is what the question really means?

Of course we know that there are exceptions—that not all non-Jews hold this prejudice or display or countenance this discrimination. There are liberal and just men everywhere; but, liberal and broad as they themselves may be, they will not deny that it exists among nine-tenths of their people, and that even when they themselves fight against it and condemn it, it is because they are conscious of its existence.

Therefore, it is clear that the whole question is one of discrimination against the Jew, which makes his situation peculiar and different from all others. The whole thing is illogical and unjust, but it exists. There is no reason why all Jewish students alike, without regard to character or merit, should be barred from college fraternities, merely because they are Jews; but they are so barred. Nor any reason why all Jewish men and women, even of the finest character, should be barred from many hotels, merely because they are Jews; but they are. Nor why all Jews should be barred from certain public balls, here and elsewhere, nor from country clubs and city clubs, merely because they are Jews; nor, indeed, why they should be discriminated against at all as Jews; but they are. And, although in this country we have no such laws against the Jew as exist in Russia, and in other countries in Europe, here too we see military preferment denied him, only because he is a Jew, and a man's life itself jeopardized because he is a Jew. So, at every turn the Jew sees, deeply ingrained in people around him, a prejudice which restricts and embitters his whole life and that of his children, marking him out as a special object of discrimination; and, therefore, the question insistently arises, no different now from what it was in the days of medieval rack and torture: Why not put an end to it all by ceasing to be Jews?

If there be any other reason for this ceaseless, insistent question, if it has any other significance, I do not know what it is.

But, as thus stated, it is seen at once how impossible it is to expect a people of any spirit at all to seek escape from such trouble—immeasurably less than in former ages—by a renunciation of their birthright; and the few who do for such reason enjoy, as they deserve, the contempt of the rest of their people.

Now, if the Jew shall forswear himself, in what way shall it be done? As a matter of race, or of religion, or of nationality?

You cannot forswear your race; and so, if you constitute a race, you cannot yourself cease being a Jew, though by intermarrying, and having your children likewise intermarry with non-Jews, you can ultimately merge the race itself out of existence.

This point of view suggests several phases of the question. In the first place, many of our teachers contend that there is no Jewish race; that the Jews do not constitute a pure or separate race at all. My own examination and consideration of this question does not at all satisfy me that this contention is correct. For from the time that the Jews settled in Goshen in Egypt, and thereafter conquered and settled in Canaan, and there set themselves up as a state, separate and apart, without intermarriage with the idolatrous peoples around them; and thereafter for thirty centuries continued themselves, whether in that State before the dispersion, or in Ghetto or pale or outside thereof, after the dispersion, as a separate people, free from admixture, if not from intermingling—it seems to me that, whatever may have been their origin, they inevitably became and continued a separate race; if not a pure, unmixed race, none the less a separate race and people. How otherwise explain their identity, their perpetuity, and their separateness through the ages?

Nor can the suggestion that such a position furnishes argument for the anti-Semite affect the question; because, to my mind, the racial position of the Jew is no legitimate argument against his loyalty in Germany or Russia any more than it is in these United States, where his patriotism is undoubted by every test of loyalty and devotion from the Revolution to the present day; or, on the other hand, may such argument against him (baseless as it is) be less urged by his enemies, if his separation be that of religion and aloofness in marriage, and not racial at all. Whether he be a pure race or not, to my mind, cannot affect the anti-Semitic argument; and whether it does or not, if it be a fact that he does constitute a race, denying it cannot escape it; for, if it is a fact, it is what it is, no matter what unjust argument the anti-Semite deduces therefrom.

So that if we are a separate race, a pure race, a race which, because of its very purity, has preserved its wonderful strength and vitality through the ages, and has not been broken or crushed under any amount or manner of persecution and oppression—a race of which we should, therefore, be proud as a lofty heritage—then as such a race we must remain Jews, so far as we personally and individually are concerned.

And so far as our children or descendants are concerned, they also, in this aspect, must remain Jews, unless the Jewish race itself be destroyed by intermarriage. As to this, let me say that this, too, is not a matter to be disposed of by reason of oppression and discrimination, but by purely personal considerations. If the Jew in any given case feels that his individual happiness is involved in intermarriage with a non-Jew, it is for him or her to determine whether such happiness will be promoted or defeated by such marriage; and there

(Continued on page 11)

The Jews in the Turkish Orient

The Turkish Orient includes countries other than those now embraced in the Ottoman Empire. In order to arrive at correct results in the study of the conditions of the Jews in the Turkish Orient, it becomes necessary to restore the frontiers of the Ottoman Empire as they existed before that Empire lost its world power, which frontiers were the confines of territories still under its dominion for several centuries after Turkey had passed its palmy days and when its power had begun to wane. In that sense it is necessary to include in the Turkish Orient the countries of the Balkan peninsula, the entire Kaukasus, but in first line Egypt, Tripolis and perhaps Tunis. In all those countries the present conditions of the Jews, their cultural development and their prospects for the future, in spite of all local or individual diversities, are alike influenced and dependent on their former or their present allegiance to the Turkish-Arabic dominion. Within that territory there exist many Jewish communities, which, in comparison to the Jews of other countries, would appear as separate historical groups. They still live within that district wherein and about which the earliest historical events of Jewish history were enacted. As Oriental Jews they are in much closer touch to the Orient than are all other Jews, although many of these have not yet severed all ties that bind them to the Oriental home of their ancestors. Wherever the Turks have held dominion at some period they have impressed a special characteristic upon their subjects, and this was most pronounced with the Jews, who at all times were most deeply concerned in the victories and the destiny of the Turks. Hence a study of the Jews in the Turkish Orient, in spite of all local diversities, will show a certain amount of historical harmony.

Within that immense territorial extent there is one smaller section that is still more closely and to a greater extent connected with the Jewish history than are all the other sections. That part contains the countries adjoining the Euphrates, the Nile and the Jordan. Their common fate has shaped and influenced to a great extent the devolpment of the earliest periods of Jewish history. From the conditions of those countries and their mutual relations to one another, as well as from the well known imponderabilities, can the historical development of Israel and Juda best be explained. Finally the fatherland of the Hebraic tribes occupies a special position all its own, because there never was a people or a race that, regardless of all spatial separation, has so retained the memories, the love, the hopes and expectations connected with its own land wherein stood the cradles of its ancestors as always was, is even now and probably will remain for all times the case with Israel and its old home.

The progenitor of the Hebrews, who had come from the two stream land, which at that period had attained a high level of culture under Hammurabi, but which he had surpassed by his more elevated ethical conceptions, had roamed about the country as an Aramaic Bedouin and had seen the land which later on was to be the permanent home and property of his descendants. His grandchildren had emigrated into Egypt, where the second largest circle of cultural development then offered them increased knowledge, which they united with their Babylonian acquirements and welded into a more harmonious and complete unit. Their own special essence, however, they derived from their own midst, from their tribal inheritance, from their own blood at the hand of the greatest man that their own tribe and the entire humanity had ever produced.

Moses was the creator of the Jewish people. He is their national hero, who embodies in his person the entire essence of the tribe into one great ideal. He made his people a nation to whom at the hour of its birth, he presented the gifts of the highest flower of culture. Whatever may be considered by other peoples as Israelitic wisdom up to the present day is nothing more than what Moses had taught their forefathers. In order to provide a permanent home for his precepts the great teacher, prophet and lawgiver, created from among those of his own blood and tribe the people whom he had led out from Egypt and from the house of bondage. His doctrines are those of a free people. Their very essence breathes liberty. From the dungeons of Egypt Israel wandered into the freest land in the world, into the desert, where it grew into an inseparable unit with its Mosaic culture. From the desert this young heroic people conquered through a matchless warfare the land of its forefathers in order to transmit it to all their later descendants as their permanent heritage. With those events Canaan, which thus had become the land of Israel, became the historical home of the Jewish people and despite all dispersions it has remained the visible center of that people and of its anticipations up to the present day. Even during those periods when only a very restricted number of Jews were permitted to dwell in the land of Israel, when almost all the sons of Juda were driven from the home soil, that land remained the immutable pivotal center of the Jewish national ideals. No matter what might be the political and economic conditions of the Jewish people, its heart still beats in cultural and ideal sentiments for Zion.

For this reason the destiny of the Jewish people is most closely connected and interwoven with that of its country, independent of the hopes which have been aroused by the re-colonization of the old fatherland.

Long after the destruction of the Jewish state organization and when the dispersion of the Jews had already lasted over a millenium, the greater number of the Jewish people still inhabited those territories, which up to the middle of the last century had formed part of the Ottoman Empire. Babylonia and the Anterior Asia had remained the intellectual and cultural center of the Jewish people until the downfall of the Gaonat. It was only when the Orient was depopulated, when the Chowaresmiers and the Mongols destroyed what the Crusaders had spared and the Turks came into possession of a partially destroyed and ruined inheritage from the Arabs, that Oriental Judaism fell into rapid decay. Yea, that work of destruction and annihilation of both Jewry and Judaism, wherein, with the single exception of the Ottomans, all religions and nationalities of both Orient and Occident conscientiously shared, was much more thorough and effective than was the havoc worked in other parts of the Orient; this was even more so the case as the Byzantine emperors had thoroughly prepared the ground for the nefarious work of the Crusaders. Notwithstanding the incessant persecutions there are still to be found in those territories Jews whose ancestors have dwelt in those districts for more than two thousand years.

When the Turks conquered the lands still forming part of the present Turkish Empire and those European territories whereupon the ruins of Turkish dominion new state organizations have been erected, they found a minority of Jews in all those countries. Such was the case in Palestine, the ancient home of Israel, all throughout Syria and Mesepotamia as well as on the Balkan peninsula. The Asiatic and African provinces of Turkey contained a larger proportion of Jews. Wherever the Turks established their rule, they conferred upon the Jews those human rights which had been denied them in Europe, political liberty and equal rights of worship.

The Turks even went beyond that in their tolerance. They recognized the national customs and peculiarities of the Jews and encouraged them to maintain and cherish these. Ever since the destruction of their state organization the Jews had met similar liberal treatment only in Moorish Spain and therefore they were imbued with the deepest gratitude towards the Turkish people and the Ottoman state, which united them with these people for all times. These ties of friendship were drawn still closer when the Spanish Jews, fleeing before the Inquisition and the stake, found safety and refuge in Turkey, which received them hospitably. Another factor exerting considerable influence was the close religious relationship uniting Moslem and Jew. While the native Jews and the Rumaniotes of the former Byzantine Empire, as well as the Aramaic Jews from Anterior Asia, remained among the middle and lower classes, the educated Spanish Jews rose rapidly to the higher ranks and members of these families held positions of honor and trust, such as Court physicians, treasurers of the Imperial family, civic and military officers not excluding the highest charges, Ministers, Pashas and Field Marshals. The position held by Don Joseph Nassi as Viceroy of Cyprus is sufficient to establish the high general standing held by the Turkish Jews.

(Continued on page 2[illegible])

The Ottoman Empire became an asylum for the Jews when it had attained the zenith of its power and at the very period when the atrocities committed in the persecution of the Jews in Europe had reached the highest level. For this reason the Jews were glad to emigrate to Turkey, provided they were permitted to depart, although driven from their homes in all places. In Turkey they retained their peculiarities and customs of language, morals and religion and even their national home rule was permitted to develop into an organism, which warranted the continuation of Judaism. At that period Turkism and Judaism became closely welded together. Every Ottoman victory meant increased breathing space for the Jews otherwise hounded, while every Turkish defeat proved a double disaster to Jews and Judaism. These conditions have so remained up to the present time.

The older native Jewish masses of the Byzantine Empire, who speak a Greek dialect and for that reason are called "Rumaniotes" (Grecians), and those hailing from the caliphate of Babylonia, who speak Arabic but to the largest extent have retained the old Aramaic language—these being the old Arabian Jewry of Palestine—they all subordinated themselves to the Spanish Jews, who represented a higher cultural and economic development. The isolated Aschkenazim Jews, not immigrating in compact groups, remained German or Polish Jews for but limited periods, as they mostly were soon absorbed into the predominating Szefardim majority.

It is only the recent, renewed persecutions of the Jews, that found their most perfect illustration in the Russian pogroms, which drove not only millions of the victims over the ocean westward, but also thousands of them south and southeast, where large numbers of them found a hospitable reception in the large and tolerant Turkish dominion, within the limits whereof even the harshest ruler had secured them a mild and just government. Since the beginning of this new immigration there came into existence, besides the older established Szefardic congregations, new Aschkenasic communities, which to a large extent have become larger and more important than the older institutions because they were being maintained by the younger strength of the superior economic development of the newcomers. Constantinople, Smyrna, Beirut and most of all Jerusalem, became the centers of large aggregations of Aschkenasic Jews, who soon proved valuable in the economic development of the country and were recognized as loyal supporters of the government. During the past thirty years the Zionistic movement among the Jews of all countries has materially helped not to stem the tide of influx of Jews into the Turkish countries and more particularly into Palestine

These Jews all are imbued with the most loyal love for Turkey. They are the most devoted subjects of the state. The Jews of Saloniki, who form about four-fifths of the total population of that city, have contributed a material share to the success of the Young-Turkish movement. It is attributable to their influence that Saloniki became the real center of the national movement in Turkey and maintained that position until that city became lost to Turkey as one of the results of the unfortunate Balkan war.

The Jews now dwelling upon the Balkan peninsula retain the same favorable position within the Turkish Empire, that they have always held under the sway and the protection of the crescent. In Rumania, through the continuation of its policy inimical to the Jews, their number has been reduced from 400,000 [illegible] to about one-half of that number. In Serbia there was such a limited number of old Spanish Jews before the [illegible] Balkan war, that it seemed hardly worth while to enforce any restrictive measures against them. Justice demands the acknowledgement that up to the outbreak of the present war the Jews in Serbia enjoyed excellent conditions. In New-Serbia, however, where they are much more numerous, they are treated in the same manner as are the Mohammedans. In Greece they are entitled to full equality according to the constitution. (That also was guaranteed to the Rumanian Jews by the treaty of Berlin.) As long as there were only small Jewish congregations in Athens and Volo and another unimportant, though rather obtrusive, congregation in Korfu, there occurred but one case of wholesale persecution of the Jews in Korfu about twenty years ago. Otherwise the Jews were not molested. But since Saloniki has come under Greek dominion and of the present 135,000 inhabitants of that city from 80,000 to 90,000 of them are Jews, the anti-Semitism of certain Greek officials and party leaders is only exceeded by the Grecian press in Saloniki, whose entire efforts are directed towards driving the Jews out of the city. It is a fact, that during the past two years about 15,000 Jews have fled the city and have founded new homes in the more hospitable Turkey or liberal Bulgaria.

Outside of Turkey, as Serbia with its Jewish population of barely in excess of 6,000 need not be taken into consideration, the kingdom of Bulgaria is essentially the only one of the Balkan countries which offers larger numbers of Jews the possibility of following all avocations with safety to life and property. Bulgaria, that in the latest partition of Turkish spoils, has secured a proportionally large number of Jewish citizens, grants them absolutely the same protection, rights and duties that it bestows upon its Christian and Mohammedan subjects. The way is open to them to all civil employment, to military service and preferment, the same as in Turkey. The Bulgarian Jew feels himself free and he holds up his head, even if he has not yet secured the utmost of political rights and honors, such as are freely conceded to the Jewry as a nation in Turkey as their just dues.

On the several theaters of war in the Orient the Jews are being afflicted to an extent far beyond their proportional participation in the warring armies. Unfortunately, the same as in the European seats of war, the Jews are most thickly settled in those districts where most of the events of the war are being enacted. That among the war sufferers the Jewry of the land of Israel is being most severely tried, seems of special importance, as the Palestinian communities are of the greatest importance for the conservation and rejuvenation of the entire Judaism, more so for the Eastern and Oriental Jewry and have so proven themselves. As to the fate in store for the Jews when the seething surcharged Russian state conglomeration explodes, it is impossible now to forecast the outcome. All former anticipations, no matter how gloomy, have up to now always been far outdone by the bloody realities. The Russian sanguinary policy, immediately before its military breakdown, in Poland, Lithuania, Courland and in all the Western provinces has encouraged and incited its military and police hordes to martyr, violate, drive into exile and murder numerous innocent Jews and by these infamous atrocities and abominations has once more surpassed all its prior misdeeds. Nothing is left in that territory beyond the accidental ruins of a one time great and flourishing Jewry. The greater part of our brothers in the Orient have fared differently owing to the victorious progress of the Turkish armies. They may expect a regeneration and revival of their weakened forces after the war under the protecting care and solicitude of the Sultan.

The Jews in the Orient have preserved to a great extent their peculiarities. As to type and purity of blood they are not contaminated, less so than any Jews of the Occident. Added thereto is their tenacious adherence to the peculiar customs of traditional Jewish culture. This is seen in the continued maintenance of specifically Jewish dialects that are used as the family language, while in the religious ceremonials and with it in their cultural-national life they still use the Hebrew language. The Spanish of the Szefardim, the Jiddisch-German of the Aschkenasim, the Greek of the Rumaniotes, the Jiddisch-Aramaic of the Mesopotamians, the Jiddisch-Arabic of the Arabian Jews all are dialects. Besides these there are still others, such as the Jiddisch-Tat of the Kaukasian Jews, the Bucharic and the Iranic of the Persian Jews. The conservative adherence to the national traditions, that vary according to the medieval homes of the ancestors of these several groups of Jews does not show the least analogy to the pietism artificially fostered by the Christion Orthodoxy. To the contrary, it is the production of a purely national and inherited tradition. It may have become narrow, ossified, impoverished and lifeless. The Alliance schools were meant to counteract that tendency, but they did not succeed in so doing, as they attempted to replace a natural development by an artificial makeshift and thereby created a greater void than had existed before. French externals and formalities could not take the place of that firm moral support which these conservative Jews had found in the firm roots of their ancient traditions and in their national ropes. The Alliance has only succeeded in many cases to replace the old Jewish customs hy non-Jewish Boulevard morals and manners and this formerly so firmly rooted Judaism has become estranged from its natural foundations.

The Oriental Jew, like his Christian and Mohammedan countryman, lacks all idealism. He lacks initiative. This applies to a greater extent to the Szefardim than to the Aschkenasim, to the Arabian Jew than to the Spaniard. The Jemenites are the only exception to this rule; they are people of genuine national fervor, of deep religious convictions and sincerity. They have preserved the old Jewish ideals.

In order to revive the Orient it requires, besides the material means and the vivifying capital employed in economic enterprises, new ideas and purely ideal devotion to the task. While economic improvements on a large scale, the investment of large capital and the assurance of a new supply of labor will be requisite for the elevation and rejuvenation of the Oriental Jews, the greater need is for new intellectual development, a modern spirit and higher, inspiring ideals. All that can only then create a really progressive movement if the ideals are firmly rooted in the heart of the Jews. These things can show creative results only if they conform to the innate nature of the Jews. They must not be artificially transplanted from the outside. A Jewish-National ideal solely and alone is capable of awakening the dormant powers, without disturbing or even killing the existing life.

As long as the Jews lived together within the immense extent of the Turkish Empire, they remained in one large cultured community, despite their many differing family languages, despite their varying rites and the manifold connections with their former fatherlands, from whose treacherous caresses they had luckily escaped. They formed the Jewish "Millet" (nation) within the Turkish empire, having a national-cultural constitution of their own, selecting their own officials and representatives, looking after their common interests and aiming at a uniform system of education. This immense cultural domain has been destroyed for the Jews by the gradual curtailment of the territory under Turkish dominion. Smaller and separate Jewish centers have replaced the larger community, and the several local Jewish languages had to give way to the languages of the medium sized and smaller countries built upon the ruins of Turkish provinces. Having become subjects of these minor states, these Jews are now separated politically and economically from the larger masses of the Jewish people. To the extent that they may be able to talk Jiddisch-German or remain familiar with the Spanish they still manage to maintain some intellectual connection with the larger bodies of Jews. What Jewish literature can be found in the Serbian, New-Greek, Wallachian, Albanian or Bulgarian languages?

The disorganization of the Jewry into smaller linguistic entities, more so even than all assimilation, destroys the close connection of Judaism and quickly estranges these Jews from all interest in the continuity of Jewish history. Only such languages will permit of adherence to Judaism as have an ample supply of Jewish literature. Wherever the Hebrew has become a dead language, unless there is a sufficient quantity of Jewish literature obtainable in the family language, it takes but few generations for Judaism to die out entirely. Classical examples of this contention can be found in Europe in the French, in Africa in the Ahyssinian and in Asia in the Chinese Judaism. The loss of the Hehrew without being replaced by a language rich in Jewish literature has caused in those countries a progressive decay or even the complete destruction of Judaism. The same loss is threatened to the Jews of the Orient in Serbia, Greece, Roumania, Albania and Bulgaria, unless it be possible through the maintenance of the Hebrew as a living language to forestall the threatening destruction.

Ideals alone will not be effective. National enthusiasm and a national language could accomplish much. The sound spirit requires a healthy body. In order to induce the larger part of the Oriental Jewry to resume gardening and agricultural pursuits as their vocation it will be necessary to provide them with wholesome surroundings, thus assuring their bodily health which will enable them to establish sound economic foundations for themselves. The Orient and the Oriental Jews are impoverished. The re-establishment of a large Jewish agricultural element will furnish the Oriental Jews the needed economic strength, which forms the basis of all development. Such agricultural colonization on a large scale is possible only in the old home country of the Jews.

The Turkish Jews, more than all others of their fellow-citizens, feel themselves as the banner bearers of the Turkish state ideals, as they, more so than all others, know and perceive that all Jewry suffers when Turkey is weakened and that a powerful Turkey offers the best protection to the Jews.

The political endeavors of the Oriental Jewry within the limits of the present day Turkey have already been referred to in the foregoing. Turkey is not a National state, like France, that does not have or tolerates other nationalities of own spiritual essence within its midst, but it is a state of many and varying nationalities. Under the suzeranity of the Ottoman princes and the Turkish people, every nationality is permitted a cultural development according to its peculiar notions and inclination, as long as it loyally supports the Turkish state projects and contributes to the greatness and the welfare of the state entity. For this reason the fate of the Jews, particularly in the Orient, will continue to be insolubly associated with the weal and the woe of the Turkish empire.

At this moment we experience in Russia persecution of the Jews of such an extent and of such atrocious cruelties that all memories of the crimes of the medieval times are dimmed by comparison. There can be no doubt that after the termination of the war millions of hunted Jews will seek refuge across the ocean—provided that admission there will not be barred to them. The Orient under the just Turkish rule is much nearer to these unfortunate fugitives and also is closer to their heart. From the economic standpoint, however, the Orient is much further removed from them. The Orient has no great industrial centers capable of supplying large numbers of such refugees, even when they have no resources of their own, immediately with remunerative work. The Orient, which now must first be re-opened through agriculture, can for the time being only gradually absorb smaller bodies of such fugitives.

In proportion of sparse population even smaller bodies of Jews are still of importance, the more so as they represent a higher level of economic and cultural development than is possessed by the indigenous population of the Orient. Here they are, as has been amply shown in Palestine, in position to create and maintain closer relations with each other by the living Hebrew langaage and to continue the thread of the old Jewish history. By such immigration, as also has been shown by the Palestinian experiments, the native Oriental Jews can be aroused from their lethargy and the latter unite with the newcomers into a new, sound and strong Jewish community, that will enable a sound and sane national development of new cultural creations. Here, where the strength of the Jewish people is rooted, the Oriental Jews are more strongly attached to those roots than are the Jews of any other part of the world.

The Jews need a strong Turkey for their protection and the Ottomans find the Jews the best help to render Turkey strong and capable of resistance. Today, as has been the case for centuries, the fates of Jews and of Turks are most closely and insolubly united.

Turks and Jews, who during so many long centuries have been the abhorrence and detestation of the Occidental world, join in greeting the dawn of the rising sun of the Orient.

ANTI-CONVERSION LAWS IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

During the last few years there have been complaints that the schools established in Constantinople by the various religious orders, have made efforts towards converting their pupils to Christianity. In order to combat the evil the law governing the private schools now contain the following section: "It is not permitted to compel the pupils to receive instruction in any religion but their own; nor is it permitted to exclude anybody from the school because they refuse to take part in any of the schools' religious services; nor shall children be permitted, even of their own accord, to attend services of a religion not their own." Perhaps now, owing to this law, the mission schools will pay more attention to instruction in language and science than to weaning the children away from the religion of their parents.

THE WORK OF THE B'NAI B'RITH

(INTERVIEW FOR THE LONDON "JEWISH CHRONICLE" WITH MR. S. ROWSON, M.Sc.)

The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith is better known in the United States than it is in this country. There it is a huge organization with many lodges and very considerable influence. Here it is of comparatively recent growth with one London and one provincial Lodge. Yet it has already established a claim to the sympathetic attention of the Anglo-Jewish community to which it has rendered services of no mean value. The London Lodge has at its head at the present moment Mr. S. Rowson, M.Sc., whose status in the political world has been of considerable use to the organization during the war crisis, and whose wide kowledge of communal matters and sound judgment has facilitated the Lodge taking the important place in the hegemony of the community which it has now assumed. To a representative of the "Jewish Chronicle" Mr. Rowson has given an interesting account of the work of the Order in this country.

What the Order Stands For.

What, asked our representative, are the main principles of the Order. What, exactly, does it stand for?

"The B'nai B'rith is an association which exists to foster and promote the common interests of Jews throughout the world. In saying so much it is necessary to utter a cautionary note. The interests referred to are of a different order from, and can therefore never conflict with, their citizen interests as subjects of the various States in which they live. Jews have interests in promoting to the utmost possible internal development—socially, morally and intellectually—on lines consistent with the genius of the Jewish race. They are also interested in meeting the attacks—whether overt or covert—which from so many quarters and in so many lands are constantly and continuously leveled at them. It is in an association of Jews with these main objects in the forefront, of its program that I conceive the B'nai B'rith finds its main function."

Communal Fears.

When was the London Lodge founded?

"In 1909. The President of the Order visited this country for the purpose of establishing a Lodge in England."

Is it not a fact that the community at first did not look with favor upon the introduction of the Order into England?

"It is undoubted that some of the leaders of the community feared that the only purpose which the Lodge would achieve would be that of criticising and attacking—and to that extent undermining—the existing organizations. Either it was going to do harm or it could do no good. One can understand that, to a certain extent, this fear was based on the fact that the Lodge set itself, at the start, to maintain a detached attitude towards communal questions generally and did not propose to identify itself with any particular body."

The Aliens Act.

Was this attitude justified by results?

"Yes. This attitude proved its success early in the history of the Lodge in connection with the administration of the Aliens Act. It will be remembered that no provision had been made for legal assistance to Jewish immigrants who had been rejected and whose appeals were to be heard by the Immigration Board. At the outset the Board of Deputies was reluctant to take the matter in hand, and it was the initiative of the Lodge in the matter which eventually induced the Board to co-operate with us in making the provision required. The Lodge had engaged a solicitor and had secured the assistance of a panel of counsel and medical men, when the Board of Deputies agreed to joint action in the matter on the basis of a definite agreement between the two bodies, which elected a joint committee containing an equal number of representatives of the two organizations, with a president appointed by the Board. The cost of the scheme was partly defrayed by a grant by the Russo-Jewish Committee, the balance being provided in equal proportions by the Lodge and the Board."

A Great Success.

And the scheme succeeded?

"The success of the Committee's efforts was enormous, and many hundreds of poor emigrants were saved from repatriation through the Committee's activities. Especial acknowledgement is due to the untiring efforts of Mr. Isaac Landau, the Solicitor to the Committee."

Mr. Rawson went on to refer to the effect of this success in modifying the attitude of the community towards the Lodge.

"It was experiences such as these," he remarked, "which during the few years of its existence, have accustomed the Jewish public, and official departments generally, to the existence of the B'nai B'rith, and to recognize the value of the work it was able to accomplish. The disinterestedness of its motives were never in question. It never sought public notice or acknowledgment. 'Causes, not persons,' were its watchword. It was out to do a certain work, and the success of its aims was the only reward it ever sought."

Educating the Jewish Public.

Mr. Rowson next alluded to an important branch of the work of the B'nai B'rith, concerning which he displayed a diplomatic reticence and would give no details.

"Another important task," he said, "which was successfully undertaken by the Lodge was in helping to educate Jewish public opinion concerning the political status of Jews in other countries. This work was necessarily undertaken without any publicity. It is this class of work which the Order in America has carried out with great success and with far reaching consequences."

Growth of the Lodge.

Did the membership of the Lodge grow? our representative inquired.

"Yes. During the whole of this period the Lodge has rallied to its ranks a steadily increasing number of supporters, and now includes a large number of the most active thinkers and workers in the London Jewish community. The Manchester community, never far behind London—indeed, they claim to be nearly always in front—were not slow to see the importance and value of an organization of this description. About three years ago a Lodge was formed in that city, to which the name of the then President of the London Lodge, Dr. Gaster, is attached, and which has already done excellent work in the provinces."

War Activities.

Did the war affect the work of the Lodge?

"Yes. The opportunity for the greatest activities of the Lodge arose with the outbreak of the war. The war brought in its train a large number of problems for which existing associations, having definite peace objects, could not readily adapt themselves. But the Lodge, without any ties or limits to its activities of this description, set itself vigorously to some of the many tasks which the war necessitated. When the first flow of refugees reached this country and considerably overtaxed the resources of the Shelter, occasioning much unpleasant overcrowding within its own walls and in the temporary refuges which it established, the members of the Lodge were among the first to realize the great hardship that the herding together of many different classes of refugees occasioned. It was as an experiment in "classification"—one of the most difficult of all problems confronting philanthropists—that the movement was started of opening a hostel for a selected few of the Jewish refugees. The experiment appealed at once to the imagination of leading members of the community, and in connection with many of the synagogues and other institutions in London and the provinces similar hostels were established. The assistance which this movement gave towards relieving the situation was widely recognized."

Help All Round.

Mr. Rowson went on to indicate other ways in which the Lodge has proved its value during the war.

"There are several other directions in which the Lodge has been active. We were among the first to provide comforts for the Jewish interned prisoners at Ruhleben; we acted in this instance directly through the Foreign Office. We were instrumental in inducing the Board of Deputies to ask the two Chief Rabbis to initiate and administer a fund for the provision of Kosher food for Jewish interned prisoners in this country. We have been enabled also to relieve a large number of cases of distress occasioned by the war, cases which would not have come under the ken of the ordinary relief agencies. Funds were generously placed at our disposal by members of the Order in the United States and Canada, and these were supplemented by contributions from our own members and their friends. There is no question that we have done a great amount of good with the money at our disposal."

The Internment Question.

Did not the Lodge take action in regard to helping persons threatened with internment?

"That is so. The Board of Deputies refused its help in the case of 'alien enemy' Jews desirous of appealing to the Advisory Committee for exemption from internment or repatriation, and the Lodge undertook vigorously to give such help as was possible. In practice it was found unnecessary to take any action in the case of classes of persons who were being helped by the Friendly Societies and by the Polish Committee. This work brought the Lodge into direct touch with the Advisory Committee, and through the Lodge the Jewish public were the first to be informed of the conditions under which the Committee were regulating their action."

An Invitation.

Does the Lodge invite new members?

"During the existence of the London Lodge, an attempt has been made to admit to membership only those who, besides being impressed with the great objects of the Order, had proved their sterling worth by successful communal activities. Every member has a considerable record of such work behind him—literary, social, political or philanthropic. There are still many who possess the requisite qualifications whose presence at the meetings of the Lodge would be welcomed, and whom I take this opportunity of inviting to join us in the good work."

The Order's Triology.

In conclusion Mr. Rowson said: "The activities of the Lodge and of the Order since its inception have, as I have already stated, demonstrated that the fears which in some quarters found voluble expression have never materialized. Its members have discovered no essential conflict in performing the duties as loyal citizens and in carrying out the obligations as Jews. They have helped to stimulate Jewish thought and action to promote in the fullest possible degree the great Jewish virtues that constitute the working motto of our Order—benevolence, brotherly love and harmony."

THE JEWISH PRISONERS OF WAR IN AUSTRIA.

The large number of Russian Jews who have been taken captive by the Teutonic armies and are now stationed in the various camps for war prisoners in Germany and Austria are being comparatively well treated and are not exposed to any dangers, as are the prisoners of other nationalities. The Jews are for the most part able to speak the German language and most of them are sufficiently intelligent to make themselves useful in the management of the affairs of the camps. Many of the prisoners are being sent out in various parts of the country to do certain work for the government or for the armies. The camp, however, is their home and there all their mail is received and from there distributed. A large force of clerks are therefore needed in every camp who should know the German language. For this purpose Jews, as well as Estonians, Letts and Germans are employed. Many of the Jewish prisoners are also men of higher culture and are being made use of in other ways by the respective governments. In consequence of this, the Jews are conspicuously free from the drudgery that the other prisoners are subjected to.

This, of course, is looked upon with displeasure not only by the Russian prisoners themselves, but also by Russian officials in Russia. Recently there came a donation of money to the Austrian camp at Kleinmunchen, with the provision that only real Russians be benefited thereby. A delegation of the Russian Red Cross Society recently visited that camp, bringing some money and other relief articles for the prisoners. The woman in charge of the commission made the same condition to the Austrian authorities that Jews should not participate in the relief to be distribtued. The Austrian officials, however, refused to agree to the condition. The commission, however, handed in a protest against the more favorable treatment accorded to Jews in the camp, with the result that from now on all applicants for clerical work or other easier work will have to give their race and the authorities will use their judgment in diminishing the number of Jews in the office. Because this comes from the Red Cross society, which is supposed to be broad in its dispensation of relief and tolerant, the resentment against the new order is very tense on the part of the Jewish prisoners of war.

Otherwise the Jewish prisoners of war in Germany and Austria are much better off than their brethren who are Russian prisoners. After many negotiations and much red tape the Russian military authorities decided not to release the one hundred and forty Jews who had been taken by them as hostages in various Galician towns. While these were not really prisoners of war, since they were not soldiers, still they are treated as such and have been transported now to Siberia, where many camps of such prisoners are now situated. The Christian hostages, however, were allowed to remain in Kieff, whereto they were first taken and permitted to move about freely in that town.

NEWS FROM AUSTRIA.

The activities of the lodges of District No. 10, Austria, naturally are principally concerned for the present with relief measures for war sufferers. With the exception of the two eastern lodges, the Leopolis of Lemberg and the Orient of Czernowitz, all are hard at work. To extenuate the consequences of the war, to extend a helping hand to those who are hit the hardest is the pith of their activity.

At the return of our co-religionists from their temporary and enforced exile they were of help by assisting with money, and in pursuance of a resolution passed at the meeting of the General Committee, held on January 9, they appropriated out of the funds of the District so far, the sum of 160,000 Kronen for this purpose.

The relief work in Galicia and in Bukowina is carried on in conjunction with the Israelitische Alliance in Vienna and the Galician Relief Society.

The General Committee of the District has also resolved to care especially for the Jewish orphans of Galicia and to found in Vienna for this purpose a central organization for the care of orphans. Several conferences have already been held in this connection and at the next meeting of the General Committee it is hoped that this relief work will be launched.

The moneys which the lodges of the District have collected for relief work amount to over 200,000 Kronen. Considering the great demands that are being made upon the members and the repeated times that they have been called upon to respond, the sum mentioned is quite an achievement. Besides this, they have sent 4000 Kronen to Sofia, Bulgaria, and 5000 Kronen to Constantinople, Turkey, to assist needy brethren and co-religionists.

It is self-understood that they have most warmly and effectively cared for the children of the refugees and have used for this purpose all the facilities in the various children's homes and retreats. By this method many hundreds of them were enabled to receive regular instruction, and, for young girls who have outgrown the school's period, they have arranged courses in stenography, typewriting and bookkeeping, etc., in various divisions so that in a short time a great number of them were placed in a position to maintain themselves by their own work.

It will no doubt be of interest that the Home for Convalescents in Meran was also placed at the disposal of the Government to be used as a hospital and the same is entirely maintained by the brethren.

The newest institution, the training of Jewish nurses, has already ripened its first fruits. Most of the nurses are employed in different military hospitals and some even are active at the front.

MORGENTHAU SAYS JEWS ARE SECURE IN PALESTINE.

Ambassador Morgenthau received at his residence in New York on Tuesday, February 29, a delegation of Palestinian Jews, consisting of Wolf Gluskin, Dr. Schmarya Levin, Dr. Benzion Mossinsohn and E. W. Lewin-Epstein, who came to thank him for all he had done for the relief of Palestine Jewry.

Mr. Morgenthau assured the delegation that the Palestinian Jews and their property were safe from danger. The Jews in the Ottoman empire have never been molested by the Ottoman government. Before he left for America, he was assured that the Jews of Palestine need fear no internal disturbances, and that they could safely rely upon the friendly support of the Ottoman government.

A GOOD RECORD.

During the past five years the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith has expended for charitable, benevolent and educational purposes the sum of $2,265,-379.

ANTI-JEWISH LIBEL DISPROVED.

The libel spread by the "Letopis Voini" to the effect that the Jews of Brezin had betrayed a local Russian force has been disproved by the publication of letters from officers of the Russian garrison thanking the Jews for their excellent behavior and loyalty.

GALICIAN JEWISH HOSTAGES.

As a result of the petition of the Governor of Kieff, Count Ignatieff, on behalf of the Jewish hostages from Galicia, their expulsion to Siberia has been postponed indefinitely.

HIGH FEE FOR GERMAN SURGEON.

It is reported from Berlin via London that an aide-de-camp of the sultan arrived in Berlin, January 30, bearing a fee of about $30,000 for Dr. Israel, who recently operated on the Turkish sovereign.

The Anti-Immigration Movement and the Literacy Test

By Louis Edward Levy
Member of I. O. B. B. Immigration Commission and President Jewish Immigrant Society of Philadelphia

At the hearing before the House Committee on Immigration on Friday, January 21 ult., Miss Grace Abbott, widely known as an assistant of Miss Jane Addams in Chicago and as a prominent social worker generally, declared emphatically that the real motive of the persistent efforts to restrict immigration, as intended by the proposed literary test, was religious prejudice, and that the real purpose was to keep out as many as possible of the Jews and Catholics coming from Eastern and Southern Europe. Several of the new members of the Committee, those from the Pacific Coast particularly, protested vehemently against this imputation, doubtless in all sincerity; but the older members of the Committee knew full well that Miss Abbott, speaking from her vantage ground as a member of an old New England family, was but exceptionally courageous in expressing her convictions and was but telling the truth without mincing words. The chairman of the Committee, Mr Burnett, of Alabama, reputed as the author of the pending Immigration Bill, took occasion to declare himself as being free from any sense of religious prejudice and particularly as holding his Jewish fellow-citizens in his district and the Jewish people generally in high esteem, and his sentiments appeared to be shared more or less by other members of the Committee; but the fact remains that at every recurrence of the effort to restrict immigration, the real incentive, of at least the nativistic class of its advocates, has been racial and religious prejudice.

Up to about thirty years ago this class of immigration restrictionists was alone in the field, and formed only an insignificant and practically negligible factor in political affairs. Their forebears of previous generations had early begun a nativistic agitation against foreigners, and by 1830 were declaiming loudly against the immigrants who then began coming in noticeably increasing numbers from England, Scotland and the German seacoast towns. There was yet a strong anti-British sentiment remaining from the War of Independence and from that of 1812, while the opposition to the Germans was based on the assumption that they could not become assimilated to the language and customs of this country. The opposition became louder when immigration from Ireland suddenly increased after the Irish famine of 1846-7, yet louder when the Germans began coming in larger numbers after the abortive popular uprisings in 1848, and when in the fifties the discovery of gold in California made America loom before the imagination of Europeans as an El Dorado, and railroads on the Continent and steamboats on the ocean began to make it easier to emigrate, the objectors to the immigrants became vociferous. A great agitation arose; the hue and cry resulted in the formation of a nativistic party, which grew to such large proportion that it gained ascendency in twelve of the Eastern and Southern States. This party was based on the assumption that the immigrants, particularly the Irish and Germans, were incapable of properly appreciating the freedom and liberty of a republican government and of American institutions generally, and that they were a menace to the future of the country.

The anti-immigration movement of that period was sought to be promoted by a secret society organized for the purpose, the members of which, though persistently denying all knowledge of its existence, came to be known as the Know-Nothings. The antagonism to the immigrants developed into violence; here in Philadelphia, as early as 1844, it resulted in a riot in which several of the newcomers were killed, a number of them badly injured and the Catholic church at Sixth and Spruce Streets was burned out. Similar outbursts occurred from time to time in other places where the immigrants were congregated. As a consequence of these excesses, the Know-Nothing party gradually lost ground and was eventually submerged in the rising tide of the anti-slavery agitation. Then came the Civil War, and the cavils of the immigration restrictionists were silenced in the roar of battle and their prophecies of evil proven false by the tens of thousands of the recent immigrants who flocked to the standards of the Union armies and by the thousands of them who gave their lives that America might, indeed, be a land of the free.

[illegible] the increasing immigration after [illegible] War, the need of its proper [illegible] was generally recognized. [illegible] were adopted to prevent the incoming of various classes of clearly undesirable immigrants, and all necessary requirements as to the health and morality of the new arrivals, their law-abiding character and their ability to earn a livelihood were gradually incorporated in the law. But in the meantime a new generation of Know-Nothings had grown up in the land. By 1890, when the restrictionists of Russia were forcing an increasing number of its Jewish people to seek refuge in America, the restrictionists in this country started anew. The nativists had all along remained as but an obscure and unappreciable influence in political affairs, but now they took advantage of the growing labor movement to promote their purposes, making these with the pretense of solicitude for the wage-earner. Gradually the restriction movement came to be strengthened by sentiment in the Southern States, where the incoming of any but English-speaking immigrants is opposed through vague apprehensions of possible further complication of the negro problem, and where immigration in general is regarded with an unreasoning mistrust. With these various influences combined, a measure for restricting immigration, devised in the form of an educational requirement, the so-called literacy test, was passed by Congress in 1897, but was prevented from becoming law by the veto of President Cleveland. By means of this measure it was calculated that a large proporition of the Italian and Slavic peasantry, whose school facilities were few, and a considerable proporition of the Jewish refugees from Russia, to whom school facilities were forbidden, would be barred out. The palpable facts that illiteracy does not prevent an immigrant from gaining an honest living anywhere in America, and that the most undesirable of all immigrants are the educated ones who use their abilities in more or less dishonest ways, have been ignored, and the efforts of the restrictionists have been persistently continued.

In 1913 a bill with the literacy test provision, relaxed in favor of immigrants coming "solely" to escape religious persecution, was passed through Congress, only to be stopped by the veto of President Taft. In the following year it was again passed by Congress and again vetoed, this time by President Wilson, and now it is again before Congress, but with the literacy requirement materially modified in favor of immigrants "who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith."

This is the amendment proposed by Mr. Louis Marshall, in behalf of the American Jewish Committee, and offers a material concession in favor of Jewish immigrants especially.

In point of fact, the literacy requirement, with the exemption of the minor children of immigrants, as proposed in the former bills, would have but slightly affected Jewish immigrants, as very few, if any, of the males and but a small proportion of the females among them would have been excluded by that restriction; provided, always, that the examination of the immigrants was conducted in a proper spirit. But even so, and apart from the fact, frankly admitted by the original inventors of the literacy test, that it could not serve to distinguish an undesirable immigrant from the rest and was intended simply as a measure of restriction, the proposal is seriously objectionable on practical grounds. This aspect of the matter was pointed out to the Committee by the present writer at the hearing on January 21, as follows:

"The administration of the proposed literacy test would be fraught with extreme difficulty. The time necessarily consumed in the proper application of the proposed test, through the selection of the requisite language prints; the reading of the text by the immigrants, perhaps haltingly, as containing unusual phraseology, and the possible misunderstanding by the examiner of an immigrant's dialectic pronunciation of the text, would extend the examination of a shipload of immigrants through several days, with the result of causing much discomfort to the immigrants and more or less confusion generally, unless a very large number of inspectors were employed for the purpose. These inspectors would have to be conversant not only with the language in question, but also with its various dialects, and would have to determine whether an immigrant's reading of the text was sufficiently perfect to pass him or sufficiently imperfect to bar him. Whole families would thus be left to the discretion of minor officials empowered to decide their fate, a power which only men possessing at once great linguistic accomplishments and high judicial qualifications can possibly be expected to exercise properly."

As a further handle to the restricionists the present bill is made to include a new provision, excluding "persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority." Regarding this the Immigration Committee, in reporting the bill to Congress on January 28 ult., says:

"This term is unfamiliar to laymen and to some physicians not engaged in the special field of the alienist. With alienists, however, it has a well-defined meaning. One has defined it to be 'a congenital defect in the emotional or volitional fields of mental activity which results in inability to make proper adjustment to the environments.'"

The only thing that is unquestionable about this "well-defined meaning" is that a phrase which such a definition is supposed to define should never be incorporated in any law

Finally, it is to be considered that at this time, when millions of the European peasantry and working classes are being slaughtered or incapacitated on the battlefields of the Great War; when it may be foreseen that European governments will, as a necessary public policy, endeavor to prevent the emigration of the remaining able-bodied workers, and when in this country the demand for workers, and crude labor especially is being increasingly felt in every branch of industry, the idea of adding to the already ample provisions of the existing law excluding undesirable immigrants a further provision that will exclude many that are worthy and desirable is more unreasonable than ever before.

PURIM.

Sunday, March 19, 1916, Which Is Equivalent to Adar II, 14, 5676.

The Festival of Purim is based on the account given in the Book of Esther. This account comprises the romantic career of a Jewish maiden who rises from obscurity to the throne of Persia. Her womanly charms bring her the admiration of a king and her tact and discretion save her kindred in a tragic hour of danger. The story is typical of the persecutions to which Jews have been subjected and of the providential rescues they have had in their eventful historv. It has accordingly acquired significance and popularity, not only as a book for reading, but also as a basis for festive edification.

The book of Esther describes types of character in strong contrasts, the King dispensing favors and frowns according to his mood; a wily Minister of State, conceited, selfish and without conscience to satisfy his greed and ambition; the Jew, humble and true to kindred and people to the utmost limits of self-sacrifice; and, finally, the Queen, representative of Jewish womanhood, who combines modesty and grace with the resources and strength of an unperturbed loyalty.

It happened long ago, when the Jews dwelt in Persia and Artaxerxes was king. Haman was Prime Minister, and Mordecai the Jew had fostered Esther the orphan girl with the love and ardor of a father. Haman was jealous of Mordecai whom, because of a timely service he had rendered, the "king had delighted to honor." And Haman had contrived a splendid scheme to remove the favorite. He had persuaded the king that it would be a good and profitable policy to extirpate the Jews. But he had forgotten to provide against the influence of a pure woman whose pleadings would be as irresistible as they were genuine. Esther prevails and saves her people. Haman is overwhelmed, swept out of power and loses his life. Justice is vindicated at last.

It is customary to read the Book of Esther during the Evening and following Morning services from a copy written on parchment. Such a scroll-copy is called a Megillah.

The Festival of Purim is celebrated by the Jews in the happiest spirit, as befits the story and its meaning. It might be called the Carnival of the Jews In many communities it is marked by social festivities and masquerades, but it is free from every kind of excess. It is associated, as already the Book of Esther provides, with an interchange of gifts among friends and remembrances to the poor. In our day Purim is joyously observed by children under the auspices of the religious schools.

FORTY-SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION OF D. G. L. NO. 5, I. O. B. B.

The forty-second annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 5 was held at Savannah, Ga., beginning Sunday evening, January 23, with a most interesting and enjoyable literary program, the central and significant feature of which was the splendid address by Dr. E. N. Calisch of Richmond, Va.

The president of the General Committee had taken the matter of the literary exercises at the opening of the convention under careful consideration, and determined that the object of these literary exercises was not simply to afford a high type of literary and oratorical pleasure for the audience, but while this was highly desirable, the main idea should be to advance and spread the objects and purposes of the Order. The oration of Dr. Calisch completely realized all these requirements, and it is the hope of the District that that oration may appear in wider form so that it can be circulated generally for propaganda purposes.

While the number and personnel of the convention was very much the same as in the several years preceding, there seemed to be an unanimity of opinion that there was more enthusiasm combined with a larger amount of actual constructive B. B. work done, than in any convention within the memory of those present. Several things conspired to this end. First, the very full and able report of the president, Harold S. Bloomberg, which set forth the very efficient and business-like administration just closing; secondly, admiration and pleasure on the part of the assembled delegates at the fine building of the Jewish Educational Alliance (the local B. B. headquarters), where the sessions of the convention were held, and thirdly, the exhilarating effect of the immense throng that gathered at the opening of the convention and followed with much interest its sessions until the close. It was a gala occasion for the delegates as well as for the local community, and it was hard to say whether the Savannah Jewry or the District Grand Lodge benefited more.

A detailed account of the work of the convention would have to wait for the next issue of the News, but it would be ungracious to conclude this brief notice without explaining that a great deal of the enthusiasm of the delegates to the convention was accountable to their appreciation of the fact that whereas the official reports indicated that the district had made the largest gains and showed numerically and financially the best condition within the memory of all assembled, this was accomplished through the president, Brother H. S. Bloomberg, who was unexpectedly placed in the executive office in the middle of the year by reason of the removal from the district of the president, and so had only six months in which to work. This served to arouse all in attendance to a realization of what could be done if the possibilities were thoroughly developed, and the session of the Grand Lodge was, in a large part, a personal ovation to President Bloomberg.

STATE HELP FOR AUSTRIAN REFUGEES.

According to the official report of the Austrian Ministry of the Interior for 1914-15, 1,110,000 persons were driven from place to place in Austria since the war began until October, 1915. Of these more than half needed support and the government spent on them during that time the sum of 279,504,090 crowns. About 50 millions of crowns were spent on transportation and more than 140 millions of crowns were spent on the maintenance of the camps. It was necessary to move from place to place 5,158,609 persons, of whom 2,466,571 were Jews. In the confusion of the flights and removals, many parents lost their children and children were separated from their parents. The bureau established for the purpose of locating missing persons had about 200,000 inquiries and was successful in locating about 31 per cent of the missing. An idea of the items that entered into the maintenance of the refugees may be gathered from the following data: In order to accommodate part of the refugees in camps, 305,603 sacks of straw and 324,133 blankets were needed. Among these refugees were distributed 587,760 shirts, 280,000 suits and 188,590 pairs of shoes. The cost of these materials alone amounted to about twelve millions of crowns. In the barracks there were established 236 schools, with 510 teachers and 12,816 pupils. Besides there were also established 39 high schools and 97 trade schools, with a teaching staff of 665 and about 12,000 pupils.

These expenses in behalf of the refugees does not include what was spent by the various charitable organizations and what was received in their behalf from abroad.

THE KEHILLA, XXI

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph.D.

The Centenary of One of Her Sons

It may not be superfluous to define again the meaning of "Kehillah." We understand by it the Jewish community existing at the same time as a secular municipality under restrictive laws with the spiritual life essentially of her own. The peculiar conditions of Moravia in this respect we have also defined previously. The principle generally recognized in the policy of Europe regarding the Jews, that the state must guard itself against their increase, was carried out in Bohemia by a regulation which allowed 8,600 Jews for the province, and in Moravia, by assigning the 5,400 families, which were legally permitted, to certain places so that every place had its legally fixed contingent. The largest congregation was that of Nikolsburg with 620 families, the second largest, that of Prossnitz, with 328. An illustrious son of the latter congregation, the centenary of whose birth is celebrated March 31, is the subject of this sketch. His name is Moritz Steinschneider, and he occupies the front rank among the scholars who worked in the field of history of Jewish literature, which he mastered in all its branches, extending over 3,000 years, covering almost every language of civilized people, and scattered over the greater part of the globe.

Before speaking of him, we must say a few words of this interesting "Kehillah." The congregation of 328 families meant, inasmuch as the law restricting the marriages was not rigorously observed, about 2,000 souls. In our days a congregation of 2,000 souls, especially in the United States, would not rank amongst the foremost organizations. In Europe seventy years ago it was different. Then a congregation of such size was reckoned among the large centers of Jewish life. About the origin of these settlements, we are not well informed. It was probably organized by exiles from a large city in the neighborhood, probably from Olmuetz, whence according to the prevalent movement in the fifteenth century, the Jews were expelled in 1454. We have dwelt on this feature of Jewish history before. City life in central Europe became a power in the state about the thirteenth century. The municipalities obtained their autonomy, and the consequence of this political change was that the Jews, formerly under the protection of the ruler—in this case the King of Bohemia—were forced out as inconvenient competitors of their neighbors. In the kingdom of Bohemia, a powerful factor entered into this condition, through the religious excitement, created by the Hussite movement. The Jews, expelled from Olmuetz in 1554, may have found in the neighboring town of Prossnitz a friend in the lord who had jurisdiction over the place and who, like all the members of his rank, was willing to accept the "protection money" from the Jews, who were no competitors of his. The oldest notice of Jews living in Prossnitz which I discovered is a passport issued by Vratislav of Pernstein to the Jew Jacob, who was engaged in the rare trade of an armor maker (Schwert Feger). The passport is dated July 12, 1567. By the end of the sixteenth century we hear of a printer, Isaac Ben Aaron, who worked at his trade in Cracow. Shortly afterwards we heard of a Hebrew printing press in Prossnitz itself. A book bearing the date of 1602 was published there, but the printing press evidently did not flourish. It is possible that a native of Prossnitz, who had worked as printer in Cracow, returned to his home, and tried to establish himself in business there, but found out that this trade could only flourish in Poland itself, or in a locality conveniently located for export to Poland.

The reader shall not be bothered with dry notes on the names of rabbis of whose existence we only know through recommendations, printed in rabbinical works, the so-called "Haskamahs," which fulfilled the double purpose of recommending the book and protecting its copyright. They originated in the sixteenth century in imitation of the Roman Index which was to guard the Catholic world against heresies, and were chiefly inspired by the fear that an unguarded statement on Christianity might involve the whole Jewish community in serious trouble. Afterwards they served, as already said, largely as a recommendation of the work whose author—and this condition is still existing—depended on private benefactors for covering the expense of printing. In this way we are able to obtain information on local history.

While the general public would not be interested to learn that Jehiel Michl was rabbi in Prossnitz in 1693, and Alexander Ben Menahem Mendel, in 1726, we have at least in the first half of the eighteenth century a rabbi in Prossnitz, who left a name in literature. His name is Meir Eisenstadt, or Maharam Asch, who died as rabbi of Eisenstadt in 1744. A word on the peculiarity of Jewish family names may be in place here. The uninformed reader would connect the name Asch with the German for "ashes," but its origin is derived from Eisenstadt, for in Hebrew transliteration this name is abbreviated by the letters Aleph and Shin. Rabbi Meir, like all prominent rabbis of his time, was a native of Poland, and among his disciples is one of the leading rabbis of the eighteenth century, Jonathan Eybeschuetz, who died as chief rabbi of Altona in 1764, and was the subject of a vehement controversy due to the charge that he still held the belief in the Messianic mission of Sabbatai Zebi, the impostor of Smyrna, who in 1666 converted to Islam. Some time between 1820 and 1830, Prossnitz had another prominent rabbi, Nahum, or as he was officially called, Nehemias, Trebitsch (1777-1842), subsequently Landrabbiner of Moravia. He was the last rabbi of the old type. In vain did he try to stem the tide of secularism, which induced the younger element of the rabbinate to engage in secular studies. His own successor, Loew Schwab, was one of the advocates of secular studies, and the Landrabbiner could not prevent his election, because the congregation hastened to elect the man before the government had confirmd the election of the new Landrabbiner, who might have vetoed the election of his successor. In 1836, Schwab was called as rabbi to Pesth, and one of the advocates of progress, the reformer, Hirsch B. Fassel (1802-1883), was called to the rabbinate of Prossnitz, which he held from 1836 to 1853. Fassel, the father-in-law of the talented American rabbi, Solomon H. Sonneschein, whose remarkable gifts were unfortunately prevented from developing by conditions that would better not be mentioned, was a unique character. A rabbi of the old style, a really profound Talmudist, he had acquired secular knowledge as an autodidact. This defect stuck to him through all his life. His German grammar was faulty, and his scientific method showed the dialecticism of the Talmudic school. His peculiar idea was to justify reform in the service and in ritual law by the same tricks which characterize the Talmudists of the old school. Yet he has in many ways enriched Jewish literature. I remember from the stories told by older people that he aroused quite a commotion when he declared that rice and peas may be used on Passover. This was a bold innovation in those days, for, while from the point of view of rabbinical law, nothing could be said against it, it was understood that the rabbi was here to invent new prohibitions, not to abolish the existing ones.

Among his opponents was Moses Katz Wannefried, a well to do merchant, who, while never officiating as a rabbi, presided over a Yeshibah, a practice which is an illustration of Jewish ideals. It has gone out of existence and the last one of this type in this section of Europe was, besides Wannefried, Aaron Kornfeld, of Jenikau, in Bohemia, who died in advanced years in 1881, having survived his Yeshibah for a number of years. His nephew, Sigmund, a banker in Budapest, was raised to the baronetcy, and a member of the House of Lords, died March 24, 1909. Another principal of a Yeshibah in Prossnitz, who was not an officiating rabbi, was Moses Sofer (1762-1839), afterwards so famous as rabbi of Pressburg, and leader of orthodoxy. He had come to Moravia from his birthplace, Frankfort on the Main, with his teacher, Nathan Adler, who was called as rabbi to Boskowitz, and according to the custom of his age, drifted to Prossnitz through a "Schidduch," marrying the widowed daughter of a former rabbi, with the understanding that he should be supported by his wife's brothers and devote himself entirely to the study of the Torah. Such patrons of the Torah and such widows, who are satisfied that their husbands should study God's Law, while they should consider it a privilege to support him, are no more to be found in that section of Europe either. Prossnitz particularly became, as I already stated, a center of progressive Judaism, in comparatively early days. As a student in Breslau, nearly forty years ago, I met at the house of my teacher, Professor Graetz, an old man from Leobschuetz, Silesia, named Benjamin Hollaender, who, learning that I was from Moravia, told me, "I know Moravia, I was there many years ago as a student of the Yeshibah, and before I went there they warned me, saying, 'Prossnitz is a home of infidels.' There the students of the Yeshibah, when passing friends on the street, doff their hats, and say in correct German, 'Guten Morgen.'" Benjamin Hollaender was born in Loslau, Silesia, 1808, and died at Leobschuetz, May 12, 1884. According to the principle expressed in the adage, "Of a Bachur you can make anything," Hollaender, after leaving the Yeshibah, engaged in the manufacture of knit goods and became a pioneer in this line. He still had the ambition of being a Hebrew author, and published a commentary on Canticles which, a critic claims, was plagiarized. A grandson of his is Felix Hollaender, a well-known novelist and a manager of the "Deutsches Theater" at Berlin. Loslau has ceased to be a Jewish congregation, and neither from Leobschuetz, nor from any other place in that section, a young man is sent to a Yeshibah, and in Prossnitz, which has become predominantly Slavic, the Jews still may say "Guten Morgen" on the street, but a Yeshibah is an institution which even the oldest inhabitants do not remember having seen. At the time when Moritz Steinschneider was a young man, Moses Katz Wannefried still assembled a few students, amongst whom were Moritz Eisler (1823-1902), afterwards school principal in Nikolsburg, and known as author on Jewish philosophy, and Adolph Jellinek (1821-1894) the celebrated preacher. A cousin of Moses Wannefried was the well-known leader of Hungarian orthodoxy, Menahem Katz (1801-1891), one of the most faithful disciples of Moses Sofer, for many years rabbi in Deutsch Kreuz, Hungary. He had dropped the family name of Wannefried, pointing to the place in Hesse whence his family originated, and assumed that of Katz, which is formed of the initial letters Kohen Zedek, as family name and was called Menahem Proistiz, the Yiddish for Prossnitz .Thus from one environment two opposite extremes originated. Steinschneider is carried away by the current of progressivism, and Rabbi Menahem is in the same environment, which seems to lead to complete disintegration, made an exponent of uncompromising conservatism.

Of Steinschneider's early youth we know very little. Outside of university lectures, which he attended probably as a special student in Prague and Vienna, he does not seem to have had what we call a regular school education. As a very young man he contributed under the pseudonym of M. S. Charbonah a brief essay to a severe criticism of S. R. Hirsch's "Chaurew," by H. B. Fassel, then rabbi in Prossnitz. For some years he still seems to have been contemplating to enter the rabbinate. He preached in some congregation of Moravia, and in 1846 was spoken of as a candidate for the position of Kreisrabbiner at Tarnopol. In Galicia the Austrian government pursued the policy of appointing such district rabbis for the purpose of advancing secular education among the Jews. In Tarnopol, this endeavor met with considerable success, through the efforts of Joseph Perl (1775-1839), who established the first secular school connected with the modernized synagogue. What caused Steinschneider to change his plans, I do not know. The man who was so punctilious in elucidating the smallest points in older Jewish history was silent about himself. His uncle, Gideon Brecher (1797-1871), a physician and Hebrew author of considerable merit, may have had some influence on him., At any rate Steinschneider devoted himself to Oriental studies and made a specialty of Jewish Arabic literature. He was a prolific writer, and the list of his writings, compiled on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, is a pamphlet of respectable size. Even his independent publications are too numerous to be characterized in detail. I would mention his first work of lasting value, a history of Hebrew printing, contributed to Ersch and Gruber's German Encyclopedia, the largest work of its kind, which, however, was never finished. Next to it in importance is his catalogue of the Hebrew works found in the Bodleyan Library at Oxford, an immense quarto volume, written in Latin. This library has an interesting history. It owes its origin to the acquisition of the unique collection made by Rabbi David Oppenheimer of Prague (1660-1736). This catalogue is by no means a mere list of books, but contains in almost every article a minute literary history of the book and the author. Any man might be proud of having done no more than this monumental piece of work. Next to it in importance is his work on the Jews as translators in the Middle Ages. This work was rewarded with a prize by the French Academy and, if ever prizes of this kind showed their usefulness, a question which many people deny, it was proven in this case. The value of this work lies in the importance of the contributions made by Jews to the world's civilization. Jews in Middle Ages were largely instrumental in preserving to the world the treasures of antiquity by translation from Arabic into Latin. Through their activity Aristotle remained the teacher of the medieval world. This, however, does not do justice to the usefulness of such activity. The whole range of human activity from philosophy to medicine, mathematics, astronomy, chemistry, to chess playing, and folklore, were enriched by the work of the Jews who, owing to their peculiar conditions, were bi-linguists, if not polyglot.

One sees from this fact that Steinschneider, while not identified with Jewish communal life, was influenced by an enthusiasm for his subject, and by the purpose of defending the Jews against the frequent charge that they are middle men without the genius of originality. He consistently refused to occupy any rabbinic position. Even the offer to teach at the rabbinical seminary founded by Abraham Geiger in Berlin, as an "academy for the science of Judaism," he refused. He was first employed in Berlin in the peculiar position of a "learned Jew," who had to assist at the taking of an oath in court, and after the abolition of the special Jewish oath in 1869, he became principal of the Jewish girls' school in Berlin, a position which he held until his retirement. He taught, however, at the Veitel Heine Institute, originally a Beth Hamidrash, founded by the financier, Veitel Heine Ephraim, the great-grandfather of the great Egyptologist and celebrated novelist, Georg Ebers. There he usually had rabbinical students as hearers, but he considered it a secular position, and he wished that Jewish literature should be made a strictly secular subject. In addition, he held a position in the Oriental department of the Royal Library of Berlin. Outside of this, the only recognition that he received was the title of professor which, however, is given to high school teachers, to principals of music institutes, to authors of fiction, and the like.

A literary work which is limited to a narrow circle of students seems to create bitterness in people who feel that their work is not sufficiently appreciated. Another feature, peculiar to such specialists, is impatience with trivial errors found in the works of others, and naturally even Steinschneider is not free from it. It would be a boredom to the reader were I to quote erroneous dates and false interpretations of names in Steinschneider's works, but it is interesting that the man who knew more about Jewish books than any other person, living or dead, declares it a legend that a Passover Hagadah in connection with the passage, "These bitter herbs," contains the note, "It is a custom in Israel to point to the housewife when saying, 'These bitter herbs.'" Steinschneider doubts whether such a book exists, but it does exist. It is a beautifully illustrated Hagadah, the first of its kind, printed in Prague, 1526, and a copy is found in the library of the Jewish Theological Seminary of New York. This, of course, is not the only specimen of its kind known to me.

While Steinschneider ought to have been impressed more than anybody else with the possibility of error in details, he is unfair to popular writers to a degree of malice. He calls Graetz "a literary thief," speaks of rabbinical seminaries as institutions from whose graduates no scientific work can be expected, attacks the rabbis in general as self-seekers, and in polemics on some inconsequential detail calls Neubauer a man who worked in the same field, a malicious and impudent liar, so that one cannot blame Ludwig Philippsohn, whom he also very often attacked, for calling Steinschneider a "literary chimney sweep."

The limitations of his wonderful talents are best characterized by pointing to his contempt for modern Hebrew and Yiddish literature. The man who devoted a life to the study of such insignificant works as an Arabic treatise on Schehitah or on alchemy, had no understanding of the great cultural mission of Jewish literature of his own time. We all have our limitations. Steinschneider died January 24, 1907, nearly ninety-one years old, busy writing and studying to the last days of his life, and exemplifying like his Moravian countryman, Isaac H. Weiss (1815-1905), and like his life-long friend, Leopold Zunz (1794-1886), the blessing that the Torah has length of days in her right hand.

Be yielding to thy superior and affable even to the young, and receive every one cheerfully.

Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America was held on February 27, 1916, in the auditorium of Public School No. 62, New York.

The meeting was attended by delegates of 2,000 organizations throughout the country which are affiliated with the Society.

Judge Leon Sanders, the President of the Society, opened the meeting, and a prayer was offered by Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein of the Congregation Kehillath Jeshurun.

Judge Leon Sanders, the President of the Society, read his annual report, which was enthusiastically received, and which described in detail the work of the Society during the past year. His description of war conditions, which caused a great deal of the activities of the Society during 1915, called forth the admiration of the entire audience.

An important message from Dr. Isidore Hershfield, the Society's representative in Europe, who is now visiting various Jewish provinces in Poland, transmitted by the Secretary of State, Robert Lansing, was received and read.

The first speaker was U. S. Senator James A. Reed of Missouri. He emphasized the Jews' contribution to civilization in all countries, calling attention to the accomplishments of Jews and Jewesses in every field of human endeavor. He described in emphatic terms the loyalty of the Jew to the country wherein he lives, and dwelt particularly on the enthusiasm displayed by the Jews of America for the country of their adoption. He felt certain that if the occasion arose, the Jew would be among the first ones to show his allegiance.

Senator Reed gave a brief description of the efforts which he put forth in the Senate of the United States to prevent the adoption of restrictive immigration legislation. He urged the Jews of America to show their opposition to the pending Burnett Bill, and he felt positive that if they would make their voice heard, Congress would not dare to pass a bill restricting immigration through a literacy test. He said "There are enough Jews in nearly every Congressional district in the United States to make themselves felt, and it is your business to stand up and fight on this proposition in the name of Americanism first, in the name of the God of Israel and eternal justice next, and you can win this fight."

Senator Reed was followed by Mr. Jacob H. Schiff. He was introduced in flattering terms by President Sanders, as the Dean of the Society's Advisory Board, who had been of immeasurable assistance to the organization during the past year as in previous years. Mr. Schiff spoke of the excellent work accomplished by the Society and stated that if the organization has done nothing else during its entire existence than to send Mr. Hershfield to Europe and to organize the work which it is now continuing for the purpose of locating for American Jews their relatives in the war zone, then it would have earned the confidence, respect and appreciation of all Jewry. He proposed that the delegates and members assembled in annual meeting send a message of congratulation and confidence for the successful results which he has thus far obtained in his most important undertaking.

Mr. Schiff laid special emphasis on the importance of the question of Jewish immigration, and the necessity for handling the immigration situation properly and efficiently. He expressed implicit confidence in the Society, having watched its work since its organization. He felt sure that the organization could be trusted to handle the various matters which arise in connection with this important question.

After Mr. Schiff departed, Judge Sanders announced that he had received a message from Mr. Schiff with the request that no announcement be made until he had left. In the message, Mr. Schiff agreed to give the sum of $25,000 towards a new building which the Society expects to erect, on condition that the balance of the necessary amount to be raised during the year 1916.

Judge Sanders then introduced the Hon. Simon Wolf of Washington, as the man who had fought many and important battles for the Jew in America for over a half century. He called attention to the fact that Mr. Wolf has attained the age of 80 years and is still ready and willing to render useful services to his Jewish brethren and to all mankind. The entire audience rose when Mr. Wolf was introduced, and gave him a most hearty and enthusiastic ovation. He deplored the treatment which is being accorded American citizens in Russia and stated. "That if I had my way and was President of the United States, and had a representative in any country where the citizens of my country were not treated properly, I would say to Russia, if you do not accord to my citizens full and equal rights in accordance with the doctrines of a civilized country, I shall recall our Ambassador."

In concluding, Mr Wolf promised that he would see to it that the Jews of Washington would do their share and more towards making possible the erection of a modern and well equipped building for the activities of the Society.

The next speaker was Mr. Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of the Department of Labor. Mr. Post, who is in charge of immigration maters in Washington, has had an excellent opportunity to observe the work of the Society and its various branches. He called attention to the fact that the Society had never interceded in any case which was found to be unworthy, and had for that reason gained the confidence and esteem of the Secretary of Labor and tne heads of the various Bureaus.

Others who addressed the meeting were Rev. H. Maselinsky, a member of the Board of Directors, and Congressmen Bennett and Siegel of New York.

The report of the Treasurer, Mr. Harry Fischel, was read and approved.

PRESIDENT LEON SANDERS

The following were elected to the Board of Directors for a term of three years:

Mr. Henry Brightman, Mr. Abel Cooper, Mr. Harry Fischel, Mr. Isaac Heller, Mr. Isidore Hershfield, Mr. Nathan Hutkoff, Rev. Ph. Jaches, Mr. Louis Edward Levy, Mr. A. Lubarsky, Mr. M. H. Phillips, Mr. Nathan Roggen, Mr. Israel Silberstein.

The Advisory Board, consisting of the following, was elected to serve for one year:

Mr. Reuben Arkush, New York.
Mr. Isaac W. Bernheim, Louisville, Ky.
Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, Boston, Mass.
Mr. Moses Fraley, St. Louis, Mo.
Mr. Max J. Kohler, New York.
Mr. Adolph Kraus, Chicago, Ill.
Mr. Julian Mack, Chicago, Ill.
Mr. Louis Marshall, New York.
Rev. Dr. Martin A. Meyer, San Francisco, Cal.
Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, New York.
Mr. Isaac N. Seligman, New York.
Mr. Ben Selling, Portland, Oregon.
Mr. Lucius L. Solomons, San Francisco, Cal.
Mr. Oscar S. Strauss, New York.
Mr. Mayer Sulzberger, Philadelphia, Pa.
Rev. Dr. Stephen S. Wise, New York.
Mr. Simon Wolf, Washington, D. C.

JEWISH PUBLICATIONS IN RUSSIA.

The prohibition of the publication of newspapers in Hebrew and Yiddish has been extended in the Kieff districts to books written in those languages.

A strong effort has been made in the province of Minsk to obtain permission to publish a Yiddish newspaper, but the governor refused to sanction its publication.

APPOINTMENT FOR RUSSO-JEWISH SAVANT.

The well-known Russo-Jewish savant, M. I. U. Markon, has been appointed Dragoman at the political department of the Foreign Ministry. He remains attached to the Ministry of Education.

Contributions to B'nai B'rith War Relief Fund Since Last Report

DISTRICT NO. 1.
Edward Everett Lodge No. 97, New York, N. Y	$ 24.50
Patchogue No. 759, Patchogue, N. Y	6.00
Springfield No. 684, Springfield, Mass	90.00
Worcester No. 600, Worcester, Mass	100.00
DISTRICT NO. 2.
Emeck Beracha No. 61, Ft. Wayne, Ind	50.00
United Cities No. 533, Joplin, Mo	65.00
Springfield No. 717, Springfield, Mo	105.00
Toledo No. 183, Toledo, Ohio	127.00
General Collection, St. Louis, Mo	796.51
DISTRICT NO. 3.
Atlantic No. 494, Atlantic City, N. J	12.00
Jephtha No. 143, Paterson, N. J	100.50
Joshua No. 23, Philadelphia, Pa	15.00
DISTRICT NO. 4.
A. Flusser, Colton, Cal	3.00
Baron De Hirsch No. 420, Butte, Mont	5.00
General Collection, Los Angeles, Cal	109.42
Oakland No. 252, Oakland, Cal	100.00
Ophir No. 21, San Francisco, Cal	46.50
Hope No. 126, Stockton, Cal	31.50
DISTRICT NO. 5.
Leopold Zunz No. 364, Goldsboro, N. C	251.25
Rimmon No. 68, Richmond, Va	8.00
Kinston No. 632, Kinston, N. C	15.00
D. G. L. No. 5	250.00
General Collection, Goldsboro, N. C	1,571.50
DISTRICT NO. 6.
Calumet No. 502, Houghton, Mich	316.75
Nebraska No. 354, Omaha, Neb	39.00
Grand Prairie No. 281, Champaign, Ill	31.00
Des Moines No. 330, Des Moines, Iowa	50.00
Covenant No. 569, Duluth, Minn	60.00
Chippewa Valley No. 334, Eau Claire, Wis	50.00
Flint No. 656, Flint, Mich	69.50
J. Houseman No. 238, Grand Rapids, Mich	42.50
Saginaw No. 636, Saginaw, Mich	32.50
Minnesota No. 157, St. Paul, Minn	103.10
Winnipeg No. 650, Winnipeg, Canada	50.00
Superior No. 775, Marquette, Mich	31.00
Oriental-Hillel No. 72, Chicago	5.00
Ramah No. 33, Chicago	25.00
DISTRICT NO. 7.
Jos. Herz No. 181, Columbus, Miss	25.00
El Paso No. 509, El Paso, Texas	1,283.45
A. Myers No. 159, Helena, Ark	6.82
Ft. Smith No. 306, Ft. Smith, Ark	79.40
Maimonides No. 46, Nashville, Tenn	871.50
General Collection, Houston, Texas	2,000.00
Laurel No. 651, Laurel, Miss	25.00
Beth Zur No. 84, Mobile, Ala	100.00
General Collection, New Orleans	110.00
Concordia No. 152, Tuscaloosa, Ala	25.00

THE BULGARIAN JEWS.

The "Israelitische Wochenblatt" publishes the following interesting communication:

There are in Bulgaria about 55,000 to 60,000 Jews. In the last war there were about 6,000 Jewish soldiers in the Bulgarian army, among them were also many officers. The patriotism of the Bulgarian Jews received general recognition. Many were decorated. About 400 to 500 have fallen. Figures about their participation in the present war are as yet unknown. It is to be assumed that this time still more Jews are in the field. Among the Jews there are captains and majors, also a number with the rank of colonel; a few officers are also in times of peace in the standing army. Since the Berlin Congress (1878) the Jews in Bulgaria have all the rights. No anti-Semitism is to be found in the country. In every larger city a Jew is always elected to the city council. It is looked upon as self-understood that as the Jews give their votes to the other candidates, they themselves should also have a representative. Also in the great Sobranye (House of Congress) there is a Jew. They are not employed in public service. There are no Jewish teachers, judges, professors; but many lawyers and physicians, engineers and pharmacists, also four Jewish consuls. A Jew is chief of the press in the ministry of foreign affairs. Czar Ferdinand is not considered a friend of the Jews. But he does nothing against the Jews. The former Chief Rabbi of Bulgaria, Dr. Ehrenpreis, was a special favorite with him. On the occasion of the Jublice of his reign the Jews presented a Sefer Torah to the Prince. The same is in his working cabinet and it is related that out of the silver pointer he had a pen made for himself with which he signs the most important documents. It is claimed that he signed the war declaration with this pen. The Bulgarian Jews are originally Turks, Spaniols. Only a few Ashkenasim, about 5,000, are among them, mostly immigrated from Austro-Hungary. In Sofia they have ther own synagogue, otherwise they are assimilated with the Spaniols. There are Jewish communities in all cities, larger communities are in Philippopolis, Rustschuk, Verna, Burgas, the largest (about 18,000 members) is in Sofia. Every Jew must pay taxes to the community. The payments are up to 1,000 francs annually. There are no Jews in the province of Tirnowo. The Jews of Silistria, which was ceded to Roumania after the last war, now belong there and through that they have lost their equal rights. Most of the Jews live from commerce. There are especially Jewish wholesale houses and Jews are strongly represented in banking enterprises. They also foster handicraft. There are many wealthy Jews, none are very poor, there are no beggars. Every community has its aid societies, Bikkur, Cholim, Chewra Kaddisha and benevolent society. Every community has also its schools for the instruction of the youth, boys' and girls' schools with six classes. The chcildren are not sent into the Bulgarian schools, but into these. When they have finished these, they go to Europe to be further educated. The schools were originally founded by the Alliance, now they are communal institutions.

The teachers are hired and paid by the community. Also in other respects the Jews live separately for themselves. One comes together with the others in business, also on public occasions. But there is no family intercourse. The main reason for this is that the Jews do not speak the Bulgarian language. Although very long in the country, they still have retained the Spanish of their mediaeval home as their colloquial. Only the young generation speaks Bulgarian. It is somewhat different in Sofia, there certainly is more intercourse between Jew and gentile. But here, too, the Jews speak Spanish in their houses. Here, and also in other places, the Jewish children now attend Bulgarian schools, when they are through with the Jewish public schools. The religious life has suffered from the introduction of general Sunday rest. Formerly no business was open on Saturday, now very few are closed. The holy days are observed, especially Passover. There is no Jewish house in which matzoth are not eaten during the entire festival. The ritualistic household is everywhere. There are no mixed marriages. The Jewish knowledge is limited to fluent reading of the prayers. In the school one learns only reading and some translation. The services on Saturday are poorly attended. Zionism is comparatively well represented. Every community has a Rabbi. These no longer have their own legal jurisdiction, but they rank as officials for family affairs. There are no civil marriages. The office of Chief Rabbi is open since the withdrawal of Dr. Ehrenpreis.

Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other—Benjamin Franklin.

THE JEWISH RENAISSANCE AND THE BIBLE

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Written for the B'nai B'rith News.

By the Jewish Renaissance we understand the movement which, originating in Germany with Mendelssohn and his school, thence spread to the East, assuming under the hands of its Galician and Lithuanian propagators the name Haskalah. The impetus imparted to the movement by a great personality such as the Berlin philosopher undoubtedly was cannot be overestimated. Nor are we subscribers to the notion which explains personality away by resolving it into the manifold impulses received from without and conditioned in the times. The great personality undoubtedly seizes upon the many threads invisible to the gaze of ordinary men: the towering man of genius seems to have a peculiar understanding of the inarticulate yearnings and strivings of his contemporaries which he makes articulate; but withal there is a creative element which marks the very essence of personality. It is needless here to expatiate upon all the ramifications of the movement; what interests us most is neither the politic nor economic side, but rather the cultural, the latter making for a religious upheaval which has yet not spent its force nor run its course. And in the cultural aspect of the movement stands out pre-eminently the return to the Bible.

This is the second time in Jewish history that there was a conscious return to the Bible. While the biblical collection was in the making and what is technically known as the Canon of Scriptures was being sealed, another literature had been preparing which, though basing itself on the Bible, soon developed a character of its own and by its very magnitude almost cast the Bible into the background. The postbiblical literature which now absorbed the interest of the greatest minds was like the Torah, largely legal, though intermixed with beautiful homilies which were also cultivated in independent works. The doctors of the Mishnah and Talmud and the preachers in the Midrashim knew the Book as few have since known it; they quote profusely from every nook and corner of the Scriptures, and the dry list of names in Chronicles were on their lips as readily as a verse from the Pentateuch and Prophets or a line from the Psalms. But they were for the most part interested in the use to which the Bible might be put in their own life and for their own purposes; if they succeeded in finding in the Scriptural word a support for some newly fashioned law or custom or in drawing from the ancient prophecies a lesson for daily conduct and solace in the hour of tribulation, their efforts ended there. The Bible had become a book for all times, a living Word indeed. Try as they might those teachers were unable to envisage it as a mere record of the past with a meaning rooted in ages remote. Over against the historical interest in a monument of antiquity stood theirs, which was eminently practical. The very language of the Bible had been metamorphosed. The need of the times and the character of the half-legal half-homiletic literature brought about a natural enough transformation. This later Hebrew language was no more a spoken language. The tongue of Syria had superseded the lip of Canaan in the people's speech. Hebrew was now denominated the sacred tongue, and the scholars were conscious of the fact that their own language which the wise used for literary purposes was far removed from the language of the Scriptures. The transition may be witnessed already in the Bible itself, and many of its later writings have a diction which is akin to that of the Mishnah. The poets of the synagogue might still imitate the purer style of the Bible, but Kalir, for example, the most versatile of them all, shows a lamentable acquaintance with the structure of the language which under his hands assumes an artificial form which becomes well nigh unintelligible. A newer school of poets then arose chiefly in the newer settlement of the Jews on the Iberian peninsula, and it is to these men that we must credit the first avowed return to the Bible and to its language. And so we meet with men who, practising medicine for a livelihood, set about to recover from beneath the rubbish of ages the pristine purity of the sacred tongue and with marvelous readiness and skill to use it for modern productions, sacred and secular. In the days of Hasdai they began to chirp and for a century or so there was a revival, a renaissance of the Hebrew of old. In the sequel a prose style was evolved, and while it established itself through the Middle Ages and beyond as a new kind of Hebrew, it was surcharged with imitations of the Arabic out of the translations from which it had grown up. A great literature and a great culture arose which, however, went into decay with the expulsion from Spain. In Germany and later on in Poland the interests of the scholars were narrower, being centered in the talmudic and midrashic literature, to the utmost neglect of all else. A barbaric period set in, due indeed to the unfavorable circumstances under which wandering Jewry lived. In the schools of the rabbis the legal interest predominated. The Responsa literature is of course of great interest to the student of history; but that is only a side-issue. In themselves they represent a dry, uninteresting range of thought and subject-matter; and as for style, barring introduction and conclusion, there is really none. The language is naturally a mixture, without esthetic taste or merit.

Mendelssohn was the contemporary of a great literary and cultural revival in the environment. His friend was Lessing. Herder was opening the eyes of the world to the matchless beauty of the Bible. The Scriptures, it was shown, were literature. The esthetic side to the Bible was now revealed, and the Jews, under the lead of Mendelssohn, learned to find in their sacred Book a literature which above and beyond the religious interest, commanded admiration. Once more a conscious return to the Bible took place. In poetry and prose the Bible was the model of style and diction. A whole secular literature grew up in Hebrew, and the Hebrew was far purer than it had ever been since the Canon was sealed. The Spanish poets themselves were revived. Men returned to the Bible and sought to disentangle its meaning from that which had overgrown it in subsequent ages. The crust was removed that the kernel might be seen and understood as it was. The Bible was to be enjoyed. Haskalah was, of course, a child of rationalism. The historical sense was lacking. It was thought that things good and true and beautiful had a rational sameness about them. Hegel introduced the idea of evolution in history, and the historical perspective was won. The influence of the newer thinking upon the Jew was not slow in manifesting itself. But though the Jew of the West became inoculated with the newer method, the Jew in the East remained a stranger to it. Yet in the West the link with the past was broken. Hebrew ceased to be the medium of literary expression. In the East, on the other hand, where Hebrew is still cultivated as a language of literature, the contact with the culture of the age remains slight. Even there a new period has set in. The dangers to Judaism rising out of the Haskalah after the Berlin model were felt. There has ensued a reaction. The Zionistic movement is an Eastern product. And the Zionists have many practical schemes to deal with. Still, the culture problem asserted itself. A clash between the old and the new was inevitable. In the Jaffa gymnasium the Scriptures are studied less from a religious and more from a national point of view. What the outcome will be the future will determine. Naturally in Palestine, in the home of the Bible, there open themselves up sides to the ancient body of writings which we in the dispersion can only catch through great labor. What with us is but the possession of the fewest who are experts will then become the property of the Jewish people. There the foot treads upon biblican scenes. There the towns and hamlets and sites speak of the past achievements and conflicts of the spirit. A return to biblical conditions there cannot be. But a return to the spirit of the Bible there will be. And the Bible spirit means a double cognition that the Jew must believe himself indestructible and that he is indestructible because he has pinned his faith to the One God, the God of right. And so the newer renaissance will be at once national and religious, the Bible being the source and the goal of the highest Jewish life.

JEWS AND LANDED PROPERTY IN RUSSIA.

The Senate has pronounced judgment against the appeal of the authorities who brought a test case with the view of annulling the purchase of an estate by a Jew in the name of a Christian friend. The authorities argued that in reality the Jew and not the Christian, was the owner of the estate. The Senate, however, decided that the purchase was valid.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Officers of Denver Charities Issue Protest.

A few individuals of this city, presuming to speak for the Jewish community of Denver, are attemtping to solicit contributions from other cities for the Denver poor under the specious plea that the consumptives living in Denver, outside of the National Institutions, form a burden too great for the local community to shoulder alone.

In order to clear up any doubts of well-meaning non-residents as to the Denver situation, as well as prevent useless duplication and wasted efforts, members of the Jewish community of Denver, most of them identified for many years past with the charity work of this city and fully conversant with its needs, desire to express most emphatically their utter disapproval of this projected movement.

The generous support given the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives and the Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society by contributions and donations from all over this country, enable the two Institutions to devote a part of their funds to Social Service among former patients and their families; the after-care of patients being an important part of their work

We therefore protest against such collection and would ask all communities to discountenance and discourage the same. The poor that properly belong to Denver should be taken care of by our own community, and are now being properly cared for, and will be properly cared for in the future, and we would feel deeply humiliated if outside communities assume obligations that are rightfully ours.

S. L. Bressler,
Ex-President Jewish Social Serv. Federation.
Dr. Philip Hillkowitz,
President Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society.
Dr. Wm. S. Friedman,
Rabbi Temple Emanuel.
Joseph S. Jaffa,
President Jewish Aid Society of Denver.
Mrs. Ernest Morris,
President Jewish Women's Council.
Mrs. Seraphine Pisko.
Secretary National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives.
C. D. Spivak,
Secretary Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society.
B. Steinberg,
Ex-President Jewish Social Service Bureau.
S. R. Zwetow,
Ex-President Jewish Federation.
Denver, Colo., Feb. 19, 1916.

RUSSIAN ARCHBISHOPS AND JEWS.

The Metropolitan Archbishop of Petrograd, Pitirim, has paid a visit to the Jewish Military Hospital here. After inspecting the institution he expressed his pleasure at the arrangements. and gave a donation to the funds. His remarks to the assembled communal leaders on the necessity of equality for and love among all citizens of the Empire created an excellent impression.

Extremely cordial too were the amenities exchanged between Archbishop Platon, of Kishineff, and the local Jews, prior to his departure to take up his duties as Exarch of Grusia. The Jews presented an address to the Archbishop, which he greatly appreciated.

PROVINCE OF CAUCASIA CLOSED TO JEWS.

The question whether Jews should be permitted to settle in the province of Caucasia has finally been settled by the Russian Government in the negative. Although according to the government circular issued a few months ago, Jews could reside anywhere in the Empire, with the exception of the provinces of Moscow and Petrograd, the Governor of the Caucasus province was not willing to allow Jews to settle in his province. At the urgent appeals made by several Douma members, the government authorities decided that during the war Jews should not be allowed to settle there, because the province is overcrowded with fugitive Armenians from the Turkish provinces near by.

THE EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE.

An appeal for membership has been issued by the Educational League, whose aim is to offer to talented young men and women who have no financial resources at their command an opportunity for education.

There are many such persons who would make excellent use of these advantages and there is no reason why there should not be large numbers affiliated with this worthy organization, whose activities should interest not only adults, but boys and girls.—Jewish Review.

AWAKENING OF THE ORDER IN BOSTON.

For a number of years the B'nai B'rith activities in Boston were more or less dormant. Last February the Convention of District No. 1 was held in Boston and it proved to be a great success. The delegates were all well pleased with the treatment they received and the manner in which the convention was conducted.

The revival of the activities in this District is due in a large measure to the personal efforts and endeavors of the newly elected president of the District, Judge A. K. Cohen. The Judge for a number of years has acted as president of the Massachusetts Lodge No. 27, which is the older of the two lodges in Boston. As a result of his efforts, the Lodge has been filled with new vigor and endeavor by the influx of a number of their men who are filled with the spirit of the principles of the Order and who are working for the dissemination of the beautiful objects for which the Order stands amongst other congregationalists in Boston. The results of their efforts have been very noticeable and they expect to make a wonderful showing within the next year. As president of the District and assuming the responsibilities of such and the various activities which are connected therewith, Judge A. K. Cohen felt that he could not give his proper attention and to the sorrow of the members of Massachusetts Lodge, he resigned from the presidency of that Lodge and in his place, the vice-president, Richard Hermann, was elected president.

The newly elected president is a man of much ability and has great enthusiasm and has the personal magnetism which transfers a portion of his enthusiasm to the other members of the Lodge.

In a very forceful statement at the last meeting of the Lodge, he set forth clearly his aims and moves in behalf of the Massachusetts Lodge. He stated that it was his object to make the Massachusetts Lodge one of the banner lodges in the country.

The other officers elected to fill the vacancies were Jacob Wasserman, vice-president; William Reichart, inside guard; Warren J. Bloom, outside guard. The membership committee headed by Warren J. Bloom, chairman, has been appointed, and has shown great activity and so far over 100 per cent increase in the membership took place, and by the next meeting, which will be held on March 12, he expects to add at least twenty-five additional links, quality members, to the endless chain.

A degree team, headed by the vice-president, has been appointed, which is hoped within a short time that we will have a staff which will be able to exemplify the work in a manner which is fitting to impart to the new candidates the lesson of the Order and to thoroughly inculcate in their minds the splendid principles that it represents.

There has been an entertainment committee headed by Adolph Giesberg, and it is hoped that the activities of the members will be such that they will attract others to join.

The new slogan just adopted by the members is "PUSH, POWER, PUNCH."

JEWS EXPELLED AND ARRESTED IN MOSCOW.

The Moscow police made a sudden raid on all public places to find any Jews who may have no right of residence there. Over one thousand Jews were arrested in one day. Four hundred of these, however, were soon set free because they were able to show their right to reside in the Russian capital. More than sixty were expelled and a large number is still in prison, because their cases have not yet been investigated. Among the arrested was the daughter of M. Lurya, who was honored by the Czar with the title of "honored citizen," and she was ordered to proceed to the Pale, where she was born.

The Moscow Bourse was very much wrought up about this sudden raid on the Jews and it is about to take steps against the police. The indignation of the business concerns in Moscow against the government officials is given expression to in the strong articles that appeared in several of the more liberal journals.

RIGHT OF DOMICILE AND TRADE IN RUSSIA.

As the result of the petition of the Ekaterinoslav Military Commercial Committee on behalf of the Jews working in the mines in that province, the authorities have agreed to cancel the expulsion order.

The Governor of Revel has also removed the restrictions of trading which were in force for Jews there, and which his subordinates had declined to revise after the publication of the ministerial order permitting Jews to trade in the cities opened to them outside the pale.

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS

Published Monthly (except July and August)
under the auspices of the
INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH

Printed by Excelsior Printing Co., Chicago.

Editorial Office
1228 TRIBUNE BUILDING, CHICAGO.
All matter intended for publication should be addressed to the editor.

Subscriptions received through lodges only.
Subscriptions, one dollar per annum.

No responsibility is assumed for articles published over the signatures of the writers thereof.

JEWISH CALENDAR

5676-1916

Rosh-Chodesch Nissan	Tuesday, April 4
Passover (Pesach)	Tuesday, April 18
Passover (Seventh Day)	Sunday, April 24
Rosh-Chodesch Iyar	Thursday, May 4
Lag-B'Omer	Sunday, May 21
Rosh-Chodesch Sivan	Friday, June 2
Shabuoth (Confirmation Day)	Wednesday, June 7
Rosh-Chodesch Shebat	Thursday, Jan. 6
Fast of Tammuz	Tuesday, July 18
Rosh-Chodesch Ab	Monday, July 31
Fast of Ab	Tuesday, Aug. 8
Rosh-Chodesch Ellul	Wednesday, Aug. 30

5677-1916

AMALEK'S TREACHERY.

The Sabbath of remembrance ushering in the feast of Purim occupies a central position among the four Sabbaths which mark the end of the winter season and the advent of spring. The temple-tax may still serve as a text for unloosening the purse-strings of the charitable, whether it be for the purpose of supporting communal institutions or for answering the need of the hour for extraordinary measures of relief; the red heifer and the waters of purification have lost all significance for us of today; the proclamation of the first month has in it much also that is irrelevant for the modern Jew, for the paschal sacrifice is to use a matter of the past like the entire sacrificial polity. Remembering an old act of hostility would seem perhaps to be ignoble. Yes, if it were but old. But the treachery committed by Amalek of old upon a defenseless people has through no fault of our own become symptomatic and tpyical of all the onslaughts to which we are still mercilessly exposed. For a time in the nineteenth century we thought we had outgrown that ancient injunction to remember. We had become ashamed of the Sabbath and of its hilarious sequel. The letter of the Purim was pronounced a blood-thirsty epistle breathing hatred and revenge. The story, we are told, was a fiction pure and simple. Then it pleased the Muscovite empire to give us an object lesson in history. Haman may and may not have existed, but Ignatiev of May Laws fame was a reality. The edict of Ahasuerus may have been an invention, but the pogroms at the end of the century were only too real. We had scarcely agreed to remember no more, when new injuries were added to the old. Our memory was refreshed. We were eye-witnesses to blood-curdling horrors. Aye, the meaning of the Megillah opened itself up to us. If fiction it was, it was truer than truth. We understood in the light of the modern example that the Jews at the time of Mordecai and Queen Esther did not prepare for revenge, but for self-defense. They "stood for their lives," for the honor of their wives and daughters. The secret rescripts of the Czars offered a parallel to the decrees of Ahasuerus and his mad minister.

Amalek is still at large. His latest treachery bids fair to surpass anything in history. We complain not about the hardships of war. We glory in the heroic deeds of dispersed Jewry on many battle fields. The Jew has proved to the world that he is patriot and soldier like the rest of his fellow citizens in every one of the belligerent countries. The Jewish youth is enrolled in the fighting armies, and the report of Jewish soldiers and volunteers doing their duty nobly we shall indeed treasure up as a memory never to be forgotten. But we shall also remember what Amalek did unto us in this twentieth century, how he libeled our entire nation as untrustworthy, how he uprooted entire populations, sparing neither age nor sex, how he repaid willingness to serve the cause of a stepmotherly country with dastardly ingratitude. The fate of battles is in the hands of Providence. We know not whose will be the palm of victory. But we know that when the war shall be over and the armed citizenry shall be dispersed back to their homes, the cruel deed of the modern Amalek will not be so easily forgotten. Perchance that out of the present distress salvation will be wrought. It may be that the heart of the Pharaoh will be softened or that pressure will be brought to bear upon him in the day when the plenipotentiaries of the nations of Europe and elsewhere will sit down to readjust a world out of joint. It is possible that the fate of defenseless Jewry will be taken up and that the intolerable conditions under which half our people have lived will be ameliorated. Then we shall have another Purim story to narrate, and the ancient feast will be made the occasion for a far greater rejoicing. Revenge we have no cause to wish for. But we must see to it that our status among the nations of the world be safeguarded that there be no cause for new memories of Amalekite treachery to be rehearsed and treasured up. Meanwhile the Sabbath of remembrance shall sustain us. A people that remembers not has no history. And we are making history now, or rather it is being made for us. We cannot forget injuries. We would have them not occur at all. And we have always remembered our friends, the few friends that the Jewish race has been privileged to own. And surely we shall remember with gratitude the men and women from our own loins who in the hour of darkness stood out as rocks, refusing the seek safety for themselves because of their exceptional condition, but ever ready to share with us our trials and tribulations and with the help of God to fight our battles and to vindicate our honor before mankind. Our supreme trust in the righteousness of our cause shall never forsake us The Amaleks must some day cease to exist, and with their departure the memories of their cruel deeds will pass away likewise. Not until the nations of the earth accord us the rights due us must we cease to remember, and what we shall remember most of all is that the Jew has never abandoned his historic position and battling for right against might has stood out as a champion of the rights of man and the rights of conscience.

ORGANIZATION AND PERSONALITY.

It is a trite saying that in union there is strength. A disorganized mass is a clamorous but inefficient mob. There is naturally latent power in human aggregates. What the subconscious is in the individual, the ill-defined, inarticulate yearnings are in the mass. The storage of strength is there, but it requires the conscious, systematic effort to direct the current to useful endeavor. What differentiates an army from a mob is the discipline which co-ordinates units as coherent parts of the great fighting machine and subordinates the whole to the directing hand of a masterful personality. The organization and the great personality will do wonders when linked together. Each needs the other. But as often they fall apart. The organization may seek to enslave the individual and be he of the greatest caliber. The great man may undertake to ride roughshod over the organization. There is unwisdom in both enterprises. The two are meant to complement each other, and the one must never try to supersede the other.

The truth is that the impersonal weight of organizations tends to create the gang spirit. In politics we are brought face to face with the great power attaching to party organization. The slogan is, "Stand or fall with your party." The discipline which makes the individual surrender his judgment to the will of the majority is certainly admirable. On the other hand the strong personality must needs seek to impress itself upon the misguided, tyrannous organization. Machines are constructed, made, but personalities are not made, they are born. The men of mediocre talent hide themselves beneath the wings of the gang. Where individual power is wanting, the system steps in to supply the deficiency. Sometimes there is a feeling that the organization is clearly wrong. But the party machine dictates the policy, and it must be adhered to, right or wrong, wise or foolish. The answer will come that the machine deals with big issues and that the larger interests must be subserved. The larger interests! How much of tyranny, of downright wrong, is perpetrated in the name of that fetish! Sometimes it would seem as if the natural scheme in human affairs were for each man to do his small share along the lines of the nearer interests out of the sum of which the larger would be upbuilt. If every man would with vision too lofty disdain to attend to the things near at hand, what a fine mess of cross-purposes would be the inevitable result.

Personal aggrandizement may be subserved by reliance on the machine. True patriotism counsels a statesmanlike view and a daring to withstand the powers from above. Above the party stands the weal of the people. Above the organization stands the master mind. It is frequently the policy of powerful organizations to silence opposition by giving a commanding personality seat and voice in the governing body. The weaker vessels are flattered and submit. Then, again, the recalcitrant will insist upon staying out. Now, neither the coming in nor the staying out is a virtue in itself. All depends upon the right motive. Separate not thyself from the community, say the rabbis. On the other hand, they tell us: Where there is no man, be thou the man! The dying word of a great scholar was the warning against over-organization. Turn not aside after a multitude to wrest justice, says the Torah. Justice to the cause and justice to the individual conscience are the matters that count. How much conscienceless subservience does the machine demand? And subservience cloaks itself with the mantle of subordination. Subordination there must be for the sake of effective discipline, but discipline is not an end in itself. The organization must not shut its ear to the protestant on the outside, and the critic must be sure that his carping caviling is not of the kind that always loves to contradict. Public opinion watches over both. It condemns overweening self-will in the corporation and the individual. There is room for both if they will agree to sustain each other. What we need is strong organizations, well-disciplined, well-officered; and again the strong personality which far from being a low unto itself, shall be truly co-operative.

DR. EZEKIEL CARO.

The Jewish community of Lemberg, the capital of Galicia, has recently suffered an irreparable loss in the death of its beloved Chief Rabbi, Dr. Ezekiel Caro. The deceased was a high priest, who entered the holy of holies, the religious life of Israel and consecrated himself to work for the spiritual welfare of his people. He was a true religious teacher and spiritual leader in the synagogue and in the general life of his community, and his loss is therefore, deeply mourned by many followers, friends and admirers.

The Order of B'nai B'rith also mourns the loss of this noble teacher and leader in Israel. The late Chief Rabbi of Lemberg was a member of the Order, a true and faithful Ben B'rith, who worked with heart and soul for the realization of the B'nai B'rith principles and teachings. The B'nai B'rith News joins the many followers, friends and admirers of the departed Brother to bless his memory and to call after him "Yanuach b'shalom" may he rest in peace.

DR. GUSTAV LANGSTEIN.

Not only the Jewish community of Vienna, but also the Bar Association, laments the loss of one of its most prominent members in the death of Brother Dr. Gustav Langstein, who was borne to his grave on Dec. 15, 1915.

For more than thirty years active as an attorney, Dr. Langstein enjoyed a great circle of friends and clients who have benefited by his vast knowledge, his experience and his energy, in which he practiced his profession. His strict rectitude and integrity gained for him the sympathy of the fellow members of his profession.

As a Ben B'rith Brother Langstein was zealously active in the work of humanity and as one of the oldest members of the Order in Vienna he was one of the founders of the Free Employment Bureau maintained by the B'nai B'rith Lodges. He was a member of the Court of Appeals of the District Grand Lodge and in various ways was of much assistance to the District authorities in promoting the welfare not only of the lodges of Vienna, but of the entire District and the Order at large.

The funeral of Brother Langstein was attended by a great outpouring of prominent people representing the Jewish community, the B'nai B'rith, the various benevolent societies, communal, professional, commercial and financial institutions of the great city of Vienna.

The B'nai B'rith News cherishes his memory and finds consolation in the words of our sages, blessed be their memory: "The memory of the righteous is a blessing."

HENRY HANAW.

Mr. Henry Hanaw, of Mobile, Ala., prominent attorney and an active Ben B'rith, passed away on Wednesday, Feb. 9, 1916. During his life time he took active part in the business activities of his home city and was prominent in fraternal and charitable circles. Mr. Hanaw joined the Order in 1878 at Jackson, Mich., and soon afterwards was made a representative to the District Grand Lodge, being one of the youngest members of that body. Afterwards he affiliated with Beth Zur Lodge of Mobile, Ala., and represented the Lodge at the District Convention, and in 1906 attended the Constitutional Grand Lodge Convention in Chicago. He was elected a member of the Court of Appeals of the Order, holding that office up to the time of his death. His home city lost an estimable citizen, and the Order one of its ablest workers.

The B'nai B'rith News expresses to the bereaved family its sincere sympathy.

MAX STERN.

Mr. Max Stern, one of the best known citizens of Fargo, N. D., director of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, president of the Dakota Trust Co., prominent in city and state affairs for more than a quarter of a century, passed away at his home on March 3, 1916, after an illness extending over a period of one year. For years Mr. Stern served as a member of the Fargo Board of Education and as alderman of the City Council for several terms. In his passing Fargo has lost a staunch and honorable citizen of exemplary habits. Judaism has also sustained a great loss by reason of his splendid activity in all matters pertaining to the uplift of the Jew, not only in his own community, but in general. Mr. Stern was the principal organizer of the B'nai B'rith lodge in his home city and its first president. He also organized the Associated Jewish Charities of the city and was president of the organization for a term of years. Long before the establishment of these organizations he was the man to whom the poor of our faith looked for guidance and support and he put many a poor immigrant who came here in the early days on his feet and showed him the way to make an honest and good living. He was generous, public spirited and possessed of the substantial virtues which command respect. The B'nai B'rith has lost in him a valiant worker. May his soul rest in peace and may his spirit rest with all the righteousl

FRANKLIN MARX.

Franklin Marx, of Newark, N. J., Past President of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90, of that city, and Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, passed away suddenly at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Friedman, at Dover, N. J.

Brother Marx was a valued member of his Lodge, and his good work in behalf of the District Grand Lodge and the Order is a matter of record. In civic affairs he took prominent interest, held various offices and was also active in social work.

The home city, the Order and the Lodge have lost an ardent worker in the death of Brother Marx.

SOCIAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT OF THE I. O. B. B.

During his recent trip to San Francisco Doctor Rudolph I. Coffee, the National Director of the Social Service Department of the B'nai B'rith, spent considerable time in strengthening the work in District No. 4. Every city in that district, where a lodge exists, will have its Social Service Committee. The chairmen have already been appointed and the full membership of the various committees will soon be announced. A chairman will also be appointed for every state, all under the direction of a chairman of social service for the entire district. Each state chairman is expected to see to it that every penal institution, reformatory and state hospital in his state is visited. When a person is paroled or discharged from an institution the proper committee is to take charge of him and lend all needed aid. Brother Henry Mauser, now in charge of the employment bureau in San Francisco, is doing good work. Most of the immigrants come to this bureau for help, and Mr. Mauser has been unusually successful in awakening the interest of many Jewish and non-Jewish business houses so as to give employment to the newcomers. One immigrant was sent to a position in Fresno, some 200 miles away. Within two weeks not only had he returned to his benefactors the railroad fare, but had also found a position for a fellow immigrant as well. In prison work the social service department is well equipped, as Professor M. J. Jacobs president of Berkeley Lodge goes weekly to Folsom prison as instructor in education, and is able to get in very close touch with all Jewish inmates.

In visiting the cities with smaller Jewish communities, Doctor Coffee has frequently been told, "we have no poor Jews in this city." If this means that there are no Jewish people depending on public charity, Jewish idealism is still far from satisfied. If the statement is intended to indicate that the Jews of the community are all self-supporting, it may be correct. Judaism, however, includes something more than making a bare living. "Man liveth not by bread alone, but by everything that proceeded out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." (Deut. VIII-3). We are the keepers of our brethren and we must assist them with friendly advice, through taking a personal interest in their welfare, and by making personal sacrifices when occasions demand.

The Social Service Department is trying to encourage these smaller communities to invite men with their families from the crowded sections of the large cities. Of the eighteen Jewish boys in the Illinois Reform School at St. Charles, but one comes from without the city of Chicago, which contributed seventeen of that number. The Employment Bureau is hoping to enlist the support of lodges in the neighboring sections to take some families from the city to the smaller cities and thus give their children a better environment in which to develop.

The Social Service Committee of Chicago, consisting of fifteen members, has just been appointed. With this committee in charge the work should bring splendid results.

We cite an example to illustrate the work of the Big Brother movement. M. B., a boy of fifteen, was facing recommitment to a reform school. His father personally had him committed to the Boys' Industrial School when thirteen years of age because he had stolen money from the father to purchase clothing. On his release after sixteen months, the boy came home embittered against the father, whose unfitness to rear his child was quite apparent. Two older brothers, of questionable reputation further clouded the boy's life. At this point our Big Brother stepped in. He investigated the home and pronounced it unfit for the lad, who was then sent to a boys' home and allowed to finish the school term. A position has since been found for him and his employer says, "I never had as conscientious a worker or as good a boy."

The placing at work of released and paroled prisoners is an exceedingly difficult labor. Not only must we combat public opinion, which frowns on the man who has served a sentence, not only must we plead for a man who may lapse again into evil ways, but the chances are that the individual has neither trade nor business knowledge of any kind. Nevertheless the more difficult the labor, the more noble the effort. We Jews dare not lag behind our Christian neighbors in their fine efforts to lift the weak and the falling. Within a short time the Social Service Department hopes to be able to say that every man on his release from prison, no matter in what part of the country he may be, will find some B'nai B'rith friends ready to aid him toward a new start in life.

LETTER OF BROTHER DR. M. EPSTEIN, OF LONDON, IN REPLY TO BROTHER DR. PAUL NATHAN

February 13, 1916.

The B'nai B'rith News for January reached me today and I read Brother Dr. Paul Nathan's letter with a good deal of interest. It is my belief that newspaper controversy is as a rule futile, but out of the high regard in which I hold Brother Dr. Paul Nathan I should like to say a word or two in reply to his courteous letter.

1. First as to the question of German military chaplains. I admit that I was wrongly informed on the subject. But as soon as I discovered my error I corrected it, as Brother Dr. Nathan will, of course, have observed in the December issue of the News, page 11, column 4.

2. I unreservedly accept Brother Dr. Nathan's statement that the German Empress visited the Jewish Hospital in Berlin, exactly as she inspected the hospitals of the Catholics and the Protestants, and I am very glad to note this instance of equal treatment of Jews with their fellow citizens in this matter.

3. The Lodz incident Brother Dr. Nathan does not disprove. He only says that though he himself was in the city, he had never heard of the proclamation.

4. I unreservedly also accept Brother Dr. Nathan's statement that a "considerable number" of Englishmen are not interned in Germany, and I am very pleased to learn this. Only I cannot help wishing that Brother Dr. Nathan had been able to give some idea as to their number. In England today 7,449 German subjects are at liberty and not interned.

5. Brother Dr. Nathan's gibe at the English press was, I submit, wholly gratuitous. It is no concern of mine to pass judgment on the press of any country. But I read the German as well as the English papers regularly, and I am well content to leave the comparison between them to all unprejudiced men and women.

6. On Brother Dr. Nathan's main contention I must join issue with him. The Jews of the United States will not be "forced to believe that the German government and the German influential circles are accessible in a high degree to anti-Semitic agitations" because of anything that I may write. They know that such is the case because facts speak for themselves. A goodly number of them, especially those who hail from North Germany, must have experienced the consequences of official anti-Semitism in their own persons. But anyone who is at all acquainted with the condition of the Jews in Germany knows very well that our brethren suffer from official anti-Semitism. Is it not significant that in Germany there is need for a Verein zur Abwehr des Anti-Semitismus (a Society for combating anti-Semitism)? Is it not significant that German Jews themselves have found it necessary to organize their defense against anti-Semitism, official and otherwise, by forming that very excellent Verein deutscher Staatsbuerger Juedischen Glaubens (Society of German Citizens of the Jewish Faith)? The conditions are too well known to call for definite examples. Everybody knows that Jews are not allowed to become officers in the army only because they are Jews. Everybody knows that Jews find it difficult to obtain appointments to Chairs at the Universities. Everybody knows of the shabby treatment meted out by the authorities to great German scholars who were Jews, only because of their race and their origin. One calls to mind as instances the cases of Ehrlich, of Barth, of Hermann Cohen.

These are facts that speak for themselves, and if I refer to them I would assure Brother Dr. Nathan that I do so in no particularist spirit, but solely and only as a human being whose duty it is to decry injustice. As a member of the I. O. B. B. moreover, it is my duty to fight against bigotry, and I submit that German officialdom with its anti-Semitic taint comes under this category.

Of course it may be that a new and more liberal era has already dawned for Jews in Germany. It would indeed be a pleasing piece of news if it could be reported. But I fear that the remarks made at the last annual meeting of the Society for combating Anti-Semitism hardly holds out any hopes in that direction. Still, the near future which is bound to bring many changes may make it possible for the Jew in Germany to receive just and fair treatment at the hands of the government. None would be more pleased to learn of this consummation than the people who love what is best in Germany, the people who feel warmly for all the links in the chain of our Order, and among these I would assure Brother Dr. Paul Nathan the writer of this letter is most certainly to be counted. M. EPSTEIN.

The Order has lodges in nearly all of the countries now at war in Europe. That is one reason why the News desires to be and will remain strictly neutral. Our members are absolutely loyal to the countries respectively to which they owe allegiance. It is therefore very easy to hurt their feelings by publishing any criticism of their country. In publishing Dr. Epstein's reply to Dr. Nathan's letter we do so because we hold him in high esteem as we also do Dr. Nathan, but we do not assume any responsibility for the contents and with the publication of the above letter the controversy, as far as this paper is concerned, is closed.—Editor.

HELP FOR THE SUFFERING JEWS IN GALICIA.

Since Galicia was freed from the invading Cossack hordes the Jewish relief organizations of Vienna have been working hard to raise enough money to be able to protect our poor co-religionists in all cities of Galicia against starvation, and now also against perishing from cold. In many cases the returning refugees find no protecting shelter and no possibility to earn a living. Those Jewish families who remained during the Russian occupation were thrown into great misery by the absence of their supporters, who were either murdered or dragged away to some unknown places. The Israelitish Alliance in union with the B'nai B'rith Grand Lodge for Austria and the Galician Aid Society, have organized the relief work for a great part of Galicia and were able to maintain public kitchens, to furnish provisions and fuel as well as to protect the orphaned children in 68 places, who were left without food and without shelter. But the suffering is still enormous and much more money is needed to save many thousands from utter annihilation.

RECEPTION TO AMBASSADOR MORGENTHAU.

District Grand Lodge No. 1 will tender a reception to Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Ambassador to Turkey, at Temple Emanuel, New York City.

Mr. Morgenthau is a member of District No. 1 and has actively co-operated with the Order and its lodges in the Orient on behalf of the Jews. It is contemplated to invite President Wilson, or if he cannot attend a member of his cabinet to be present, and for this purpose a committee visited Washington on March 8. A special invitation has been extended to the President of the Order Brother Adolf Kraus to be present and also to Hon. Simon Wolf, of Washington.

REFUGEES FROM PALESTINE IN CORSICA.

Some time ago a number of Jewish refugees from Palestine arrived at Corfu and their removal was requested by the Greek government. The French authorities transferred these refugees to Corsica.

At Ajaccio, where they have been settled, the refugees receive a daily grant from the French government, which practically suffices for their maintenance. With the object of organizing their religious and educational life, the Alliance Israelite has sent to Ajaccio M. Navon, Director of the Oriental School in Paris, who has arranged for the employment of the adults, technical instruction for the young men, and elementary instruction for the children. His work has been considerably facilitated by M. Henry, the Prefect of Corsica, who has energetically occupied himself with the material and moral welfare of the refugees, and by M. Thalamas, Vice-Rector, who has instituted a class for adults, and even before the arrival of M. Navon had taken measures so that the children might be taught Hebrew.

FURTHER EXPULSIONS OF JEWS IN MOSCOW.

The Moscow police has been quite busy recently in its endeavor to discover Jews who had no right of domicile in the capital. About eight hundred Jews were expelled in the course of one week. Thirty Jewish merchants were arrested at the Bourse, because they could not produce at the time the certificate which permits them to stay there. The leaders of the Bourse subsequently informed the police that the Jews were very important factors there at present since they help much toward cheapening the price of food products.

AMERICAN JEWISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the American Jewish Historical Society was held on Sunday, February 20, 1916, at the Dropsie College, Philadelphia. The president of the Society, Dr Cyrus Adler, presided and welcomed the assembly.

Many papers on the History of the Jews in America were presented and discussed, among them the following: "A Proselyte Apostate," "A Romance of a Century Ago" by Miss Elfrida Cowen; "The Will of Henry Benjamin Franks, dated Dec. 13, 1758, and Inventory of His Estate," by Samuel Oppenheim, also a paper by him on "The Question of Kosher Meat Supply in New York City 1813," a paper on "Calendar of 21 unprinted letters relating to Aaron Lopez"; "Jews who died of Yellow Fever in the epidemic in New York in 1798" and "Letter of Jonas Phillips, July 28, 1776," mentioning the American Revolution and the Declaration of Independence.

Rabbi J. Price presented a few papers on "Canadian Jewish Families."

At the second session papers were presented touching upon varied and interesting topics of Jewish history. Much interest was aroused by Miss Mabel Lyon, who read a paper on "Some Pedagogical Aspects of American Jewish History." Mr. Lee M. Friedman of Boston, Mass., presented papers on "A Note on Jewish Worship in New York, 1812, and Additional Material on Francisco de Faria." Leon Huhner, of New York, spoke on "Some Early Jewish Indian Traders in Pennsylvania," and "Gleanings of Jewish Interest in American Colonial and Revolutionary History."

Papers were also submitted by Frank Schechter, Dr. David de Sola Pool and others.

At the conclusion of the second session necrologies of deceased members of the society were read.

At the third session held on Sunday evening, Professor Alexander Marx of New York reported upon "The Autobiography of An Unknown of the Seventeenth Century; a Picture of the Conditions of the Jews in Bohemia." Rabbi A. Neuman spoke on "Jewish Education in Spain" and an interesting paper on "American Contributions Toward the Removal of Jewish Disabilities in the Balkan States" was contributed by Hon. Simon Wolf of Washington, D. C.

The concluding sessions of the society were held on Monday. In the morning a business session, preceding the reading of the papers, took place. The report of corresponding secretary Albert M. Friedenberg was submitted showing the membership to be 375. A large number of new members were elected. A committee on Publication was appointed, as was also a committee to prepare a set of By-laws, and a committee to plan the appropriate celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the society.

Election of officers followed, and the meeting was brought to a close with the presentation of papers by several delegates.

CONTINUED EXPULSION OF JEWS IN RUMANIA.

The Rumanian government has ordered further expulsions of Jews from the villages near the Hungarian frontier. Families whose fathers or sons have been for months with the troops, suddenly receive the command to leave hearth and home within three days. The attempts to prevent this injustice fail in most cases. Good conduct certificates are demanded from the mayor of the village in which the banished Jews formerly lived, but they can seldom be obtained. Even Jews in soldier's uniform have had to leave their home.

The Government Statistical Bureau has issued exact figures of the Jewish population in Rumania in December, 1912. There were altogether 239,967 Jews—115,308 men and 124,659 women. From this total may be deducted 30,000 to 40,000 Jews of foreign citizenship, leaving at the most 210,000 Jews who are Rumanian subjects (i.e., 3 per cent of the total population). According to the labor calendar of 1916, there are 792,000 foreigners in Rumania, of whom 276,000 are Bulgarians. Although the latter greatly outnumber the Jews, no word of intolerance has ever been uttered against them.

RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT AND THE REFUGEES.

The Government has suspended the order for the expulsion of the Jewish refugees from the province of Minsk. One hundred and twenty-five Jewish refugees received permits to remain at Petrograd for six months. On the other hand, the petition of the Zemsvo to allow Jews to settle in the villages of the province of Perm was rejected, as was also a petition to allow the Jews to remain in the district of Luszk (near Petrograd).

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, Jan. 25, 1916.

Last month we announced that Mr. Herbert Samuel had rejoined the Cabinet. This month we are able to report that he has been appointed what we here briefly call "Home Secretary." His official title is "Secretary of State for the Home Department," and the position is one of the most important in the Cabinet. Opinion is unanimous in praise of the new appointment, for Mr. Samuel has won golden opinions from all quarters for his ability, skill and quiet manner. If anyone should complain that all Jews are loud, let him but think of England's new Home Secretary. It should be noted, too, that the position is an important stepping-stone to greater things. There is no need to prophesy. But qui vivra verra.

Mr. Samuel's new appointment almost coincided with the re-admission into the Cabinet of his kinsman, Mr. Morgan Montagu. Mr. Montagu retains the post he held—Financial Secretary to the Treasury—and has been given in addition a second post, that of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, with a seat in the Cabinet. Mr. Montagu is only thirty-six.

Both these appointments are conceedingly gratifying to all Jews. But in themselves they call for no paeans of joy. Those days are long since past when an appointment of this sort produced shouts of triumph among English Jews. Satisfaction it gives us, but it is quiet satisfaction as the fact that in England a citizen whose powers and capacities enable him to serve his country and his fellow-citizen is not debarred from so doing because of race or creed. It is character and ability that count; nothing else. A fact of this sort requires no vociferous advertisement. It speaks for itself, and with a thousand tongues.

The death of Lord Burnham has removed from English life one of the most beloved of men, and one of the most versatile of journalists. The "Daily Telegraph" was his, and he made it. Lord Burnham is of interest to Jews, as he was of Jewish origin. His family name was Levy, afterwards Lawson; but he was not of the tribes of Israel when he died. He is succeeded in the peerage by his son, Mr. Harry Lawson, popular with Jews and Gentiles alike. Mr. Lawson was member of Parliament for the Mile End division of London, and Mile End includes a large Jewish electorate. Hence the two candidates for the seat are courting the Jewish electors. and so far as can be seen at present the favors are divided. There is nothing extraordinary in the special group appeal. The same thing is done in the case of Irish electors in many English towns with a fairly large Irish vote. Liverpool is a case in point. But as a matter of fact the policy is a mistaken one, since Jews are as divided in their political allegiance as most other people. A candidate for parliamentary honors, however, may not leave a stone unturned. Hence the special courting of the Jewish elector.

We have on occasions said much about the Board of Deputies. The board has undoubtedly served a useful purpose in the past. But not even its best friends will claim for it that it is democratically or even common-sensically elected. Recently a suggestion was made to modify its constitution. The assembly met; there followed the usual discussion; the votes were taken and—things were as before. It may seem a little difficult for people unacquainted with our conditions to perceive why the board at all matters. It matters in this way: Any congregation in the British Islands, nay in the Empire, that desires to have a marriage secretary must apply to the board, and only if the president of the board "certifies" the secretary can the congregation have one. Now in the process of time it came about that whenever application was made to the board by any congregation for the "certification" of a marriage secretary (which means that the law of the land would then recognize such secretary as a marriage registrar, and thus enable the congregation in question to celebrate religious and civil marriages at one and the same time and place) the board would hand on the application to the Chief Rabbi to report upon. In the past, under the Adler regime, it was more or less a secret procedure that ensued. The Chief Rabbi [illegible] himself into communication with the said congregation, and say in so many words: "If you recognize my [illegible] as Chief Rabbi and sign a document promising to do certain things and not to do certain others, I will certify you as a fit congregation to the Board of Deputies, and the president of the board will then certify your marriage secretary." It was a most improper procedure; it might even be said to be illegal. It certainly was very unwise. The fact remains, however, that two sets of congregations might be, and were, excluded by this crooked system from enjoying the rights of celebrating religious and civil marriages at one and the same time, a disability which no one ever intended. In the first category were the strictly orthodox Jews for whom the Chief Rabbi was not orthodox enough; the second consisted of Jews who were not orthodox enough for the Chief Rabbi. For purposes of recognition both sets, however, were Jews; they both called themselves Jews and wanted to be Jews. Yet because they would not render enforced obedience, the very worst kind of obedience conceivable, they were excluded from the enjoyment of rights which they might fairly lay claim to. Note that the board was not directly responsible for this state of affairs; only indirectly. That made it much worse. The time has surely arrived when these abuses should be swept aside, when Jews of all shades of opinion should be united and a rejuvenated Board of Deputies would be admirably fitted to unite them. But no; it is not to be; and the old decrepid body will go limping on its way until for very age it will be played out. A wise politician with a clear imagination would foresee the splendid opportunities of the future. But is there such a one? Time alone will show. Meanwhile the board has foolishly doomed itself to greater and greater uselessness. It takes in no one but itself, and even among its members there are many who realize how fatuous all its strivings are.

London, February 16, 1916.

The war notwithstanding, there is a good deal of intellectual life in East London, and Toynbee Hall is its center. A few months ago, the residents of Toynbee went further east, nearer the river, and their quaint building with its welcome quadrangle has since been untenanted in the old accustomed fashion. There is only one resident now, and he is Mr. Hitchcock, the Secretary, who superintends the educational work of the institution. But situated as it is in the heart of a teeming Jewish district, Toynbee Hall could not but attract a large number of Jewish students, and a great many of the activities of the new Toynbee are for the most part Jewish. Not an evening in the week but you may find some Jewish meeting proceeding, and on some nights even more than one meeting. There may be Zionists in the drawing room, a popular lecture on a Jewish writer in the hall, a Hebrew class in the dining room, and a debate in one of the smaller rooms. It only proves how great is the demand for a center for the Jewish young people in the East End of London; it only shows what a boon Toynbee Hall has become. . . .

This intellectual activity is a good omen. It may not be deep, it may not be very fruitful of positive results. But its existence is a sign of the times. Where there is light there is hope. In the East End there is growing up a race of young people with enquiring minds, questioning the world, questioning life, seeking for the Jewish outlook. It is most encouraging. When moral values all around are tottering, when ideals that seemed deep-rooted are swept away by every wind that blows, it is indeed good to see a striving for knowledge. You expect that of Jews, the People of the Book; and Anglo-Jewry here certainly shows promise of much good. It is a lucky accident that Toynbee Hall has been able to become the center of all this effort. An established habitation helps to create a tradition; and if Toynbee Hall becomes a center of Jewish thought, so much the better for the thought and the institution. . . .

Some Jewish work Toynbee always did. In the days of Harry Lewis there was a famous reading circle which met every Saturday afternoon, and the eager spirit of the members was a delight to the leader. A class for living Hebrew has been held for several years now regularly, and last year a university extension course of lectures in Jewish history was given. Dr. Israel Abrahams was the enterprising pioneer of the course, and the University of London was sympathetic to a degree, and did all it could to meet the special needs of the circumstances. Ten lectures were given on the modern period of Jewish history, "From Mendelssohn to Herzl." The course was very well attended and was supplemented by a regular students' class who read further afield, supplementing what was said at the lectures. The enterprise was voted a complete success. . . .

It is to be followed this spring by a second university extension course, likewise of ten lectures. It was decided in choosing the lectures to draw on a new set so as to give as much variety as possible to the scheme. This year the Haham, Dr. Gaster, is included; so is the Chief Rabbi. Mrs. Redcliffe Salaman will speak on the Spanish Hebrew poets, some of whom she has so beautifully done into English. Mr. F. S. Spiers will discourse on the scientific activity of the Spanish Jews, and the other speakers will be Rev. L. Mendelssohn, Dr. S. Daiches, Dr. S. S. Hirsch, Mr. Elkan Adler and the Rev. Dr. J. Abelson. The introductory lecture will be given bv Dr. Abrahams and Mr. Claude Montefiore will be in the chair on that occasion. It is to be noted that the course has been organized by the Jewish Historical Society of England in conjunction with the Union of Jewish Literary Societies.

Another enterprise which has come into existence under the auspices of the Jewish Historical Society is the Society for Hebraic Studies. It has long been felt that a public is growing up in this country which is able to appreciate Jewish learning, and there is also a growing body of scholars capable of leading. So the effort was made. A meeting was called to see whether there was a demand for such a society. The overwhelming majority were in favor, and the society was launched. It will prosecute research, promote lectures, issue publications, undertake translations, and prepare a quarterly. It will bring the scholar and the public into contact. It will contribute to sound learning; it will popularize results. So far a meeting for founding the Society has been held; another is due shortly to consider the plan of action. . . .

All these are indications for good; they betoken a stirring of the dry bones. "Can these dry bones live?" it may dubiously have been asked a generation ago. The answer is pretty clear at present. Many forces have co-operated to bring about the result. Some may be traced to the Russian Ghetto; some hail from the German-speaking countries; some, too, are due to what may conveniently be called the modern revival of neo-Hebraism. Not unmentioned also must be that international spirit which was alive and active up to July, 1914, and which all good men and true hope will revive when this accursed war is ended. Let it not be said, "Er hat sie zerstort, die schone Welt." Certainly the English Society for Hebraic Studies can have no intention of being insular and narrow. In the things of the spirit that is well nigh unthinkable. . . .

As an illustration of the universal Jewish spirit it may be mentioned that there exists a religious organization of young men who, whether they know it or not, are imbibing the doctrines and sharing the outlook of S. R. Hirsch. They are organized in the Sinai League, with a central body and many branches. They devote themselves to the study of the Bible and the Talmud; they have lectures on various aspects of Jewish life; they cultivate social good fellowship, engaging in rambles and games. But their main interest is study; and their practice that of strict conservative Judaism. They may not be many in number; they are sufficient, however, to be noted in a survey such as this. . . .

The catalogue of intellectual effort here enumerated holds out great promise for the future. All the movements mentioned have grown naturally upwards; they have not been imposed from above. Possibly they may be the forerunners of a revival of learning. Before long, too, perhaps some attempt at centralizing them may be made. Already centralizing tendencies have shown themselves in Anglo-Jewry. We have lately established a Council for Jewish Education, on which are represented delegates from all educational bodies and organizations dealing with Jewish religious education. A second attempt at centralization is the Council of the United Jewish Friendly Societies. There are a goodly number of Jewish Friendly Societies; to form a United Council for them, however loose its powers, was sound policy. Some of our critics allege that Jews are prone to disintegrate. Here is evidence to the contrary. . . .

As members of the Order we of the London Lodge cannot but welcome all these tendencies which appear to be steering towards the right goal. They make the future hopeful; they eclipse the decrepit Board of Deputies. To contemplate all these forces at work gives one hope for a new Board of Deputies. "The old order changeth" and even the Board will change one day. What every Jewish community requires is, above all else, intelligent, educated members. If it possesses these, men and women versed in the Jewish outlook, practising Jewish virtues, its life will be healthy. It will be a blessing to itself and a blessing to the world around. . . .

But let it not be imagined that all the activities that have been hitherto recorded have made us blind or deaf to the cry from Russia. A second monster meeting was held this month in the East End of London and moving speeches were delivered by men well known in the community. Lord Swaythling was the chairman; the Chief Rabbi spoke; Mr. Claude Montefiore spoke; Mr. Herman Landau appealed, and Mr. Nahum Sokolov brought down the house. He spoke in Yiddish; he carried his audience off their feet, and the result was a fairly large collection there and then, and many promises to contribute weekly payments. Of course, to relieve distress must be the immediate aim of all Jews over against their Russian brethren.

The American Jews are doing their share; the German Jews are doing theirs; we in England are doing ours. But we have not lost sight of the question that will call for settlement in the near future, the question of the status of the Russian Jew. Here all Jews can help, of belligerent and neutral countries alike. The question is not a Jewish but a broad human one. All men may unite in demanding its just solution. We in England are giving the matter our thought and at the right time no doubt suggestions will be forthcoming. . . .

The London Lodge this year has decided that, owing to the war conditions, it will be advisable to retain last year's office-bearers for another year. The only loss will be the Honorary General Secretary who, owing to pressure of business, asks to bé relieved of his duties for the lodge. Brother Alfred Benjamin has endeared himself to every brother, and the lodge owes him a deep debt of gratitude. "Many Secretaries have done valiantly, but thou excellest them all," it may be said of him. His unfailing courtesy, his readiness to assist, his constant good humor have made him exceedingly popular. It is only right that the gratitude of the lodge for Brother Benjamin's two years' work should be placed on record here. . . .

It is generally understood that the Rev. E. Levine is to be called to fill the vacant position of minister at the New West End Synagogue. This congregation was ministered to by the late Rev. Simeon Singer. When he died, great search was made to find a worthy occupant of his vacant pulpit, and ultimately the Rev. Dr. Joseph Hochman was appointed. Dr. Hochman resigned the position a few months ago, and now Mr. Levine has received the call. Here a brother a brother succeeds, for both Dr. Hochman and Mr. Levine are members of the London Lodge. Among the younger Jewish clergy Mr. Levine is held to be one of the most distinguished, and it was generally expected that he would be appointed to what is considered the most important position among London Jewish congregations. . . .

So Joseph Jacobs is dead. A little while ago we mourned the loss of Schechter; once again the hand of death has robbed English and American Jewry of their common possession. After all, the interchange of great men brings the two Jewries into closer union. We fear, however, that you in America have generally had the best of the bargain. The comfort is that the work of men like Jacobs and Schechter is for the world. And that is why the world cannot but mourn their loss.

The Belgian Jewish Refugees whom the lodge cared for are now in positions enabling them to earn their own living, and the lodge is indeed pleased that they are economically independent. The students are the only exceptions But whatever assistance is given to them is really an investment for the future. Most of them are medical students, and the London University authorities have been very considerate of their needs. Some of them will be taking their final examinations this summer, and the London Lodge will be glad to think that it was instrumental in placing them on their feet. In this work the assistance receiver from Grand Lodge is much appreciated by the London brethren. It was a great encouragement to feel that in this effort to relieve distress, the central committee and the London branch had clasped hands across the sea.

Fifty-Third Annual Session of District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B.

District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., held a very successful Annual Convention beginning Sunday, February 20, and ending Tuesday, February 22. With one exception every Lodge in the jurisdiction was represented and the sessions were held with very few absentees.

Immediately after opening, the death of Brother Joseph Bien was announced. Brother Bien was a member of the first conference of Past Presidents, held March 29, 1863, for the purpose of "taking preliminary steps to institute a District Grand Lodge." He presided over the Grand Lodge in 1867 and again in 1869, was an active attendant at each Annual Convocation until the infirmities of old age began to bear heavily on him. He died its only surviving Charter Member but one.

The death of Past Grand President Felix Merzbach was also taken note of. Each of the deceased brethren was accorded a special memorial page in the proceedings.

The President's Report comprised all the subjects of interest to the District, was written in direct and forceful language and treated sympathetically and even courteously by all the committees which had the various subjects assigned to them. Brother Wolff was presented on the occasion of a gala initiation, held Monday evening, February 21, with a magnificent set of silverware in recognition of his brilliant services, P. G. P. Brother Geo. N. Black making the presentation. The initiation was conducted by a special initiatory team, exemplifying the latest revised Ritual, and was listened to with great delight. The new Ritual will be promulgated as soon as the books will come from the binder. The evening was greatly enhanced by a splendid oration delivered by the acting Grand Orator, Brother Dr. Martin A. Meyer, the Rabbi of Temple Emanu-El. He held the audience spellbound for more than an hour and received quite an ovation when he concluded.

The principal legislation that took place was the harmonizing of the General Laws of the District with the new provisions of the Constitution adopted at the last General Convention.

An amendment adopted at the previous Annual Session conferring the honor of Past President upon a Treasurer or Secretary who served for ten consecutive years, was repealed, owing to its unconstitutionality.

The age of admission was raised from eighteen to twenty-one years.

The collections of Constitution Grand Lodge Tax and Emergency Relief Assessment was regulated by local legislation which it had never been before.

Other conforming amendments too numerius to be detailed were incorporated in the General Laws.

Other amendments offered by Representatives and adopted were the following:

1. Providing for alternate representatives at Grand Lodge Sessions.
2. Recognizing participating and non-participating memberships (having reference to sick benefit).
3. Giving the Lodges the right to regulate their admission fees.
4. Recognizing Ladies' Auxiliaries and providing a set of laws for their government.

The Grand Lodge organized a local Social Service Bureau quite extensive in its ramifications. It provides for a District Chairman having under him State Chairmen, they in turn supervising the appointees for the subordinate Lodges. Each Lodge to have a Social Service Committee, etc. The committee that conceived the plan had the assistance of Brother Rudolph I. Coffee, who atended the Grand Lodge Session and by whose influence the Grand Lodge was led to undertake the work.

The Grand Lodge voted its confidence in the Executive Committee on the question of "Congress or Conference." It also approved of the activity shown by the retiring Grand President, Brother Harry K. Wolff, in connection with the immigrant work inaugurated in the City of San Francisco.

A resolution opposing the Burnett Immigration Bill now pending in Congress was unanimously adopted, the main objections being to the literacy test and the increased head tax.

A resolution proposing a colonization plan on some desirable tract of land in the state of California was referred to a special committee of five for future consideration.

A number of other resolutions containing instructions to local Lodges, and proposing local policies, were adopted, and no doubt the membership will find it interesting to assist in bringing all the good things they propose to a realization.

The reports of the District Deputies were all of an encouraging character and portend a prosperous year for 1916.

Liberal allowances were made for the Social Service work and the Jewish Orphans' Home of Southern California, the pet of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487.

The officers for the new term will be the following:

Henry Newburgh, of San Francisco, President.

David N. Mosessohn, of Portland, 1st Vice-President.

Richard E. Gutstadt, of San Francisco, 2nd Vice-President.

I. J. Aschheim, of San Francisco, Secretary. (Elected for the twentieth time.)

Joseph L. Goldsmith, of San Francisco, Treasurer.

Edmund Tauszky, Esq., Henry Mauser and Milton Meyer, Trustees.

First Vice-President Bro. Lucius L. Solomons conducted the installation and the Grand Lodge adjourned to meet again in San Francisco in 1917.

Why Remain a Jew?

(Continued from page 1)

is, in the mere fact of intermarriage, no more objection in the Jew marrying the non-Jew than in the non-Jew marrying the Jew; and there is no more reason why the one shall forswear his religion than the other. But the Jew should no more marry the non-Jew, in order to cease being a Jew, than the Christian should, or will, marry a Jew in order to cease being a Christian, unless the one or the other consciously wills or desires it because of a sincere belief in the faith of the other.

Only let this be said in that regard: that, as to the Jew, who believes in the preservation of his faith, of its ideals, of its necessity to the world of the future, such a one cannot be willing to look forward to its elimination, whether by intermarriage or by abnegation, any more than the non-Jew, whether Mohammedan or Christian, can look forward to the elimination of his faith, which he believes is necessary for his own sake or that of others, for freedom and happiness in this world or salvation in the next. That Jew who thinks at all, who looks proudly on the past, nay, who regards even the present—must feel that, to preserve that conception of a one God, in which he believes, to which he clings; that ideal which alone satisfies his reason as well as his faith; that ideal which looks upon religion as an evolution, as a growth to deeper thought and wider understanding of the mystery of life, of our relation to the world and to God, and as a struggle towards knowledge and light; who, in its modern view, sees his own faith as the only, or at least the greatest, hope for his own future; who, indeed, regards the struggle of his own people through dark ages as the barrier to the complete subjugation of the intellect upon the altar of faith; who regards his people as the living, perpetual spirit of protest in all countries and in all ages, the true protestants throughout all history—such a one must feel that he cannot look lightly to a future in which the people, as such a force, will be extinguished from the earth.

From the religious point of view, the question "Why remain a Jew" answers itself. Either you believe in the Jewish religion or you do not. If you do, you not only will, but must, remain a Jew; for it is idle to talk of not remaining a Jew, but still believing in and following the Jewish faith. And by that faith I mean the Jewish religion as I understand we are permitted to have it; not a matter of articles of faith, nor of synod regulation, but its interpretation by ourselves, and by our leaders and teachers for us, in the light of the past and in the understanding of the present, bottomed fundamentally on the primary conception of a one God. Such an interpretation, while leaving to the orthodox Jew his ceremonials and orthodox customs, puts the reform Jew in the very front rank of advance though, where he can accept all the researches of science, of the higher criticism, and the purest idealism.

So regarded, the Jew of today looks for no personal Messiah, needs accept no literal revelation, regards ceremonics as purely institutional, and the Bible as historical; and finds in the Mosaic teachings and theocracy the struggle to the higher and loftier and bolder thought of the prophets, which forms the basis of Modern Judaism. From the beginning seeking the truth, and ever thereafter aspiring towards it in the light of advancing knowledge and research, which he will not reject, but accepts as an aid to a clearer thought, the modern Jew deems each man's religion a matter for the individual in his relation to God and man; neither believes in nor seeks interference by one faith with another, but views all as a common struggle towards the proper interpretation of life and the proper duty of man.

If this be so, how can any man, believing in such a mission for his people, and in such kind of mission alone; believing, therefore, that one must not yield, not surrender, for worldly considerations, but struggle towards the higher conception of life as it is given one to see it; if especially he sees in the development of the Jewish faith one of the surest means to this great end, and towards the ultimate freedom of the world—how can he, either for his own sake or that of his children, abandon that religion?

And abandon it for what?

For Mohammedanism? For Confucianism? For Brahmanism? You say no.

For Christianity? If you really believe in Christianity, yes; but only if you do so believe.

For Christian Science? Some do; but with such we know they do so, not for religion, but for a faith cure, while still calling themselves Jews. To these I would quote the letter received from such a one by my own religious teacher, whose modern, satisfying interpretation of the Jewish religion must have deeply affected her, and who, in mailing him a copy of Mrs. Eddy's "Science and Health," said:

"After six years' study of this book, I resign it to you. This is the greatest tribute I can pay you and the beautiful influence your 'Yom Kippur' lectures had upon a 'Woman of Israel.' Henceforth I shall follow the teachings of Moses and the Laws of the God of Israel."

If, of course, there be those who believe in nothing at all, and cannot accept the Jewish teaching in any aspect, they indeed need no longer remain Jews, from the religious point of view; though they must still consider that ten million people, men, women and children, cannot be expected to follow them in this, for these will need and seek religion. And they should remember, too, that, so far as they also are concerned, their fate likewise is interwoven with that of their people, for they are held responsible for them; that they too may any day be treated as their people are because they are what their people are; that the salvation of their people is their salvation; and that, because they and their people are held solidarily liable for each other, they must look to their common upliftment and seek a common enlightenment of the world in its attitude towards their people.

Finally, then, we consider the subject from the national point of view. But that means no more than this: To those who believe in nationalism, in Zionism, as a solution of the Jewish problem, it means necessarily the re-establishment of the Jewish State or Nation. I cannot bring myself to see how history can be turned backwards in such a way. The Zionist movement is a great, humanitarian movement, to create a haven for oppressed peoples, and to re-establish the Jewish State so as to restore the Jewish ideals and the Jewish life. But to my mind, this is an impossible dream; and, if it were possible, not desirable. I think the Jew must work out his salvation in the lands and amid the peoples where he is. In my relation to national life, I look upon myself as an American, and not as a Jew at all. My Judaism is my own private affair, and has nothing to do with my relation to the country as a nation. So I deem it to be with the Englishman, the Frenchman, the German, or any other Jew. Whether we will it or not, for better or for worse, we must work out our own destiny among the peoples with whom we live. Their interests are and must remain ours; and our future must be a future with them. We cannot turn back the history of two thousand years.

We Jews of this nation are and must be a part of this nation; as much so, as wholly so, as vitally so, as any other people. Indeed, more so; because we have no other nation to which to turn. So that this shall wholly be our nation, one and indivisible, with no divided allegiance whatever; and in that melting pot, which is forming the American nation, composed of Americans, the Jews are and must remain a part.

To the fulfillment of that end, we should never agree to any sort of separatism from the people with whom we dwell; but join with them and act with them in all things that affect the welfare of the State and the comunity in which we live. In all things that are of common concern, let us participate, not as Jews, but as citizens; as part of the whole people; always as American Jews, never as Jewish Americans.

The question, "Why remain a Jew," therefore, comes to be a question of religion, and that is a matter for the individual. Although the Jews are or may have been a separate race or races of people, the thing that has preserved them while all other nations disappeared, was their religion, to which, though scattered far and wide, they always clung. As has been said, "There is but one thing that has preserved the Jew, and that is Judaism. A Jewry without Judaism would be even more worthless than a Judaism without a Jewry? If we believe that our Judaism is worth preserving—Judaism as we would have it, as a heritage of the idea of the one God; if we believe that it means our preservation from things we cannot accept; that, as transfigured into the present-day idea of liberalism, which brings us nearer to our neighbors and to all mankind, it stands [illegible] toleration, for freedom, for separation of Church and State, for the brotherhood of man, for a religion based on reason as well as faith, free from all superstition, idolatry or paganism, and therefore as an approach to the final universal religion, we must cling to it for our own sake and that of our children.

At the instance of a Jew, only this year the Supreme Court of this State, consisting of three Protestants and two Roman Catholics, to their honor be it said, unanimously decided that the Jews had the right to enjoin the reading of the Bible in the public schools, even though Catholics had no such right, as the Protestant Bible and the Roman Catholic Bible both contained the New Testament. What a tribute to our country! and what a far cry from the olden days, and from certain other States in present days! This freedom, this separation, the Jews have won; won so that in peace and friendship they can work together with their neighbors to a common good.

It has been worth while to remain a Jew to attain such an end. It has been worth while to remain a Jew through the ages to preserve the spirit of protest, to preserve the idea of the one God; to stand ever as the champion of intellectual liberty and religious toleration; and it will be worth our while to remain a Jew to the end for the continued and advancing liberalism of the world.

No battle was ever won, no cause ever advanced, no problem ever solved, bv cowardice or desertion. The strength of the Jew has been his fight for his ideals throughout the ages. He succeeded against adversity; shall prosperity cause him to fail?

I believe that the world is advancing; that the Jew will at last take his place all over the world, side by side, shoulder to shoulder, with his fellow-man, in mutual respect and honor; and that, though it be a far cry to the end, though a wide compass round it be, the last shall indeed be the first and the first shall be last. As the great poet, Robert Browning, has expressed it—he whose "Rabbi Ben Ezra" is one of the noblest poems ever written:

"My own hope is, a sun shall pierce
  The thickest cloud earth ever stretched,
That after last returns the first,
  Though a wide compass round be fetched,
That what began best can't end worst,
  Nor what God blessed once prove accurst."

PRO-JEWISH PETITIONS IN RUSSIA.

Prominent non-Jewish bodies have again raised their voices on behalf of the Jews. A conference of merchants in Moscow demanded from the government facilities for settling the Jews in the Moscow district with the object of stimulating the development of the local fuel production.

The Moscow Theatrical Conference is supporting the demand that the right of domicile of Jewish artists should be extended to all parts of the empire, and that Yiddish plays should be permitted to be presented.

The Central Military Commercial Committee has sent a memorial to the premier, pointing out that the defense of the country demanded that Jewish joint stock companies should not be hampered in the choice of managers, and that they should be allowed to obtain more land outside the urban areas. The committee complained that the restrictions harassed the mobilization of commerce for military purposes and that the Ministry of Commerce did not avail itself of the privileges recently accorded it to exempt companies, which are of great utility to the State, from the anti-Jewish regulations.

There is no velvet so soft as a mother's lap, no rose so lovely as her smile, no path so flowery as that imprinted with her footsteps.—Bishop Thomson.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

SAN FRANCISCO B'NAI B'RITH.

On Wednesday evening, February 2, Ophir Lodge No. 21, as a part of the plan of its promotion committee, to interest its membership in matters religious, educational and intellectual in addition to its regular fraternal program, enjoyed the opportunity of listening to Herman Hofsteadter, superintendent of the Mission District Zion Hebrew and Sabbath school.

Mr. Hofsteadter took for his subject, "A Rational View of Prophets and Prophecy." All present were thoroughly interested in the well-delivered address of the speaker, and several took part in the extemporaneous discussion which followed thereafter.

Wednesday evening, March 1, was Ophir night in the B'nai B'rith club rooms. A committee headed by Dr. Richard M. Cerf completed arrangements for the occasion.

During the brief stay in San Francisco of Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, he devoted much of his time in acquainting the community with the objects to be accomplished by the Social Service Department. He occupied the pulpits of Temple Shereth Israel and Beth Israel, and also Temple Emanuel, taking for his subject "Israel's God" Dr. Coffee also addressed the Grand Lodge Convention on Monday evening following the exemplification of the Ritual of the Order.

The Committee of Fifty representing the San Francisco lodges arranged for exemplification of the ritual through its Degree Team before the District Grand Lodge Convention on February 21, 1916. The Team was elaborately robed for the occasion and appropriate music, together with stereopticon views, assisted in the more vivid exemplification of the work. An elaborate musical and well rendered program followed the degree work. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago, Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, addressed the gathering, explaining the scope of the Order's efforts along social service lines. Otto Irving Wise, past president of the District, addressed the audience on "The Altruistic Work of the Order" as outlined for the future as well as its past accomplishments.

The Hebrew Immigrant Society, through the efforts of President Harry K. Wolff, of District Grand Lodge No. 4, held its first annual meeting on Sunday, Jan. 30, 1916, in the B'nai B'rith Building, with President Wolff presiding. Reports of the officers and committees were presented showing that the society had made much progress since its organization.

Modin Auxiliary No. 3, Daughters of the Covenant, entertained their friends and members on Monday evening, Feb. 25, 1916, and the affair was thoroughly enjoyed by all. An excellent program was rendered and at the close of the evening refreshments were served and a dance was held.

On Sunday evening, January 30, a large number of members of the Order and their ladies gathered at the Hotel Sutter to take part in the annual banquet of the Committee of Fifty, representing the San Francisco Lodges, tendered this year in honor of the President of the District, Brother Harry K. Wolff.

A dance followed the dinner.

SALEM LODGE, HARRISBURG, PA.

An unusually well attended meeting of Salem Lodge No. 26, of Harrisburg, Pa., was held on Wednesday evening, March 1, 1916, at the vestry room of Temple Ohev Sholem. A class of candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge and several new applications were presented. Addresses by Brother Jos W. Salus, of Atlantic City, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, and Brother David Phillips, of Philadelphia, president of Lincoln Lodge of that city, were a special feature of the meeting.

At the meeting of the lodge to be held on April 5, 1916, Brother Rabbi Chas. J. Freund will give an illustrated lecture on "Mormonism from the Jewish Standpoint."

NEW YORK, N. Y.

B'nai B'rith Day was duly observed at Temple Emanuel on Sunday, March 19, the day of Purim. Bro. Rev. Dr. Joseph [illegible], chairman of the Committee on Religious Activities, was the orator on the occasion. President Judge A. K. [illegible] designated that day as B'nai B'rith Day to be observed all through the [illegible].

CLEVELAND B'NAI B'RITH.

Mr. Bert Levy, the well known cartoonist and member of the Order, has undertaken to arrange an elaborate entertainment by professionals to be given in Cleveland during next June for the benefit of the B'nai B'rith Gym fund.

The meeting of the Junior Society of the I. O. B. B. Auxiliary to Cleveland Lodge No. 16 was held at the B'nai B'rith Building on Sunday, February 20. It was decided that the work of the organization should be subdivided among the following five committees, viz.: Membership, Entertainment, Club, Library and Games.

The House Committee of the B'nai B'rith Club Building has arranged so that every Saturday evening will be known as "Ladies' Night." An opportunity will be thus afforded to the ladies of the members to take advantage of the various privileges connected with the club.

The regular meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 was held on February 24, 1916. Brother Jacob Furth of St. Louis, Treasurer of the Order, and Bro. J. Meyers, of Columbus, member of the Social Service Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 2, addressed the meeting. A large class of new members were also initiated by the Degree Team of the Lodge.

On Sunday evening, February 27, an informal dance was held for members only under the auspices of the entertainment committee of the Lodge.

A smoker and luncheon was held by the Lodge on Thursday evening, March 2. The following speakers addressed the large gathering that was in attendance: Messrs. Charles Eiseman, E. M. Baker, Martin A. Marks, A. Lewenthal, A. A. Benesch, and S. J. Kornhauser, President of the District Grand Lodge No. 2. An excellent program of entertainment was also carried out.

An open meeting was held under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 on Thursday, February 10, at the B'nai B'rith Club Building. Wm. Judson Kibby, character analyst, delivered an address. There were several musical numbers and cabaret performances. A banquet concluded the entertainment, which was participated in by more than 600 of the members and their ladies.

WACO, TEXAS.

B'nai B'rith Day was observed with a splendid program by Eureka Lodge No. 198 of Waco, Texas, on Sunday, February 13, 1916, at the Temple. Hon. Abe Gross presided and in his welcoming remarks laid stress upon the spirit of fellowship stimulated by the Order. The principal speaker on the occasion was Hon. A. N. Simon, of Fort Worth, who reviewed the history of the Order since its inception, almost seventy-five years ago, of its many accomplishments, and discussed the rapid strides it has made towards increased influence and usefulness.

In referring to the so-called Farm Clty as advocated by representatives of Waco at the Convention of the District Grand Lodge held in New Orleans some time ago, Mr. Simon said:

"The Jews are of an agricultural rather than a commercial temperament. To bring out the true vision of Israel it will have to be done on the farm When the Jaws of today awake to the fact that they should cultivate the agricultural interests rather than commercial, they will come into their own. It will mean much to the Jewish population. When the farm lands of our country are being tilled by the Israelites they have better chances for advancement which should surpass all previous steps for progress made by the Jews. Then the mission of the Jews will be fulfilled—when they go back to the soil where they belong."

The musical numbers as well as the addresses were appreciated by the large audience which was present at the splendid program.

SELMA, ALA.

B'nai B'rith Day was observed by Zadock Lodge No. 155 of Selma, Ala., on Monday evening, February 21, 1916. Rev. B. C. Ehrenreich of Montgomery and Judge Fred S. Spiegel of Cincinnati were the principal speakers. The celebration was attended by a large number of members and their friends, and after the addresses and the literary and musical program, a dance was enjoyed in the room of the Harmony Club.

ZACHARIAS FRANKEL LODGE, GALVESTON, TEXAS.

Brother Chas. Frenkel of Galveston, Texas, prominent member of Zacharias Frankel Lodge No. 242, was the recipient of a pleasant surprise at a meeting of the Lodge held on Sunday, February 20, 1916. Brother Frenkel has made arrangements to leave Galveston to establish himself in another city, and the meeting was called to afford the members an opportunity to bid him farewell. In honor of the occasion a class of candidates was secured and the initiation was conducted by Brother Frenkel, followed with an address by him to the initiates. Just before the close of the Lodge Brother Frenkel was presented with a diamond charm emblematic of the Order as a token of the esteem and appreciation of the Lodge. The presentation talk was made by Brother Jos. Bonart.

Brother Frenkel is a prominent member not only of his Lodge, but of the District as well as the Order. He has served twice as President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, and has also been a member of several Constitution Grand Lodge conventions.

Rabbi Leon Harrison of St. Louis, Mo., was a welcome visitor to Galveston recently. His visit was for the purpose of appealing for contributions for the aid of the suffering Jews abroad. His efforts were well rewarded, a sum of more than $4,500 having been secured in addition to the amounts previously subscribed and remitted from the city.

RAMAH LODGE, CHICAGO, ILL.

On February 8, 1916, Ramah Lodge No. 33 held an unusually well attended meeting at the New Morrison Hotel. A large number of applications for membership were presented, and a class of thirty-five candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge. The special feature of the meeting was an address by Mr. Henry R. Rathbone, who spoke on "The Life of Abraham Lincoln." His address evoked much applause and was heartily appreciated by the audience, numbering more than 400. After the close of the regular order of business luncheon was served and all present enjoyed a social hour.

MUSKOGEE, OKLA.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Muskogee Lodge No. 628, of Muskogee, Okla., on Jan. 16, 1916. The celebration was under the management of Mr. Phil Brown. The exercises included vocal and musical numbers, an address by President Phil Brown on the patriotic tendencies of the Order and its effect upon developing better citizenship. The address was well received and was much applauded at its conclusion. This was followed by the installation of the newly elected officers. The ceremonies were presided over by Past President Brother I. L. Rosendorf.

A reading splendidly rendered by Miss Doris Brown, entitled "Thanksgiving Blessing," was much enjoyed.

The special feature of the program was an address by Dr. J. H. Stolper on the subject of "Gratitude" and at the conclusion of his address he presented to Miss Sadie Blum for her father, past President A. Blum, on behalf of the lodge, a gold-headed cane as a token of appreciation for the services of Brother Blum, to be presented to him on the occasion of his removal from the city of Oklahoma City.

At the close of the program refreshments were served and the evening was brought to a close with dancing.

ORGANIZATION OF LADIES' AUXILIARY TO EDW. EVERETT LODGE.

As a result of special efforts on the part of Mrs. Emily Kempner Duschnes, of New York City, the Edward Everett Chapter, Daughters of the B'nai B'rith, was organized in New York at a well-attended and enthusiastic meeting held at the home of Mrs. Duschnes on Sunday, March 5, 1916. The purpose of establishing this branch is to have a machinery for the purpose of creating a reserve war fund. The second purpose is purely social to join with Edward Everett Lodge in awakening a more intense interest among the members of the Order in that city. The officers of this ladies' auxiliary are all the wives and daughters of good and loyal B'nai B'rith. The president of the society is Mrs. Duschenes and Miss Beatrice Danzinger is secretary.

McKEESPORT LODGE, McKEESPORT, PA.

Through the excellent work of its Propaganda Committee, the McKeesport Lodge has greatly increased its membership and within the past few weeks two large class initiations have been held.

The lecture course, which is under the auspices of the Educational Committee, is now under full sway. Two lectures have already been given by A. M. Simon, Esq., of this city and Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver of Wheeling. In connection with the regular meetings of the lodge we are to hear in the future Frank R. S. Kaplan, Esq., a member of the General Committee of the District, on the subject of "The Gary Plan of Education"; Jos. H. Ruben, one of the governors of the Erie Orphanage, who will address the organization on a question which at this time is very "a propos," namely, "Helping the Farmer"; and Rabbi M. A. Alstet of Temple B'nai Israel of this city, who will conclude the series with a talk on "How Can We Remedy Industrial Conditions in This Country."

In addition to the above lectures in connection with the regular meetings of the lodge, the Educational Committee has arranged for a number of open meetings at which the general public will be invited. The first of these will be on the 26th of March when Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, head of the Social Service Bureau of the Order, will deliver an address on "Social Service." As a result of this lecture an added interest will no doubt be taken in this phase of B'nai B'rith work.

On April 16, the lodge will celebrate its twelfth anniversary with a banquet and entertainment. Some of the leading men in American Jewry are to be with us on that occasion. The chief speaker for the day will be Dr. Gotthard Deutsch, dean of the faculty of the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati.

ARMIN H. FRIEDMAN,
Publicity Committee.

SAVANNAH, GA.

Joseph Lodge No. 76 of Savannah Ga.

As an aftermath to the Grand Lodge convention recently held in Savannah, and as a result of the inspiration of the works of the Grand Lodge the officers and members of the lodge have launched a social, literary and entertainment programme, which will prove of profit and pleasure to all who attend.

The first social event will be the Purim ball, under the auspices of the Lodge, to be held on the night of March 15, at the Alliance building. This will be a brilliant occasion and will be largely attended.

A literary program has also been mapped out so that a public meeting will alternate with every regular meeting of the lodge. It is contemplated that a review of the leaders of Jewish thought be had on the occasion of the public meeting and a discussion of current events of interest to the Jewish world be had at the regular meetings. The public meetings will embrace a consideration of Jewish poets, prophets and philosophers, and in April the third centennial of Shakespeare's death will be fittingly observed.

For the present the following programme has been announced:

February 27, "Mendelssohn," Simon N. Gazan.

March 5, "Current Events," H. S. Ehrenreich.

March 19, "Disraeli," Morris H. Bernstein.

April 2, "Current Events," Morton H. Levy.

April 16, "Henreich Heine," Washington Falk, Jr.

At each of the public meetings vocal and instrumental music by local talent will be rendered.

ISIDOR STRAUSS LODGE, FT. WORTH, TEXAS.

Isidor Strauss Lodge No. 519 celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Feb. 22, 1916, with initiation of a class of candidates numbering 59. The principal address was delivered by Brother U. M. Simon, who detailed the object and aims of the Order and also dwelt on the new features undertaken in connection with social service work and combating the defamation of the Jew.

A musical program also was rendered, also the election of delegates to the District Grand Lodge convention, to be held in Little Rock, was one of the important features of the meeting.

A movement was started in the lodge in an endeavor to bring the next meeting of the District Grand Lodge in 1916 to Houston.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE, WASH.

"Some Dominant Prejudices in American Life," was the subject of an address delivered by Dr. Henry Suzzallo, president of the University of Washington, before a large attendance of the members of the two B'nai B'rith Lodges of the City, on Feb. 1, 1916.

Dr. Suzzallo declared that equality of individual opportunity is the dominant want in America today, and outlined the various traits that make up the color and life of American nationality.

Dr. Suzzallo spoke of his early association with Jewish people, when at the age of 12, in order to obtain an education, he had sought employment and a Hebrew merchant came to his assistance. To understand the Jew, he said, one must know him and sense his soul. He had found the Jewish people were in the forefront of those who cared most for their children and gave them the advantages of education. In speaking of the American people, he said, we may be a material nation strenuously pursuing commercial and industrial ends, but we give freely to every worthy cause.

Albert A. Piller, chairman of the evening, introduced Dr. Suzzallo.

An enthusiastic meeting of Rainier Lodge No. 627 was held on Feb. 10, 1916, at which candidates were initiated. Rabbi Joseph made a splendid talk on "Seattle and Its Progress."

The Ladies' Auxiliary to Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 held an important meeting on Thursday evening, Feb. 24, 1916, at which various committees were appointed.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

On Sunday afternoon, Feb. 6, 1916, a large class of candidates was initiated at the B'nai B'rith Day celebration of Dallas Lodge, No. 197, of Dallas, Texas.

Dr. William H. Fineshriber, Rabbi of Memphis, Tenn., had charge of the exercises.

In the evening a public meeting was held at Columbian Club where the following program was carried out:

Opening address, Arthur L. Kramer, Past Grand President, District No. 7.

Piano solos, (a) "Scottish Tone Poem" (MacDowell), "C Sharp Minor Waltz" (Chopin), Miss Selma Katzenstein.

Violin solos, (a) "Romance" (Debussy), (b) "Orientale" (Cui), Walter J. Fried, Mrs. Fried at the piano.

Address, Dr. W. H. Fineshriber, Rabbi Reformed Jewish Congregation, Memphis.

Vocal solo, "Serenata" (Tosti), Miss Regina Felsenthal, of Chicago, Mrs. Edward Mayer at the piano.

The meeting was open to the public and was generously patronized by the general Jewish public, more than 1,100 being present at the formal exercises in the evening. An informal reception in honor of the guest of the day, Dr. Wm. H. Fineshriber, was held at the close of the exercises.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

B'nai B'rith Day was commemorated on Sunday, Jan. 30, 1916, with an elaborate program consisting of addresses and musical numbers and a dance at the Y. M. H. A. Building by Memphis Lodge No. 35, of Memphis, Tenn. On account of Rabbi Abram Brill, of Meridian, Miss., being called to his home by the serious illness of a member of his congregation, Rabbi Wm. H. Fineshriber, of Memphis, Tenn., was the speaker of the evening. The following program was carried out:

Contralto solo, "A Summer Night" (Goring-Thomas), Miss Aileen Shea.

Reading, Miss Rosalind Karnosky.

Violin solos, (a) Orientale (Cui), (b) Le Cygne (Saint-Saens), (c) "Schoen Rosemaron" (Kriesler), Mrs. Katherine Seay Falls.

Address, Rabbi Wm. H. Fineshriber.

Tenor solo, "Che Delida Manina" (Puccini), Mr. Heber Moss.

FRESNO, CAL.

The members of Fresno Lodge No. 723, of Fresno, Cal., entertained their families and friends on Monday evening, Feb. 21, 1916, after a short business meeting. Various members delivered short talks, among them Brother B. Shapiro, vice-president of Oakland Lodge, of Oakland, Cal., who appealed to the members, impressing them upon the importance of a Jewish Sabbath school. During the evening refreshments were served and dancing was the closing feature of the entertainment.

SHARON, PA.

On Sunday afternoon, February 20, 1916, Sharon Lodge No. 622 of Sharon, Pa., signalized its renewal of interest and activity by conducting a public installation of the officers before a large audience at the Y. M. H. A. auditorium.

Few gatherings in the community of Sharon have equaled the attendance which greeted the speakers of the day; and the program was conducted in inspiring fashion.

Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, second vice-president of District Grand Lodge No. 3, was chairman of the meeting and installed the officers of the re-organized Lodge, of which Meyer Frank is president. At the conclusion of the ceremony he delivered a delightful discourse in which he outlined the work which confronted the members of the Order and averred that with a full measure of enthusiasm and co-operation, Sharon Lodge would rank high with others in the District.

In his whole-hearted discussion of the ideas and ideals of the B'nai B'rith in particular, and of Judaism in general, Mr. Edward Hemple struck the kevnote of the meeting by calling the attention of the citizens of Sharon to the responsibility and duty which was theirs to fulfill. In vivid phrasing he showed the plight of the Jews in the Western world and pleaded for the combined support of American Jewry in putting a stop to these flagrant infractions of humanity.

Mr. Richard S. Rauh concluded the program. Not only did he urge loyalty to the B'nai B'rith Lodge, but he showed the older members of the community that the strength of the Lodge depended upon the assistance they offered the young men in their Y. M. H. A., for from the younger association grow the men who are to form the nucleus of the B'nai B'rith movement. In persuasive manner, he explained the schism which existed in Jewry today and showed the way out of the difficulty. His address was proclaimed an inspiring oration and at its conclusion fifteen members of the older community immediately joined the Y. M. H. A. The next evening at the regular meeting of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, Mr. Rauh was elected an honorary member.

HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The annual Washington's birthday party for children was held under the auspices of Harmony Lodge No 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., on February 22, 1916. This was the annual gala event for the children of the members of the Order, who assembled at the meeting rooms of the Lodge and from there were escorted to Sagal Hall by the ladies of the committee on arrangements, who provided them with miniature flags and paper hatchets to commemorate the cherry tree episode in George Washington's life.

After singing of the national anthem and other patriotic songs various games were played. There was dancing also and various musical selections were rendered. At the close of the program refreshments were served. Several hundred children were accompanied by their parents.

ORIENTAL-HILLEL LODGE, CHICAGO.

Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 of Chicago held a meeting in honor of George Washington on February 22, 1916, at the Hotel Morrison. The special feature of the meeting was initiation of a class of fifteen candidates and an address by Brother Israel Cowen, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 6, on the life of George Washington. Although the weather was most inclement, a goodly attendance was present.

After the Lodge was closed in due form the members and their ladies who, in the meantime, had arrived to join them, were entertained with round table discussions and dancing.

BRYAN, TEXAS.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Moritz Lodge No. 715, of Bryan, Texas, on Jan. 2, 1915. The orator of the evening was Rabbi George Fox, of Fort Worth, who spoke on "The Message of B'nai B'rith." The following program was rendered:

Instrumental Solo—Selma Levy.

Installation of Officers—Rabbi Geo. Fox.

Vocal Solo—Miss Kaczer.

Address—Dr. Fox.

Duet—Misses Regina and Rosa Hart.

Remarks—E. Goldberg.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

The Daughters of the Covenant, auxiliary to the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Portland, entertained the members of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 with a card party at the B'nai B'rith Building, Tuesday evening, January 25, 1916, after the meetings of both organizations. The affair was very much enjoyed.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 met on Tuesday evening, January 25, 1916, in its first session of the year, with the new officers in charge. Much important business was transacted, among which was the appointment of the various standing committees for the year.

At the meeting of the Lodge, held on February 8, a large class of candidates was initiated and much enthusiasm prevailed on account of the splendid record made during the last year, which it is hoped will even be surpassed during the coming term.

A social meeting of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 in joint session with the Daughters of the Covenant was held on Tuesday evening, February 22, at the B'nai B'rith Building. The following program of unusual interest was carried out:

Address, "Life of George Washington," C. C. Chapman.

Solo, June Burns Albert, soprano.

Mrs. J. Lauterstein, accompanist.

Solo, Lulu Dahl Miller, contralto.

Selections, Ad Club Quartet.—Dr. R. M. Emerson, Harfridge Whipp, Norman Hoose, Chester Stryker.

On February 29 the B'nai B'rith Building was the scene of an old fashioned dance given under the auspices of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314. The young folks were the hosts to the older people and a large attendance was present.

Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 initiated a large class of candidates at its meeting held on February 8, 1916. The new degree team officiated and did its work well. At the conclusion of the regular order of business a social program was carried out, during which Dr. George Rubenstein gave an interesting talk on current events.

Portland Lodge No. 416 held a well attended meeting on February 15, 1916. A feature of the program was a discussion on "Zionism" presented by Bro. N. Mosessohn, after which the subject was discussed by many of the members present.

B'NAI B'RITH OF LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The joint literary committees of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 and its Ladies' Auxiliary have arranged for a series of monthly programs of much interest, to be followed by dancing and refreshments. These are to be open meetings and it is hoped that the members of the Lodge as well as the auxiliary will avail thmselves of this unusual privilege.

The first of these meetings was held on Washington's Birthday, February 22, at the B'nai B'rith Building, and the following program was carried out:

Patriotic Address by Hon. Joseph L. Lenwinsohn.

Violin Solo, Miss Lillian Rubin.

Accompanist, Miss Jeanette Rubin.

Reading, Miss Caroline Abrams.

Informal Dancing.

Los Angeles Lodge No. 487, jointly with its Ladies' Auxiliary, gave a ball on the evening of Feb. 15, 1916, which proved a brilliant social success. This was the first time the Auxiliary had an opportunity to co-operate with the Lodge in the giving of annual affairs and the innovation was pleasing to the membership of both organizations.

CHIPPEWA VALLEY LODGE, EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

B'nai B'rith Day was observed by Chippewa Valley Lodge No. 334 of Eau Claire, Wis., on Sunday, February 20, 1916, with a meeting of the Lodge in the afternoon at which the attendance was the largest ever assembled in the Lodge. Initiation of candidates was one of the features of the meeting, and this was followed by short addresses on the work of the Order by Brothers Dr. H. I. Davis of Chicago, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, and Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul, chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District.

In the evening a public meeting was held which was participated in by the members of the Lodge and their families and also a large number of invited guests. A musical program of varied numbers was successfully carried out and addresses were made by the visiting Grand Lodge officers, after which a reception was held in their honor.

JORDAN LODGE, NEW YORK CITY.

On February 3, ex-Warden Thomas Mott Osborne, of Sing Sing, addressed the members of Jordan and their friends at Temple Israel on "Prison Reform." The large audience listened with the deepest interest and sympathy to the efforts made by Mr. Osborne to remedy prison conditions; and at the conclusion of his address a resolution was adopted endorsing his work.

On February 18, after seven new members had been initiated by the degree team, under the captaincy of Brother William Asher, interesting reports on the work of the convention recently held at Boston, were rendered by Joseph Rosenweig, vice-president of the district, and by Bros. Sandford Friedlander and David Kraus.

Under the guidance of the president, Dr. Eugene H. Lehman, the members have taken active hold of the social service outlined by him for the year. Jordan has interested itself especially in the Big Brother Association, and not a few of its members are now helping some little brother upward on the path of life.

WM. McKINLEY LODGE, OMAHA, NEB.

The campaign for members under the auspices of Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521, of Omaha, Neb., is still being carried on with much enthusiasm, and arrangements are being made for the initiation of the second large class of the year in the near future.

A four-leaf pamphlet, entitled the "Wm. McKinley Enthusiast," was issued at the meeting on Feb. 24, 1916. It promises to become a permanent adjunct of the lodge and its purchase is to acquaint its members with the affairs of the lodge and all that pertains to its welfare.

Practical work on social service lines as carried on by the lodges of Omaha is doing much good for Jewish delinquents in that city.

The lodge held a well-attended meeting on Feb. 24, 1916, jointly with its Ladies' Auxiliary. A musical program of varied numbers was rendered and at its close readings were given by Miss M. Newman. During the latter part of the evening an informal dance was held.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

On Tuesday evening, March 7, a debate took place at the Temple under the joint auspices of Little Rock Lodge No. 158 and the Council of Jewish Women. "Equal Suffrage" was the question debated, the representatives of the Council assuming the affirmative and those of the B'nai B'rith lodge the negative. The judges decide dfor the affirmative. A large attendance was present.

One of the objects of the joint meeting is to aid in building up the local lodge and to arouse interest among the coreligionists in the coming convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7, which meets in Little Rock on April 30.

ANNUAL REUNION OF WASHINGTON LODGE NO. 19.

Washington Lodge No. 19, of New York City, held its 62nd annual reunion on Thursday evening, March 2, 1916. A beefsteak supper was served and brief talks were made by Brothers Sol Sulzberger, Harry C. Adams, Myron Sulzberger and N. F. Behar, who acted as toastmaster. There was orchestral music, singing, exhibition dancing by professional talent. A feature of the evening was the distribution of the initial issue of "The Washington Hatchet," a humorous organ of the lodge.

ANNUAL CHARITY BALL OF HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Elaborate plans were made for the charity ball, which has become an annual event given under the auspices of Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn. A very large number attended the party at the State Street Casino, held on Saturday, March 4, 1916, including many of the city officials. The hall was beautifully decorated and a fine program of music for dancing was held, also a concert program early in the evening.

The proceeds of the ball are to be given to various charitable institutions of the city so as to enable them to carry on their splendid work. A number of the younger women aided materially to the proceeds by selling flowers. The success achieved is principally due to the ball committee having charge of the affair, consisting of some of the best and most active workers of the lodge, with Brother M. Schnee as chairman thereof.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

GOLDEN GATE LODGE, SAN FRANCISCO.

At a meeting of Golden Gate Lodge No. 129 of San Francisco, held on February 2, announcement was made of the challenge of Cremieux Lodge No. 325 of the same city, for the greatest increase in membership during the year. The details of the contest and the prizes were discussed and arranged for and a committee of twenty was appointed and given charge of the campaign. Brother G. C. Ringolsky, Past Grand Orator of the District, who was present, put life into the contest with his address. He dwelt upon the disorganization of Jewry in Europe and the necessity for developing the forces to secure for the Jew rights in all parts of the world. In speaking of the Order and its work he said:

"It is necessary that every thinking Jew assert himself as a Jew. The young men are liable to feel that it is 'not the right thing' to be an assertive Jew; that it is not the proper thing to go before the public as such. And yet the President of the United States was not ashamed to appoint a positive thoroughgoing Jew to the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Brandeis has stood before the world as an assertive Jew, and he leads the Zionist movement which is strictly a Jewish proposition. This, in my view, should hearten everv one of us to take the same position ourselves as Mr. Brandeis—as an assertive body of Jewish men who have joined a Jewish organization for Jewish purposes.

"Nobody can come into this Order unless he expresses some Jewish purposes. The very fact that he signed an application—that he attends the meetings—even that he was initiated—indicates to the world that he is willing to be classed as a Jew and is standing for those things that are essentially Jewish. This is the spirit that is abroad in the world. It is the spirit that must be maintained by us here. You know 'it is an ill wind that blows nobody good,' and if the war in Europe, with its consequent appalling destruction of things Jewish and the disorganization of Jewish life it is causing, will impress upon us in America the necessity of a close and permanent and well-posted assertive Jewish organization to carry on the work here, then it must certainly have done some good to American Jewry.

"It should be the mission of our Order to establish here the necessary means for founding a great organization to assist those across the water, because in so doing we will assist ourselves. This Order is particularly and appropriatelv the Order for this work. It has the proper means of doing these things because of the universal character of the work we do. It is the one organization in close touch with our people on the continent of Europe, and we certainly have the organization with which to work.

"And so it is highly necessary that the Order increase itself now if at all—at this particular time so full of stress and yet so full of hope to the Jew. I hope that the campaign you are to conduct this year will be based upon those lines, and that the appeal that will be made will be an appeal to the young men to assert themselves to do their duty. For it will require the right men for the work of this Order. We all feel, of course, that there is work for us all to do, but it is particularly proper that at this period of the world's history every Jewish young man should come into this Order, and it is meet—it is fitting—it is proper—and it is part of his duty to his people and to humanity that he be a strong and independent and self-assertive Jew."

OAKLAND, CAL.

At the B'nai B'rith Cabaret, held on Jan. 26, 1916, in Covenant Hall, under the auspices of Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., the sum of $3,000 was raised for the benefit of the Jewish war sufferers.

Mr. A. S. Lavenson gave a brief address during the evening in which he narrated tales of the sufferings in Eastern Europe.

More than 400 guests participated in the entertainment which was a symposium of gaiety and merriment, and the occasion marked one of the most enjoyable functions given in the history of the Lodge.

Extensive plans are also being made by the Lodge for the dinner dansante to be given during the month of March at the [illegible] room of the Hotel Oakland.

B'NAI B'RITH CLUB AT PARKERSBURG, W. VA.

The dedication of the B'nai B'rith club house at Parkersburg, W. Va., was held on Jan. 24, 1916, with Rabbi A. H. Silver of Wheeling, W. Va., and Brothers Leon B. Stein and Edw. Hemple, members of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge officiating.

Features of the interior decoration of the club house are the "Mogen David" carved on each piece of woodwork, and the "Menorah," with which the walls are decorated. The club premises consist of a reception room, a spacious lounging room and many conveniences intended for the comfort and pleasure of the members.

Preceding the installation of officers and dedication of the club house ten candidates were initiated, which about exhausts the available material of the community.

The ladies' auxiliary of the Lodge did splendid work in arranging a dainty luncheon during which a collection was taken up for the relief of war sufferers which amounted to more than $1,000.

Parkersburg Lodge is arranging a Purim Ball and the committee that has charge of the affair promised to engage every available automobile in Parkersburg to bring the co-religionists to the entertainment.

Under the auspices of the Lodge and its ladies' auxiliary, a religious training school is being maintained at which children of all classes, irrespective of the fact whether they are members of the Lodge or not are being given the benefit of a free and thorough Sabbath school education.

LINCOLN LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

An interesting meeting of Lincoln Lodge No. 780, was held at Hotel Walton, Thursday evening, February 3, Mr. David Phillip presiding. Under the direction of Past Grand President Joseph W. Salus, a class of 29 candidates was initiated. This Lodge was recently organized and numbers among its members some of the leading merchants and professional men of the city. The membership at present is 98, with a waiting list of 30 to 40 to be initiated at the next meeting in March.

After the close of the meeting Rabbi Charles J. Freund of Harrisburg, Pa., delivered a lecture on "Mormonism from a Jewish Standpoint," with stereopticon views of Utah. The lecture was very interesting and was greatly enjoyed by those present. It is the object of the Lodge to have at every meeting either a lecture or debate on present day topics, assuring the members a pleasant evening. Another feature of the Lodge is, that every member appears in full evening dress.

Any member of the Order is welcome to attend the meetings of this Lodge on the first Thursday of each month at Hotel Walton.

HAR SINAI LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A memorial meeting was held under the auspices of Har Sinai Lodge No. 8, of Philadelphia, on January 27, in honor of the members of the Lodge who died during the past year.

Addresses were delivered by Rabbi Marvin Nathan, Mr. J. W. Salus, Mr. O. G. Bender and Mr. H. S. Platowsky.

There were also appropriate musical numbers on the program.

At the meeting of the Lodge held on February 10, which was unusually well attended, the members of Lincoln Lodge No. 780, a recently instituted Lodge, of Philadelphia, attended in a body.

OMAHA, NEB.

A joint celebration and "get together" meeting of Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521, and Nebraska Lodge No. 354, of Omaha, with a large representation of Council Bluff Lodge No. 688, was held on Feb. 3, 1916, and was one of the most successful meetings held in recent years.

A feature of the evening was a "second degree initiation" of a number of the recently initiated members of Wm. McKinley Lodge, and the degree work was performed much to the amusement of the older members present.

Prominent members of the different Lodges represented at the meeting were called upon for short addresses and the evening's program was brought to a close with the serving of refreshments.

MONTEFIORE LODGE, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Montefiore Lodge No. 70, of Buffalo, N. Y., has arranged to celebrate the golden anniversary of its institution on Sunday, March 5, 1916. It has secured the promise of attendance of Brothers A. K. Cohen of Boston, President of District Grand Lodge No. 1; Col. Harry Cutler of Providence, R. I., and Rabbi Edward N. Calisch of Richmond, Va., member of the Executive Committee of the Order, as the principal speakers.

The Lodge is endeavoring to make its meetings enjoyable and profitable by having some sort of entertainment and intellectual discussion at each meeting.

At the meeting held Feb. 10, 1916, Zionism was the subject of discussion. The principal speaker was Rabbi Max Drob. After his formal address, explaining the aims and object of the Zionistic movement, a discussion was held and participated in by many members of the Lodge.

TOLEDO LODGE, TOLEDO, OHIO.

Toledo Lodge No. 183 of Toledo, Ohio, took the initiative in making and carrying out the plans for the Jewish Relief Day which proved a great success in Toledo.

Under the auspices of the Lodge, the B'nai B'rith Bulletin is being issued and the first number made its appearance in February. Besides announcing the meetings and special matters that are scheduled for those dates, the Bulletin contains items of general interest to the members of the Lodge.

At the meeting of the Lodge held on February 22, Brother J. O. Eppstein spoke on "George Washington."

KANSAS CITY, MO.

On Monday night, February 14, a cultural meeting was held by Kansas City Lodge No. 184, in the vestry rooms of the Temple. This meeting was attended by over two hundred members, and opened with the initiation of sixteen candidates, the work being performed by the new degree team headed by Brother George Goldman.

Following the initiation, Brother J. A. Harzfeld made an interesting address on the subject, "The Contribution of Louis D. Brandeis to the American Commonwealth," which was listened to with rapt attention. No more interesting subject could have been selected by Brother Harzfeld, because every Jew is profoundly interested in and is following closely the developments which have arisen since Mr. Brandeis' appointment to the highest tribunal in the country.

Previous to the meeting many of those present thought they were familiar with the details of Mr. Brandies' achievements, but after Mr. Harzfeld's remarkable address, they realized how little they did know of this wonderful man upon whom has been bestowed one of the greatest honors within the power of this country.

Mr. Jacob Billikopf addressed the meeting, briefly outlining the plan of getting the proper influences to work in behalf of Louis D. Brandies.

At the conclusion of the program, luncheon was served in the vestry rooms of the Temple.

BELLINGHAM, WASH.

Bellingham Lodge No. 756, and its ladies' auxiliary held a joint public installation on Sunday, January 23, which event was largely attended. L. Verstandig, retiring President of the Lodge, presided at the ceremonies. A program of varied numbers was carried out and at the conclusion Mr. Verstandig made a stirring appeal to the young men present to joint the Order. Arrangements were also made for various committees to take charge of the collection of funds for the relief of war sufferers. Refreshments and dancing finished the evening's entertainment.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL.

Paradise Lodge No. 237, of San Bernardino, Cal., appointed a committee to respond to the appeal of the President of the United States to set aside Jan. 27, 1916, as Jewish Charity Day for the war sufferers.

After a few days canvassing the committee secured donations amounting to about $800. With the neighboring cities the donations were largely increased by the Committee of the Lodge and by its members residing in the surrounding towns.

WACO, TEXAS.

A public meeting under the auspices of Eureka Lodge No. 198, of Waco, Texas, was held at the Temple on Sunday, Feb. 13, 1916. The special object of the meeting was to raise funds for the B'nai B'rith Orphanage in New Orleans, and this was emphasized in addresses by Messrs. Abe Gross and U. M. Simon, of Ft. Worth. In addition to the two speakers a musical program which proved a pleasurable feature of the meeting was given. Mr. D. E. Hirschfield, President of the Lodge, acted as chairman of the meeting, which was unusually well attended.

Mr. Simon outlined the growth of the B'nai B'rith from its inception three-quarters of a century ago when the Jewish population was scattered throughout this country. He said that the organization favored the close association of the members of the race for growth and mutual perpetuation of their ideals and traditions. The speaker emphasized the back-to-the-soil movement which has received the general endorsement of the association.

"An Orphan's Appeal," was the subject of an eloquent address by Mr. Gross. He spoke of the need for systematic and efficient methods of caring for the orphans and made an appeal in behalf of the institution at New Orleans. A considerable sum was subscribed at the close of the meeting.

Rabbi I. Warsaw spoke on the proposal to create farm colonies of the Jews over the country, where the most progressive agricultural methods would be practiced and the highest ideals of the Jews nurtured. He thought the plan was feasible and practical and endorsed the idea of a large section, something like 5,000 acres for a beginning, to be purchased somewhere in Texas and a colony or farm-city established.

JULIUS HOUSEMAN LODGE, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

On February 21, 1916, Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238 entertained its members with a dinner in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanuel. The guest of honor and principal speaker was Rev. Alfred W. Wishart of Fountain Street Baptist Church. His attitude towards the Jew has always been most friendly, and the Lodge was happy to have him as its guest.

His subject was one relating to the tendency of modern evolution, and in a clear, forceful and masterly style, he gave voice to his convictions of the ultimate moral growth of civilization, notwithstanding the severe check given by the present war. It was a pleasure and a privilege to hear him, and he expressed himself as happy at the opportunity of bringing himself into closer touch with the activities of the Order.

The dinner guests also included Mr. Bert Levy, the talented artist, who is well known to the theatre-going public. Mr. Levy delivered a paper dealing with the life of Jews in his native land, Australia, in contradistinction to the customs, habits and life of his co-religionists in this country. His subject was well received and formed a pleasing exception to the general rule of speeches at such gatherings.

The President of the Lodge, U. S. Silbar, introduced Erwin M. Treusch, who is local Director of Intellectual Advancement, as the toastmaster of the evening. Besides the two speakers referred to, Brother Gustave A. Wolf spoke briefly on the origin and objects of the Order; Brother Julius H. Amberg discussed the influence of the Lodge in civic affairs, and Brother Theodore Collat in a short talk referred to the usefulness of such meetings in promoting pleasant social intercourse, and exchange of ideas.

OAKLAND, CAL.

Oakland Lodge No. 252, of Oakland, Cal., held its first initiation of the term on Tuesday evening, Feb. 8, 1916, in its club rooms, when 25 members were initiated by the degree team of the lodge. The meeting was well attended and was addressed by Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee on the work of the Social Service Department of the Order.

The lodge has launched a membership campaign and aims to add 100 new members within the next two months. Brother Samuel Wachs is chairman and Milton Mazor is vice-chairman of this important committee. The campaign will be of a competitive character. Three prizes have been offered for the three teams which will procure the largest number of candidates.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Brother Judge Abraham K. Cohen, president of District No. 1, presided for the first time over the meeting of the General Committee at the organization meeting of the committee Saturday evening, Feb. 26, 1916, which was held in the B'nai B'rith headquarters, 2307 Broadway, New York City. President Cohen, probably because of his judicial experience, is very precise and deliberate, yet very courteous and gentle, which qualifications make him an ideal presiding officer.

Brother Samuel Fleischman, of Mount Sinai Lodge 270, was unanimously reelected Counsel to the District.

President Cohen announced the following additional members to the General Committee: Bros. Joseph H. Ullman, Charles M. Stern, Herman Asher, Harry Cutler and I. Irving Lipsitch. A special invitation was extended to Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee, to attend the meetings of the General Committee. The past-presidents of the District have also been invited to attend the future meetings of the General Committee. The surviving past-presidents of the District, exclusive of those who are members of the General Committee, are: Morris Adler, Joseph Fox, Henry M. Goldfogle, Adolph Hirsh, Joshua Kantrowitz, Jacob B. Klein, J. E. Newburger, Simon M. Roeder and Adam Wiener.

At the suggestion of the new president of the Board of Governors of the Home at Yonkers, Bro. Myron Sulzberger, the meetings of the Board of Governors during the coming year will be held at the Home at Yonkers, which will give the out-of-town governors an opportunity to visit the Home and make themselves acquainted with the work of the institution. The new members on the Board of Governors are: Bros. William Goldschmidt, of New York, Isaiah Lodge No. 1, was elected for three years, and Isaac Moss, of Harmony Lodge No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn., who was elected for two years in place of the late Gov. Jacob Cane. President Abraham K. Cohen, of Boston, visited the Home at Yonkers and expects to pay official visits to the Home all through his administration.

President Abraham K. Cohen attended the Golden Anniversary of Montefiore Lodge No. 70, of Buffalo, N. Y. He was accompanied by Bro. Maurice P. Davidson, the second vice-president of the District. The Fiftieth Anniversary of Montefiore Lodge was marked by a brilliant banquet. A worthy feature of the evening was the raising of $1,300 for the Jewish war sufferers' fund.

Bro. Hon. Charles M. Stern, past-president of the District and member of the General Committee, is having an amendment to the charter of the District introduced in the New York State Legislature, in accordance with a resolution adopted at the recent Convention in Boston.

Bro. Dr. Eugene H. Lehman, president of Jordan Lodge No. 15, well-known as a writer and lecturer, is arranging a course of lectures for Jordan Lodge, which is well attended. It is Bro. Lehman's intention to pay special attention to the intellectual activities of the Lodge. It is his belief that intellectual activities are the best for propaganda.

Bro. Joseph Levenson, chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the District, expects to follow the same line of activity for all the lodges in the Metropolitan district. Bro. Levenson has appointed a special committee, to be known as the Committee on Lodge Activities, consisting of the following seven brothers: Bros. William H. Silk, chairman; Dr. M. M. Stark, Rabbi Samuel Greenfield, Samuel M. Roeder, William Solomon, Myer L. Victorius, and Leon E. Katzenstein. This committee, with the help of Bro. Levenson and Secretary Bro. Bernard M. Kaplan, will furnish lectures to the various lodges in the Metropolitan district.

Bro. Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein visited Springfield Lodge No. 684, of Springfield, Mass., and delivered an excellent address which was very much appreciated by the large attendance present. He also received a special invitation from Holyoke Lodge to visit and address the brothers of that lodge. Bro. Col. Harry Cutler of Providence, R. I., notwithstanding his many activities which makes him one of the busiest men in New England, was also kind enough to accept an invitation from Holyoke Lodge. Bro. Cutler attracted a very large attendance, as he always does.

Bro. Geo. Rosenstein delivered a very interesting lecture on "Comparative Wit and Humor" at Maccabee Lodge No. 71, on Tuesday, March 7, 1916. Bro. Rosenstein is one of the younger men who has the right Maccabean and B'nai B'rith spirit in him. He is a very enthusiastic worker in B'nai B'rith circles. Bro. Simon M. Roeder, former Counsel to the District whose piety and Jewishness are known all through the District, may well be proud of the number of young men whom he has inspired with love and enthusiasm for things Jewish generally, and for B'nai B'rith activities in particular.

Zion Lodge No. 2, through Bro. Rev. Bernard Steinberg, has given a most interesting entertainment to the members and the friends of the Lodge on Sunday, Feb. 27, 1916. Bros. Bernard Steinberg, Robert Levin and Leo Lieberman secured professional talent for the occasion. The Reception Committee consisted of Bros. Sol. Sulzberger, Richard M. Stern, president of the Lodge, H. Apple and Robert Levin.

Past-President Bro. Herman Asher and Bro. William H. Silk, president of Akiba Lodge No. 173, whose aim is to make the headquarters as attractive as possible to the brethren of the District, are being very much encouraged by the various lodges in the Metropolitan district. The following lodges have very generously contributed towards the furnishing of the new headquarters: Washington No. 19, Manhattan No. 156, Jordan No. 15, Zion No. 2, Maccabee No. 71, Sulamith No. 167, Hebron No. 5, Edward Everett No. 97, Henry Jones No. 79, New York Isaiah No. 1. Brothers of Jordan, Manhattan, Maccabee and Edward Everett Lodges made individual contributions towards furnishing the headquarters, in addition to the contributions by the lodges.

The following lodges will use the lodge room of the new headquarters, which lodge room, by the way, is one of the most beautiful lodge rooms in the City of New York:

Henry Jones No. 79, the first Monday.

New York Isaiah No. 1, the second and fourth Mondays.

Zion No. 2, the third Monday

Maccabee No. 71, the first and third Tuesday.

Akiba No. 173, the second Tuesday.

Hebron No. 5, the fourth Tuesday.

Edward Everett No. 97, the first and third Wednesday.

Manhattan No. 156, the second and fourth Wednesday.

Jordan No. 15, the first and third Thursday.

Washington No. 19, the second and fourth Thursday.

Chananiah No. 165, the first Sunday afternoon.

Kishon No. 193, the second Sunday afternoon.

Horeb Lodge No. 25, the banner lodge of the District, presented a beautiful testimonial to Bro. Joseph H. Ullman in appreciation of his indefatigable efforts in behalf of Horeb Lodge and the District generally.

Bro. I. Irving Lipsitch was elected honorary vice-president of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association.

The office of District Grand Lodge No. 1 has removed from 1790 Broadway to 2307 Broadway (between 83rd and 84th Streets). The lodge room and the reception rooms will be ready for use on March 1, where visiting brethren will always be welcomed.

The new headquarters will shortly be dedicated with proper exercises. The Committee on the Dedication of the Headquarters consists of Bros. Samuel Fleischman, chairman; Charles Hartman, Joseph Rosenzweig, Herman Asher and Joseph Levenson.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

On Sunday, Feb. 13, 1916, a B'nai B'rith Lodge was instituted at Bellaire, Ohio, Brother S. J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, officiating.

Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis, Mo., had an unusually well-attended meeting on Feb. 6, 1916, at which the important question whether the St. Louis lodges shall follow the example of the Chicago lodges in organizing a B'nai B'rith Council, was discussed. In addition thereto a large class of candidates was initiated.

A regular meeting of Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis, Mo., was held on Tuesday, Feb. 29, 1916, at which a class of candidates was initiated and other important lodge matters were transacted. The question of an additional donation for the year to the Federation of Jewish Charities of St. Louis was also considered.

A class of 100 candidates was initiated on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 30, 1916, in the Evansville Club on the occasion of a meeting of Thisbe Lodge No. 24 of Evansville, Ind. Col. Harry Cutler, of Providence, R. I., past president of District No. 1, was the guest of honor. Following the initiation a banquet was served by the ladies, at which August Brentano presided and toasts were responded to by Brothers Harry Cutler, P. W. Frey, S. Ichenhauser and Rabbis Merrett and Lassing.

Following the banquet Colonel Cutler was speaker at the public meeting held at the Washington Avenue Temple.

At the last regular meeting of Denver Lodge No. 171, of Denver, Colo., for the first time in the history of the lodge, a woman, Mrs. Pisko, chairman of the Pledge Committee of the Colorado War Sufferers Relief Committee, delivered an address consisting of an appeal for contributions, in response to which the lodge pledged itself to contribute $1,000 to the Relief Fund.

At the meeting of Denver Lodge No. 171, of Denver, Colo., held on Feb. 13, 1916, Brother Meyer Friedman gave a talk on "Federal Reserve." The lodge also gave a dance on the evening of February 23 at the Progress Club, which was well attended. The membership of the lodge at the close of the year was 653. Seventeen candidates were initiated at the last meeting of the Lodge.

Toledo Lodge No. 183, of Toledo, Ohio, is publishing a monthly leaflet as a medium of acquainting its members with the doings of the lodge.

At a meeting of the lodge, held on Feb. 8, 1916, Brother L. A. Levinson spoke on "Syphilis and Its Relation to the Public."

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Wheeling Lodge No. 615, of Wheeling, W. Va., is planning a campaign for new members in the city and hope to gain at least fifty members. The chairman of the committee in charge of this campaign is Brother Leon B. Stein.

Joshua Lodge No. 23, of Philadelphia, Pa., held a well attended meeting on Feb. 23, 1916, on which occasion the sum of $600 was appropriated to finance a membership campaign. Brother Isidor Sobel, of Erie, Pa., past president of District No. 3, has been invited to come to Philadelphia and manage and supervise the campaign. Brother Sobel arrived in Philadelphia on March 1 with intentions of remaining several weeks in the city for the purpose of conducting the membership campaign. It is expected that the largest class of candidates in the history of the lodge will be secured.

Duquesne Lodge No. 652, of Duquesne, Pa., will hold its select dance of Wednesday evening, March 22, 1916, and it is hoped that the same will prove a great success.

At the monthly meeting of Lincoln Lodge No. 780, of Philadelphia, Pa., held on March 2, 1916, a class of candidates was initiated. At the close of the meeting a banquet was held, at which the following were speakers: Judge Strauss, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Abr. Weil, of Philadelphia, President of the District Grand Lodge, and Jos. W. Salus, of Atlantic City, former president of the District.

McKeesport Lodge No. 573, of McKeesport, Pa., held a well attended meeting on Sunday morning, Feb. 6, 1916.

The feature of the meeting was an address by Mr. A. M. Simon, on the subject "Peace or Preparedness—Which?" A general discussion followed Mr. Simon's address.

Brother Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, Pa., member of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 3, is actively engaged in propaganda work in various parts of the District. He recently paid a visit to Charleston, and Huntington, W. Va., and made arrangements for a mass meeting in those cities, which were held on February 28 and at which Rabbi Silver, of Wheeling, and Brother Hemple made addresses urging the necessity of establishing Lodges in those communities. The Charleston meeting was held in the afternoon and in the evening the visiting Grand Lodge Officers addressed the meeting at Huntington.

Sharon Lodge No. 622, of Sharon, Pa., held a public meeting on February 20, at which Brother Hemple delivered an address.

Morgantown Lodge No. 766, of Morgantown, W. Va., held a well attended meeting on Jan. 10, 1916, on which occasion Rabbi A. H. Silver, of Wheeling delivered a splendid address. The installation of officers was held by Brother Edw. Hemple. After the close of the meeting refreshments were served by the ladies' auxiliary and a social hour was spent.

Parkersburg Lodge No. 767 of Parkersburg, W. Va., gave a dance on Thursday evening, February 10, 1916, at the club rooms, which proved to be very entertaining. A delightful program was rendered and the committee in charge did all in their power to make the affair a splendid success.

A. N. Simon addressed members of McKeesport Lodge No. 573 of McKeesport, Pa., at its meeting held on February 6, 1916, on the subject of "Peace or Preparedness—Which?"

The second lecture of the B'nai B'rith course given under the auspices of the Educational Committee of the Lodge was delivered by Rabbi A. H. Silver of Wheeling at the meeting held on February 20, 1916.

The Propaganda Committee of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672, of Pittsburgh, Pa., had a well attended meeting on February 3, 1916. This committee consists of fifty members appointed by the President to lay out plans for the ensuing year. The problem discussed covered the work of the Social Service Department of the Order and it was resolved that request be made of Dr. Coffee, the Director of the Social Service Department of the Order, for plans decided upon for work in that city.

Parkersburg Lodge No. 767, of Parkersburg, W. Va., held a public installation of officers at which Bro. Leo Stein of Wheeling, assisted by Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, officiated. The impressive ceremonies were followed by a delightful banquet, at which Vice-President Joseph Goldstine acted as toastmaster, and the principal address was made by Dr. A. H. Silver of Wheeling, who made a strong appeal for aid to the war sufferers abroad. Many out of town guests were present.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Installation of officers of Abraham Geiger Lodge No. 423, of Spokane, Wash., and Ida Blum Strauss Ladies' Auxiliary was held on Jan. 6, 1916, in the presence of more than 300 members. An enjoyable program consisted of addresses by prominent members and musical and vocal numbers.

The Daughters of the Covenant Ladies' Auxiliary of Samuel Lodge No. 668, of Vancouver, B. C., held its monthly meeting on Thursday evening, Feb. 10, 1916. After the business part of the meeting was closed an interesting paper was read by Rhona Krasnoff on "Sidelights on Russian Student Life." A discussion followed which brought the interesting meeting to a close.

Lasker Lodge No. 370, of San Diego, Cal., had a well-attended and interesting meeting on Feb. 15, 1916. At the following meeting, held on Feb. 22, 1916, Hon. Simon W. Rosendale, of Albany, a prominent member of the Order, addressed the lodge.

Reno Lodge No. 760, of Reno, Nev., was most successful in its efforts to raise contributions for the Jewish war fund. Although the community is small, nearly $1,200 was secured. The lodge has also been active in securing new members and since January 1 the membership campaign has resulted in an increase of 18 members. The Intellectual Advancement Committee of the lodge is arranging for an elaborate Purim affair to be held on March 23.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Mesaba Lodge No. 673 of Virginia, Minn., observed B'nai B'rith Day on March 12, 1916, Brother Dr. Myron Sherper of St. Paul being the principal speaker on the occasion.

Wm. McKinley Lodge No. 521, of Omaha, Neb., gave a smoker at the Metropolitan Hotel on February 3, 1916, in honor of a large class of candidates that were initiated.

Addresses were delivered by the officers of the Lodge and prominent workers of the Order.

Mt. Royal Lodge No. 729 of Montreal, Que., is entering with great zeal into the social service work of the Order and has already started a recreation center in one of the public schools of the city. This will serve the double purpose of keeping the Jewish boys off the streets, and enable the Lodge to get in touch with them. If this innovation progresses well the Lodge will extend the movement to other schools. The movement is under direct charge of Dr. Simon Kirsch and Sol Vineberg.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

(Continued from page 15)

Nebraska Lodge No. 354 of Omaha, Neb., gave a grand entertainment and ball on Thursday evening, March 2, at Metropolitan Hall.

At a regular meeting of the Covenant Lodge of Duluth, Minn., held on February 22, 1916, resolutions were adopted opposing the restriction clause in the Immigration Bill now pending before Congress.

Mesaba Lodge No. 673 of Virginia, Minn., is arranging for its annual banquet and dance to be given on March 12. Dr. Myron Sherper has accepted an invitation and will address the Lodge on that occasion. It is expected a number of prominent co-religionists from the Range cities will attend.

Under the direction of Brother Friend of Lincoln, Neb., member of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, a great deal of activity in propaganda lines has been recently manifested in various cities in the State of Nebraska. On Sunday, March 5, a committee of the Lodge, accompanied also by representatives of Wm. McKinley Lodge of Omaha, proceeded to Nebraska City and initiated a class of five members into Lincoln City Lodge No. 377. Work is also being carried on in the cities of Grand Island, Beatrice and Hastings, with a view of securing members in those communities.

Lincoln City Lodge No. 377 has secured a good-sized class of candidates for initiation in the near future. It is proposed to have a special meeting of the Lodge for this purpose on a Sunday morning and to invite some prominent member of the Order to visit the Lodge and assist in the initiation of candidates.

Covenant Lodge No. 569, of Duluth, Minn., held its annual installation of officers on Thursday evening, Jan. 27, 1916, in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanuel. Mr. Bernard Silverstein, Safety Commissioner of the city, acted as installing officer. During the evening a program of musical and vocal selections was rendered by some of the members and their ladies. The meeting of the lodge was followed by a supper served by the Temple Aid Society, during which John Z. White, of Chicago, prominent Single Tax advocate, delivered a talk on interesting topics.

Under the auspices of Isaac Lodge No. 87, of Milwaukee, Wis., and at a well-attended meeting of the lodge, held on Thursday evening, March 2, 1916, Mr. Hornell Hart of the City Club delivered an address on "Is Democracy a Failure?"

Nebraska Lodge No. 354, of Omaha, Neb., gave a ball at the Metropolitan Hall on Thursday evening, March 2, 1916. The ball was one of the large social affairs given by the lodge during the season and among the guests were members of McKinley Lodge, of the same city, and its Ladies' Auxiliary, as well as representatives from the lodges of the Order in Lincoln, Neb., and Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago, the annual Purim ball, dedicated as Ladies' Night and as a leap year party, was held on Saturday evening, Feb. 19, 1916, at the Hotel La Salle. More than 1,500 of the members and their ladies attended and the affair lasted until the early hours of the morning. At midnight a recess was held, during which supper was served.

Jacob H. Schiff Lodge No. 694, of Lansing, Mich., held an interesting meeting on March 5, 1916, on which occasion a class of three candidates was initiated. The lodge is also making arrangements for a Purim ball, which it is hoped will be a successful event.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72, of Chicago, has arranged for an address at its meeting to be held on March 28, 1916, by Brother Dr. H. I. Davis, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, on the subject, "The Problem of Mental Unsoundness, Especially Among Jews."

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Beth Zur Lodge No. 84, I. O. B. B., of Mobile, Ala., held its regular monthly session on February 13, 1916, the special feature of the meeting being the election of delegates to the District Grand Lodge meeting at Little Rock in April. The following were elected: Leon Schwarz, Louis J. Adler, Moses Kohn and Marion H. Forchheimer. Alternates, B. M. Lichold, Sigmund Haas, Dr. A. G. Moses and S. B. Simon.

At the meeting of El Paso Lodge No. 500, of El Paso, Texas, held on January 23, 1916, Dr. Louis Grossman delivered an address.

Isador Strauss Lodge No. 519 of Fort Worth, Texas, has instituted a campaign for membership to last two days, during which time the Propaganda Committee will endeavor to canvass the city and secure as many new members as possible.

A meeting of Gulf Lodge No. 221 of New Orleans, La., was held on February 23, 1916, at which the attendance was unusually large. After the routine business was disposed of, Ralph C. Schwarz presented a report on Intellectual Advancement work that is planned by the Lodge for the coming year. The special meeting of the Lodge will be held March 14, Leon Volmer will lead a discussion on the subject, "What Can We Do to Stimulate Interest in the Work of the Order?"

At a meeting of the two B'nai B'rith lodges of Birmingham, Ala., held on Sunday, February 6, 1916, Mr. Joseph Beitman, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, was presented with a loving cup as a token of esteem and in recognition of his untiring efforts as Chairman of the Membership Campaign Committee, which resulted in the addition of 150 new members to the roster of the two Lodges.

The newly elected officers of Isador Strauss Lodge No. 519 of Fort Worth, Tex., were installed at the meeting of the Lodge held at the Hebrew Institute Building on Tuesday, February 1, 1916. Arrangements were also made at this meeting for the B'nai B'rith Day celebration on February 13, and a tentative program was agreed upon.

Birmingham Lodge No. 368 of Birmingham, Ala., held an important meeting on Sunday evening, February 13, 1916, at Temple Emanuel. Delegates to the coming convention of District Grand Lodge were elected and plans were matured for a continuation of the membership campaign.

District Grand Lodge No. 7 will meet in annual convention at Little Rock, Ark., beginning April 30, 1916. A feature of the convention will be an inspection trip to Hot Springs, Ark., where the delegates will visit the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital.

B'nai B'rith leaders of the Lodge at Dallas, Texas, are exerting their efforts towards increasing the membership of the Order in that city. Letters have been sent out to prospective candidates stating the purposes of the Order, and from indications a large increase may be expected.

Muskogee Lodge No. 628 of Muskogee, Okla., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, January 15, 1916. A special musical program was carried out and at the close of the evening refreshments were served.

The B'nai B'rith of Fort Worth, Texas, entertained its members and their ladies and friends with an open meeting at which a literary and musical program was rendered on February 22, 1916. A. N. Simon was the speaker and his subject was "B'nai B'rithism." Rabbi George Fox presided as Chairman.

A well attended meeting of Gulf Lodge No. 221 of New Orleans, La., was held on February 9, at which Bro. Archibald A. Marx, Vice-President of the Order, installed the officers. Bro. Sol. Marx addressed the Lodge with reference to the activities of the Order in Germany, and a general discussion followed regarding the relief work for war sufferers. Appropriations were made by the Lodge to the Jewish War Relief Fund and to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital.

DISTRICT NO. 8.

The Berlin Lodges gave a Grand Charity Concert on Saturday, Jan. 8, under the title of "Biblical Poetry in Word and Tone," in the large saloon of the Philharmony. The concert was arranged for the benefit of the war relief of the Lodges of Berlin, the Home of Mothers and Children, the Woman's Society and the survivers of fallen soldiers. The following took part in the program, and helped to make the concert a grand success: Tilla Dorieux, Frieda Langendorf, Grete Jolles, Chief Cantor Magnus Davidsohn, violin virtuoso; Alfred Wittenberg and the reinforced choir of the new synagogue, under the leadership of the bandmaster, Albert Kellermann.

McKEESPORT, PA.

At the Altmeyer Theater on Sunday evening, February 20, 1916, Rabbi A. H. Silver, of Wheeling, delivered an inspiring lecture under the auspices of McKeesport Lodge No. 573 on the subject of "Militant Judaism." He said in part:

"By militancy I do not mean preparedness for any physical struggle, but preparedness for a struggle for the betterment and advancement of humanity. Once you have assumed a certain stand in life, stand by that conviction, live for it and if need be die for it. Indifference is frequently called tolerance; in order to be creative a people or individual must be insistent and consistent in his or their convictions, even at the expense of a certain amount of tolerance."

A short address was also given by Louis Sulzbacher, grand secretary of District No. 3; Armin H. Friedman, Esq., acted as chairman of the meeting.

MENORAH LODGE, BALTIMORE.

A regular meeting of Menorah Lodge No. 771 was held on February 3, 1916, at which a large number of new members were initiated. The preliminary report was received from the representatives of the Lodge to the recent Convention of the District held at Savannah. At that Convention an amendment to the laws of the District was passed exempting the Lodge in Baltimore from the payment of the annual per capita tax for the support of the Atlanta Orphanage and permitting the use of this money for the support of the local Jewish Orphanage.

Another important matter considered at the meeting was the re-establishment of a Jewish Court of Arbitration that will hold the confidence of the Jewish community. A committee was appointed to investigate this and to submit recommendations to the Lodge at its next meeting.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL.

At the meeting of Paradise Lodge No. 237, of San Bernardino, Cal., held on Feb. 20, 1916, the appreciation of the good work of Brother Rudolph Amber, for 34 years a member of the Order and several times president of the lodge, was expressed by the members by the presentation of a token to Brother Amber. Brother J. S. Jonas made the presentation address. This was followed by the presentation of a token to Brother Louis Kaplan, the monitor of the lodge. Another feature of the evening was the initiation of a class of four candidates, among them Selmer Amber, the son of Brother H. Amber, now president of the lodge. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was indulged in.

EVERETT, WASH.

The officers for the ensuing year of Everett Lodge No. 761, of Everett, Wash., were installed on Sunday evening, Jan. 30, 1916, by Rabbi Theodore Koch, of Seattle, Wash.

Rabbi Koch gave a talk on the relief work being done for the suffering Jews in Europe. His remarks were followed by short talks by the newly installed officers of the lodge.

Following the business meeting, refreshments were served.

Under the auspices of the lodge a committee was actively engaged in securing contributions to the fund for the relief of war sufferers, and more than $300.00 was raised.

OAKLAND, CAL.

A meeting of Oakland Lodge No. 252 was held on Tuesday evening, February 29, when reports were presented in the big membership campaign now being waged by the Lodge. Dr. J. S. Sampson and D. E. M. Lando discussed the work of the campaign as well as the reports from the various teams. The campaign plans to add 100 members to the Lodge by the first of April, and prizes have been offered to the winning teams. That the 100 mark will be passed is predicted by the officers of the Lodge.

The entertainment committee is arranging for a big dinner dance to be held at the Hotel Oakland about April 1, in honor of the newly acquired members.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

One of the best attended and most enjoyable affairs of the season was the card party and dance given on Wednesday evening, Feb. 16, 1916, by Samuel Lodge No. 668, of Vancouver, B. C., and its Ladies' Auxiliary. The hall was filled to capacity with members and their families. Various card games were indulged in and this was followed by the rendition of a play and the serving of refreshments. The evening was brought to a close with an informal dance. The lodge has arranged to give similar social evenings once every month.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Samuel Lodge held a sewing meeting on March 1, which was largely attended. Following the sewing the hostess served refreshments and a most enjoyable time was spent by those present.

NATCHEZ, MISS.

On Thursday evening, February 3, 1916, Ezra Lodge No. 134, of Natchez, Miss., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day by joint session with the Temple Sisterhood. Mr. Samuel Ullman, former resident of the city and ex-president of District Grand Lodge No. 7, was the orator of the evening and delivered a forceful address. Rabbi Kaplan used the occasion for making an earnest appeal on behalf of the war sufferers. The response was gratifying, more than $1,000 being the result of the collection, besides a number of monthly contributions. Various musical numbers were rendered and the meeting was brought to a close after a pleasant social hour.

PINE BLUFF, ARK.

Chas. Weil Lodge No. 279, of Pine Bluff, Ark., observed B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Jan. 30, 1916, with a splendid program at the Temple. Refreshments and entertainment at the Harmony Club rooms followed the exercises. Rabbi Rudolph Farber, of Texarkana, was the principal speaker. Following was the program with Rabbi Joseph Jasin as Master of Ceremonies:

Organ prelude, Mrs. F. E. Renfrow.

Duet, Miss Lucyhearn Broadstreet, Mr. Dolph Kastor.

Address of welcome, Mr. Samuel M. Levine, outgoing President.

Vocal solo, Miss Sarita Strauss.

Vocal solo, Miss Adele Bluthenthal.

Address, Mr. Gerson H. Moore, incoming President.

Vocal solo, Miss Ethel Schloss.

B'nai B'rith Day Oration, Rev. Dr. R. Farber, Texarkana.

Violin solo, Miss Leah Levine.

TACOMA LODGE, TACOMA, WASH.

The annual ball of Tacoma Lodge No. 741, held on February 16, 1916, was as anticipated, one of the leading social events of the season. The affair was well attended and it was particularly noteworthy that a great number of out of town guests were in attendance.

Nearly every steamer arriving in port from Siberia brings a number of Jewish refugees, and the Immigration Committee of the Lodge is doing excellent work in providing the necessary wants for these unfortunate people. In many cases employment is secured for them, while in others assistance is rendered to them whereby they are enabled to join their friends and relatives in eastern states.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

B'nai B'rith Day was observed by Beth Israel Lodge No. 507, of Hot Springs, Ark., on Sunday evening, Feb. 20, 1916, at the Temple. The following program was rendered:

Vocal Solo—Miss Edith Katz.

Introductory Remarks, Rabbi A. B. Rhine.

Violin Solo—Dr. O. W. Huff.

Address—Rabbi Louis Witt, of Little Rock.

Vocal Solo—Mr. Nicholas Davies.

Mrs. A. B. Rhine, accompanist.

The exercises were followed by a reception.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT BELLAIRE, OHIO.

Bellaire Lodge No. 785 was instituted on Sunday, Feb. 13, 1916, with a charter membership of 44. Following the institution ceremony the election and installation of the officers was held. The installation ceremonies were in charge of Brother S. J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, President of the District Grand Lodge No. 2, and the degree work was conducted by Degree Team of Zion Lodge No. 62 of Columbus, Ohio. At the conclusion of the meeting a luncheon was served, at which Brother Kornhauser and Brother Shohet delivered interesting addresses.

RESOLUTIONS BY MUSKOGEE LODGE.

Whereas, Brother Abraham Blum has served truly and faithfully as secretary and president of this lodge for years, and

Whereas, to better himself, Brother Blum found it necessary to change his location to another city and can, therefore, no longer act as secretary of this lodge and has tendered his resignation; now therefore, be it

Resolved by Muskogee Lodge No. 628, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, That we accept said resignation of Brother Blum with sincere regret, and hereby express to him our heart felt thanks for his constant, untiring work in behalf of this lodge, and wish him all success in his new location, and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be engrossed and presented to Brother Blum and a copy spread upon the minutes of this lodge and published in the B'nai B'rith News.

A FRENCH ANTI-SEMITE'S RENUNCIATION.

M. Andre Vervoort has published a book in French on Jews and the war. He declared that he was once an anti-Semite and was even opposed to the pro-Dreyfus campaign. But, as a result of the war, he has changed his views and is commending the loyalty of the Jews.

PRIEST PRANAITIS DISGRACED.

The notorious anti-Semitic priest, Pranaitis, who created a stir in the Beilis case, has lost his last stronghold, the city of Tashkent. The priest has misappropriated the funds of the local Catholic charities; all his former admirers have thus learnt his true character.

96.05
BN

B'NAI B'RITH NEWS
BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY
Vol. VIII. APRIL, 1916 No. 8
Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1913, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of August 24, 1912.

Reception to Ambassador Morgenthau by District No. 1, I. O. B. B.

Over two thousand people attended the reception tendered to Bro. Henry Morgenthau, United States Ambassador to Turkey, member of Jordan Lodge No. 15, at Temple Emanu-El, New York, Wednesday evening, April 5. It was a brilliant and notable gathering. The large number of the members and their families present was augmented by a number of distinguished representatives of the leading congregations and communal institutions. There were present members of the American Jewish Committee, United Hebrew Charities, Young Men's Hebrew Association, the Montefiore Home, the Spanish and Portugese Congregation, Alliance Israelite Universalle, Emanu-El Congregation, Free Synagogue, Temple Beth-El, Temple Israel, the Western Synagogue, Temple Rodeph Shalom, the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, Temple of the Covenant, the Jewish Agricultural Aid Society, the Intercollegiate Menorah Association, the American Cantor's Association, the Eastern Council of Reformed Rabbis, and the American Jewish Farmers' Association.

Greetings were received from Bro. Jacob H. Schiff, Mount Sinai Lodge No. 270, whose absence from the city prevented him from participating in the program. He wired:

"White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.
"Samuel Fleischman, Esq.,
"Chairman Morgenthau Reception Committee:

"It is a cause of much regret to me that absence prevents me from joining in honoring Ambassador Morgenthau this evening, who so well merits the acclaim generally and so willingly bestowed upon him. He has added new lustre to the repute of our coreligionists. God bless him.

"JACOB H. SCHIFF."

Greetings were also received from Dr. Harry Friedenwald, President of the American Federation of Zionists; Dr. Cyrus Adler, President of the American Jewish Historical Society and Acting President of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, and from Eugene S. Benjamin, President of the Baron de Hirsch Fund.

The Executive Committee of the Order on this occasion was represented by Brother Adolf Kraus, President of the Order; Brother Simon Wolf, Ex-President of the Order; Brother Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee from District No. 1; and Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, the Executive Secretary. District No. 2 was represented by Brother M. H. Lempert, and District No. 5 by Brother E. Jacobi, Past President of the District.

The program, which was unusually interesting, was as follows.

Prayer.....Rev. Dr. Rudolph Grossman
Address........Hon. Abraham K. Cohen
(President District No. 1, I. O. B. B.)
Address...................Adolf Kraus
(President I. O. B. B.)
Contralto Solo........Miss Mary Jordan
"In Thee, Oh God, I Put My Trust."
Address......Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman
Address........Hon. William B. Wilson
(Secretary of Labor.)
Tenor Solo........Mr. William Wheeler
"The Lord Is My Light."
Address.............Hon. Simon Wolf
Address..........Hon. Samson Lachman
Duet......Mr. Wheeler and Miss Jordan
"The Lord Is My Shepherd."
Address..Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, D.D.
(Bishop Protestant Episcopal Church, of New York.)
Address........Hon. Henry Morgenthau
(Ambassador of the United States to to Turkey.)
Benediction...Rev. Dr. DeSola Mendes

President A. K. Cohen, of District No. 1, who presided, welcomed the large audience and the guests in a most felicitous speech. Among other things President Cohen said that it was fitting that District No. 1, of which Ambassador Morgenthau is a member, should hold this reception as an appreciation of Brother Morgenthau's broad patriotism and philanthropy, which are among the cardinal principles of the Order. Bro. Cohen referred to Bro. Morgenthau as "Ambassador of Humanity," the phrase which he said was applied to him at a recent reception by representative citizens in Boston.

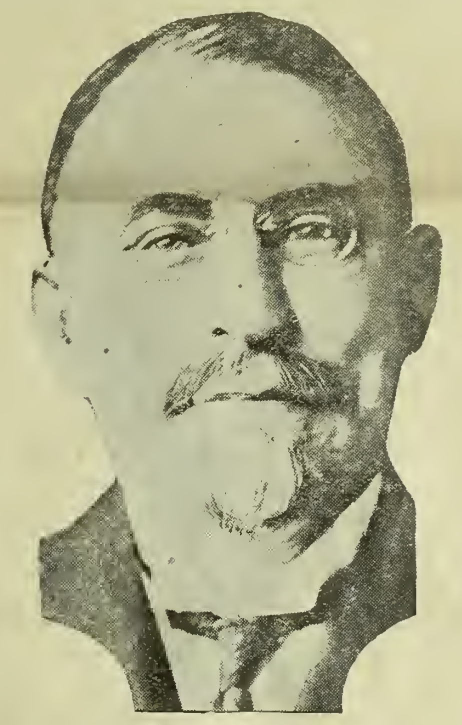
Brother Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, was the next speaker. He said:

"We are here tonight, to honor him to whom honor is due. If America singled Henry Morgenthau for distinction by sending him to a post full of delicate problems and beset by diplomatic embarrassments, Henry Morgenthau has conferred honor on America by so conducting his office as to win the admiration of his countrymen. Of all our Ambassadors in the war zone, no man has more worthily stood for the ideals on which this Republic rests.

"If Judaism honored Morgenthau by giving him a pious ancestry and a favored environment wherein to develop his distinguished talents, Henry Morgenthau has in turn reflected credit on Judaism through living a fine example of Jewish manhood and developing his character to a rare degree of efficiency. His care and regard for all people, regardless of race, color or creed, in the Orient is a splendid example of the broadmindedness of the Jew.

"If the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith honored Henry Morgenthau by admitting him to membership in the strongest international bond of fellowship the Jews of the world possess, Henry Morgenthau has shed lustre on us by his splendid interpretation, through personal deeds, of the principles for which this Order stands. He serves his fellowmen.

"America is God's country, welcoming people of all lands. Here is opportunity for the development of a splendid citizenship. Judaism embraces and emphasizes the principle of the Brotherhood of man. The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith translates and applies that principle in all of its activities. Henry Morgenthau, his soul filled with American patriotism, his heart and mind true to the principles of Judaism, his hands busy with work of altruism, represents the highest type of citizenship, the ideal of America.



HENRY MORGENTHAU

"I did not travel a thousand miles unduly to flatter anyone. As President of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, I am proud to assist in honoring this worthy member of our Order who has rendered such praiseworthy services to mankind. What finer example of true Jewish religion can there be than the one shown by Mr. Morgenthau when he protected a Christian population from the ruling class. Not to kill man, but to save and do him justice, is the Jewish ideal. Henry Morgenthau has lived this Jewish interpretation of duty. A militant American, he is trusted by people of other nations; a loyal Jew, he has succeeded in preventing unholy bloodshed between adherents of other great religions. As a member of our Order he has rendered signal service by recognizing the efficiency and usefulness of our organization in the Orient and making use of the means provided by the Order to alleviate suffering and distress.

"May he return to his station, strengthened by the thought that our hearts and our hopes and the approval of all his countrymen go with him, and may this consciousness of approval encourage him to even greater service in the future."

Bro. Dr. Joseph Silverman, Past President of District No. 1, dwelt upon the relationship between patriotism and religion which the distinguished guest of the evening, Bro. Henry Morgenthau, so well represented. "In the man who expects soon to return to Constantinople" Dr. Silverman said, "he found the embodiment of the new international spirit that is working in patriotism, religion and philanthropy."

"In the furtherance of this spirit Ambassador Morgenthau has contributed a noble part in performing his difficult duties in conformity with the broadest humanitarian principles," Dr. Silverman said: "Every true American should remember that while we live in America we also live in the world. Our American idea of government which makes a local question national and a national question international, must be transplanted to Europe, so that the contries there will realize that the weal and woe of war in one country is the weal and woe of war in another country."

Brother Simon Wolf referred to the ideal Americanism and true B'nai B'rith spirit which has characterized the noble career of Bro. Morgenthau.

"What he did in Constantinople may have a greater result—may be fraught with more import in history—than the result of the European war," he said. "Remember, he was the representative at the Porte of all the countries involved in the war."

"His example may be followed by all nations after peace comes. When great countries were fighting in this so-called era of Christian civilization, it remained for an American Jew to be the mediator, the international missionary seeking to reconcile differences and to harmonize one man to the ideas of another man."

Hon. William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, who attended the reception as the personal representative of the President, as an immigrant to an immigrant in America, the international melting pot, said:

"Mr. Morganthau came to this country as an immigrant. I also was an immigrant. I came to America a few years after the guest of the evening, but we were both the same age.

"He is of German birth and Jewish origin. I am of British birth and Celtic origin.

"And the President of the United States, who by the fundamental law of our government must be a native of this country, tonight sends one American born in one foreign country to pay his respects to another American born in another foreign country. What better illustration is needed of our land as the melting pot of the nations?"

Secretary Wilson borrowed his conclusions from "Abou Ben Adam": "Henry Morgenthau's name is written in a book of gold as one who loves his fellow men," he said. "I have come from Washington to lay my humble tribute at the feet of not Henry Morgenthau, the Jew, but the successful lawyer and business man, or the Ambassador of the United States to Turkey in war time, but Henry Morgenthau the man."

A very appropriate and happy address was delivered by Judge Samson Lachman, the close friend and former associate of Brother Morgenthau. Brother Lachman's address was a good B'nai B'rith talk which was much appreciated by the members present. He dwelt upon the great work of the Order which was a source of inspiration to the guest of honor and to himself. He told the audience how he and Bro. Morgenthau joined the Order as young men and how enthusiastic they both were about the meetings of the Lodge they belonged to, where Brother Morgenthau was much impressed with the teachings of the Order; that it was in the forum of the B'nai B'rith lodge room that Bro. Morgenthau first received his experience in public speaking and thoughtful handling of people.

The Right Rev. David H. Greer, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of New York, remarked: "It was the spirit of the religion which Ambassador Morgenthau represented that made him so broad and sympathetic towards all."

Response by Ambassador Morgenthau.

Brother Morgenthau's response to all the high praise was very graceful and at the same time modest and unassuming. He said he hardly deserved all the encomiums which were showered upon him; that he merely tried to do his duty and that he was grateful of the opportunity to render some service to the country that he so dearly loved and to which all American Jews owe an everlasting debt. Bro. Morgenthau said:

"We should not be the Jewish border on the rug that has been woven by the inhabitants of each country. We should become part of the web and woof of the rug. Too long have the Jews lived in the buffer states which suffer most when war comes. I want to see the Jews become an indissoluble part of the rug which destiny is weaving for America, the rug which stands for democracy, humanity and equality."

Credit of this most successful reception is due in a large measure to the efficiency and zeal of Brother Samuel Fleischman, Chairman of the Committee. Brother Fleischman was assisted by Bros. Charles Hartman, Joseph Rosenzweig, Herman Ascher, Joseph Levenson, Dr. Joseph Silverman and Secretary of the District, Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan.

THE JEWISH PRE-CONGRESS CONVENTION

By Our Special Correspodent, GUSTAVUS M. LOEVINGER

The preliminary conference to organize the Jewish Congress was called to order at Hotel Walton, Philadelphia, on March 26, 1916, at 2 p. m., by Dr. B. S. Rubisohn, Chairman of the Philadelphia Congress Committee and Grand Master of the Independent Order B'rith Sholom. Dr. Rubisohn welcomed the delegates heartily to the mother city of the Republic. At the conclusion of his address the delegates rose to sing America, and thereafter sang Hatikvah. Mr. A. J. Cattel, representing the Mayor of Philadelphia, who was unavoidably absent, thereupon eloquently welcomed the delegates to the conference on behalf of the city of Philadelphia, expressing the hope that as the Declaration of Independence was written in the city of Brotherly Love, so might the latest chapter in the liberation of the Jewish people be fittingly written on the same historic spot. So eloquent and apt were his remarks that he was given an enthusiastic ovation at the conclusion of his remarks. Rabbi B. L. Levinthal next welcomed the delegates on behalf of the Jews of Philadelphia, emphasizing the necessity of demanding and obtaining equality for the Jew everywhere.

Thereupon former Judge Leon Sanders, of New York, Grand Master of the Independent Order B'rith Abraham, was introduced as the temporary chairman of the conference. In a short speech he declared that the conference was not called to advance the cause of any individual or group of individuals, but as a step in obtaining equal rights for the Jew wherever he may live. Dr. Stephen S. Wise, of New York, next addressed the conference, delivering the keynote speech. He emphasized the necessity of complete democracy, both in the name and purpose of the creature to be created by this preliminary conference, and sought to prove that the word "Congress" was the most fitting name for the meeting to be called on behalf of the Jews and that the platform must be so broad that every Jew will be able and willing to stand upon it. So heartily in accord with the sentiments of the delegates were the remarks of Dr. Wise that his speech was unanimously adopted as expressing the views of the conference and the delegates cheered him most vociferously. It was noteworthy that the mention of the names of Mr. Louis D. Brandeis and Dr. Theodore Herzl each evoked prolonged and enthusiastic outbursts of applause.

A committee on credentials was thereupon appointed which shortly thereafter reported that the total number of accredited delegates was 357; the number of national and central organizations represented was 28; the number of delegates from these was 131; the number of city congress committees represented was 81; the number of delegates representing them was 226; the number of cities represented was 81; the number of states represented was 28; the number of affiliated organizations represented, including branches of national and central organizations, was 3,381; representing approximately a membership of over 1,000,000.

A motion was carried that the conference proceed to elect the following officers: An honorary chairman, a permanent chairman, seven vice-chairmen and three secretaries. Mr. Louis D. Brandeis was elected honorary chairman, Judge Hugo Pam, of Chicago, was made permanent chairman, B. L. L. Levinthal, Prof. Gotthard Deutsch, Dr. H. Friedenwald, Louis S. Rubisohn, I. L. Horwitz and Joseph Barondess and Joseph M. Hermann, were elected vice-presidents. Bernard G. Richards, Chaim Fineman and A. B. Brenner were elected secretaries.

The chairman, pursuant to a motion, appointed nine committees, consisting of at least fifteen members each, on the following subjects: Credentials, Resolutions Bearing on Duties of Executive Committee, Resolutions Bearing on Program of the Congress, Resolutions Bearing on Date of Congress, Finance, Rules, Resolutions on Place of Congress, Nominations, Resolutions Bearing on Methods of Electing Delegates to Congress.

Mrs. William J. Einstein next addressed the conference on behalf of the women of the city of New York, pledging their support to the congress.

A number of other short addresses were made during the session notably by Prof. Deutsch, of Cincinnati and Dr N. Sirkin, of New York. A great many telegrams from all parts of the United States and Canada were received and read extending to the conference greetings, congratulations and good wishes. [illegible] from Nathan Straus and [illegible] Brandeis in particular were [illegible] demonstrations of great enthusiasm. No session of the conference [illegible] the evening owing to the lateness of the hour at which the afternoon session adjourned, and the attendance of delegates at committee meetings.

Three sessions of the conference were held on Monday, March 27, 1916, one in the morning, another in the afternoon and the final session in the evening. The first act of the chairman on Monday was to appoint a floor committee of seven delegates to have charge of the hall and assist in maintaining order.

The committee on rules reported its recommendations that all resolutions be in writing; that discussion on reports of committees be limited; that the time alloted to each speaker on any question be limited to three minutes and each delegate speak only once on each question; that nomination speeches be limited to one minute; that no nominations be made from the floor except upon the written request of ten delegates; and that the chairman's ruling on any proposition not specially provided for, be final. These recommendations were all adopted.

Thereupon the report of the committee on the program of the congress with some modifications was adopted as follows:

Report of the Committee on the Question of the Program of the Congress.

(1) a. That the congress consider the question of securing to the Jews full and equal rights, civil, political, religious, in all such lands where these rights are denied them.

b. That the congress consider the question of securing for the Jews national rights in all such lands in which national rights are or ought to be recognized.

(2) That the congress consider the problems of Jewish development in Palestine in all its phases.

(3) That the congress consider cooperation with Jews in all other lands in the furtherance of the congress program.

(4) That the congress consider the question of creating a commission which shall submit the deliberations of the congress to the Peace Conference.

(5) That the congress consider the advisability of establishing a congress as a permanent institution.

(6) That the congress consider the problems of constructive relief in lands affected by the war.

(7) That the congress consider the problem of Jewish migration in all its aspects.

(8) That the congress consider the financial responsibilities which the congress movement may create.

The committee also recommended that commissions be appointed to make a study of restrictive laws applying to Jews, and also a commission to make a general survey of the condition of Jews in foreign lands. These recommendations were referred to the Executive Committee to be elected.

Mr. Chas. B. Streekler, United States sub-treasurer at Boston, thereupon spoke on the deplorable condition of the Jews in Russia and Eastern Europe, and appealed to the delegates for activity on their behalf.

The committee on the method of electing delegates to the congress submitted two reports, one a majority report favoring representation with an existing Jewish organization as the unit and basis of representation, and a minority report favoring universal suffrage as the method of selecting delegates. After a great deal of heated debate the question was referred back to the committee which a little later made a unanimous report which was practically unanimously adopted, providing for the election of delegates by all Jews and Jewesses of mature age, membership in an existing organization being prima facie eligibility to vote, and leaving it to the Executive Committee to be appointed to provide how unaffiliated Jews shall be given an opportunity to vote.

The committee on finance reported that $100,000.00 would be needed to perform properly the work of the congress and that $20,000.00 was needed at once. The report was accepted. Subscriptions and pledges were then and there received aggregating $10,000.00.

The committee on duties of the executive committee made the following report as adopted by the conference:

The Executive Committee is required to do all in its power for the purpose that all Jewish organizations, that are not represented at the Philadelphia Conference, may participate in the Jewish Congress.

In the event of other organizations uniting and becoming affiliated with the congress movement the Executive Committee is authorized to increase its membership so as to include representatives of such organizations, but in no event shall the committee increase its membership by more than 20 per cent of the total number.

The Executive Committee either as now constituted or in the event of the affiliation of other organizations with the congress movement, in its enlarged form, shall prepare or cause to be prepared by experts, for the use of the Jewish Congress, such memoranda, data and information bearing on:

(a) Religious, civil, political and national rights in the countries where the Jews do not now enjoy such rights.

(b) Emigration and all institutions dealing with it.

(c) Palestine.

(d) Relief.

(e) Such other questions as the Executive Committee may deem necessary and advisable.

All such data, memoranda and information shall be prepared, printed and mailed to each and every delegate elected to the Jewish Congress as soon after the election of delegates to the Jewish Congress as possible, and in no case later than two weeks prior to the holding of the congress.

The Executive Committee shall organize and maintain a Press Bureau for the purpose of giving wide publicity to the congress idea through the medium of the American press and the press of other countries.

The Executive Committee shall organize an active and systematic propaganda for the congress movement all through the United States.

The Executive Committee shall publish a weekly paper which shall be the official organ of the Jewish Congress movement. (Referred to the Executive Committee.)

The Executive Committee is instructed and empowered to do any and all other work necessary for the success of the Jewish Congress and shall be the body to carry out all the resolutions that may be adopted by the Philadelphia Conference for the carrying out of which no other committee has been designated.

All other committees created by the Philadelphia Conference shall be under the jurisdiction and supervision of the Executive Committee.

Another spirited debate was precipitated by the report of the committee on the date of the proposed congress, there being both a majority and minority report which, after a re-reference, resulted in the adoption of a resolution, that all preparations for the congress be completed by Sept. 3, 1916, and that the congress be held not later than Dec. 31, 1916, unless special circumstances demand a later date, the exact date to be determined by the Executive Committee.

The recommendation of the committee on place of holding congress, that it be held at Washington, D. C., was accepted without objection.

The final action of the conference was to adopt the following recommendations of the committee on nominations with the modification that the Executive Committee of the congress organization shall have the right to elect thirty others to such committee:

The Nomination Committee at meeting held today, Monday, March 27, 1916, by a unanimous vote adopted the following recommendations:

Only citizens shall be eligible to membership on this committee.

1. That the Executive Committee shall consist of seventy members, exclusive of an honorary chairman and a secretary.

2. That the Executive Committee shall elect out of its own membership an administrative committee consisting of such numbers as they think proper.

2a. That Louis D. Brandeis shall be Honorary Chairman of Executive Committee.

3. That the Executive Committee shall elect its own chairman, vice-chairman, treasurer and secretary, and such other officers as they deem necessary to carry out its work.

4. The committee after careful deliberation and with a view of including representation from all sections of the country, and as well as all elements in American Jewry, presents the following names to this conference to constitute the National Executive Committee of seventy.

New England.

Louis Kirstein,
H. H. Levenson,
Edward M. Chase,
Jacob de Haas,
Max Mitchell,
J. M. Herman,
Nathan Pinanaki.

Middle West.

Hugo Pam,
Jacob G. Grosberg,
Edwin Romberg,
N. T. Brenner,
Lee H. Hoffman,
Max Shulman,
Horace M. Kallen,
George Avirunin,
Gothard Deutsch,
Rabbi S. Margolis.

Southern States.

Dr. Harry Friedenwald, Baltimore,
Julius Peyser, Washington, D. C.,
Montifere Leman, New Orleans,
Louis S. Gottlieb, Washington.

Pacific and West.

Martin A. Myers, San Francisco,
Otto I. Wise,
David Solis Cohen, Portland, Ore.,
C. D. Spivak, Denver, Colo.

Middle Atlantic States.

New York.

Stephen S. Wise,
Max Stern,
Leon Sanders,
Max Silverstein,
Aaron J. Levey,
Max L. Eollands,
Gustav Hartman,
Dr. S. Elsberg,
Max Eckman,
B. Zuckerman,
Nathan Strauss,
Adolph Lewison,
Joseph Baroudes,
Abraham Shomer,
Louis Lipsky,
Rabbi M. S. Margolis,
Jacob Carlinger,
J. I. Bluestone,
G. Booblick,
Leon Wolfson,
Charles Cowen,
Isaac H. Hurwitz,
Julius Weis,
Rabbi Wolf Gold,
D. Katcher,
Samuel Mason,
Bernard A. Rosenblatt,
Sol Bloomgardey,
Myer Brown,
Sol. Suffrin,
Maurice Rottenberg,

Rochester.

Isaac Adler,
Joshua Spraygren,
Jos. Entin,
Judge Jacob Straus,
A. Goldberg,
Joseph S. Marcus.

Philadelphia, Pa.

B. L. Levinthal,
Dr. B. L. Rubinsohn,
M. Kats,
B. L. Gordon,
Prof. Hyim Fineman,
Rev. M. Ashinsky.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

M. L. Avner.

With appropriate votes of appreciation for services rendered to the conference by Judge Hugo Pam as chairman, by B. G. Richards as secretary, and by Dr. Stephen Wise, the conference duly adjourned.

The conference on the whole was remarkable for its unanimity of opinion on all the important matters coming before it. Almost from the moment the conference was convened it was clear that the Zionistic element was in complete control and that no program would or could be adopted which did not include both the national and Palestinian phases of the Jewish question. The program as adopted by the conference is not binding on the congress that is to be called, but undoubtedly unless the membership in the congress be radically different from the membership of the conference, a similar program will be adopted by the former. While at times a resentment appeared in the deliberations of the conference at the attitude of other Jewish individuals and organizations which had not joined the congress movement, on the whole the proceedings were free from serious recriminations. The vast majority seemed and undoubtedly were imbued with the loftiest patriotism and most unselfish devotion to the cause of Israel. Whatever individual differences of opinion may exist as to the wisdom of any action of the conference all Jews can unite in hoping that the congress may be fruitful in results to the Jew wherever he is denied civil, political or religious equality.

EXILED TO SIBERIA.

Fate of Jewish Hostages.

The press reports that the Russian Government has decreed that Jewish hostages from Lemburg and other Galician cities who are now in Kief, and such others as have been expelled from Galician by administrative order, must be sent to Siberia. This decree of expulsion to Siberia seems to be the response to the Jews' petitions for release from arrest and permission to return to their native country.

Non-Jewish hostages may choose places of residence outside the sphere of military operations.

THE JEWISH CONGRESS

Address Delivered by REV. DR. STEPHEN S. WISE at Philadelphia
Sunday, March 26, 1916, Before the Jewish Pre-Congress Convention

This day is destined to be memorable in the annals of Israel—the more because we are thinking not of ourselves alone nor for ourselves, but, after the Jewish manner, of and for all Israel. High is the privilege of having part in an assembly which may be destined to make Jewish history and therefore world history. "The revenge of the human soul, when its rights are ignored by power, is history." Not the revenge but the indomitable resolution of the human soul, in the case of Israel, its rights too long ignored by power, is to be history.

I recall another date, Jan. 31, 439, nearly fifteen hundred years ago, the East Roman Emperor, Theodosius II, deprived our forefathers of civil rights and excluded them from public office, and, as has been said, "this act became during the next one and one-half thousand years in every Christian State the basis of the degradation accorded to the Jews." After nearly fifteen hundred years during the last one hundred of which there has been a beginning of the light, who knows but that even as Jan. 31, 439, is memorable as our day of loss and woe, this day, March 26, 1916, may by us be made forever memorable as the beginning of a new epoch, an epoch that shall see Israel clothed at last throughout the world with honor and security.

There can be but two questions with regard to the possibility of a Congress—questions touching the name and the thing. As for the name, it is known of men that this is not a Congress but a meeting summoned to consider whether and when a Congress should be called. We have chosen the name because it is the American name, because its American associations have endeared it to us native and adoptive children of the Republic alike. We have chosen the name Congress because it is an inclusive, all-American name, with no implication of partisanship or factionalism. We have chosen the name as alone befitting the high dignity of such an assembly as we conceive to be needed because no lesser name would measure the significance of an assembly of democratically chosen representatives of the Jewish people of the land. We have deliberately refrained from using the name Convention because of the political associations wrapped around it—witness the quadrennial Presidential conventions of the political parties. In view of the faith of certain good men in compact and for one reason or another easily manageable bodies, one is tempted to wonder that the name caucus has not been offered as a substitute for the term Congress. So much for the name which it were ludicrous to defend as against those who for want of anything truly objectionable are happily reduced to the necessity of cavilling at a word!

If any further proof of the fitness of the name Congress were needed, is it not at hand in the circumstance that for a generation a series of congresses have been held in this land dealing with problems of the gravest import. Such have been the world's Congress of Religions, the Tuberculosis Congress, the Sociological Congresses, the Social Insurance Congress temporarily postponed because of the war, the Congress on Child Welfare soon to meet in a South American capital Never as far as I have heard has objection been made to the use of the term Congress in connection with these assemblies of national and international character. Shall it remain for Jews to belittle their own affairs by refusing to invest their deliberations at the most critical moment of our tasks and hopes with the outward title and the inward dignity of a Congress?

This is not the first time in Jewish history that a Jewish assembly has been called. Little more than a century ago, such a Jewish high court was convened by Napoleon, which court in the course of public sessions did little more than ratify the decisions of the Assembly of Notables. This Assembly, in a sense a milestone on the highroad of Jewish history, little availed after one year to avert the restriction of legal rights for Jews. This Jewish Congress or Sanhedrin, while not paralleled by our Assembly, failed to be greatly and permanently serviceable to Jewish interests for two reasons: First, it was not an act of the Jewish consciousness and the Jewish will. Second, because in the nature of things it was not free to legislate and act on behalf of Israel.

Taking no special account of a series of memorable Jewish Congresses during the last two decades, which were called into being by the high statesmanship of Theodore Herzl, the assembly of this hour has been summoned upon the initiative of the people's will. The Sanhedrin of a century ago, decreed for us, marked the beginning of Israel's emergence from the ghetto. This assembly, after a century of experience in the manner and the matter of democracy for some of us, and after centuries of democratic idealism for all of us, marks not our emergence from the ghetto but our resurgence to the highest hopes of Israel's life and destiny. It bears witness that we have not lost our capacity for self-determination and that, paraphrasing Edmund Burke, while not despairing of the world, we have come as a people to put our trust chiefly in ourselves.

The failure to secure aught for our people unless the demand be formulated and fortified by the people's purpose was shown forth in the classic instance of Disraeli's insistence at the Berlin Congress of 1878. Earnestly and resolutely he sought to safeguard the rights of Jews in Balkan lands. He failed in large part because, though an ardent believer in his people's future, he omitted to seek support in his people's will. Disraeli died and Roumania utterly forgot. But the Jewish people lives and cannot permanently be ignored. In magnis voluisse sat est. In great things it is enough to will but not in the greatest where a people's will alone may be prophetic of a people's achievement.

We have no apologies to make to the American people though our fellow-Americans will be moved to wonder that any Jews should fail to have part in deliberations orderly, responsible, democratic, concerned with the security of half of the millions of Israel and involving the honor of all Israel. No more do we find it necessary to make reply to certain grave accusations unctuously couched in the form of admonition, rooted withal in resentment of the people's determination to be free of their masters! And the people are resolved to be free of their masters whether these be malevolent tyrants without or benevolent despots within the life of Israel. We are sorry not because the American people have caught a glimpse of a deep-seated division of opinion, not because we have obviously failed to achieve unanimity touching our aims, but solely because a once beneficent attitude reveals itself as a petulant and malevolent boss-ship, abhorring the substance of democracy amid the counsels of a people. It were treasonable to be either un-Jewish or un-American, and we are Jewish in our determination to be self-succoring and American in the strength of our will to achieve the best for our people everywhere that we may in all things free our people for the best.

Were it not for certain circumstances, this meeting would in all likelihood have come under the direction of a surer hand than my own. Not long ago, the President of the Republic sought throughout the land for a man to take a place on the foremost Tribunal of the land, the Supreme Court of the United States. By common consent of all save the abettors of privilege, the man was found in a citizen of the Republic whose life has been as serviceable to the nation as it has been honoring to Israel. It is in truth a happy omen that the highest place yet reached by an American Jew should fall to the lot of that statesman in the realm of industrial democracy and social ethics.

"Who never sold the truth to serve the hour Nor paltered with Eternal God for power," whom the citizenship of the Republic save for the lovers of inequity rightfully reveres as a selfless and consecrated tribune of all the people. This American Jew, who more than any other has moved his people to repossess themselves of the spirit of self-determination and to loose themselves from a long-endured bondage of elymosynary patronage, is Louis Dembitz Brandeis.

We have no program. As individuals we have opinions, even convictions. But our program might be summed up in the words—the Jewish people must create their own organ through which after earnest deliberation and discussion to express their convictions touching the deeds and demands of the Jewish people. Beyond this we are not to go. This Conference is to labor solely to the end that there be devised and perfected such agencies as may bring about a completely democratic organization of all the forces of American Israel save for such as may will to exclude themselves.

If it again be objected that democratic organization is a method of operation and not an end to be sought, we again solemnly aver that a people is not worthy of respect which does not insist upon the right to be heard touching its own affairs, but surrenders the right of judgment and decision to a company of men, however wise and benevolent, who substitute their own opinions and wishes for the convictions and determinations of the whole people. It were little less than a tragedy if the Jewish people first among the peoples in democratic aim should in this land succumb to the pressure exerted by those who for one reason or another are distrustful of the capacity of the many to manage their own affairs.

One further step this Congress may take: It may, after reaching a decision that a Congress be held, suggest in outline a program to be considered by the Congress. But it must be understood that this Conference can do no more than tentatively draft a program for the consideration of the Congress—which Congress must remain free to reach its own decisions on all questions. The Congress, if Congress there is to be, must enjoy freedom unlimited by any mandates from this body. The Congress must remain its own master, as the Jewish people is about to resume the mastery over its own affairs.

While no man may speak with authority for this Conference, it is obvious that among the questions to be considered by it is the situation of Jews in various lands, especially the belligerent lands, the situation in Palestine which history has created for us—the situation which an historic people have recreated for themselves—the Jewish migration which as a problem has been intensified rather than evoked by the world-war, the question whether or not a Jewish Congress shall be brought into being and, after that, the choosing of a group of men to be entrusted by us with the task of representing this Conference in making needed arrangements for a Congress.

A Congress means that which Theodore Herzl was wise enough to foresee and big enough to foretell—that the fate of Israel cannot be settled for us but must be determined by us, by Israel's collective will and indomitable purpose. A Jewish Congress means that we are to cease to be onlookers or auditors at a debate on the future of Israel, that, whatsoever that future, we are to mould it in whole or in largest part. They alone are satisfied to have our future moulded for us who are indifferent to the question whether or not Israel is to have a future. A Congress means that, whatsoever the decision with regard to the future of Israel, we must reach it and we must pronounce it.

The world cannot be expected to assent to any program touching Israel's future as long as Israel does not unitedly deliberate and speak. We owe it to the world to bring into the arena of discussion those problems the rightful solution of which cannot be attained without the co-operation of the peoples.

It was the genius of Herzl to put an end to the century-old hole-in-the-corner method of considering Jewish questions and to insist upon the world's attention and discussion touching Jewish problems. Secrecy, always futile as a curative method, had proven disastrous in prolonging and intensifying Jewish woes. The world had registered its unspoken decrees while Israel self-pityingly and helplessly listened. The soul of a great Jew ended all that. He bade Israel speak and the nations listen. We now freely discuss our will where aforetime we furtively listened to the edict of others. A Congress means deliberation not agitation, discussion not division, enlightenment not secrecy.

The call to Israel to speak for itself rather than forever to be spoken for comes at a time when the world has been brought to realize the peril which inheres in the conduct of the people's affairs, most especially international affairs, by the powerful and the privileged unamenable to public authority and public control. Out of this war is to come an end of private, professional secret diplomacy and a beginning of the control by the people of their national and international relationships. For these can never be ordered aright save as they have been brought into the arena of public deliberation and untrammeled discussion.

Are we the peoples of Israel, to persist in being less democratic than the rest of the world, to insist that we are not competent to pass upon our own problems? Are we forever to suffer men to think and act for us, not because we have chosen and named them, but because they have decreed that we are not fit to be trusted with the power of shaping our own destiny? Among the first of earth's people to advocate and to insist upon popular autonomy, shall we be the last to welcome the renewal of the spirit of democracy? Shall we in this democratic land renounce our democratic ideals, and by so much forswear the passionately democratic faith of our fathers?

It is of the essence of the democratic spirit wisely to choose and reasonably to follow high leadership. To hold that we as a people are anarchic in our incapacity for the acceptance of leadership is wholly to misunderstand Israel's veritable passion for leadership if so be that leadership be wise and noble. Through the centuries Israel ceaselessly renewed its quest for leadership in the words of our fathers "na-aseh rosh"—let us choose for ourselves a leader. The leadership which Israel has always rejected has either been imposed by outward authority or unendowed with inward authority. To them that express regret at our seemingly ruthless rejection of the policies that have long been in control of the affairs of American Israel, let it be said that, whatever may have been the necessities of the past, the time is come for a leadership by us to be chosen—a leadership that shall democratically and wisely lead rather than autocratically and unwisely command.

We reject no leadership for we have known no leadership. Policies of inaction and aimlessness and timidity have presumed to erect themselves into leadership, tempered always by the grace of beneficence. With the substitution of incoherent purposelessness for the conscious direction of our affairs we have been patient much too long. Accidentally and whimsically adopted policies have been set to the work of undeviating principle. Such direction as has been has even lacked the merit of wise opportunism. We have had caution in the place of wisdom. We have had inaction erected into a program. This leadership of inaction has persisted so long because of the long-suffering patience of our people, which pardons much ineffectiveness in men if they are or are believed to be moved by benevolent purpose. The aimlessness of our so-called leadership has been witnessed during the past year by the rejection of our demand for a program and the naming of our insistence upon a program as token of divisiveness and disloyalty.

The only program acceptable to the men in control of our affairs has been a program of palliation, as if nothing more than temporary relief could be hoped for Israel, wounded and oppressed. Relief, alas, is at times sorely needed, was never more needed than today. But relief is not to be exalted as the policy or program of a people unless these be hopeless beggars and their leaders adopt a program of relief as the only way out. Not relief but redress, not palliation but prevention, not charity but justice, not Zedakah but Zedek is the only program worthy of a great and proud people.

It was not far from these halls that the father of the Republic spoke unforgettable words to his fellow-founders of a new order—words peculiarly applicable to the situation in which we, the sons and daughters of Israel, stand this day. Let us, said Washington, erect a standard to which all men can repair. I say to you, representatives of a great people and of a great cause—Let us erect a standard to which all men can repair—our fellow-Jews all—for we have opened the door of hope and we are resolved to keep that door open! That all men may enter, that all our fellow-Jews may stand with us in restoring the fortunes and renewing the glories of our people Israel! To which all men may repair—yea, all men, our fellow-Americans and all peoples for of them we ask all that it doth become men to ask, their just and even brotherly consideration of the problems of Israel which to solve equitably is to remove their as well as our own reproach! Israel expects every man to do his duty.

The character and content of that duty it remains for us wisely and solemnly, prayerfully and selflessly, to seek to determine. God give it that our deliberations be worthy of this setting, the cradle of American freedom and be equal to the hopes of our people Israel.

I have sought to do no more than as an individual to interpret the mind of Israel. Whether or not I have rightly interpreted the purpose of our people, it is for this Conference and the Jewish Congress now in the process of creation to determine. The Event be in the hands of God.

THE RUSSIAN SITUATION

By PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph.D.

It was my good fortune recently to meet a gentleman from Russia, who, when I visited that country in 1905, during the Japanese War, was my kind guide and host at the same time. Conditions which are easily explained, prohibit my mentioning his name. The man has considerable property in Russia, and some of his nearest kin are residing there, though he for some time has left the country, living in England, and recently arriving in America, where he probably may make his home after the war. I further have to add that he is a man of university education, possessing considerable property, and as a man of culture can surely not be classed with eccentric Zionists or socialistic cranks. What I am giving are the words of the man, almost rendered verbatim, who lived in Russia until a few months ago, and knows the conditions by years of experience, having made the situation, both from the political and from the economic view, his specialty, and having written some very valuable essays on the subject.

At the beginning of the war, my authority informs me, all Jews were enthusiastically patriotic. It was believed that the government would now change its policy entirely, and so great was the confidence that it was a generally observed law not to speak of the emancipation of the Jews as a concession which the Jews should receive in return for their patriotic acts, for, so they argued, our patriotism must not be considered mercenary. Nor did anyone doubt the victory of Russia, considering the alliance with the powerful nations. There was some justification for this optimistic belief, for the authorities in individual cases, while not changing the principle, were actually liberal in decisions concerning the rights of the Jews. The Czar's "Appeal to My Beloved Jews" is fictitious. I cannot say, so my informant goes on, who was responsible for it. Some have claimed it was a German invention, though it is hardly to be seen what Germany could gain by spreading the belief that the Czar actually addressed himself to the Jews in such a fatherly way. It may have been a practical joke, perhaps intended for publication and sarcastic comment in German papers, but whatever it may have been, it surely was not authentic. The one great sign of a change in political conditions, was the declaration of the progressive block of the Duma. This progressive block comprises the socialists, the Trudovaya party, which may be compared in some remote way to the agrarian, then, of course, the real progressives, and the moderate progressives, the Cadets, and even the moderate conservatives, the Octobrists. Even the left wing of the nationalists had joined this block. They had quite a number of sympathizers in the Upper House, the Gosudarstveni Sovjet. This progressive block issued a program which moderately liberal, demanded that all restrictions on the basis of religion and race should be abolished. The Jews were not mentioned expressly, although they were, as a matter of course, considered included in this program. Though the Duma is only a shadow of a Parliament, we were somewhat optimistic, but our optimism was dispelled, when the Duma was dismissed last August, and not convened until February.

The first sign of grave danger arose from the movement among the Poles. To the Poles the Czar had actually made some promises, which, I suppose, you know from your own newspapers. The promises were not definite, but they spoke of some autonomy and mentioned on the other hand the right of "the historic minorities." There the trouble began. It is absolutely improbable that the Czar ever had the Jews in mind, when he spoke of minorities. He probably meant the Russians, especially some of the Little Russians in some of the Polish governments, who he expected, would counteract the influence of the Poles if autonomy should be granted. At all events the Poles did not fancy this idea at all. They declared from the start that on the Vistula River no two nationalities could exist side by side. This declaration, issued about October, 1914, was the beginning of our trouble.

With the growing defeat of the Russian armies the anti-Jewish sentiment grew apace. It was our old experience in Jewish history over again. Some scapegoat had to be found for the misfortune of the country, and the handiest object for that purpose was the Jew. The first [illegible] change for the worse was [illegible] the usual ruling of the authorities. While even before this time, as I [illegible] was no sign of a change of our condition for the better in a legal sense, yet the authorities seemed to relax in their enforcement of existing restrictions. With Hindenburg's victorious attack, driving the Russian army back beyond the Russian border, matters changed. All legal restrictions, imposed on the Jews, were enforced with a severity which had no parallel, even in recent years. You have, no doubt, read in your newspapers of the horrible practice of expelling wounded and crippled soldiers, just discharged from the hospitals at Moscow and Petrograd, and sending them adrift, for in many instances they could not reach their original homes which were in the hands of the enemy. You have also read, beyond a doubt, the frequent cases in which parents were not permitted to visit a city outside of the Pale in order to see their dying sons. Worse things, however, were yet to come. As soon as the enemy approached a city, which was then in danger of occupation, hostages were taken from the Jews. Such was the case in Lublin, where ten of the leading Jews of the town were taken as hostages, under the threat that they would be hung, as soon as the enemy should occupy the city, or as soon as any sign of an act of treason committed by any Jew would appear. We have positive evidence that the leading men, those responsible for such orders, never believed a word of what they said. It was all devised for the sake of excusing and attentuating the defeats of the Russian army, making the ignorant peasantry believe that it was all the fault of the Jews who as spies assisted the German cause. The worst was yet to come. As the German army progressed beyond the Russian borders, the well known era of expulsion began in the governments of Kovno and Suwalki. The tragedy was greatest in Kovno, where the order of expulsion was promulgated May 18, 1915, on the eve of the Shabuot festival. The exiles, marching through the wild country, through forests and marshes in the middle of the night under the most inclement weather conditions, presented a sight that never will be forgotten by anyone who saw it. Compared with this, the expulsions from Spain and Portugal fade into insignificance. Warsaw and Wilna, the two greatest Jewish centers, were the next goal of the exiles. In Warsaw there are today any number of scrolls of the Torah preserved under the auspices of the congregation, and marked with the name of the congregation to which they originally belong. The exiles had taken them along as their aegis. It was a touching sight, never to be forgotten, to see old men, ragged with rags as clothes, and with hardly any shoes, and in many cases even barefooted, carrying the symbol of their faith in their feeble arms. It is a wonderful thing to observe what a great emotional force the Torah had for these exiled people. Some of your radicals in America might take a lesson. These exiles carried the Torah to the next place of safety. Coming to their new homes in the interior of Russia, the first thing they did, was to send for the Torah.

Wilna, formerly named the Jerusalem of Lithuania, received a new name. It is now called the Gate of the Exiles. Soon, however, Wilna, as well as Warsaw, proved absolutely insufficient to receive the ever increasing stream of immigration. The government, whether it desired it or not, had to open the gates leading out of the Pale. At first, the two governments of Penza and Tambov were opened to the homeless. Then the local authorities protested against the sudden increase of penniless people. A new concession had to be made, and finally the cities of the whole empire were thrown open, with the exception of the two capitals. All these things I suppose are well known. The government hurts the interest of Russia even more than those of the Jews. It will find out the truth of this statement, when it should again reoccupy the lost territories, and it seems that part of them are surely to be returned to Russia. Some of the best class of the Jews, embittered by the senseless cruelty with which their own government treated them, destroyed all that they could not take with them. Some broke the mirrors in their houses, because they did not want that the grafting officials should confiscate them. Others even destroyed the machinery in their factories, because they felt that at least the authorities should not be permitted to use them. Meantime, I am glad to say, a number of these exiles have succeeded in establishing themselves in their new homes. Especially is this the case with the tanners of Smorgon in the government of Wilna, who transferred their important industry to Perm, being favored by the great demand for leather, owing to the military operations. It seems unlikely that these people will ever return to their former homes, no matter how the war should terminate. On the other hand, these Lithuanian towns, which derived their main sustenance from the presence of the Jews, suffer very severely. Man, however, does not live of bread alone, and I have no doubt but that a great many of these exiles feel miserable in their new environment. You people in America, even you—turning to me—who have seen a little of the Russian Pale, have no idea of the sentimental attachment of the great emotional force with which the Polish and Russian Jew clings to his little town, where the graves of his ancestors are found, where he, guided by his father from earliest boyhood, had attended the same synagog or the same Beth Hamidrash, where he has gone to Heder, and where he sent his children to the same room, perhaps to the same teacher. All these things you Americans with your practical disposition, with your brief history, can simply not comprehend. To you the Pale is a place of misery—and I do not deny that it is so—but you cannot understand how people will cling to their homes just because of their miseries, and it is not merely a crime; it is, as the French proverb says, worse than a crime on the part of the Russian government. It is indeed a folly that the government does not appreciate this strong force for its own good. All the same, even in comparative prosperity, the Jew from the government of Kovno, living in a place like Astrachan, surrounded by the Russian peasants, will never feel happy.

In addition, I am not quite certain whether these concessions will remain permanent, if the government should come out victorious. The regime in power, whether it is now headed by Stuermer or a so-called liberal of the Witte type, will never make a concession to democracy. This is contrary to human nature, and is well established by past experiences. When Russia was defeated in the Crimean war, serfdom was abolished. After the Japanese defeat, we had the Duma. No matter how little power it has, at any rate it is a concession to a parliamentary form of government which the Czar, even after the battle of Tsushima straits, still refused. You must not forget that the Jewish question is merely one of the typical parts of the whole fight between Asiatic despotism and modern democracy. Unfortunately it must be said that the masses of the population are partly too indifferent to have any opinion and partly too much steeped in the traditions of autocracy and state church to ever believe that any approach to democratic principles would be anything less than treason. Our liberals are few. There is no doubt that a man like Leonid Andreev, the famous poet—I say famous because he found the ear of western Europe like a number of our other men, though personally I am not very much enamored with the whole class of allegorical poetry, but this is by the way—Andreev is undoubtedly an honest liberal. He sees that the hundred and sixty millions of Russian people are kept on a low grade of civilization, because the government by its reactionary policy keeps them down. He and others like him, say Gorki and Miliukoff, have no power to guide the destiny of the immense empire. The governing classes and the masses are hostile. We must not permit ourselves any illusion on that score. Somebody asked me whether the cessation of expulsion from the government occupied by the hostile armies does not mean a change of policies. I most emphatically say, no. When Warsaw and Wilna were taken, even when they were threatened, it is true the administration changed its policy. It may be that it was on account of the withdrawal of Grand Duke Nicholas, but in all likelihood it was a well conceived policy. The scheme failed to work, when the defeats became more numerous and—what really is the case—the government felt that it was doing more harm to the enemy by leaving a poor, starving population in these districts, than if they were driven out, and thus would relieve Germany of the necessity of caring for these starving multitudes, and impose upon Russia the burden of, no matter how little it would do, caring for them. The gravest danger now arises from the economic crisis, which has overtaken the land. This economic crisis will, as always is the case, even in peace times, create a class of desperados, and the popular indignation may turn against the Jews, encouraged by the government, too horrid to contemplate. Some optimists believe that France and England will interfere in the interest of civilization and their own reputation as a civilized nation. I am not such an optimist. I have visited England recently and know quite well that in government circles the only point, as is quite natural, is how to crush Germany. All other questions are absolutely insignificant compared with this. Neither France nor England will risk irritating the government of Russia by interfering with what Russia calls her own internal affairs. We saw it recently, when the British censor refused to permit the papers to discuss the question of Poland. In this case public opinion in England is far more aroused. The Poles are, after all, a nation in the accepted sense of the word. They present a power numerically and otherwise, and above everything else it is hoped that by stimulating the national aspirations of the Poles in the Russian part of Poland, their sympathies will be turned away from Germany and Austria. As far as the former country goes, the Prussian government naturally does not enjoy any sympathy with the Poles, but in the Austrian part of Poland it is different. Austria is not respected, and because she is not respected, she does not have actually the love of the people in Russian Poland. On the other hand, the Pole is an enthusiastic Roman Catholic. He knows that in Galicia, the Austrian Poland, he has everything for himself; he can give his children any education he wishes to, and in fact, he is the master of the land. In Russian Poland, when the devout peasantry makes a pilgrimage to some holy shrine, they have to ask the local authorities for permission, which in most instances is denied, or at best is granted under humiliating restrictions, as for instance in one case that I have in mind, such a procession was permitted under the condition that they would not sing on their way, nor display any banners. By such smallness the Russian government has lost all sympathy of the Poles and all prospect of profiting by the bitter hatred and the fear of the Prussian government. France and England, noticing this condition, wished to hold out a more definite promise to the Poles, but the moment the newspapers printed letters from Polish exiles living in these two countries, the Russian government complained that this was an interference with the internal affairs of an armed nation, and the British, as well as the French, censor, at once ordered that such discussion must be stopped. We Jews had a similar experience. I do not know how far you people in America are aware of this fact, but you have undoubtedly now read the splendid address delivered by Mr. Friedman, the Duma deputy, in the Duma in August. You do not know, however, that the British censor had prohibited publishing this speech, and it was not until an American journalist, Mr. Bernstein, came to London, and personally appealed to Lord Robert Cecil, showing to him the absurdity of such policy, that the order was repealed. I do not know whether even this presentation would have had any effect had Lord Cecil not feared that Bernstein, returning to America, would publish this fact, and American opinion would be influenced in a manner unfavorable to the Allies. The main point for Great Britain is naturally the fear that Russia might conclude a separate peace. This must be prevented by all means. Neither I nor anybody else can speak with authority on the sentiment in the Russian government circles, but I believe, and it is the general conviction in Russia, that the government of the Czar would at any moment come to terms with Germany, if it would be certain that in this way autocracy can be saved. In other wards, the Czar would be quite willing to sacrifice Poland and some of the Baltic provinces, and even to forego the great ambition of Peter the Great, to obtain possession of the Bosphorus, if he would know that he could save autocracy. For reasons that I do not need to explain, our public opinion in Russia is satisfied that the Kaiser would be quite favorable to such a solution.

From a Jewish point of view, there would be a very grave danger. Polish autonomy is decidedly a menace to the Jews. Not that they have any desire to see the Poles Russianized or Germanized, but an autonomous Poland with the present Polish patriots in exclusive possession of the administrative power, would mean the annihilation of the Jewish people. It might be that the Poles would be satisfied to grant to the Jews full equality under conditions of assimilation to the Polish nationality. Nobody can know it with certainty. The experiences in Galicia are not quite encouraging. It is quite possible that even

(Continued on page 16)

B'NAI B'RITH OF GERMANY

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE

Brother Timendorfer reports that the hospital train has arrived in Lubeck from Wilna with a full complement of wounded soldiers, who were transferred to the local hospitals. The Lubeck brothers most hospitably received the brothers connected with the service of the hispital train. Brother Lisser and other members of the Hamburg Lodges had run over to Lubeck in order to be present at the reception tendered to the staff of the hospital train. Today the hospital train has departed from Lubeck on its twenty-fourth trip to the front.

On the coming twenty-fifth trip to the front, of the hospital train, the Grand President, with the unanimous approval of the Committee, suggested that the Lodges and the individual members thereof should supply the hospital train most liberally with gifts for our soldiers, so that the train would be enabled on this jubilee occasion to distribute such welcome donations to the soldiers of that part of our armies as it might visit on that memorial trip. It is most likely that the train will start on its twenty-fifth trip from Berlin.

The Upper Silesian Lodge Association will hold a regular meeting on the 13th inst., in the Lodge rooms of the Veritas-Lodge in Hindenburg, U. Sil. The following subjects will be under consideration:

Report of the Ex-President, Bro. Dr. Kopfstein, on the activities of the Polish-Russian relief committee.

Report of the activities of the Association, in particular as to the participation of the President in the deliberations of the convention held on December 12, 1915, to consider the Eastern Jewish situation. (Korre. Bro. Dr. Kopfstein.)

Submission and consideration of measures to be undertaken by the Association for purposes of war relief.

A proposition to organize series of lectures within the Lodges, and especially to request such lectures from brothers actively participating in the events at the front, who may be temporarily returned to their homes on leave of absence.

Brother Lewinsky-Neisse has been instructed to represent the Grand Lodge at above mentioned meeting.

One of the subordinate Lodges had sent a report of its activities for publication in the Monthly Reports, during September of last year, which report, owing to lack of space, could not be printed before now. The President of that Lodge apparently felt himself slighted by the delay and he has now requested to omit the publication of the report. The Editorial Committee has brought the matter to the attention of the General Committee and has furnished the information, that as one of the results of the war the Monthly Reports are now published but once every two months, and that for this reason many reports must be postponed. In this particular case a further delay was incurred on account of some articles furnished by the General Committee, which were of the greatest importance and that could not brook any delay.

The General Committee expressed its opinion, that the reports of the Lodges were among the most valuable contributions of the Monthly Reports; they might be considered as the most effective reading matter for the Lodge members on account of the suggestions contained therein. From this view point the retarded publication of such reports is to be seriously regretted. At the same time the Committee feels that such reports, even if the publication thereof is delayed, will still prove of interest to the members and will in no way lose their importance.

In accordance with the resolution adopted at the 409th meeting of the General Committee, Bro. Maretski has personally taken up the question of the costumes of our sisters engaged in nursing with the Commission of the D. V. J. K., and he has in particular requested the privilege for these sisters to retain distinguishing ribbon in their caps, bearing the letters U. O. B. B. The President of that Commission has refused his consent to this proposition and that refusal was submitted at the meeting. Brother Maretski has indicated his readiness to continue his personal efforts in the matter or to leave the decision to the General Committee. The mapority of the Committee is in favor of the retention of the U. O. B. B. ribbon in the caps. Therefore, it was resolved to officially write to the Commission, agreeing to the adoption of the official uniform by our sisters, but to request the permission for the retention of the distinguishing ribbon. For us that badge, U. O. B. B., is the mark of our Association, which we cannot forego.

Ex-President, Bro. Georg Peiser-Breslau, had made several suggestions that were reported on by Bro. Kuznitzky. One of these suggestions relates to the "distress of the Jews in Brzeziny," in which matter Bro. Hecht of the Lessing-Lodge is greatly interested. The case had already been taken up at the 410th meeting of the General Committee when 3,000.00 Mk. were voted as a special donation to the Jews of Brezeziny. It is also well known that Brezeziny is included within the sphere of activity of the relief fund and receives its share of regular contributions from that source.

Brother Timendorfer stated that within recent days the Grand Lodge has been swamped by applications for relief from all parts of Russian-Poland. We earnestly recommend these requests to our members. At the same time our members do not seem aware of the fact that the sum of 400,000.00 Mk. monthly is spent for relief purposes on Russian-Poland, but that even these large sums are entirely inadequate to entirely overcome the misery prevailing in that country. The Grand Lodge would ask for written applications, giving details in all cases and the General Committee will appoint a competent party to investigate and report. It is self-understood that the Grand Lodge cannot by itself master this giant task, but that it can only in joint work with other organizations contribute to the alleviation of the distress.

In accordance with the suggestion of Bro. Peiser and other brothers, the General Committee is to take up the consideration of the Eastern Jewish question, particularly from the social questions involved and also to consider whether additional steps for the alleviation of the dreadful distress prevailing in Russian-Poland be advisable.

A motion made by Bro. Peiser-Breslau for an earlier date of the next meeting of the General Committee or the immediate calling of a meeting of a mixed committee for the purpose of the consideration of the information already collected on the Eastern Jewish question was defeated upon the grounds that it would be necessary to allow time for the preparation of written reports on the subject.

The relief society of the D. H.-Palestinian Administration has applied to the Grand Lodge with a request for a contribution towards the relief of the distress in the Holy Land.

The Grand Lodge has taken up the question of granting that request with the "Jewish Aid Fund." In its reply the Jewish Aid Fund speaks with the highest praise of the work of the D. H.-Palestinian administration, but it advises at the same time that it maintains soup kitchens and other institutions for relief in the Holy Land, which are doing their utmost to meet the demands in that direction.

